Promissory warranty. In insurance law, a promissory warranty is an absolute undertaking by insured, contained in a policy or in an instrument properly incorporated by reference, that certain facts or conditions pertaining to the risk insured against shall continue, or shall be done or omitted. Reid v. Hardware Mut. Ins. Co. of Carolinas, 252 S.C. 339, 166 S.E.2d 317, 321.

Promote. To contribute to growth, enlargement, or prosperity of; to forward; to further; to encourage; to advance.

Promoter. One who promotes, urges on, incites, advances, etc. One promoting a plan by which it is hoped to insure the success of a business, entertainment, etc. venture.

The persons who, for themselves or others, take the preliminary steps to the founding or organization of a corporation or other venture. Those persons who first associate themselves together for the purpose of organizing the company, issuing its prospectus, procuring subscriptions to the stock, securing a charter, etc. Incipitors. Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U.S. 181, 20 S.Ct. 311, 44 L.Ed. 423.

Prompt. To act immediately, responding on the instant.

Prompt delivery. Delivery as promptly as possible, all things considered.

Promptly. Adverbial form of the word "prompt," which means ready and quick to act as occasion demands. The meaning of the word depends largely on the facts in each case, for what is "prompt" in one situation may not be considered such under other circumstances or conditions. To do something "promptly" is to do it without delay and with reasonable speed. Application of Beat tie, 4 Storey 506, 180 A.2d 741, 744.

Prompt shipment. Shipment within a reasonable time, all things considered.

Promulgare /prəˈməʊlɡər/ Lat. In Roman law, to make public; to make publicly known; to promulgate. To publish or make known a law after its enactment.

Promulgate or promulgation. /prəˈməʊlɡeɪt/ To publish; to announce officially; to make public as important or obligatory. The formal act of announcing a statute or rule of court. An administrative order that is given to cause an agency law or regulation to become known and obligatory.

Promutuum /prəˈmjuːtuːm/ Lat. In the civil law, a quasi contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much.

Pronepos /prəˈnɒnəpəʊs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandson.

Proneptis /prəˈnɒnɛptəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-granddaughter; a niece's daughter.

The establishment by evidence of a requisite degree of belief concerning a fact in the mind of the trier of fact or the court. Calif. Evidence Code, § 190.

See also Burden of going forward; Burden of persuasion; Burden of producing evidence; Burden of proof; Clear and convincing proof; Clear evidence or proof; Degree of proof; Evidence; Failure of proof; Inference; Offer of proof; Presumption; Reasonable doubt; Testimony.

Evidence and proof distinguished. Proof is the logically sufficient reason for assenting to the truth of a proposition advanced. In its juridical sense it is a term of wide import, and comprehends everything that may be adduced at a trial, within the legal rules, for the purpose of producing conviction in the mind of judge or jury, aside from mere argument; that is, everything that has a probative force intrinsically, and not merely as a deduction from, or combination of, original probative facts. But “evidence” is a narrower term, and includes only such kinds of proof as may be legally presented at a trial, by the act of the parties, and through the aid of such concrete facts as witnesses, records, or other documents. Thus, to urge a presumption of law in support of one’s case is adducing proof, but it is not offering evidence. “Belief” is a subjective condition resulting from proof. It is a conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing in the mind, and induced by persuasion, proof, or argument addressed to the judgment. Proof is the result or effect of evidence, while evidence is the medium or means by which a fact is proved or disproved, but the words “proof” and “evidence” may be used interchangeably. Proof is the perfection of evidence; for without evidence there is no proof, although there may be evidence which does not amount to proof; for example, if a man is found murdered at a spot where another has been seen walking but a short time before, this fact will be evidence to show that the latter was the murderer, but, standing alone, will be very far from proof of it.

Affirmative proof. Evidence establishing the fact in dispute by a preponderance of the evidence. See also Preponderance of evidence.

Burden of proof. See that title.

Degree of proof. Refers to effect of evidence rather than medium by which truth is established, and in this sense expressions “preponderance of evidence” and “proof beyond reasonable doubt” are used. See also Degree of proof.

Full proof. See Full.

Half proof. See Half.

Negative proof. See Positive proof, below.

Positive proof. Direct or affirmative proof. That which directly establishes the fact in question; as opposed to negative proof, which establishes the fact by showing that its opposite is not or cannot be true.

Preliminary proof. See Preliminary.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support and which is wholly consistent with defendant’s guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. State v. Dubina, 164 Conn. 95, 318 A.2d 95, 97. Such is the required standard of proof in criminal cases. See also Reasonable doubt. Compare Probable cause.

Proof evident or presumption great. As used in constitutional provisions that accused shall be bailable unless for capital offenses when the “proof is evident” or “presumption great,” means evidence clear and strong, and which leads well guarded, dispassionate judgment to conclusion that accused committed offense and will be punished capitally. Ex parte Coward, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 593, 170 S.W.2d 754, 755; Ex parte Goode, 123 Tex.Cr.R. 492, 59 S.W.2d 841.

Proof of claim. Statement under oath filed in a bankruptcy proceeding by a creditor in which the creditor sets forth the amount owed and sufficient detail to identify the basis for the claim. Also used in probate proceedings to submit the amount owed by the decedent to the creditor and filed with the court for payment by the fiduciary. See Bankruptcy Code § 501.

Proof of debt. The formal establishment by a creditor of his debt or claim, in some prescribed manner (as, by his affidavit or otherwise), as a preliminary to its allowance, along with others, against an estate or property to be divided, such as the estate of a bankrupt or insolvent, a deceased person or a firm or company in liquidation. See Proof of claim, above.

Proof of loss. A formal statement made by the policyowner to the insurer regarding a loss, intended to give insurer enough information to enable it to determine the extent of its liability under a policy or bond.

Proof of service. Evidence submitted by a process server that he has made service on a defendant in an action. It is also called a return of service. Fed.R.Civ. P. 4.
Proof of will. A term having the same meaning as "probate," (q.v.) and used interchangeably with it.

Standard of proof. A statement of how convincing the evidence must be in order for a party to comply with his/her burden of proof. The main standards of proof are: proof beyond a reasonable doubt (in criminal cases only), proof by clear and convincing evidence, and proof by a preponderance of the evidence.

Pro opere et labore /prówお互い et labórui/. For work and labor.

Propagate /própagéyt/. To cause to spread.

Pro partibus liberandis /prów páirtabas libarándas/. An ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs.

Propatruus /prowpátruwas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather's brother.

Propatruus magnus /prowpátruwas mágnas/. In the civil law, a great-great-uncle.

Proper. That which is fit, suitable, appropriate, adapted, correct. Reasonably sufficient. Peculiar; naturally or essentially belonging to a person or thing; not common; appropriate; one's own. See also Reasonable.

Proper evidence. Such evidence as may be presented under the rules established by law and recognized by the courts; i.e. admissible evidence; material, relevant evidence. See e.g. Fed.R.Evid. 402.

Proper feuds. In feudal law, the original and genuine feuds held by purely military service.

Proper independent advice. As to donor means that he had preliminary benefit of conferring upon subject of intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly of its legal effect, but who was so disassociated from interests of donee as to be in position to advise with donor impartially and confidentially as to consequences to donor of his proposed gift.

Proper lookout. Duty, as imposed by law on all motorists, that requires motorist to use care, prudence, watchfulness, and attention of an ordinarily prudent person under same or similar circumstances. The duty of seeing that which is clearly visible or which in exercise of ordinary care would be visible, including watchfulness of movements of one's own vehicle as well as other things seen or seeable. Lewis v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., D.C. Iowa, 249 F.Supp. 852, 853. Such lookout as person of ordinary care and prudence would have kept under same or similar conditions. Duncan v. Durham, Tex. Civ.App., 356 S.W.2d 377, 380. See also Lookout.

Properly payable. Description of a check implying that the drawer-payor bank can and should pay it, and has a right to charge the amount against the drawer's account even though an overdraft results. See U.C.C. § 4-104(1)(c).

Proper party. As distinguished from a necessary party, is one who has an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, which may be conveniently settled therein. One without whom a substantial decree may be made, but not a decree which shall completely settle all the questions which may be involved in the controversy and conclude the rights of all the parties who have any interest in the subject of the litigation. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 19.

A proper party is one who may be joined in action but whose nonjoinder will not result in dismissal. Jones Knitting Corp. v. A. M. Pullen & Co., D.C.N.Y., 50 F.R.D. 311, 314. Those without whom cause might proceed but whose presence will allow judgment more clearly to settle controversy among all parties. Cities Service Oil Co. v. Kronewitter, 199 Kan. 228, 428 P.2d 804, 807. See also Parties.

Property. That which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one. In the strict legal sense, an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 65 Misc.Rep. 263, 121 N.Y.S. 536. The term is said to extend to every species of valuable right and interest. More specifically, ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. That dominion or indefinite right of use or disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects. The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing. The highest right a man can have to anything; being used to refer to that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man's courtesy.

The word is also commonly used to denote everything which is the subject of ownership, corporeal or incorporeal, tangible or intangible, visible or invisible, real or personal; everything that has an exchangeable value or which goes to make up wealth or estate. It extends to every species of valuable right and interest, and includes real and personal property, easements, franchises, and incorporeal hereditaments, and includes every invasion of one's property rights by actionable wrong. Labberton v. General Cas. Co. of America, 53 Wash.2d 180, 332 P.2d 250, 252, 254.

Property embraces everything which is or may be the subject of ownership, whether a legal ownership, or whether beneficial, or a private ownership. Davis v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 495 S.W.2d 607, 611. Term includes not only ownership and possession but also the right of use and enjoyment for lawful purposes. Hoffmann v. Kinealy, Mo, 389 S.W.2d 745, 752.

Property, within constitutional protection, denotes group of rights inhering in citizen's relation to physical thing, as right to possess, use and dispose of it. Cereghino v. State By and Through State Highway Commission, 230 Or. 439, 370 P.2d 694, 697.

Goodwill is property, Howell v. Bowden, Tex.Civ.App., 368 S.W.2d 842, 848; as is an insurance policy and rights incident thereto, including a right to the proceeds, Harris v. Harris, 83 N.M. 441, 493 P.2d 407, 408.
Criminal law. "Property" means anything of value, including real estate, tangible and intangible personal property, contract rights, choses-in-action and other interests in or claims to wealth, admission or transportation tickets, captured or domestic animals, food and drink, electric or other power. Model Penal Code, § 223.0. See also Property of another, below.

See also Chattel; Community property; Incorporeal property; Intangible property; Interest; Land; Literary property; Lost property; Marital property.

Classification

Property is either: real or immovable; or, personal or movable. Cal.Civ. Code, § 657.

Absolute property. In respect to chattels, personal property is said to be "absolute" where a man has, solely and exclusively, the right and also the possession of movable chattels. In the law of wills, a bequest or devise "to be the absolute property" of the beneficiary may pass a title in fee simple. Or it may mean that the property is to be held free from any limitation or condition or free from any control or disposition on the part of others. See Fee simple.

Common property. A term sometimes applied to lands owned by a local government and held in trust for the common use of the inhabitants. Property owned by tenants in common. Also property owned jointly by husband and wife under the community property system. See Community property, also Public property, below.

Community property. See that title.

Ganancial property. See that title.

General property. The right and property in a thing enjoyed by the general owner. See Owner.

Intangible property. Property which cannot be touched because it has no physical existence such as claims, interests, and rights. See also Intangible asset.

Literary property. See Literary.

Mislaid property. Property which the owner has voluntarily parted with, with the intention of retrieving it later, but which cannot now be found. Does not include intentionally hidden property, and is distinguished from "lost" property which the owner has parted with casually and voluntarily. Roffran v. Duffy, C.A.N.Y., 291 F.2d 848, 850.

Mixed property. Property which is personal in its essential nature, but is invested by the law with certain of the characteristics and features of real property. Heirlooms, fixtures, and title-deeds to an estate are of this nature.

Movable property. Property the location of which can be changed, including things growing on, affixed to, or found in land, and documents although the rights represented thereby have no physical location. "Immovable property" is all other property. Model Penal Code, § 223.0.

Personal property. In broad and general sense, everything that is the subject of ownership, not coming under denomination of real estate. A right or interest in things personal, or right or interest less than a freehold in reality, or any right or interest which one has in things movable.

Generally, all property other than real estate; as goods, chattels, money, notes, bonds, stocks and choses in action generally, including intangible property. Bismarck Tribune Co. v. Omdahl, N.D., 147 N.W.2d 903, 906. It is sometimes designated as personalty when real estate is termed realty. Personal property also can refer to property which is not used in a taxpayer's trade or business or held for the production or collection of income. When used in this sense, personal property could include both realty (e.g., a personal residence) and personalty (e.g., personal effects such as clothing and furniture).

Personal property is divisible into (1) corporeal personal property, which includes movable and tangible things, such as animals, furniture, merchandise, etc.; and (2) incorporeal personal property, which consists of such rights as personal annuities, stocks, shares, patents, and copyrights.

Private property. As protected from being taken for public uses, is such property as belongs absolutely to an individual, and of which he has the exclusive right of disposition. Property of a specific, fixed and tangible nature, capable of being in possession and transmitted to another, such as houses, lands, and chattels. Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U.S. 141, 21 S.Ct. 48, 45 L.Ed. 126.

Property of another. Includes property in which any person other than the actor has an interest which the actor is not privileged to infringe, regardless of the fact that the other person might be precluded from civil recovery because the property was used in an unlawful transaction or was subject to forfeiture as contraband. Property in possession of the actor shall not be deemed property of another who has only a security interest therein, even if legal title is in the creditor pursuant to a conditional sales contract or other security agreement. Model Penal Code, § 223.0.

Property tax. See that title.

Public property. This term is commonly used as a designation of those things which are publici juris (q.v.), and therefore considered as being owned by "the public," the entire state or community, and not restricted to the dominion of a private person. It may also apply to any subject of property owned by a state, nation, or municipal corporation as such. See also State property, below.

Qualified property. Property in chattels which is not in its nature permanent, but may at some times subsist and not at other times; such for example, as the property a man may have in wild animals which he has caught and keeps, and which are his only so long as he retains possession of them. Any ownership not absolute. See also Special property, below.

Real property. Land, and generally whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed to land. Also rights issuing out of, annexed to, and exercisable within or about land. A general term for lands, tenements, and hereditaments; property which, on the death of the owner intestate, passes to his heir.

Real or immovable property consists of: Land; that which is affixed to land; that which is incidental or appurtenant to land; that which is immovable by law; except that for the purposes of sale, emblements, industrial growing crops and things attached to or forming part of the land, which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale, shall be treated as goods and be governed by the regulating the sales of goods. Calif.Civil Code, § 658.

Separate property. See that title.

Special property. Property of a qualified, temporary, or limited nature; as distinguished from absolute, general, or unconditional property. Such is the property of a bailee in the article bailed, of a sheriff in goods temporarily in his hands under a levy, of the finder of lost goods while looking for the owner, of a person in wild animals which he has caught. See also Qualified property, above.

State property. The State is the owner of all land below tide water, and below ordinary high-water mark, bordering upon tide water within the State; of all land below the water of a navigable lake or stream; of all property lawfully appropriated by it to its own use; of all property dedicated to the State; and of all property of which there is no other owner. Calif. Civil Code, § 670.

Tangible property. All property which is touchable and has real existence (physical) whether it is real or personal.

Unclaimed property. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

Property of the debtor. As used in Bankruptcy Code, "property of the debtor" includes property of which debtor has possession, either actual or constructive, and it is not limited to property title to which is in the debtor. In re Kassuba, D.C.I11., 396 F.Supp. 324, 326.

Property right. A generic term which refers to any type of right to specific property whether it is personal or real property, tangible or intangible; e.g. professional baseball player has valuable property right in his name, photograph and image, and such right may be saleable by him. Cepeda v. Swift & Co., C.A.Mo., 415 F.2d 1205, 1206.

Property settlement. Term as used in divorce parlance is used interchangeably in describing two different bases for division of marital property: (1) based upon agreement of the parties and approval by the court, and (2) based upon an award by the court after trial on the merits. Marshall v. Marshall, 135 Mich.App. 702, 355 N.W.2d 661, 665. Agreement made between spouses as an incident of a divorce proceeding. Such agreement may contain provisions for division of property owned or acquired by the spouses during the marriage, periodic payments by one of the spouses or a lump sum payment or one time conveyance of property. See Equitable distribution; Marital property; Separate property; Separation agreement. Compare Post-nuptial agreement; Pre-nuptial agreement.

Property tax. An ad valorem tax, usually levied by a city or county government, on the value of real or personal property that the taxpayer owns on a specified date. The tax is generally expressed as a uniform rate per thousand of valuation. See Ad valorem.

Property torts. Such involve injury or damage to property, real or personal, in contrast to "personal torts" which involve injuries to person, i.e., the body, reputation, or feelings. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Chumbley, Mo.App., 394 S.W.2d 418, 422.

Propinquity et consanguinei /prapistkway et konseongwiniyay/. Lat. The nearest of kin to a deceased person.

Propiedad /prowooipiyetd9/. In Spanish law, property.

Propinquiror excludit propinquum; propinquus remotum; et remotus remotiorem /prapistkwiyar askil(y)uwotd prapistkwam, prapistkwas ranomtwam, et ranatomtwos ransAMILYYOM/. Who he is nearer excludes him who is near; he who is near, him who is remote; he who is remote, him who is remoter.

Propinquity /proapistkwdig/. Kindred; parentage; nearness; proximity.

Propior sobrino, propior sobrina /prówpiyety sabráy-now/ "sabráyn/. Lat. In the civil law, the son or daughter of a great-uncle or great-aunt, paternal or maternal.

Propios, proprios /prówpiyri-yóws/. In Spanish law, certain portions of ground laid off and reserved when a town was founded in Spanish America as the unalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, etc., or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place.

Propone /propoon/. In ecclesiastical and probate law, to bring forward for adjudication; to exhibit as basis of a claim; to proffer for judicial action.

Proponent /propoonant/. The propounder of a thing. Thus, the proponent of a will is the party who offers it for probate (q.v.).

Proportional representation. A method of election which gives representation to minority interests. In connection with elections for political office, the Supreme Court has held that the Constitution does not require proportional representation. Davis v. Bandemer, 478 U.S. 109, 129, 106 S.Ct. 2797, 2809, 92 L.Ed.2d 85.
Proposal. An offer; something proffered. An offer, by one person to another, of terms and conditions with reference to some work or undertaking, or for the transfer of property, the acceptance whereof will make a contract between them. Signification by one person to another of his willingness to enter into a contract with him on the terms specified in the offer.

The initial overture or preliminary statement for consideration by the other party to a proposed agreement. As so used, it is not an offer but it contemplates an offer and hence, its acceptance does not ripen into a contract. See also Other.

Propositio indefinita equipollent universali /própozish(ý)ow indéfánáyto ékwapólat yúwwnavorséy-lay/. An indefinite proposition is equivalent to a general one.

Proposition. An offer to do a thing. See Offer; Proposal.

Propositus /pró pózostas/. Lat. The person proposed; the person from whom a descent is traced.

Pro possessione presumitur de jure /prów pazeshiyowniy prázyumstár diy júriy/. From possession arises a presumption of law.

Pro possessore /prów pówzéssóriy/. As a possessor; by title of a possessor.

Pro possessor habetur qui dolo injuriave desidet pos-sidere /prów pówzéssóriy habytár kwáy dówlow ánjú-riyevyví děsíyat pósídiriý/. He is esteemed a possessor whose possession has been disturbed by fraud or injury.

Pro posse suo /prów pó síy ýúwwow/. To the extent of his power or ability.

Propound. To offer; to propose. An executor or other person is said to propound a will when he takes proceedings for obtaining probate solemn form.

Prop.Reg. An abbreviation for Proposed Regulation (e.g. Proposed Treasury Regulation). A Regulation may first be issued in proposed form to give interested parties the opportunity for comment. When and if a Proposed Regulation is finalized, it is designated as a Regulation (abbreviated Reg.).

Propria persona /prówpríyó parsówná/. See In propria persona.

Proprietary, n. /própréyasty(é)hriý/. A proprietor or owner; one who has the exclusive title to a thing; one who possesses or holds the title to a thing in his own right; one who possesses the dominion or ownership of a thing in his own right. The grantees of Pennsylvania and Maryland and their heirs were called the proprietaries of those provinces.

Proprietary, adj. /própréyasty(é)hriý/. Belonging to ownership; owned by a particular person; belonging or pertaining to a proprietor; relating to a certain owner or proprietor.

Proprietary articles. Goods manufactured under some exclusive individual right to make and sell them. The term is so used in the internal revenue laws of the United States. Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U.S. 482, 6 S.Ct. 861, 29 L.Ed. 979.

Proprietary capacity. Used to describe functions of a city or town when it engages in a business-like venture as contrasted with a governmental function. See Proprietary functions, below.

Proprietary capital. In accounting, that account in a sole proprietorship which represents the original investment in addition to accumulated profits.

Proprietary duties. Those duties of a municipality which are not strictly governmental duties. See also Governmental duties.

Proprietary functions. Functions which city or town, in its discretion, may perform when considered to be for best interests of its citizens. Sarmiento v. City of Corpus Christi, Tex.Civ.App., 465 S.W.2d 813, 816, 819. “Governmental function” has to do with administration of some phase of government, that is to say, dispensing or exercising some element of sovereignty, while “proprietary function” is one designed to promote comfort, convenience, safety and happiness of citizens. McPhee v. Dade County, Fla.App., 362 So.2d 74, 79. See also Governmental duties; Governmental functions.

Proprietary governments. This expression is used by Blackstone to denote governments granted out by the crown to individuals, in the nature of feudatory principalities, with inferior regalities and subordinate powers of legislation such as formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine. 1 Bl.Comm. 108.

Proprietary information. In trade secret law, information in which the owner has a protectable interest.

Proprietary interest. The interest of an owner of property together with all rights appurtenant thereto such as the right to vote shares of stock and right to participate in managing if the person has a proprietary interest in the shares. Stroh v. Blackhawk Holding Corp., 48 Ill.2d 471, 272 N.E.2d 1.

Proprietary lease. Type of lease in cooperative apartment between owner-cooperative and tenant-stockholder.

Proprietary rights. Those rights which an owner of property has by virtue of his ownership. Douglas v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 497 S.W.2d 308, 310. A right customarily associated with ownership, title, and possession and is an interest or right of one who exercises dominion over a thing or property, of one who manages and controls. Green v. Lewis, 221 Va. 547, 272 S.E.2d 181, 185. See also Proprietary interest, above.

Proprietas /própréyasteryás/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, property; that which is one’s own; ownership.

Proprietas nuda, naked or mere property of ownership; the mere title, separate from the usufruct.
Proprietas plena, full property, including not only the title, but the usufruct, or exclusive right to the use.

Proprietas totius navis carinae causam sequitur /prôpritâs tòtìu navìs carìnae kawàs sekwítu/. The property of the whole ship follows the condition of the keel. If a man builds a vessel from the very keel with the materials of another, the vessel belongs to the owner of the materials.

Proprietas verborum est salus proprietatum /prôpritâs vêrborùm èst sawòs prôpritâtèytâm/. Property of words is the salvation of property.

Proprietate probanda, de /dîj prôpritâtèytâm prowbaènda/. A writ addressed to a sheriff to try by an inquest in whom certain property, previous to distress, subsisted.

Proprietates verborum servanda sunt /prôpritâtètâs vêrborùm särvàndiy sànt/. The proprieties of words [proper meanings of words] are to be preserved or adhered to.

Propriété /prôprièti/. The French law term corresponding to our "property," or the right of enjoying and of disposing of things in the most absolute manner, subject only to the laws.

Proprietor /prôpritôr/. Owner of proprietorship. One who has the legal right or exclusive title to property, business, etc. In many instances it is synonymous with owner.

Proprietorship. A business which is owned by a person who either has the legal right and exclusive title, or dominion, or the ownership of that business. Shermco Industries, Inc. v. Secretary of U.S. Air Force, D.C.Tex., 452 F.Supp. 306, 314. A business, usually unincorporated, owned and controlled exclusively by one person. Such a business is commonly designated a "sole proprietorship" (q.v.).

Propriety. As used in Massachusetts colonial ordinance of 1741 term is nearly, if not precisely, equivalent to property.

In old English law, property; propriety in action; propriety in possession; mixed propriety.

Proprios /prôpriò/s. In Spanish and Mexican law, productive lands, the usufruct of which had been set apart to the several municipalities for the purpose of defraying the charges of their respective governments.

Proprio vigore /prôpriò viwàgorì/. Lat. By its own force; by its intrinsic meaning.

Propter /prôpter/. For; on account of. The initial word of several Latin phrases.

Propter affectum /prôpter ãfèktàm/. For or on account of some affection or prejudice. The name of a species of challenge (q.v.).

Disqualifications of jurors on account of some bias or partiality toward one side or other of litigation, and objections of this class may be made even after jury has returned its verdict. Partin v. Henderson, Tenn.App., 686 S.W.2d 587, 589.

Propter defectum /prôpter dafèktàm/. On account of or for some defect. The name of a species of challenge (q.v.).

Propter defectum sanguinis /prôpter dafèktàm sàngwinìs/. On account of failure of blood.

Propter delictum /prôpter dàliktòm/. For or on account of crime. The name of a species of challenge (q.v.).

Propter honoris respectum /prôpter (h)ànorìs ràspèktòm/. On account of respect of honor or rank. See Challenge.

Propter impotentiam /prôpter impàténshìam/. On account of helplessness. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild animals, consisting in the fact of their inability to escape; as is the case with the young of such animals before they can fly or run. 2 Bl.Comm. 394.

Propter privilegium /prôpter privàlijìam/. On account of privilege. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild animals, consisting in the special privilege of hunting, taking and killing them, in a given park or preserve, to the exclusion of other persons. 2 Bl.Comm. 394.

Pro querente /prôw kwàrentì/. For the plaintiff; usually abbreviated pro quer.

Pro rata /prôw réytà/. Proportionately; according to a certain rate, percentage, or proportion. According to measure, interest, or liability. According to a certain rule or proportion. For example, if a corporation has ten shareholders each of whom owns 10% of the stock, a pro-rata dividend distribution of $1,000 would mean that each shareholder would receive $100. See also Per capita; Pro rate.

Pro rata clause. Such clause commonly used as other insurance provision in automobile liability policy provides that when an insured has other insurance available, company will be liable only for proportion of loss represented by ratio between its policy limit and total limits of all available insurance. Putnam v. New Amsterdam Cas. Co., 48 Ill.2d 71, 269 N.E.2d 97, 99. Provision in insurance policy to the effect that the insurer will not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount of the policy bears to the total amount of insurance on the property.

Pro-rata distribution clause. In fire insurance, provision in the policy that the amount of insurance written shall apply to each parcel of property in the proportion which the value of each parcel bears to the total value of all the property insured under the policy.

Pro rate. To divide, share, or distribute proportionally; to assess or apportion pro-rata. The act of adjusting, dividing or prorating property taxes, interest, insurance premiums, rental income, etc., between buyer and seller proportionately to time of use, or the date of closing. See also Pro rata.

Pro re nata /prôw rétì. For the affair immediately in hand; for the occasion as it may arise; adapted to meet the particular occasion. Thus, a course of judicial action adopted under pressure of the exigencies of the affair in hand, rather than in conformity to established precedents, is said to be taken _pro re nata_.

_Prorogation_ /prɔwragéyshan/. Prolonging or putting off to another day. The discontinuation or termination of a session of the legislature, parliament, or the like. In English law, a prorogation is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day. In the civil law, the giving time to do a thing beyond the term previously fixed.

_Prorogue_. To direct suspension of proceedings of parliament; to terminate a legislative session.

_Pro salute animae_/prɔw sal(y)uwti˘ y˘ ˘ enami˘ y/. For the good of his soul. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are _pro salute animae_; hence it will not be a temporal damage founding an action for slander that the words spoken put any one in danger of such a suit.

_PROscribed_ /prɔskrɔybd/. In the civil law, among the Romans, a man was said to be "proscribed" when a reward was offered for his head; but the term was more usually applied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the consequences of civil death.

_Pro se_/prɔw siy/. For one's own behalf; in person. Appearing for oneself, as in the case of one who does not retain a lawyer and appears for himself in court.

_Prosecute_. To follow up; to carry on an action or other judicial proceeding; to proceed against a person criminally. To "prosecute" an action is not merely to commence it, but includes following it to an ultimate conclusion. _See also_ Prosecution.

_Prospecting attorney_. The name of the public officer who is appointed or elected in each judicial district, circuit, or county, to conduct criminal prosecutions on behalf of the State or people. Federal prosecutors (U.S. Attorneys) represent the United States in prosecuting federal crimes.

A locally elected officer who represents the State in securing indictments and informations and in prosecuting criminal cases. Also called district or county attorney or State's attorney. _See also_ Prosecutor; States Attorney; United States Attorney.

_Prospecting witness_. The private person upon whose complaint or information a criminal accusation is found and whose testimony is mainly relied on to secure a conviction at the trial. In a more particular sense, the person who was chiefly injured, in person or property, by the act constituting the alleged crime (as in case of robbery, assault, criminal negligence, bastardy, and the like), and who instigates the prosecution and gives evidence.

_Prosectio legis est gravis vexatio, executio legis coronat opus_/prɔskyuwsh(i)yow li˘ y˘ i˘ y˘ s ˘ st ˘ gr˘ v˘ s vekse˘ ysh(i)yow, ˘ ksakyuwsh(i)yow li˘ y˘ s karównat ˘ owpa˘ s/. Litigation is vexatious, but an execution crowns the work.

_Prosecution_. A criminal action; a proceeding instituted and carried on by due course of law, before a competent tribunal, for the purpose of determining the guilt or innocence of a person charged with crime. U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U.S. 298, 9 S.Ct. 99, 32 L.Ed. 490. The continuous following up, through instrumentalties created by law, of a person accused of a public offense with a steady and fixed purpose of reaching a judicial determination of the guilt or innocence of the accused.

By an extension of its meaning, "prosecution" is also used to designate the government (state or federal) as the party proceeding in a criminal action, or the prosecutor, or counsel; as when we speak of "the evidence adduced by the prosecution."

The term is also used respecting civil litigation, and includes every step in action, from its commencement to its final determination. _The Brazil, C.C.A.II., 134 F.2d 929, 930_.

The Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const., requires that all prosecutions for infamous federal crimes (i.e. federal offenses carrying a term of imprisonment in excess of one year) be commenced by grand jury indictment. This requirement, however, does not apply to _state_ prosecutions for such crimes, which may be prosecuted on the basis of an information. _Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 4 S.Ct. 111, 28 L.Ed.2d 232_.

_Malicious prosecution_. See that title.

_Prosecution history estoppel_. An equitable tool for determining the permissible scope of patent claims. _Builders Concrete Inc. v. Bremerton Concrete Products Co., 757 F.2d 255, 258_. It limits the scope of patent claims based on arguments and claim amendments made during prosecution to obtain allowance of the patent. _Advance Transformer Co. v. Levinson, 837 F.2d 1091, 1083_. This doctrine applies both to claim amendments to overcome rejections based on prior art, and to arguments submitted to obtain the patent. _Hughes Aircraft Co. v. United States, 717 F.2d 1351, 1362_. _See also_ File wrapper estoppel.

_Prosecutor_. One who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government. One who instigates the prosecution upon which an accused is arrested or who prefers an accusation against the party whom he suspects to be guilty, as does a district, county, or state's attorney on behalf of the state, or a United States Attorney for a federal district on behalf of the U.S. government. _People v. Pohl, 47 Ill.App.2d 232, 197 N.E.2d 759, 764_. A District Attorney or any other public servant who represents the people in a criminal action. _New York Penal Code, § 1.20(31)_. _See also_ Prosecuting attorney.

_Private prosecutor_. One who sets in motion the machinery of criminal justice against a person whom he suspects or believes to be guilty of a crime, by laying an accusation before the proper authorities, and who is not himself an officer of the government. _Compare_ Public prosecutor, below.
Prosecutor of the pleas. This name was given in New Jersey to the county officer who was charged with the prosecution of criminal actions, corresponding to the "district attorney" or "county attorney" in other states.

Public prosecutor. An officer of government (such as a state's attorney or district attorney) whose function is the prosecution of criminal actions, or suits partaking of the nature of criminal actions. See also Prosecuting attorney.

Prosecutrix /prəsɨktʃər/. A female prosecutor.

Prosequi /prəsəkwəri/. Lat. To follow up or pursue; to sue or prosecute. See Nolle prosequi.

Prosequitur /prəsəkwətər/. Lat. He follows up or pursues; he prosecutes. See Non pros.

Prosocer /prəsəsər/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife's husband; a grandfather of wife.

Prosocerus /prəsəsərəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife's grandmother.

Pro socio /prəsə sɔwʃiə/. For a partner; the name of an action in behalf of a partner. A title of the civil law.

Pro solido /prəsə səldəʊ/. For the whole; as one; jointly; without division.

Prospective /prəsəpəktiv/. In the future; looking forward; contemplating the future.

Prospective damages /prəsəpəktiv dæməʒəs/. See Damages.

Prospective law /prəsəpəktiv ləʊ/. One applicable only to cases which shall arise after its enactment.

Prospectus. A document published by a corporation, or by persons acting as its agents or assignees, setting forth the nature and objects of an issue of shares, debentures, or other securities created by the company or corporation, the investment or risk characteristics of the security and inviting the public to subscribe to the issue. The principal document of a registration statement required by law to be furnished an investor prior to any purchase. It is the document which is to contain all material facts concerning a company and its operations so that a prospective investor may make an informed decision as to the merit of an investment.

Federal securities laws (15 U.S.C.A. § 77a) require that corporations making public stock offerings file a copy of the prospectus with the SEC and also provide a copy to all prospective purchasers. The content of the prospectus is governed by federal securities laws and regulations.

The term "prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio or television, which offers any security for sale or confirms the sale of any security. Securities Act of 1933, § 1; 15 U.S.C.A. § 77b(10).

See also Offering circular; Red herring.

See also Offering circular; Red herring.

The word in its most general sense means the act of setting one's self to sale, or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power: as, the prostitution of talents or abilities; the prostitution of the press, etc.

A person is guilty of prostitution, a petty misdemeanor, if he or she: (a) is an inmate of a house of prostitution or otherwise engages in sexual activity as a business; or (b) loiters in or within view of any public place for the purpose of being hired to engage in sexual activity. Model Penal Code, § 251.2.

See also Mann Act; Pander.

Pro tanto /prətənˈtɔʊ/. For so much; for as much as may be; as far as it goes. Partial payment made on a claim. Commonly used in eminent domain cases to describe a partial payment made for the taking by the government without prejudice to the right of the petitioner to bring action for the full amount that he claims is due.

Protected class. Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, one of the groups the law sought to protect, including groups based on race, sex, national origin, and religion.

Protection. In old English law, a writ by which the king, by a special prerogative, privilege a defendant from all personal and many real suits for one year at a time, and no longer, in respect of his being engaged in his service out of the realm. In former times the name "protection" was also given to a certificate given to a sailor to show that he was exempt from impressment into the royal navy.

In mercantile law, the name of a document generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which it is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

In public commercial law, a system by which a government imposes customs duties upon commodities of foreign origin or manufacture when imported into the country, for the purpose of stimulating and developing the home production of the same or equivalent articles, by discouraging the importation of foreign goods, or by raising the price of foreign commodities to a point at which the home producers can successfully compete with them. See Protective tariff.
Protection order. Order issued by court in domestic violence or abuse cases to, for example, protect spouse from physical harm by other spouse or child from abuse by parent(s). Such order may be granted immediately by court in cases where immediate and present danger of violence or abuse is shown. Such emergency orders are granted in ex parte type proceeding and are temporary in duration pending full hearing by court with all involved parties present. See e.g. Minn.St. § 518B.01.

Protective committee. A group of security holders or preferred stockholders appointed to protect the interest of their group at a time of liquidation or reorganization of corporation.

Protective custody. The condition of one who is held under authority of law for his own protection as in the case of a material witness whose safety is in jeopardy, or one who is drunk in public though public drunkenness may not be a criminal offense, or of a person who because of mental illness or drug addiction may harm himself or others.

Protective order. Any order or decree of a court whose purpose is to protect a person from further harassment or abusive service of process or discovery; see e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(c); Fed.R.Crim.P. 16(d)(1). See also Gag order; Protection order.

Protective tariff. A law imposing duties on imports, with the purpose and the effect of discouraging the importation of competitive products of foreign origin, and consequently of stimulating and protecting the home production of the same or equivalent articles.

Protective trust. A species of spendthrift trust (q.v.) containing a provision for forfeiture to protect against creditors and voluntary alienation.

Pro tem /pròw tém/. Abbreviation for "pro tempore" which means, literally, for the time being. Hence, one who acts as a substitute on a temporary basis is said to serve pro tem.

Pro tempore /pròw témpori/. For the time being; temporarily; provisionally.

Protest. A formal declaration made by a person interested or concerned in some act about to be done, or already performed, whereby he expresses his dissent or disapproval, or affirms the act against his will. The object of such a declaration is generally to save some right which would be lost to him if his implied assent could be made out, or to exonerate himself from some responsibility which would attach to him unless he expressly negatived his assent.

A notarial act, being a formal statement in writing made by a notary under his seal of office, at the request of the holder of a bill or note, in which it is declared that the bill or note described was on a certain day presented for payment (or acceptance), and that such payment or acceptance was refused, and stating the reasons, if any, given for such refusal, whereupon the notary protests against all parties to such instrument, and declares that they will be held responsible for all loss or damage arising from its dishonor. It denotes also all the steps or acts accompanying dishonor necessary to charge an indorser.

A protest is a certificate of dishonor made under the hand and seal of a United States consul or a notary public or other person authorized to certify dishonor by the law of the place where dishonor occurs. It may be made upon information satisfactory to such person. U.C.C. § 3-509. See also Dishonor.

Protest is a condition on the liability of a drawer or indorser of any draft that on its face appears to be drawn or payable outside of the United States. U.C.C. § 3-501(3).

A formal declaration made by a minority (or by certain individuals) in a legislative body that they dissent from some act or resolution of the body, usually adding the grounds of their dissent. The term, in this sense, refers to such a proceeding in the English House of Lords.

The formal statement, usually in writing, made by a person who is called upon by public authority to pay a sum of money, in which he declares that he does not concede the legality or justice of the claim or his duty to pay it, or that he disputes the amount demanded; the object being to save his right to recover or reclaim the amount, which right would be lost by his acquiescence. Thus, taxes may be paid under "protest."

The name of a paper served on a collector of customs by an importer of merchandise, stating that he believes the sum charged as duty to be excessive, and that, although he pays such sum for the purpose of getting his goods out of the custom-house, he reserves the right to bring an action against the collector to recover the excess.

In maritime law, a written statement by the master of a vessel, attested by a proper judicial officer or a notary, to the effect that damage suffered by the ship on her voyage was caused by storms or other perils of the sea, without any negligence or misconduct on his own part.

Notice of protest. A notice given by the holder of a bill or note to the drawer or indorser that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. U.C.C. § 3-509.

Waiver of protest. As applied to a note or bill, a waiver of protest implies not only dispensing with the formal act known as "protest," but also with that which ordinarily must precede it, viz., demand and notice of non-payment.
Protestando /prò(w)kstaándow/. L. Lat. Protesting. The emphatic word formerly used in pleading by way of protestation. See Protestation.

Protestants. Those who adhered to the doctrine of Luther; so called because, in 1529, they protested against a decree of the emperor Charles V and of the diet of Spires, and declared that they appealed to a general council. The name is now applied indiscriminately to all the sects, of whatever denomination, who have seceded from the Church of Rome.

Protestation. In old pleading, the indirect affirmation or denial of the truth of some matter which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed, denied, or entirely passed over. The exclusion of a conclusion.

Protest fee. Fee charged by banks or other financial agencies when items (such as checks) presented for collection cannot be collected.

Prothonotary /pròthotanówdaríy/pròthotás/. The title given (in e.g. Pennsylvania) to an officer who officiates as principal clerk of some courts.

Protocol /pròtškəl/. A brief summary of the text of a document. Also, the minutes of a meeting which are generally initialed by the parties present to reflect their assent to the accuracy of the minutes.

A section of the Department of State charged with the preparation of agreements and treatises. Commonly, term refers to the etiquette of diplomacy and the ranking of officials.

Protutor /pròwt(y)úwtər/. Lat. In the civil law, he who, not being the tutor of a minor, has administered his property or affairs as if he had been, whether he thought himself legally invested with the authority of a tutor or not. He who marries a woman who is tutrix becomes, by the marriage, a protutor. The protutor is equally responsible with the tutor.

Prout patet per recordum /pròwst péytst pér raskòrdəm/. As appears by the record. In the Latin phraseology of pleading, this was the proper formula for making reference to a record.

Provable. Susceptible of being proved.

Prove. To establish or make certain; to establish a fact or hypothesis as true by satisfactory and sufficient evidence. Lawson v. Superior Court In and For Los Angeles County, 156 Cal.App.2d 755, 318 P.2d 812, 814. As used in legal matters and proceedings means to establish, to render or make certain. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Flowers, Tex.Civ.App., 336 S.W.2d 907, 914. See also Proof.

Prover. In old English law, a person who, on being indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed or accused others, his accomplices, in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon.

Provide. To make, procure, or furnish for future use, prepare. To supply; to afford; to contribute.

Provided. The word used in introducing a proviso (q.v.). Ordinarily it signifies or expresses a condition; but this is not invariable, for, according to the context, it may import a covenant, or a limitation or qualification, or a restraint, modification, or exception to something which precedes.

Provided by law. This phrase when used in a constitution or statute generally means prescribed or provided by some statute.

Province. The district into which a country has been divided; as, the province of Quebec in Canada. More loosely, a sphere of activity or a profession such as medicine or law.

Provincialis /pròvnshiyəyləs/. Lat. In the civil law, one who has his domicile in a province.

Provision. Foresight of the chance of an event happening, sufficient to indicate that any present undertaking upon which its assumed realization might exert a natural and proper influence was entered upon in full contemplation of it as a future possibility.

In commercial law, funds remitted by the drawer of a bill of exchange to the drawee in order to meet the bill, or property remaining in the drawee's hands or due from him to the drawer, and appropriated to that purpose.

Provisional. Temporary; preliminary; tentative; taken or done by way of precaution or ad interim.

A term of the check collection process describing payment, credit or other settlement for a check or other item when the person giving the settlement reserves a right, by law or agreement, to recover the payment or credit if the item is not finally paid.

Provisional committee. A committee appointed for a temporary occasion.

Provisional court. A federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order from which it derives its authority. A provisional court established in conquered or occupied territory by military authorities, or the provisional government, is a federal court deriving its existence and all its powers from the federal government.

Provisional government. One temporarily established in anticipation of and to exist and continue until another (more regular or more permanent) shall be organized and instituted in its stead.

Provisional injunction. Term sometimes used for interlocutory or temporary injunction.

Provisional remedy. A remedy provided for present need or for the immediate occasion; one adapted to meet a particular exigency. Particularly, a temporary process available to a plaintiff in a civil action, which secures him against loss, irreparable injury, dissipation of the property, etc., while the action is pending. Such include the remedies of injunction, appointment of a receiver, attachment, or arrest.
Provisional seizure. A remedy known under the law of Louisiana, and substantially the same in general nature as attachment of property in other states.

Proviso /prəvəˈzəʊv/. A condition, stipulation, limitation, or provision which is inserted in a deed, lease, mortgage, or contract, and on the performance or non-performance of which the validity of the instrument frequently depends; it usually begins with the word "provided."

A limitation or exception to a grant made or authority conferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided.

A clause or part of a clause in a statute, the office of which is either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of its extent.

A "proviso" is used to limit, modify or explain the main part of section of statute to which it is appended. Saginaw County Tp. Officers Ass'n v. City of Saginaw, 373 Mich. 477, 130 N.W.2d 30, 32. The office of a "proviso" in a statute is to restrict or make clear that which has gone before. Allen v. Burkhart, Okl., 377 P.2d 821, 827. A clause engrafted on a preceding enactment for the purpose of restraining or modifying the enacting clause or of excepting something from its operation which would otherwise have been within it. Stoller v. State, 171 Neb. 93, 105 N.W.2d 852, 856. A proviso is sometimes misused to introduce independent pieces of legislation. Cox v. Hart, 260 U.S. 427, 43 S.Ct. 154, 157, 67 L.Ed. 332. Its proper use, however, is to qualify what is affirmed in the body of the act, section, or paragraph preceding it, or to except something from the act, but not to enlarge the enacting clause. And it cannot be held to enlarge the scope of the statute.

Exception and proviso distinguished. See Exception.

Proviso est providere praesentia et futura, non praeterita /prəvəˈzəʊv əʊ ˈpræˈtərətə/ èt fiʃəˈtɪərə, nɒn ˈprætəˈrətə/. A proviso is to provide for the present or future, not the past.

Provisor /prəˈvɪzər/. In old English law, a provider, or purveyor. Also a person nominated to be the next incumbent of a benefice (not yet vacant) by the pope. He that hath the care of providing things necessary; but more especially one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision.

Proviso, trial by. In old English practice, a trial brought on by the defendant, in cases where the plaintiff, after issue joined, neglects to proceed to trial; so called from a clause in the writ to the sheriff, which directs him, in case two writs come to his hands, to execute but one of them. The defendant may take out a venire facias to the sheriff, which hath in it these words, Proviso quod, etc., provided that if the plaintiff shall take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both.

Provocation. The act of inciting another to do a particular deed. That which arouses, moves, calls forth, causes, or occasions. Such conduct or actions on the part of one person towards another as tend to arouse rage, resentment, or fury in the latter against the former, and thereby cause him to do some illegal act against or in relation to the person offering the provocation. See also Procurer.

Provocation which will reduce killing to manslaughter must be of such character as will, in mind of average reasonable man, stir resentment likely to cause violence, obscure the reason, and lead to action from passion rather than judgment. There must be a state of passion without time to cool placing defendant beyond control of his reason. Provocation carries with it the idea of some physical aggression or some assault which suddenly arouses heat and passion in the person assaulted.

Provoke. To excite; to stimulate; to arouse. To irritate, or enrage.

Provost-Marshal. In military law, the officer acting as the head of the military police of any post, camp, city or other place in military occupation, or district under the reign of martial law. He or his assistants may, at any time, arrest and detain for trial, persons subject to military law committing offenses, and may carry into execution any punishments to be inflicted in pursuance of a court martial.

Proxeneta /prɔksəˈnɛtə/. Lat. In the civil law, a broker; one who negotiated or arranged the terms of a contract between two parties, as between buyer and seller; one who negotiated a marriage; a match-maker.

Proximate cause. That which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces injury, and without which the result would not have occurred. Wisniewski v. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., 226 Pa.Super. 574, 323 A.2d 744, 748. That which is nearest in the order of responsible causation. That which stands next in causation to the effect, not necessarily in time or space but in causal relation. The proximate cause of an injury is the primary or moving cause, or that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury and without which the accident could not have happened, if the injury be one which might be reasonably anticipated or foreseen as a natural consequence of the wrongful act. An injury or damage is proximately caused by an act, or a failure to act, whenever it appears from the evidence in the case, that the act or omission played a substantial part in bringing about or actually causing the injury or damage; and that the injury or damage was either a direct result or a reasonably probable consequence of the act or omission.

The last negligent act contributory to an injury, without which such injury would not have resulted. The proximate cause or result. One which succeeds directly or immediately. Pertaining to proximately.

proximate damages. See Damages.

proximately. Directly or immediately. Pertaining to that which in an ordinary natural sequence produces a specific result, no independent disturbing agency intervening. Weaver v. Landis, 66 Cal.App.2d 34, 151 P.2d 884, 886. See Proximate; Proximate cause.

proximity. Kindred between two persons. Quality or state of being next in time, place, causation, influence, etc.; immediate nearness.

proximus est cui nemo antecedit, supremus est quem nemo sequitur /próksmaς èst k'ýwɔj júmɔw ántasiyaḍ, sapρiýmaς èst kwém nýmɔw sókwɔt/. He is next whom no one precedes; he is last whom no one follows.

proxy. (contracted from procuracy.) A person who is substituted or deputed by another to represent him and act for him, particularly in some meeting or public body. An agent representing and acting for principal. Also the instrument containing the appointment of such person. Cliffs Corporation v. United States, C.C.A.Ohio, 103 F.2d 77, 80.

Written authorization given by one person to another so that the second person can act for the first, such as that given by a shareholder to someone else to represent him and vote his shares at a shareholders' meeting. Depending on the context, proxy may also refer to the grant of authority itself (the appointment), or the document granting the authority (the appointment form). See also Power of attorney; Proxy statement; Voting trust.

proxy marriage. A marriage contracted or celebrated through agents acting on behalf of one or both parties. A proxy marriage differs from the more conventional ceremony only in that one or both of the contracting parties are represented by an agent; all the other requirements having been met. State v. Anderson, 239 Or. 200, 396 P.2d 558, 561.

proxy statement. Information required by SEC to be given stockholders as a prerequisite to solicitation of proxies for a security subject to the requirements of Securities Exchange Act. The purpose of the proxy statement is to provide shareholders with the appropriate information to permit an intelligent decision on whether to permit their shares to be voted as solicited for particular matter at forthcoming stockholders meeting. See also Buried facts doctrine.

prudence. Carefulness, precaution, attentiveness, and good judgment, as applied to action or conduct. That degree of care required by the exigencies or circumstances under which it is to be exercised. This term, in the language of the law, is commonly associated with Care and Diligence and contrasted with Negligence. See those titles.

prudent. Sagacious in adapting means to end; circumstance in action, or in determining any line of conduct. Practically wise, judicious, careful, discreet, circumspect, sensible. Tureen v. Peoples Motorbus Co. of St. Louis, Mo.App., 97 S.W.2d 847, 848. In defining negligence, practically synonymous with cautious.

prudenter agit qui praecepto legis obtemperat /prwνdɛntɛr orj jkwɔj præstəpwɔt lỳjos ðɔtəmprəj/. He acts prudently who obeys the command of the law.

prudent man rule. An investment standard. In some states, the law requires that a fiduciary, such as a trustee for pension funds, may invest the trust's or fund's money only in a list of securities designated by the state—the so-called legal list. In other states, the trustee may invest in a security if it is one which a prudent man of discretion and intelligence, who is seeking a reasonable income and preservation of capital, would buy. For example, New York's "prudent man rule," trustee is bound to employ such diligence and prudence in care and management of fund as, in general, prudent men of discretion and intelligence in such matters employ in their own like affairs. Withers v. Teachers' Retirement System of City of New York, D.C.N.Y., 447 F.Supp. 1248, 1254. A federal "prudent man rule" which governs investment of pension funds is found in ERISA § 404(a)(1); 29 U.S.C.A. § 1104(a)(1) prurient interest. A shameful or morbid interest in nudity, sex, or excretion. Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 496, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 2799, 86 L.Ed.2d 394. Model Penal Code § 251.4(1). An obscene interest in immoral and lascivious matters. An excessive or unnatural interest in sex. One of the criteria of obscenity enunciated in Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, is whether the material appeals to the "prurient interest" in sex. See also Obscene; Obscenity.

P.S. An abbreviation for "Public Statutes;" also for "postscript."

Pseudo /syúwdow/. False, counterfeit, pretended, spurious.

Pseudograph /syúwdgraf/. False writing.

P.S.I.A. An abbreviation for "pounds per square inch absolute."

Psychoneurosis /súykown(y)arówss/. See Insanity.

Psychosis /súykwôz/. A severe mental disorder in which the patient departs from the normal pattern of thinking, feeling, and acting. There is generally a loss of contact with reality. Progressive deterioration may occur. See also Insanity.

Psychotherapy /súykowéhrápy/. A method or system of alleviating or curing certain forms of disease, particularly diseases of the nervous system or such as are traceable to nervous disorders, by suggestion, persuasion, encouragement, the inspiration of hope or confidence, the discouragement of morbid memories, associations, or beliefs, and other similar means addressed to the mental state of the patient, without (or sometimes in conjunction with) the administration of drugs or other physical remedies.

PTL. See Previously taxed income; Pre-trial intervention.

Puberty. The earliest age at which persons are capable of begetting or bearing children. In the civil and common law, the age at which one became capable of contracting marriage. It was in boys fourteen, and in girls twelve years.

Public, n. The whole body politic, or the aggregate of the citizens of a state, nation, or municipality. The inhabitants of a state, county, or community. In one sense, everybody, and accordingly the body of the people at large; the community at large, without reference to the geographical limits of any corporation like a city, town, or county; the people. In another sense the word does not mean all the people, nor most of the people, nor very many of the people of a place, but so many or from them as contradistinguishes them from a few. Accordingly, it has been defined or employed as meaning the inhabitants of a particular place; all the inhabitants of a particular place; the people of the neighborhood. Also, a part of the inhabitants of a community.

Public, adj. Pertaining to a state, nation, or whole community; proceeding from, relating to, or affecting the whole body of people or an entire community. Open to all; notorious. Common to all or many; general; open to common use. Belonging to the people at large; relating to or affecting the whole people of a state, nation, or community; not limited or restricted to any particular class of the community. Peacock v. Retail Credit Co., D.C.Ga., 302 F.Supp. 418, 423.

As to public. As descriptive of the publishing of laws and ordinances, it means printing or otherwise reproducing copies of them and distributing them in such a manner as to make their contents easily accessible to the public.

Copyright law. The act of making public a book, writing, chart, map, etc.; that is, offering or communicating it to the public by the sale or distribution of copies. Publication, as used in connection with common-law copyrights, is employed to denote those acts of an author or creator which evidence a dedication of his work to public and on which depends the loss of his common-law copyright. Vic Alexander & Associates v. Cheyenne Neon Sign Co., Wyo., 417 P.2d 921, 923. See also Common-law copyright.

As defined in Copyright Act, "publication" is the distribution of copies or phonorecords of a work to the public by sale or other transfer of ownership, or by rental, lease, or lending. The offering to distribute copies or phonorecords to a group of persons for purposes of further distribution, public performance, or public display, constitutes publication. A public performance or display of a work does not of itself constitute publication. 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Law of libel. The act of making the defamatory matter known publicly, of disseminating it, or communicating it to one or more persons (i.e. to third person or persons). The reduction of libelous matter to writing and its delivery to any one other than the person injuriously affected thereby. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co. v. Paul, 256 Md. 643, 261 A.2d 731, 734, 735. To communicate defamatory words orally or in writing or in print to some third person capable of understanding their defamatory import and in such a way that he did so understand; publication is an essential element of a libel action and, without publication, there is no libel. Houston Belt & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Wherry, Tex.Civ.App., 548 S.W.2d 743, 751. See also Libel.

Law of wills. The formal declaration made by a testator at the time of signing his will that it is his last will and testament. The act or acts of the testator by which he manifests that it is his intention to give effect to the paper as his last will and testament; any communication indicating to the witness that the testator intends to give effect to the paper as his will, by words, sign, motion, or conduct.

Service of process. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, publication of a summons is the process of giving it currency as an advertisement in a newspaper, under the conditions prescribed by law, as a means of giving notice of the suit to a defendant upon whom personal service cannot be made. See e.g. New York CPLR § 315. See also Service (Service by publication).

Public building. One of which the possession and use, as well as the property in it, are in the public. Any building held, used, or controlled exclusively for public purposes by any department or branch of government, state, county, or municipal, without reference to the ownership of the building or of the realty upon which it is situated. A building belonging to or used by the public for the transaction of public or quasi public business.

Public character. An individual who asks for and desires public recognition, such as a political figure, statesman, author, artist, or inventor. See also Public figure.

Public contract. Any contract in which there are public funds provided though private persons may perform the contract and the subject of the contract may ultimately benefit private persons. Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Edison, 240 Ark. 641, 401 S.W.2d 754.

Public controversy. A "public controversy," in which a person must have voluntarily involved himself in order to qualify as a public figure for purposes of a libel or slander action, is not simply a matter of interest to the public but must be a real dispute, the outcome of which affects the general public or some segment of it in an appreciable way. Re v. Gannett Co., Inc., Del.Super., 480 A.2d 662, 665.

Public convenience and necessity. The common criterion used in public utility matters when a board or agency is faced with a petition for action at the request of the utility. In a statute requiring the issuance of a certificate of public convenience and necessity by the Public Utilities Commission for the operation of a public transportation line, "convenience" is not used in its colloquial sense as synonymous with handy or easy of access, but in accord with its regular meaning of suitable and fitting, and "public convenience" refers to something fitting or suited to the public need. See also Public utility.

Public corporations. An artificial person (e.g. municipality or a government corporation) created for the administration of public affairs. Unlike a private corporation it has no protection against legislative acts altering or even repealing its charter. Instrumentalities created by state, formed and owned by it in public interest, supported in whole or part by public funds, and governed by managers deriving their authority from state. Sharon Realty Co. v. Westlake, Ohio Com.Pl., 168 N.E.2d 318, 323, 25 O.O.2d 322. A public corporation is an instrumentality of the state, founded and owned in the public interest, supported by public funds and governed by those deriving their authority from the state. York County Fair Ass'n v. South Carolina Tax Commission, 249 S.C. 337, 154 S.E.2d 361, 362.

Term is also commonly used to distinguish a corporation whose stock is owned and traded by the public from a corporation with closely held shares (i.e. close or private corporation).

See also Municipal corporation.

Public defender. An attorney appointed by a court or employed by a government agency whose work consists primarily in defending indigent defendants in criminal cases. Federal Public Defender Organizations and Community Defender Organizations are provided for under Public domain. Land and water in possession of and owned by the United States and the states individually, as distinguished from lands privately owned by individuals or corporations. See also Public lands.

Copyright law. Public ownership status of writings, documents, or publications that are not protected by copyrights.

Public entity. Public entity includes a nation, state, county, city and county, city, district, public authority, public agency, or any other political subdivision or public corporation, whether foreign or domestic. Calif. Evid. Code.

Public exchange offer. See Offering.

Public figure. Term "public figure," for purposes of determining standard to be applied in defamation action, includes artists, athletes, business people, dilettantes, and anyone who is famous or infamous because of who he is or what he has done. Rosanova v. Playboy Enterprises, Inc., D.C.Ga., 411 F.Supp., 440, 444. Public figures, for libel purposes, are those who have assumed roles of special prominence in society; commonly, those classed as public figures have thrust themselves to forefront of particular public controversies in order to influence resolution of issues involved. Mills v. Kingsport Times-News, D.C.W.Va., 475 F.Supp. 1005, 1009. Persons so classified are required to prove actual notice to recover in libel actions. Hustler Magazine v. Falwell, 485 U.S. 46, 108 S.Ct. 876, 99 L.Ed.2d 41.

In determining whether plaintiff in libel action is "public figure" required to show "actual malice" of publisher or broadcaster, it is preferable to look to nature and extent of his participation in particular controversy giving rise to the defamation, and he should not be deemed public personality for all aspects of his life in absence of clear evidence of general fame or notoriety in community and pervasive involvement in affairs of society. Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789. See Libel.

For right of privacy action purposes, includes anyone who has arrived at position where public attention is focused upon him as a person. Dietemann v. Time, Inc., D.C.Cal., 284 F.Supp. 925, 930. See Invasion of privacy.

Public funds. Moneys belonging to government, or any department of it, in hands of public official. Droste v. Kern, 34 Ill.2d 495, 217 N.E.2d 73, 78.

Public hearing. Public hearing before any tribunal or body means right to appear and give evidence and also right to hear and examine witnesses whose testimony is presented by opposing parties. North State, Astor, Lake Shore Drive Ass'n v. City of Chicago, 131 Ill.App.2d 251, 266 N.E.2d 742, 746.

Public lands. The general public domain; unappropriated lands; lands belonging to the United States and which are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws, and not reserved or held back for any special governmental or public purpose. Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U.S. 761, 763, 23 L.Ed. 769.
Public land system. Legal descriptions of land by reference to the public land survey.

Public law. A general classification of law, consisting generally of constitutional, administrative, criminal, and international law, concerned with the organization of the state, the relations between the state and the people who compose it, the responsibilities of public officers to the state, to each other, and to private persons, and the relations of states to one another. An act which relates to the public as a whole. It may be (1) general (applying to all persons within the jurisdiction), (2) local (applying to a geographical area), or (3) special (relating to an organization which is charged with a public interest).

That portion of law that defines rights and duties with either the operation of government, or the relationships between the government and individuals, associations, and corporations.

That branch or department of law which is concerned with the state in its political or sovereign capacity, including constitutional and administrative law, and with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where the state is regarded as the subject of the right or object of the duty,—including criminal law and criminal procedure,—and the law of the state, considered in its quasi private personality, i.e., as capable of holding or exercising rights, or acquiring and dealing with property, in the character of an individual. That portion of law which is concerned with political conditions; that is to say, with the powers, rights, duties, capacities, and incapacities which are peculiar to political superiors, supreme and subordinate. In one sense, a designation given to international law, as distinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state. In another sense, a law or statute that applies to the people generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it, is denominated a public law, as contradistinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state. In another sense, a law or statute that applies to the people generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it, is denominated a public law, as contradistinguished from a private law, affecting only an individual or a small number of persons.

See also General law. Compare Private bill; Private law; Special law.

Public liability insurance. Type of insurance coverage which protects against claims arising from the conduct, property and agents of the insured and which indemnifies against loss arising from liability.

Publicly. Openly. In public, well known, open, notorious, common, or general, as opposed to private, secluded, or secret.

Publicly held. Corporation whose stock is held by and available to the public. Shares of publicly held corporations are usually traded on a securities exchange or over-the-counter. Compare Corporation (Close Corporation).

Public nuisance. A condition dangerous to health, offensive to community moral standards, or unlawfully obstructing the public in the free use of public property. Any unreasonable interference with rights common to all members of community in general and encompasses public health, safety, peace, morals or convenience. State ex inf. Ashcroft v. Kansas City Firefighters Local No. 42, Mo.App., 672 S.W.2d 99, 114. It is one affecting rights enjoyed by citizens as part of public and must affect a considerable number of people or an entire community or neighborhood, Spur Industries, Inc. v. Del E. Webb Development Co., 108 Ariz. 178, 494 P.2d 700, 705; although extent of damage may be unequal, Kitsap County v. Kev, Inc., 720 P.2d 818, 821. Compare Public nuisance.

Public offense. An act or omission forbidden by law, and punishable as by law provided. Term used to describe a crime as distinguished from an infringement of private rights. A public offense, the commission of which authorizes private person to arrest another, includes misdemeanors. People v. Sjosten, 262 C.A.2d 539, 68 Cal.Rptr. 832, 835. See Crime.

Public offering. See Offering.

Public office. Essential characteristics of "public office" are: (1) authority conferred by law, (2) fixed tenure of office, and (3) power to exercise some portion of sovereign functions of government; key element of such test is that "officer" is carrying out sovereign function. Spring v. Constantino, 168 Conn. 563, 362 A.2d 871, 875. Essential elements to establish public position as "public office" are: position must be created by constitution, legislature, or through authority conferred by legislature, portion of sovereign power of government must be delegated to position, duties and powers must be defined, directly or impliedly, by legislature or through legislative authority, duties must be performed independently without control of superior power other than law, and position must have some permanency and continuity. State ex rel. Eli Lilly and Co. v. Gaertner, Mo.App., 619 S.W.2d 761, 764.

Public official. A person who, upon being issued a commission, taking required oath, enters upon, for a fixed tenure, a position called an office where he or she exercises in his or her own right some of the attributes of sovereign he or she serves for benefit of public. Macy v. Heverin, 44 Md.App. 358, 408 A.2d 1067, 1069. The holder of a public office though not all persons in public employment are public officials, because public official's position requires the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, whether great or small. Town of Arlington v. Bds. of Conciliation and Arbitration, Mass., 392 N.E.2d 914.

Public passage. A right, subsisting in the public, to pass over a body of water, whether the land under it be public or owned by a private person. This term is synonymous with public highway, with this difference: by the latter is understood a right to pass over the land of another; by the former is meant the right of going over the water which is on another's land.

Public place. A place to which the general public has a right to resort; not necessarily a place devoted solely to the uses of the public, but a place which is in point of fact public rather than private, a place visited by many persons and usually accessible to the neighboring public (e.g. a park or public beach). Also, a place in which the public has an interest as affecting the safety, health, morals, and welfare of the community. A place exposed to the public, and where the public gather together or pass to and fro.

Public policy. Community common sense and common conscience, extended and applied throughout the state to matters of public morals, health, safety, welfare, and the like; it is that general and well-settled public opinion relating to man’s plain, palpable duty to his fellowmen, having due regard to all circumstances of each particular relation and situation. Hammonds v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., D.C.Ohio, 243 F.Supp. 793, 796.

Public policy limitation. A concept developed by the courts precluding an income tax deduction for certain expenses related to activities deemed to be contrary to the public welfare. In this connection, Congress has incorporated into the Internal Revenue Code specific disallowance provisions covering such items as illegal bribes, kickbacks, and fines and penalties. I.R.C. §§ 162(c) and (f).

Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclination, or liberality. The constitutional requirement that the purpose of any tax, police regulation, or particular exertion of the power of eminent domain shall be the convenience, safety, or welfare of the entire community and not the welfare of a specific individual or class of persons. "Public purpose" that will justify expenditure of public money generally means such an activity as will serve as benefit to community as a body and which at same time is directly related function of government. Pack v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 215 Tenn. 503, 387 S.W.2d 789, 794.

The term is synonymous with governmental purpose. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow; the essential requisite being that a public service or use shall affect the inhabitants as a community, and not merely as individuals. A public purpose or public business has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity, and contentment of all the inhabitants or residents within a given political division, as, for example, a state, the sovereign powers of which are exercised to promote such public purpose or public business.

Public record. Public records are those records which a governmental unit is required by law to keep or which it is necessary to keep in discharge of duties imposed by law; e.g. records of land transactions kept at county court house; records of court cases kept by clerk of court. Curran v. Board of Park Com’rs, Lake County Metropolitan Park Dist., Com.Pl., 22 Ohio Misc. 197, 259 N.E.2d 757, 759, 51 O.O.2d 321. Elements essential to constitute a public record are that it be a written memorial, that it be made by a public officer, and that the officer be authorized by law to make it. Nero v. Hyland, 76 N.J. 213, 386 A.2d 846, 851. A record is a "public record" within purview of statute providing that books and records required by law to be kept by county clerk may be received in evidence in any court if it is a record which a public officer is required to keep and if it is filed in such a manner that it is subject to public inspection. In re LaSarge’s Estate, Okl., 526 P.2d 930, 933. For purposes of right-to-know law, includes decisions which establish, alter, or deny rights, privileges, immunities, duties, or obligations. Lamolinara v. Barger, 30 Pa. Cmwlth. 307, 373 A.2d 788, 790. See also Record.

Public safety. A state may exercise its police power (derivatively, a city or town) by enacting laws for the protection of the public from injury and dangers.

Public sale. Sale at auction of property upon notice to public of such. May result from e.g. tax foreclosure. See also Sheriff’s sale.

Public service. A term applied to the objects and enterprises of certain kinds of corporations, which specially serve the needs of the general public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as railroad, gas, water, and electric light companies; and companies furnishing public transportation. A public service or quasi public corporation is one private in its ownership, but which has an appropriate franchise from the state to provide for a necessity or convenience of the general public, incapable of being furnished by private competitive business, and dependent for its exercise on eminent domain or governmental agency. It is one of a large class of private corporations which on account of special franchises conferred on them owe a duty to the public which they may be compelled to perform. See also Public corporations.

Public service commission. A board or commission created by the legislature to exercise power of supervision or regulation over public utilities or public service corporations. An administrative agency established by the State legislature to regulate rates and services of electric, gas, telephone, and other public utilities. Such a commission is a legal, administrative body, provided for the administration of certain matters within the police power, with power to make regulations as to certain matters when required for the public safety and convenience, and to determine facts on which existing laws shall operate.

Public service corporation. A utility company privately owned but regulated by the government. It may sell gas, water or electricity but its rates are established by the state. It may be a broadcasting company. See also Public convenience and necessity; Public utility.
PUBLIC TRIAL

Public trial. Term "public trial" contemplated by Constitution (Amend. VI) is a trial which is not secret, one that the public is free to attend. To a great extent, it is a relative term and its meaning depends largely on circumstances of each particular case. Hampton v. People, 171 Colo. 153, 465 P.2d 394, 399. Court session which is "public" is also "open", and, therefore, under normal conditions, a "public trial" is one which is open to general public at all times. People v. Valenzuela, 259 C.A.2d 826, 66 Cal.Rptr. 825, 829.

Although the right of public access to criminal trials is of constitutional stature, it is not absolute. Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 581 n. 18, 100 S.Ct. 2814, 65 L.Ed.2d 973. However, the circumstances under which the press and public can be barred from a criminal trial are limited. Where the state attempts to deny the right of access in order to inhibit the disclosure of sensitive information, it must be shown that the denial is necessitated by a compelling governmental interest and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596, 606, 607, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 248.

Public, true, and notorious. The old form by which charges in the allegations in the ecclesiastical courts were described at the end of each particular.

Public trust. See Charitable trust; Trust; Public trust doctrine.

Public trust doctrine. Provides that submerged and submersible lands are preserved for public use in navigation, fishing and recreation and state, as trustee for the public's interest. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596, 606, 607, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 248.

Public trust. See Charitable trust; Trust.

Public trust doctrine. Provides that submerged and submersible lands are preserved for public use in navigation, fishing and recreation and state, as trustee for the public's interest. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596, 606, 607, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 248.

Public trustee. County official who is appointed to act for the public in administering deeds of trust.

Publicum jus /pabbksm j6s/. Lat. In the civil law, public law; that law which regards the state of the community as distinguished from particular individuals.

Public use. Eminent domain. The constitutional and statutory basis for taking property by eminent domain. For condemnation purposes, "public use" is one which confers some benefit or advantage to the public; it is not confined to actual use by public. It is measured in terms of right of public to use proposed facilities for which condemnation is sought and, as long as public has right of use, whether exercised by one or many members of public, a "public advantage" or "public benefit" accrues sufficient to constitute a public use. Montana Power Co. v. Bokma, Mont., 457 P.2d 769, 772, 773.

Public use, in constitutional provisions restricting the exercise of the right to take private property in virtue of eminent domain, means a use concerning the whole community as distinguished from particular individuals. But each and every member of society need not be equally interested in such use, or be personally and directly affected by it; if the object is to satisfy a great public want or exigency, that is sufficient. Rindge Co. v. Los Angeles County, 262 U.S. 700, 43 S.Ct. 689, 692, 67 L.Ed. 1186. The term may be said to mean public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit. It may be limited to the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but must be in common, and not for a particular individual. The use must be a needful one for the public, which cannot be surrendered without obvious general loss and inconvenience. A "public use" for which land may be taken defies absolute definition for it changes with varying conditions of society, new appliances in the sciences, changing conceptions of scope and functions of government, and other differing circumstances brought about by an increase in population and new modes of communication and transportation. Katz v. Brandon, 186 Conn. 521, 245 A.2d 579, 586.

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain.

Patent law. Within statute providing that patent is invalid if invention was in "public use" more than one year prior to date of application for patent is defined as any nonsecret use of a completed and operative invention in its natural and intended way. Atlas Chemical Industries, Inc. v. Moraine Products, C.A.Mich., 509 F.2d 1, 4. In patent law, a public use is entirely different from a use by the public. If an inventor allows his machine to be used by other persons generally, either with or without compensation, or if it is, with his consent, put on sale for such use, then it will be in "public use" and on public sale.

Public utility. A privately owned and operated business whose services are so essential to the general public as to justify the grant of special franchises for the use of public property or of the right of eminent domain, in consideration of which the owners must serve all persons who apply, without discrimination. It is always a virtual monopoly.

A business or service which is engaged in regularly supplying the public with some commodity or service which is of public consequence and need, such as electricity, gas, water, transportation, or telephone or telegraph service. Gulf States Utilities Co. v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 46 S.W.2d 1018, 1021. Any agency, instrumentality, business industry or service which is used or conducted in such manner as to affect the community at large, that is, which is not limited or restricted to any particular class of the community. The test for determining if a concern is a public utility is whether it has held itself out as ready, able and willing to serve the public. The term implies a public use of an article, product, or service, carrying with it the duty of the producer or manufacturer, or one attempting to furnish the service, to serve the public and treat all persons alike, without discrimination. It is synonymous with "public use," and refers to persons or corporations charged with the duty to supply the public with the use of property or facilities owned or furnished by them. Buder v. First Nat. Bank in St. Louis, C.C.A.Mo., 16 F.2d 990, 992. To constitute a true "public utility," the devotion to public use must be of such character that the Public generally, or that part of it which has been served and which has accepted the service, has the legal right to demand that that service be conducted, so long as it is continued, with reasonable efficiency under reasonable charges. The devotion to public use must be of such character that the product and service is available to the public generally and indiscriminately, or there must be the acceptance by the utility of public franchises or calling to its aid the police power of the state.

Public vessels. See Vessel.

Public Vessels Act. Federal law which provides for vessels. See Public welfare. The prosperity, well-being, or convenience of safety, order, morals, economic interest, and non-material and political interests. In the development of our civic life, the definition of "public welfare" has also been modified until it has been held to bring within its purview regulations for the promotion of economic welfare and public convenience.

Publish. To make public; to circulate; to make known to people in general. To issue; to put into circulation. To utter; to present (e.g. a forged instrument) for payment. To declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that a forged instrument is genuine. An advising of the public or making known of something to the public for a purpose. Estill County v. Noland, 295 Ky. 753, 175 S.W.2d 341, 346. See also Publication; Utter.

Publisher. One who by himself or his agent makes a thing publicly known. One whose business is the manufacture and sale of books, pamphlets, magazines, newspapers, or other literary productions. One who publishes, especially one who issues, or causes to be issued, from the press, and offers for sale or circulation matter printed, engraved, or the like.

P.U.C. Public Utilities Commission.

PUD. Planned Unit Development. In zoning, a device which has as its goal a self-contained mini-community, built within a zoning district, under density and use rules controlling the relation of private dwellings to open space, of homes to commercial establishments, and of high income dwellings to low and moderate income housing. See Planned unit development.

Pudicitia /pyuwdis3t3i3/. Chastity; purity; continence; modesty; the abstaining from all unlawful carnal commerce or connection.

Pudzeld /wudgeld/. In old English law, supposed to be a corruption of the Saxon "uudgeld" (woodgeld), a freedom from payment of money for taking wood in any forest.

Pueblo /pyuweblow/. In Spanish law, people; all the inhabitants of any country or place, without distinction. A town, township, or municipality. A small settlement or gathering of people, a steady community; the term applies equally whether the settlement be a small collection of Spaniards or Indians. Pueblo of Santa Rosa v. Fall, 56 App.D.C. 259, 12 F.2d 332, 335. This term "pueblo," in its original signification, means "people" or "population," but is used in the sense of the English word "town." It has the indefiniteness of that term, and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place, a settlement or village, as well as to a regularly organized municipality. Trenouth v. San Francisco, 100 U.S. 251, 25 L.Ed. 626.

Community dwelling, constructed of stone or adobe, resided in by Indian tribes of the southwestern United States. Term may also refer to inhabitants of such dwelling or of the entire village.

Puer /pyuwar/. Lat. In the civil law, a child; one of the age from seven to fourteen, including, in this sense, a girl. But it also meant a "boy," as distinguished from a "girl," or a servant.

Puerilitia /pyuwar3li3ty/. In the civil law, a condition intermediate between infancy and puberty, continuing in boys from the seventh to the fourteenth year of their age, and in girls from seven to twelve.

Pueri sunt de sanguine parentum, sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puerorum / pyuwsray ssnt diy sango3wani pyerent3m, sed pey3t3r et mey3t3r non ssnt diy sango3wani pyyuwa3rom/. Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of the children.

Pueritia /pyuwar3ish(i)y/. Lat. In the civil law, childhood; the age from seven to fourteen. The age from birth to fourteen years is the male, or twelve in the female.

Puffer. A person employed by the owner of property which is sold at auction to attend the sale and run up the price by making spurious bids. See also Puffing.

Term also describes secret bidding at auction by or on behalf of seller. Feaster Trucking Service, Inc. v. Parks-Davis Auctioneers, Inc., 211 Kan. 78, 505 P.2d 612, 617.

Puis /pwil/ Fr. In law. Afterwards; since.

Puis darrein continuation /pwil dairən kantinyawana/. Since the last continuance. In common law pleading, the name of a plea which a defendant was allowed to put in, after having already pleaded, where some new matter of defense arose after issue joined; such as payment, a release by the plaintiff, the discharge of the defendant under an insolvent or bankrupt law, and the like.

Puisne. Junior, inferior, as in “puisne judges of the English High Court, meaning those without distinction or title.” Supreme Court Act, § 4, 1981.

Pullman abstention. This doctrine allows federal courts to stay proceedings before it in order to provide state courts opportunity to settle underlying, unsettled questions of state law, thus avoiding possibility of federal court’s unecessarily deciding constitutional questions. North Dixie Theatre, Inc. v. McCullion, D.C.Ohio, 613 F.Supp. 1339, 1343.

Pulsa /palsə/. Lat. In the civil law, to beat; to punish.

Punishable. Deserving of or capable of liable to punishment; capable of being punished by law or right. People v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 116 Cal.App. 412, 2 P.2d 843, 844. See Criminal.

Punishment. Any fine, penalty, or confinement inflicted upon a person by the authority of the law and the judgment and sentence of a court, for some crime or offense committed by him, or for his omission of a duty enjoined by law. A deprivation of property or some right. But does not include a civil penalty redounding to the benefit of an individual, such as a forfeiture of interest. People v. Vanderpool, 20 Cal.2d 746, 128 P.2d 513, 515. See also Sentence.

Cruel and unusual punishment. As prohibited by Eighth Amendment, is such punishment as would amount to torture or barbarity, and any cruel and degrading punishment not known to the common law, and also any punishment so disproportionate to the offense as to shock the moral sense of the community. In re Kemmler, 136 U.S. 436, 10 S.Ct. 930, 94 L.Ed. 519. Punishment which is excessive for the crime committed is cruel and unusual. Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 97 S.Ct. 2861, 53 L.Ed.2d 982. Such punishment cannot be defined with specificity; it is flexible and tends to broaden as society tends to pay more regard to human decency and dignity and becomes, or likes to think that it becomes, more humane. Holt v. Sarver, D.C.Ark., 309 F.Supp. 362, 365, 380. The death penalty is not per se cruel and unusual punishment within the prohibition of the 8th Amendment, U.S.Const., but states must follow strict safeguards in the sentencing of one to death. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 49 L.Ed.2d 869.

The fundamental respect for humanity underlying the Eighth Amendment requires consideration of the character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of the particular offense as a constitutionally indispensable part of the process of inflicting the penalty of death. Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 304, 96 S.Ct. 2978, 49 L.Ed.2d 944; Roberts v. Louisiana, 431 U.S. 633, 637, 97 S.Ct. 1923, 1925, 52 L.Ed.2d 637.

See also Capital (Capital punishment); Corporal punishment; Excessive punishment; Hard labor; Sentence.

Cumulative punishment. An increased punishment inflicted for a second or third conviction of the same offense, under the statutes relating to habitual criminals. To be distinguished from a “cumulative sentence,” as to which see Sentence.

Punitive. Relating to punishment; having the character of punishment or penalty; inflicting punishment or a penalty.

Punitive damages. See Damages.

Punitive statute. One which creates forfeiture or imposes penalty.

Pupillus /pyuwpilə/. Lat. In the civil law, a ward or infant under the age of puberty; a person under the authority of a tutor (q.v.).

Pupillus pati posse non intelligitur /pyuwpiləs pětay pōsid yŏn intalijatər/. A pupil or infant is not supposed to be able to suffer, i.e., to do an act to his own prejudice.

Pur /pūr/. L Fr. By or for. Used both as a separable particle, and in the composition of such words as “purparty,” “purieu.”

Pur autre vie /pūr o(w)tra vāy/pūr őwtra vij/. For (or during) the life of another. An estate pur autre vie is an estate in lands which a person holds for the life of another person.

Purchase. Transmission of property from one person to another by voluntary act and agreement, founded on a valuable consideration. Spur Independent School Dist. v. W. A. Holt Co., Tex.Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 1071, 1073. To own by paying or by promising to pay an agreed price which is enforceable at law. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chickasha v. U.S., C.A.Okl., 462 F.2d 908, 910. In a technical and broader meaning relative to land, generally means the acquisition of real estate by any means whatever except by descent. Oklahoma City v. Board of Education of Oklahoma City, 181 Okl. 539, 75 P.2d 201.

Includes taking by sale, discount, negotiation, mortgage, pledge, lien, issue or re-issue, gift or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property. U.C.C. § 1-201(32). The term "purchase" includes any contract to purchase or otherwise acquire. Securities Exchange Act, § 3.

Quasi purchase. In the civil law, a purchase of property not founded on the actual agreement of the parties, but on conduct of the owner which is inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that he intended a sale.

Words of purchase. Words which denote the person who is to take the estate. Thus, if a person grants land to A. for twenty-one years, and after the determination of that term to A.'s heirs, the word "heirs" does not denote the duration of A.'s estate, but the person who is to take the remainder on the expiration of the term, and is therefore called a "word of purchase."

Purchase agreement. An agreement between a buyer and seller of property, setting forth, in general, the price and terms of the sale. A sales agreement or contract to sell. See also Buy and sell agreement.

Purchase method of accounting. A method of accounting for mergers in which the total value paid or exchanged for the acquired firm's assets is recorded on the acquiring firm's books. Any difference between the fair market value of the assets acquired and the purchase price is recorded as goodwill.

Purchase money. The actual money paid in cash or check initially for the property while the balance may be secured by a mortgage and note calling for periodic payments. See also Earnest money.

As used with reference to part performance under statute of frauds, comprehends consideration, whether it be money or property or services, for which lands are to be conveyed. Hall v. Haer, 160 Okl. 118, 16 P.2d 83, 84.

Purchase money mortgage. A mortgage or security device taken back to secure the performance of an obligation incurred in the purchase of the property. A "purchase money" security interest for personal property is controlled by Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code. See also Mortgage; Purchase money security interest.

Purchase money resulting trust. Such ordinarily arises when the purchase price of property is paid by one person and at his or her discretion the vendor transfers the property to another, who is deemed to hold the property in trust for the person furnishing the consideration. Slocum v. Hammond, Iowa, 346 N.W.2d 485, 492. When one person furnishes the money for the purchase of property title to which is to be taken in the name of another, the party furnishing the funds is the equitable owner under a purchase money resulting trust. It is not necessary that he furnish the entire purchase price, but he must intend to acquire an interest.

Purchase money security interest. One which is taken or retained by seller of item to secure its price or taken by person who advances funds to enable one to acquire rights in collateral. In re Damron, Bkrtcy.Ky., 5 B.R. 357, 358. A security interest is a "purchase money security interest" to the extent that it is: (a) taken or retained by the seller of the collateral to secure all or part of its price; or (b) taken by a person who by making advances or incurring an obligation gives value to enable the debtor to acquire rights in or the use of collateral if such value is in fact so used. U.C.C. § 9-107.

Purchase order. Document authorizing a seller to deliver goods with payment to be made later. A written authorization calling on a vendor or supplier to furnish goods to the person ordering such. It constitutes an offer which is accepted when the vendor supplies the quantity and quality ordered.

Purchase price. Price agreed upon as a consideration for which property or goods are sold and purchased.

Purchaser. One who acquires real property in any other mode than by descent. One who acquires either real or personal property by buying it for a price in money; a buyer; vendee. One who has contracted to purchase property or goods. Also, a successful bidder at judicial sale. In re Spokane Sav. Bank, 198 Wash. 665, 89 P.2d 802, 806. A person who orders and pays for goods when the sale is for cash or who is legally obligated to pay for them if the sale is on credit. L. M. Berry & Co. v. Blackmon, 129 Ga.App. 347, 199 S.E.2d 610, 612. Term may be employed in broad sense to include anyone who obtains title otherwise than by descent and distribution but is more commonly used to refer to a vendee or buyer who has purchased property for valuable consideration. Smith v. Enochs, D.C.Miss., 233 F.Supp. 925, 927.

One who takes by purchase which includes taking by sale, discount, negotiation, mortgage, pledge, lien, issue or re-issue, gift, or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property. U.C.C. § 1-201(32)(33).

The term "purchaser" means a person who, for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, acquires an interest (other than a lien or security interest) in property which is valid under local law against subsequent purchasers without actual notice. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Transferee of a voluntary transfer, and includes immediate or mediate transferee of such a transferee. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Bona fide purchaser. See Bona fide.

First purchaser. In the law of descent, this term signifies the ancestor who first acquired (in any other manner than by inheritance) the estate which still remains in his family or descendants.

Innocent purchaser. One who acquires title to property without knowledge of any defect in the title. See also innocent purchaser.
Purchaser of a note or bill. The person who buys a promissory note or bill of exchange from the holder without his indorsement.

Purchaser for value. One who pays consideration for property or goods bought.

Pure. Absolute; complete; simple; unmixed; unqualified. Free from conditions or restrictions, as in the phrases pure charity, pure debt, pure obligation, pure plea, pure villegence, as to which see the nouns. See also Purity.

Pure accident. Implies that accident was caused by some unforeseen and unavoidable event over which neither party to the action had control, and excludes the idea that it was caused by carelessness or negligence of defendant. Maletis v. Portland Traction Co., 160 Or. 30, 83 P.2d 141, 142. Unavoidable accident has been held to be synonymous. Brewer v. Berner, 15 Wash.2d 644, 131 P.2d 940, 942. See Accident; Act of God.

Pure race statute. In some states, the first purchaser of real estate to record regardless of notice has the best claim to title and hence it is described as a race to the registry of deeds or other office for the recording of deeds and instruments of conveyance of real property. See also Recording acts.

Pur faire proclamer /pər fɜːr prɒklɛrmər/ /pʊr fər prɒklæmɛr/. An ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc.

Purgation /ˈpɜrɡəʃən/. The act of cleansing or exonerating one's self of a crime, accusation, or suspicion of guilt, by denying the charge on oath or by ordeal.

_Canonical_ purgation was made by the party's taking his own oath that he was innocent of the charge, which was supported by the oath of twelve compurgators, who swore they believed he spoke the truth. To this succeeded the mode of purgation by the single oath of the party himself, called the "oath ex officio," of which the modern defendant's oath in chancery is a modification. 3 Bl.Comm. 447; 4 Bl.Comm. 368.

_Vulgar_ purgation consisted in ordeals or trials by hot and cold water, by fire, by hot irons, by battel, by corssned, etc.

Purge. To cleanse; to clear. To clear or exonerate from some charge or imputation of guilt, or from a contempt.

Purge des hypothèques /pɜːrh ˌdest iływʊtwɛk/. Fr. In French law, an expression used to describe the act of freeing an estate from the mortgages and privileges with which it is charged, observing the formalities prescribed by law.

Purity. Within food adulteration statute is freedom from extraneous matter or anything debasing or contaminating. People v. Enders, 38 Misc.2d 746, 237 N.Y. S.2d 879, 889. See also Pure.

Purpart /pʊrpərt/. A share; a part in a division; that part of an estate, formerly held in common, which is by partition allotted to any one of the parties. The word was anciently applied to the shares falling separately to co-parceners upon a division or partition of the estate, and was generally spelled "purparty;" but it is now used in relation to any kind of partition proceedings.

Purparty /pʊrpərti/. That part of an estate which, having been held in common by paracers, is by partition allotted to any of them. To make purparty is to divide and sever the lands which fall to paracers. Formerly _pourparty_. The word _purpart_ is commonly used to indicate a part of an estate in any connection.

Purport, n. Meaning; import; substantial meaning; substance; legal effect. The "purport" of an instrument means the substance of it as it appears on the face of the instrument, and is distinguished from "tenor," which means an exact copy.

Purport, v. To convey, imply, or profess outwardly; to have the appearance of being, intending, claiming, etc. United States v. 306 Cases Containing Sandford Tomato Catsup with Preservative, D.C.N.Y., 55 F.Supp. 725, 727.

Purpose. That which one sets before him to accomplish or attain; an end, intention, or aim, object, plan, project. Term is synonymous with ends sought, an object to be attained, an intention, etc. Andreen v. Board of Sup'rs of Santa Cruz County, 235 C.A.2d 436, 45 Cal.Rptr. 306, 309.

Purposely. Intentionally; designedly; consciously; knowingly. If done "purposely" if it is willed, is product of conscious design, intent or plan that it be done, and is done with awareness of probable consequences. Horne v. State, Ind., 445 N.E.2d 976, 979. A person acts purposely with respect to a material element of an offense when: (i) if the element involves the nature of his conduct or a result thereof, he is aware of circumstances or he believes or hopes that they exist. Model Penal Code, § 2.02.

Purpresture /ˌpɜrprɛstʊər/. An encroachment upon public rights and easements by appropriation to private use of that which belongs to public. Hill Farm, Inc. v. Hill County, Tex., 436 S.W.2d 320, 321. An inclosure by a private party of a part of that which belongs to and ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of the public at large. It is not necessarily a public nuisance. A public nuisance must be something which subjects the public to some degree of inconvenience or annoyance; but a purpresture may exist without putting the public to any inconvenience whatever.

Purprize /ˈpʊrpɹɪz/. L. Fr. A close or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manor.

Purpure, /ˈpʊrpər/ or _porprin_ /ˈpʊpɹən/. A term used in heraldry; the color commonly called "purple," expressed in engravings by lines in bend sinister. In the arms of princes it was formerly called "mercury," and in those of peers "amethyst."

Purse. Some valuable thing, offered by a person for the doing of something by others; prize; premium. Sum of money available to winner(s) of contest or event.
Pursuer /ˈpɜːrsər/. The person on a ship or vessel in charge of financial accounts and transactions with passengers.

Pursuant. A following after or following out. To execute or carry out in accordance with or by reason of something. To do in consequence or in prosecution of anything. "Pursuant to" means "in the course of carrying out: in conformance to or agreement with: according to" and, when used in a statute, is a restrictive term. Knowles v. Holly, 82 Wash.2d 694, 513 P.2d 18, 23.

Pursue. To follow, prosecute, or enforce a matter judicially, as a complaining party. To pursue the practice of any profession or business, contemplates a course of business or professional practice, and not single isolated acts arising from unusual circumstances. Dane v. Brown, C.C.A.Mass., 70 F.2d 164, 165.

Pursuer. One who pursues; one who follows in order to overtake.

Pursuit. That which one engages in as an occupation, trade, or profession; that which is followed as a continual or at least extended and prolonged employment. Dorrell v. Norida Land & Timber Co., 53 Idaho 793, 27 P.2d 960. Activity that one pursues or engages in seriously and continually or frequently as vocation or profession or as an avocation. Holman v. Oriental Refinery, 75 N.M. 52, 400 P.2d 471, 475. To follow or chase in order to apprehend or overtake. See also Fresh pursuit.

Pursuit of happiness. As used in constitutional law, this right includes personal freedom, freedom of contract, exemption from oppression or invidious discrimination, the right to follow one's individual preference in the choice of an occupation and the application of his energies, liberty of conscience, and the right to enjoy the domestic relations and the privileges of the family and the home. Butchers' Union, etc., Co. v. Crescent City Live Stock, etc., Co., 4 S.Ct. 652, 111 U.S. 746, 28 L.Ed. 585. The right to follow or pursue any occupation or profession without restriction and without having any burden imposed upon one that is not imposed upon others in a similar situation. Myers v. City of Defiance, 67 Ohio App. 159, 36 N.E.2d 162, 21 O.L.A. 165. While included as one of the inalienable rights in the Declaration of Independence, such right is not included in the U.S. Constitution.

Put tant que /pər tɛ̃ kɥyw/pʊʁ tɔn kɔ/. Forasmuch as; because; to the intent that.

Purus idiota /pyůɾəʃ iðiɔwtsə/. Lat. A congenital idiot.

Putview. Enacting part of a statute, in contradistinction to the preamble. That part of a statute commencing with the words "Be it enacted," and continuing as far as the repealing clause; and hence, the design, contemplation, purpose, or scope of the act.

Put. An option permitting its holder to sell a certain stock or commodity at a fixed price for a stated quantity and within a stated period. Such a right is purchased for a fee paid the one who agrees to accept the stock or goods if they are offered. The buyer of this right to sell expects the price of the stock or commodity to fall so that he can deliver the stock or commodity (the put) at a profit. If the price rises, the option need not be exercised. The reverse transaction is a call. See Put option; Puts and calls.

Putagium hereditatem non adimit /pyuşwedityeʃəm hərəˈdɪteɪtəm nɔn əˈdəmit/. Incontinence does not take away an inheritance.

Putative. Reputed; supposed; commonly esteemed.

Putative father. The alleged or reputed father of a child born out of wedlock.

Putative marriage. A marriage contracted in good faith and in ignorance (on one or both sides) that impediments exist which render it unlawful. Davis v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 507 S.W.2d 841, 844.

Putative spouse. One who believes in good faith that he or she is party to a valid marriage, even though marriage is invalid. Neureither v. Workmen's Compensation Appeals Bd., 15 C.A.3d 429, 93 Cal.Rptr. 162, 165.

Put bond. Right of bondholder to redeem bond before maturity. See also Bond.

Put in. To place in due form before a court; to place among the records of a court.

Put off. To postpone. In a bargain for the sale of goods, it may mean to postpone its completion or to procure a resale of the goods to a third person.

Put option. One under which buyer of the option may demand payment by the writer of a fixed price (the "striking" price) upon delivery by the buyer of a specified number of shares of stock. Gordon & Co. v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System, D.C.Mass., 317 F.Supp. 1045, 1046.

Puts and calls. A "put" in the language of the commodity or stock market is a privilege of delivering or not delivering the subject-matter of the sale; and a "call" is a privilege of calling or not calling for it. See Put; Put option.

Putting in fear. These words are used in the common-law definition of a robbery from the person; i.e. the offense must have been committed by putting in fear the person robbed. 4 Bl.Comm. 243. No matter how slight the cause creating the fear may be, if transaction is attended with such circumstances of terror, such threatening by word or gesture, as in common experience is likely to create an apprehension of danger and induce a man to part with his property for sake of his person, victim is put in fear. State v. Sawyer, 224 N.C. 61, 29 S.E.2d 34, 37.

Pyramiding. In the stock market, a device for increasing holdings of a stock by financing new holdings out of the increased margin of those already owned. In corporate finance, the use of small equity and capital to finance controlling interest in more corporations. See also Leverage; Margin.

Pyramid sales scheme. A device, illegal in many states, in which a buyer of goods is promised a payment for each additional buyer procured by him.

Quælibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est /kwy/lýýalabst kánshyj(y)ów fótísímiy kontrá dóná/torám intá/práštýnta ést/. Every grant is to be interpreted most strongly against the grantor.

Quælibet jurisdictio cancellos suas habet /kwy/lýýalabst júrás/šiyj(h)yów kánsélów s(y)úwbów hýýb/at/. Every jurisdiction has its own bounds.

Quælibet pardonatio debet secundum intention-em regis, et non ad deceptionem regis /kwy/lýýalabst pár’donéysh(y)ów débant sksándam inté/shyjónam rýýjays ést nón ád dáséshyjónam rýýjays/. Every pardon ought to be taken according to the intention of the king, and not to the deception of the king.

Quælibet poena corporalis, quamvis minima, major est qualibet poena pecuniaria /kwy/lýýalabst plya kórparýyálas, kwaémvis mínýmás, méýjar ést kwy/lýýalabst plya pokyúwnýyérýiya/. Every corporal punishment, although the very least, is greater than any pecuniary punishment.

Quæ mala sunt inchoata in principio vix bono peraguntur excitum /kwy/méá sánt inkóweýtä in prínápiyaw viaks bówýow páрагšantor égýat(y)uwy/. Things bad in principle at the commencement seldom achieve a good end.

Quæ nihil frustra /kwy/níy(h)ál frístra/w/. Lat. Which [does or requires] nothing in vain. Which requires nothing to be done, that is, to no purpose.

Quæ non féri debent, facta, valent /kwy/nón fáýrayar débánt, fákta, vál/ant/. Things which ought not to be done are held valid when they have been done.

Quæ non valeant singula, juncta juvant /kwy/nón vâliyjant síyýyálas, jájktá júýwbánt/. Things which do not avail when separate, when joined avail.

Quæ plura /kwy/pl(y)úra/w/. Lat. In old English practice, a writ which lay where an inquisition had been made by an escheator in any county of such lands or tenements as any man died seised of, and all that was in his possession was imagined not to be found by the office; the writ commanding the escheator to inquire what more (quæ plura) lands and tenements the party held on the day when he died, etc.
Quaestio vexata. A vexed question or mooted point; a question often agitated or discussed but not determined; a question or point which has been differently decided, and so left doubtful.

Questionarii /kwéstitiňoñéríyay/. Those who carried questa about from door to door.

Questiones perpetue /kwéstitiňouñyniỳ parprétyuwiyl/. In Roman law, were commissions (or courts) of inquisition into crimes alleged to have been committed. They were called "perpetue," to distinguish them from occasional inquisitions, and because they were permanent courts for the trial of offenders.

Quaestor /kwéstor/. Lat. A Roman magistrate, whose office it was to collect the public revenue.

Quaestores classicci /kwéstitriỳ klesesay/. Lat. In Roman law, officers entrusted with the care of the public money. Their duties consisted in making the necessary payments from the aerarium, and receiving the public revenues. Of both they had to keep correct accounts in their tabule publique. Demands which any one might have on the aerarium, and outstanding debts were likewise registered by them. Fines to be paid to the public treasury were registered and exacted by them. They were likewise to provide proper accommodations for foreign ambassadors and such persons as were connected with the republic by ties of public hospitality. Lastly, they were charged with the care of the burials and monuments of distinguished men, the expenses for which had been decreed by the senate to be paid by the treasury. Their number at first was confined to two; but this was afterwards increased as the empire became extended. There were quaestors of cities and of provinces, and quaestors of the army; the latter were in fact paymasters.

Quaestores parricidii /kwéstitriỳ pársádyiyay/. See Quaestores parricidii.

Quaestor sacri palatii /kwéstor sékray paléyshiyay/. Quaestor of the sacred palace. An officer of the imperial court at Constantinople, with powers and duties resembling those of a chancellor.

Qualification. The possession by an individual of the qualities, properties, or circumstances, natural or adventitious, which are inherently or legally necessary to render him eligible to fill an office or to perform a public duty or function. Thus, a "qualified voter" is one who meets the residency, age, and registration requirements.

Also, a modification or limitation of terms or language; usually intended by way of restriction of expressions which, by reason of their generality, would carry a larger meaning than was designed.

See also Qualified.

Qualified. Adapted; fitted; entitled; susceptible; capable; competent; fitting; possessing legal power or capacity; eligible; as a "qualified voter" (q.v.). Applied to one who has taken the steps to prepare himself for an appointment or office, as by taking oath, giving bond, etc. One who has a particular status through some endowment, acquisition, or achievement, or it may describe one who has obtained appropriate legal power or capacity by taking an oath, completing a form, or complying with some other routine requirement. Lehner v. Crane Co., D.C.Pa., 448 F.Supp. 1127, 1135. One who has mental or physical ability to perform requirements of job, office, or the like. Also means limited; restricted; confined; modified; imperfect; or temporary.

As to qualified Acceptance; Estate; Fee; Indorsement; Nuisance; Oath; Property; Profit-sharing plan, see those titles. See also Capacity; Competency; Duly qualified; Eligible.

Qualified elector. A person who is legally qualified to vote. See also Qualified voter.

Qualified immunity. See Immunity.

Qualified opinion. A statement in an audit report accompanying financial statements which expresses exceptions or qualifications to certain items in financial statements.

Qualified pension plans. See Pension plan.

Qualified privilege. One defense to prima facie case of defamation is "qualified privilege," also referred to as conditional privilege, in which interest that defendant is seeking to vindicate is conditioned upon publication in reasonable manner and for proper purpose. Hahn v. Kotten, 43 Ohio St.2d 273, 331 N.E.2d 713, 717. "Absolute privilege" renders defendant absolutely immune from civil liability for his defamatory statements, while "qualified privilege" protects defendant from liability only if he uttered defamatory statements without actual malice. Martinez v. Cardwell, 25 Ariz.App. 263, 542 P.2d 1133, 1135. See also Privilege.

Qualified stock option. An option to purchase shares awarded to an employee of the corporation under terms that qualify the option for special tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code.

Qualified terminable interest property (Q-TIP). See Q-TIP trust.

Qualified voter. A legal voter. A person qualified to vote generally; i.e., one who meets the residency, age, and registration requirements. One having constitutional qualifications for privilege, who is duly registered pursuant to law, and has present right to vote at election being held. State ex rel. Burke v. Campbell, Mo. App., 542 S.W.2d 355, 357.

Qualify. To make one's self fit or prepared to exercise a right, office, or franchise. To take the steps necessary to prepare one's self for an office or appointment, as by taking oath, giving bond, etc. Also to limit; to modify; to restrict. Thus, it is said that one section of a statute qualifies another.

Qualifying share. A share of common stock owned by a person in order to qualify as a director of the issuing corporation in a corporation that requires directors to be shareholders.

Qualitas qua inesse debet, facile presumitur /kwóltãs kwý nýsã deýbt, ëfãsliy praðyjumãtã/w. A quality which ought to form a part is easily presumed.

Quality. Quality is descriptive of organic composition of substance, expressed in definite quantitative units, and definitive of character, nature and decree of excellence of an article. Dean Rubber Mfg. Co. v. U.S., C.A.Mo., 356 F.2d 161, 163. In respect to persons, this term denotes comparative rank; state or condition in relation to others; social or civil position or class. In pleading, it means an attribute or characteristic by which one thing is distinguished from another. Adoptiveness, suitableness, fitness; grade; condition. Within food adulteration statute means character or nature, as belonging to or distinguishing a thing, or character with respect to excellence, fineness, etc., or grade of excellence. People v. Enders, 38 Misc.2d 746, 237 N.Y.S.2d 879, 888, 889.

Quality of estate. The period when, and the manner in which, the right of enjoying an estate is exercised. It is of two kinds: (1) The period when the right of enjoying an estate is conferred upon the owner, whether at present or in future; and (2) the manner in which the owner's right of enjoyment of his estate is to be exercised, whether solely, jointly, in common, or in coparcenary.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum /kwónadow várbo stástúwtyay sánt spéshšíyélíyílyó, réýshí(ly)ow őtam jénréylíyás, jénréylístór stástúwtyósdó ēst antélájéndám/. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason or object of it general, the statute is to be construed generally.

Quango. Acronym for quasi-autonomous non-governmental organization, especially in the United Kingdom, though the concept and word is American; a semi-public administrative body having some members appointed by government and financed by government but not answerable to government, such as tourist authorities, university grants commissions, price and wage commissions, prison and parole boards, medical health advisory panels.

Quantí minorís /kwón tant dámnowfókéytas/. Lat. The name of an action in the civil law (and in Louisiana), brought by the purchaser of an article, for a reduction of the agreed price on account of defects in the thing which diminishes its value.

Quantum damnificatúrus /kwón tant dámnowfókéytas/. How much damned? The name of an issue directed by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain the amount of compensation to be allowed for damage.

Quantum meruit /kwón tant méhrúw substant. “Quantum meruit” as amount of recovery means “as much as deserved,” and measures recovery under implied contract to pay compensation as reasonable value of services rendered. Kintz v. Read, 28 Wash.App. 731, 626 P.2d 52, 55. An equitable doctrine, based on the concept that no one who benefits by the labor and materials of another should be unjustly enriched thereby; under those circumstances, the law implies a promise to pay a reasonable amount for the labor and materials furnished, even absent a specific contract therefor. Swift-ships, Inc. v. Burdin, La.App., 338 So.2d 1193, 1195. Essential elements of recovery under quantum meruit are: (1) valuable services were rendered or materials furnished, (2) for person sought to be charged, (3) which services and materials were accepted by person sought to be charged, used and enjoyed by him, and (4) under such circumstances as reasonably notified person sought to be charged that plaintiff, in performing such services, was expected to be paid by person sought to be charged. Montes v. Naismith & Trevino Const. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 459 S.W.2d 691, 694. See also Unjust enrichment doctrine.

The common count in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff as much as he reasonably deserved to have for his labor. 3 Bl.Comm. 161. It refers to class of obligations imposed by law, without regard to intention or assent of parties bound, for reasons dictated by reason and justice; such obligations not being contracts though form of action is contract, Carpenter v. Josey Oil Co., C.C.A.Okl., 26 F.2d 442, 443; and, amount of recovery being only the reasonable value of the services rendered regardless of any agreement as to value, Smith v. Bliss, 44 Cal.App.2d 171, 112 P.2d 30, 33.

Quantum tenens domino ex homaggio, tantum dominus tenenti ex dominio debet prater solam reverentiam; mutua debet esse dominii et homagii fidelitatis connexio /kwón tant dománaw dámnow fejílyíyow, tánantom dámwez toñéntáy dámowi(ly)ow débat priyótor sówów révéráshí(ly)om; myúwtywúwa débat éshí dámíniyay ét (h)oméjíyay fídelítáwtas kanékshí(ly) ow/. As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual.

Quantum valebant /kwóntum válybánt/. As much as they were worth. The common count in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise, on the part of the defendant, to pay the plaintiff as much as the goods were reasonably worth.

Quarantine. A period of time during which a vessel, coming from a place where a contagious or infectious disease is prevalent, is detained by authority in the harbor of her port of destination, or at a station near it, without being permitted to land or to discharge her crew or passengers. Quarantine is said to have been first established at Venice in 1484.

Isolation of person afflicted with contagious disease. The keeping of persons, when suspected of having contracted or having been exposed to an infectious disease, out of a community, or to confine them to given place therein, and to prevent intercourse between them and people generally of the community. Application of Halko, 246 Cal.App.2d 553, 54 Cal.Rptr. 661, 664.

A provision or interest given in law to the widow in her husband’s estate, such as the privilege of occupying the mansion house and curtilage without charge until her dower is assigned, and technically is a dower right, or more broadly is a part of the dower estate.

Quare /kwéry/kwohriy/. Lat. Wherefore; for what reason; on what account. Used in the Latin form of several common-law writs.

Quare clausum fregit /kwéry klózam fríyjst/. Lat. Wherefore he broke the close. That species of the action of trespass which has for its object the recovery of damages for an unlawful entry upon another’s land is termed “trespass quare clausum fregit;” “breaking a close” being the technical expression for an unlawful entry upon land. The language of the declaration in this form of action is “that the defendant, with force and arms, broke and entered the close” of the plaintiff. The phrase is often abbreviated to “qu. cl. fr.” or “q.c.f.”

Quare ejectit infra terminum /kwéry ejýyst infrá térmonam/. Wherefore he ejected within the term. In old practice, a writ which lay for a lessee where he was ejected before the expiration of his term, in cases where the wrong-doer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but his feoffee or another claiming under him. 3 Bl.Comm. 199, 206.

Quare impedit /kwéry impíyjdst/. Wherefore he hinders. In old English practice, a writ or action which lay for the patron of an advowson, where he had been disturbed in his right of patronage; so called from the emphatic words of the old form, by which the disturber was summoned to answer why he hinders the plaintiff. 3 Bl.Comm. 246, 248.

Quare incumbravit /kwéry inkambréyvát/. In old English law, a writ which lay against a bishop who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, conferred it on his clerk, while two others were contend-Quarter section. The quarter of a section of land according to the divisions of the government survey, laid off by dividing the section into four equal parts by north-and-south and east-and-west lines, and containing 160 acres. A quarter of a square mile of land. Amount of land originally granted to homesteader.

Quarter session courts. Courts formerly established in some of the states, to be holden four times in the year, invested with criminal jurisdiction, usually of offenses less than felony, and sometimes with the charge of certain administrative matters, such as the care of public roads and bridges.

In England, all quarter session courts were abolished by The Courts Act of 1971, with the jurisdiction of such transferred to the Crown Court (q.v.).

Quarters of coverage. Social Security benefits are dependent on number of yearly quarters in which person made contributions (i.e. payments) into social security fund.

Quarto die post /kwörtow dájíw pówst/. Lat. On the fourth day after. Appearance day, in the former English practice, the defendant being allowed four days, inclusive, from the return of the writ, to make his appearance.

Quash /kwósh/. To overthrow; to abate; to vacate; to annul; to make void; e.g. to quash an indictment.

Quasi /kwéiyasay/kwozíy/. Lat. As if; almost as it were; quasi estoppel.

Quasi estoppel. This doctrine is properly invoked against a person asserting a claim inconsistent with a position previously taken by him, with knowledge of the facts and his rights, to the detriment of the person seeking application of the doctrine. Evans v. Idaho State Tax Commission, 97 Idaho 148, 540 P.2d 810, 812.

"Equitable estoppel" and "estoppel in pais" are convertible terms embracing "quasi estoppel" and embody doctrine that one may not repudiate an act done or position assumed by him where such course would work injustice to another rightfully relying thereon. Brown v. Corn Exchange Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 136 N.J. Eq. 430, 42 A.2d 474, 480.

See Equitable estoppel.

Quasi in rem jurisdiction. Type of jurisdiction of a court based on a person's interest in property within the jurisdiction of the court. Refers to proceedings that are brought against the defendant personally; yet it is the defendant's interest in the property that serves as the basis of the jurisdiction. There must be a connection involving minimum contact between the property and the subject matter of the action for a state to exercise quasi in rem jurisdiction. Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 53 L.Ed.2d 683. Quasi in rem proceedings is generally defined as affecting only interest of particular persons in specific property and is distinguished from proceedings in rem which determine interests in specific property as against the whole world. Avery v. Bender, 124 Vt. 309, 204 A.2d 314, 317. See also Jurisdiction.

Quasi judicial. A term applied to the action, discretion, etc., of public administrative officers or bodies, who are required to investigate facts, or ascertain the existence of facts, hold hearings, weigh evidence, and draw conclusions from them, as a basis for their official action, and to exercise discretion of a judicial nature.

Quasi-judicial power. The power of an administrative agency to adjudicate the rights of persons before it.

Quasi-legislative power. The power of an administrative agency to engage in rule-making.

Quasi-traditio /kwéysay tródish(i)yów/. Lat. In civil law, a term used to designate that a person is in the use of...
of the property of another, which the latter suffers and does not oppose. It also signifies the act by which the right of property is ceded in a thing to a person who is in possession of it; as, if I loan a boat to Paul, and deliver it to him, and afterwards I sell him the boat, it is not requisite that he should deliver the boat to me to be again delivered to him: there is a quasi-tradition or delivery.

Quater cousin. See Cousin.

Quatuor pedibus currit /kwótuwar pédaðas káhrat/. Lat. It runs upon four feet; it runs upon all fours. See All-fours.

Queen /kwáyn/. A worthless woman; a strumpet. Obsolete.

Queen. A woman who possesses the sovereignty and royal power in a country under a monarchial form of government. The wife of a king.

Queen regnant. In English law, a queen who holds the crown in her own right; as the first Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Anne, and Queen Victoria.

For the titles and descriptions of various officers in the English legal system, called "Queen's Advocate," "Queen's Coroner," "Queen's Counsel," "Queen's Proctor," "Queen's Remembrancer," etc., during the reign of a female sovereign, see terms under King and also the following titles.

Queen's bench. The English court of king's bench is so called during the reign of a queen. See King's bench.

Queen's counsel. See King's counsel.

Queen's evidence. See King's evidence.

Queen's prison. A jail which used to be appropriated to King's counsel. See Queen's prison.

The English court of king's bench is so called during the reign of a queen.

Queen's evidence. See King's evidence.

Queen's evidence. See King's evidence.

Queen's proctor. See King's proctor.

Que estate /kwáy estéy/. L Fr. Whose estate. A term used in old pleading, particularly in claiming prescription, by which it was alleged that the plaintiff and those former owners whose estate he had had immemorially exercised the right claimed. This was called "prescribing in a que estate."

Que est le mesme /kwáy ë y la mém/. L Fr. Which is the same. A term used in actions of trespass, etc. See Que eadem.

Quod cum /kwod kam/. In common law pleading, for that whereas. A form of introducing matter of induction in certain actions, as assumpeit and case.

Quod demonstrandi causa additur rei satis, demonstratie, frustra fit /kwod diyay demansestreytiy, frastra fit/. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain.

Judgment quod computet. A preliminary or interlocutory judgment given in the action of account-render (also in the case of creditors’ bills against an executor or administrator), directing that accounts be taken before a master or auditor.

Quod constat clare non debet verificari /kwod konstat kleryon debat vehrasskreyer/. That is clearly apparent need not be proved.

Quod constat curio opere testium non indiget /kwod konstat kyuriyiy owpary tyestiyom non indajat/. That which appears to the court needs not the aid of witnesses.

Quod contra legem fit pro infecto habetur /kwod kontra liyjam fit prw infektow habiytar/. That which is done against law is regarded as not done at all.

Quod contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias /kwod kontra reyshiyoyman juras reseptam est, non est prowdesanam add konksawenesh(i)yas/. That which has been received against the reason of the law is not to be drawn into a precedent.

Quod cum /kwod kam/. In common law pleading, for that whereas. A form of introducing matter of induction in certain actions, as assumpeit and case.

Quod demonstrandi causa additur rei satis, demonstratie, frustra fit /kwod diyay demansestreytiy, frastra fit/. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain.

Quod dubitas, ne feceras /kwod d(y)yubat, juriy id fasisiy/. What you doubt of, do not do. In a case of introducing matter of induction in certain actions, as assumpeit and case.
Quod est ex necessitate nunc quam introducitur, nisi quando necessarium /kwöd est ëks naësestëtyiy nájkwam inträd(y)iüwstær, náyssay kwöndow nëssësëriyam/. That which is of necessity is never introduced, unless when necessary.

Quod est inconveniens aut contra rationem non permissum est in lege /kwöd est inkänviplyn(y)iëns öt kontra ræshiyownam nön përmisam ëst ëst liijiy/. That which is inconvenient or against reason is not permissible in law.

Quod est necessarium est licitum /kwöd est nëssësëriyam ëst liisätam/. What is necessary is lawful.

Quod factum est, cum in obscuro sit, ex affectione /kwöd faektam est, kwöm in obsk(y)urow sit, eks ëfëkhîshiyowniy k(y)uww jësékwiy képat antâpréshiyownam/. When there is doubt about an act, it receives interpretation from the (known) feelings of the actor.

Quod fieri non debet facile praesumitur /kwöd fayaray nön dënit faesaliy praz(y)uwinatar/. That which ought to be done is easily presumed.

Quod fieri non debet, factum valet /kwöd fayaray nön dënit, fëktam wælэт/. That which ought not to be done, when done, is valid.

Quod fuit concessum /kwöd f(y)uwat kanësäm/. Which was granted. A phrase in the reports, signifying which an argument or point made was conceded or acquiesced in by the court.

Quod in consuito fecimus, consultius revocemus /kwöd inkënsïtow fësåmas, kanësåly(y)as ëvreåsiyam/. What we have done without due consideration, upon better consideration we may revoke.

Quod iniitio non valet, tractu temporis non valet /kwöd anish(i)yow nön wælэт, trëkt(y)uw témperas nön wælэт/. That which void in the beginning does not become valid by lapse of time.

Quod iniitio vitiosum est non potest tractu temporis convalescere /kwöd anish(i)yow vëshîyowsm ëst nön pòwst trëkt(y)uw témperas konvalësaryy/. That which is void from the beginning cannot become valid by lapse of time.

Quod in jure scripto “jus” appellatur, id in lege anglie “rectum” esse dicitur /kwöd in jëry skriptow jësh eplëuytär, id in liijiy ânglîiyîy réktam ësìy dïsyalmart/. What in the civil law is called “jus,” in the law of England is said to be “rectum” (right).

Quod in minori valet valsebit in majori; et quod in majori non valet nec valsebit in minori /kwöd in mënöray wælût væliybot in mëjöray; ët kwöd in méjöray nön wælût nëk væliybot in mënöray/. That which is valid in the less shall be valid in the greater; and that which is not valid in the greater shall neither be valid in the less.

Quod in uno similium valet valsebit in altero /kwöd in yûwënow sëmliyowm wælût væliybot in ëltșow/. That which is effectual in one of two like things shall be effectual in the other.

Quod ipsis qui contraxerunt obstat, et successoribus eorum obstabit /kwöd ipes kwëy kontræsêrants ëbstät, ët sëksesësërëbas iyoram ëbstëbat/. That which bars those who have made a contract will bar their successors also.

Quod jussu /kwöd jëssy(j)uww/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an action given to one who had contracted with a son or slave, by order of the father or master, to compel such father or master to stand to the agreement.

Quod jussu alterius solutur pro eo est quasi ipsi solutum esset /kwöd jëssy(j)uww oltärâs sôltstâr prôwy iyow ëst kwëysay ipes sal(y)uwtam ëst/. That which is paid by the order of another is the same as though it were paid to himself.

Quod meum est sine facto meo vel defectu meo amitti /kwöd miyam ëst sayniy miyow vel dafëkt(y)uw miyow amitay vel in ëyylyowm trënsfârây nön pòwst/. That which mine cannot be lost or transferred to another without my alienation or forfeiture.

Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest /kwöd miyam ëst sayniy miy ofehray non powst/. That which is mine cannot be taken away without me [without my assent].

Quod minus est in obligationem videtur deductum /kwöd màyns ëst ën òblégéshiyownam vëlditgay dâdkàtm/. That which is less is held to be import¬ed into the contract; (e.g., A. offers to hire B.’s house at six hundred dollars, at the same time B. offers to let it for five hundred dollars; the contract is for five hundred dollars).

Quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium /kwöd nësësh(i)yow nëtëryëyelas rëshîyowv intar ëmîniy hômânîy konstîtyuwat, vòwkëyтар jës jënsîyîyam/. That which natural reason has established among all men is called the “law of nations.”

Quod necessarie intelligitur non deest /kwöd nëssësëriyintiyljätar nòn diysts/. That which is necessarily understood is not wanting.

Quod necessitas cogit, defendit /kwöd nasëstätas kôlwjat, dafëndat/. That which necessity compels, it justifies.

Quod non apparret non est; et non apparret judicialiter ante judicium /kwöd nön opërat nön ëst ët nön opërat juwdîshiyëyljätar ânti juwdîshiyîyam/. That which appears not is not; and nothing appears judicially before judgment.

Quod non capit christus, capit fiscus /kwöd nön këpást kriysâ këpást fîskas/. What Christ [the church] does not take the treasury takes. Goods of a fele de se go to the king. A maxim in old English law.

Quod non fuit negatum /kwöd nön f(y)uwat nageytam/. Which was not denied. A phrase found in the old Quod omnes tangit ab omnibus debet supportari. That which touches or concerns all ought to be supported by all.

Quod nullius esse potest id ut aliquus fieret nulla obligatio valet efficere. That which is the property of nobody belongs to our lord the king.

Quod omnes tangit ab omnibus debet supportari. That which touches or concerns all ought to be supported by all.

Quod partitio fiat. A judgment for partition, directing that a partition be effected.

Quod per me non possum, nec per alium. What I cannot do by myself, I cannot do by another.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. No agreement can avail to make that the property of which is still recognized. 1 Bl. Comm. 89.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. That which has not beginning has not end.

Quod non legitur, non creditur. What is not read is not believed.

Quod non haec, sed quod est domini regis. That which is the property of our lord the king.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. That which has not beginning has not end.

Quod non habet principium non habet finem. No agreement can avail to make that the property of which is still recognized. 1 Bl. Comm. 89.

Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest /kwôd sémal miyam èst âmâlîyâs miyam èsîy nôn pôwtaâs/. What is once mine cannot be more fully mine.

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest /kwôd sémal plâk(y)uwat in âlêkshîyîwînyî, âmâlîyâs dispîlîrîy nôn pôwtaâs/. What a party has once determined, in a case where he has an election, cannot afterwards be disavowed.

Quod si contingat /kwôd sây kântângat/. That if it happen. Words by which a condition might formerly be created in a deed.

Quod solo inadificatur solo cedit /kwôd sôlôw inêdâsêkêytar sôlôw nîyadât/. Whatever is built on the soil is an accessory of the soil.

Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem /kwôd sôb sêrtô fôrmâ kansésam vêl rêzarvêytam èst nôn trêî(h)atar èd vâlôrôm vêl kônmpsêsêhîyôwnam/. That which is granted or reserved under a certain form is not [permitted to be] drawn into valuation or compensation. That which is granted or reserved in a certain specified form must be taken as it is granted, and will not be permitted to be made the subject of any adjustment or compensation on the part of the grantee.

Quod subintelligitur non deest /kwôd sêbintîljêtar nôn diyest/. What is understood is not wanting.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur /kwôd têstîtîy intîléejêtar diyêsiy nôn wâdîyêr/. What is tacitly understood is not considered to be wanting.

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit /kwôd vêynam èt inyûtîlîy èst, lêks nôn râkwâyraâ/. The law requires not what is vain and useless.

Quod vero contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias /kwôd virö konôra rêshîyôwnam jûras râsêptam èst, nôn èst prôwdsêsêndam èd kônsksêhîy(y)yah/. But that which has been admitted contrary to the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents.

Quod vide /kwôd vâydi/. Which see. A direction to the reader to look to another part of the book, or to another book, there named, for further related information. Usually abbreviated “q.v.”

Quod voluit non dixit /kwôd vôl(y)uwat nôn diksat/. What he intended he did not say, or express. An answer sometimes made in overruling an argument that the lawmaker or testator meant so and so.

Quo jure /kwôd jûrî/. Lat. In old English practice, a writ upon which the lawmaker or testator meant so and so.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur /kwôd lêjâytar, iyô dazôlvatâr/. By the same mode by which a thing is bound, by that it is released.

Quo minus /kwôd mâynâs/. Lat. A writ upon which all proceedings in the court of exchequer were formerly grounded. In it the plaintiff suggests that he is the king’s debtor, and that the defendant has done him the injury or damage complained of, quo minus sufficientia existit, by which he is less able to pay the king’s debt. This was originally requisite in order to give jurisdiction to the court of exchequer; but now this suggestion is a mere form. 3 Bll.Comm. 46.

Quo modo quid constituitur codem modo dissolvitur /kwôd módo kwôd konstîtûtâr yêwôdêm módôwô dazôlvatâr/. In the same manner by which anything is constituted by that it is dissolved.

Quorum /kwôrôm/. A majority of the entire body; e.g., a quorum of a state supreme court. The number of members who must be present in a deliberative body before business may be transacted. In both houses of Congress a quorum consists of a majority of those chosen and sworn.

Such a number of the members of a body as is competent to transact business in the absence of the other members. The idea of a quorum is that, when that required number of persons goes into a session as a body, such as directors of a corporation, the votes of a majority thereof are sufficient for binding action. Ben- intendi v. Kenton Hotel, 294 N.Y. 112, 60 N.E.2d 829, 831. When a committee, board of directors, meeting of shareholders, legislature or other body of persons cannot act unless a certain number at least of them are present, that number is called a “quorum.” In the absence of any law or rule fixing the quorum, it consists of a majority of those entitled to act.

Quorum prætextu nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat premissa. Neither increases nor diminishes a sentence, but only confirms that which went before.

Quota. A proportional part or share, the proportional part of a demand or liability, falling upon each of those who are collectively responsible for the whole.

An assigned goal, as a sales quota; a limiting number or percentage such as the quota of immigrants from a particular country.

See also Export quotas; Import quota.

Quotation. The presentation or production to a court or judge of the exact language of a statute, court opinion, or word of any law or rule fixing the quorum, it consists of a majority of those entitled to act.

Quoties dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum prætextu nec auget nee minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat premissa. "Quorum prætextu" neither increases nor diminishes a sentence, but only confirms that which went before.

Quota /kwowta/. A proportional part or share, the proportional part of a demand or liability, falling upon each of those who are collectively responsible for the whole.

An assigned goal, as a sales quota; a limiting number or percentage such as the quota of immigrants from a particular country.

See also Export quotas; Import quota.

Quotation. The presentation or production to a court or judge of the exact language of a statute, court opinion, or word of any law or rule fixing the quorum, it consists of a majority of those entitled to act.

Quotient verdict /kwowshant vardikt/. A verdict resulting from agreement whereby each juror writes down the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end.

A chance verdict such as the result of the jury at its option, as a fair expression of their opinion.

Quoties idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipiatur, que rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same language expresses two meanings, that is to be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the subject-matter.

Quoties dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum prætextum ambigua oratio est, comodissimum est id accipi quo res de qua agitur in tuto sit. Whenever the language of stipulations is ambiguous, it is most fitting that that [sense] should be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end.

Quoties idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipiatur, que rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same language expresses two meanings, that is to be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end.

An ancient prerogative right through which the state acts to protect itself and the good of public generally through its chosen agents as provided by its Constitution and laws, though sometimes it is brought at instance of and for benefit of a private individual who may have a special interest. Lewis v. Drake, Tex.App., 641 S.W.2d 392, 394. Legal action whereby legality of exercise of powers by municipal corporation may be placed in issue. People ex rel. City of Des Plaines v. Village of Mount Prospect, 29 Ill.App.3d 807, 331 N.E.2d 373, 377.

In the law of corporations, quo warranto may be used to test whether a corporation was validly organized or whether it has power to engage in the business in which it is involved.

The federal rules are applicable to proceedings for quo warranto "to the extent that the practice in such proceedings is not set forth in statutes of the United States and has heretofore conformed to the practice in civil actions." Fed.R. Civil P. 81(a)(2). Any remedy that could have been obtained under the historic writ of quo warranto may be obtained by a civil action of that nature. U. S. v. Nussbaum, D.C.Cal., 306 F.Supp. 66.

Quum de lucro duorum quaeratur, melior est causa possidentis /kām dīy l(y)uwkrow d(y)uwōram kwārēytar, miyl(i)yor ēst koza pasidiyēntas/. When the question is as to the gain of two persons, the title of the party in possession is the better one.

Quum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credible et cogitatum, credendum est /kām in testamēntōw āmbugywiy ǒt ēsh(i)yam pērperam skriptam ēst, banigny intārpratēray ēt sakāndam id kwōd kradibily ēt kōjatēytam, kradēndam ēst/. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning of the testator.

Quum principalis causa non consistit ne ea quidem sequuntur locum habent /kām prinseypēlas kōza nōn kansistat niy iya kwāydam kwiy sākwāntar lōwkam hēybant/. When the principal does not hold, the incidents thereof ought not to obtain.

Quum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest /kām kwōd ēygōw nōn vālāt ẏt ēygōw, vēlīyat kwōntam valiriy pōwtaš/. When what I do is of no force as to the purpose for which I do it, let it be of force to as great a degree as it can.

Q.V. An abbreviation of "quod vide," meaning "which see".
R

In the signatures of royal persons, "R." is an abbreviation for "rex" (king) or "regina" (queen). In descriptions of land, according to the divisions of the governmental survey, it stands for "range." Simms v. Rolfe, 177 Ark. 52, 5 S.W.2d 718, 719.

Rabbinical divorce. Divorce granted under authority of rabbis.

Race. An ethnical stock; a great division of mankind having in common certain distinguishing physical peculiarities constituting a comprehensive class appearing to be derived from a distinct primitive source. A tribal or national stock; a division or subdivision of one of the great racial stocks of mankind distinguished by minor peculiarities.

Race-notice recording statutes. State laws which provide that an unrecorded conveyance is invalid as against a subsequent purchaser for value who records without knowledge of the prior unrecorded instrument. The recording of the later instrument, however, must generally be in the chain of title. Such laws combine the features of both notice and race statute. See also Pure race statute; Recording acts.

Race recording statutes. In a state with a race recording statute, the party who records an instrument of conveyance has the better claim regardless of notice of prior unrecorded instruments. See Pure race statute; Recording acts.

Rachat /rasha/. In French law, the right of repurchase which, in English and American law, the vendor may reserve to himself. It is also called "reméré."

Rachater /rashatéy/. L. Fr. To redeem; to repurchase, (or buy back).

Rack. An engine of torture anciently used in the inquisitorial method of examining persons charged with crime, the office of which was to break the limbs or dislocate the joints.

Racket. Engaging in an operation to make money illegitimately, implying continuity of behavior.

Racketeer. A person who makes money by violations of racketeering laws.

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. See RICO laws.

Racketeering. An organized conspiracy to commit the crimes of extortion or coercion, or attempts to commit extortion or coercion. From the standpoint of extortion, it is the obtaining of money or property from another, without his consent, induced by the wrongful use of force or fear. The fear which constitutes the legally necessary element in extortion is induced by oral or written threats to do an unlawful injury to the property of the threatened person by means of explosives, fire, or otherwise; or to kill, kidnap, or injure him or a relative of his or some member of his family. See Extortion.

Activities of organized criminals who extort money from legitimate businesses by violence or other forms of threats or intimidation or conduct of illegal enterprises such as gambling, narcotics traffic, or prostitution. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961(1) ("racketeering activity" defined).

Racketeering is demanding, soliciting or receiving anything of value from the owner, proprietor, or other person having a financial interest in a business, by means of either a threat, express or implied, or a promise, express or implied, that the person so demanding, soliciting or receiving such thing of value will: (a) Cause the competition of the person from whom the payment is demanded, solicited or received to be diminished or eliminated; or (b) Cause the price of goods or services purchased or sold in the business to be increased, decreased or maintained at a stated level; or (c) Protect the property used in the business or the person or family of the owner, proprietor or other interested person from injury by violence or other unlawful means.

See also Extortion; Hobbs Act; RICO laws.

Rack-rent. A rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. Exorbitant rent which equals or exceeds the economic value of the property.

Raffle. A form of lottery in which each participant buys a ticket for an article put up as a prize with the winner being determined by random drawing. Williams v. Weber Mesa Ditch Extension Co., Inc., Wyo., 572 P.2d 412, 414. See also Lottery.

Raider. An individual or corporation who attempts to take control of a target corporation by buying a controlling interest in its stock and installing new management. Raiders who accumulate 5% or more of the outstanding shares in the target company must publicly report their purchases under the Williams Act, § 14(e), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78n(e). See also Takeover.

Raiding. Practice whereby voters in sympathy with one party designate themselves as voters of another party so as to influence or determine results of other party's Railroad. With respect to the process of enacting laws, means to force through legislation with little debate over the objection of a minority.

Raise. To create; to infer; to create or bring to light by construction or interpretation. To cause or procure to be produced, bred or propagated. To bring together; to get together or obtain for use or service; to gather; to collect; to levy money by levying taxes; to increase income by increasing salary, wages, or commissions. To solicit, secure or otherwise obtain funds for a given purpose, organization, charity, etc.

To alter the amount of an instrument such as a negotiable instrument by changing the face value to a higher amount. See also Raised check; Rasure.

Raise an issue. To bring pleadings to an issue; to have the effect of producing an issue between the parties pleading in an action.

Raise a presumption. To give occasion or ground for a presumption; to be of such a character, or to be attended with such circumstances, as to justify an inference or presumption of law. Thus, a person’s silence, in some instances, will "raise a presumption" of his consent to what is done. See also Presumption.

Raised check. A demand negotiable instrument, the face amount of which has been increased, generally without authority of the drawer and hence fraudulently. Such change constitutes a material alteration under U.C.C. § 3-407(1)(c). See also Rasure.

Raise revenue. To levy a tax, as a means of collecting revenue; to bring together, collect, or levy revenue.

Raising a promise. The act of the law in extracting from the facts and circumstances of a particular transaction a promise which was implicit therein, and postulating it as a ground of legal liability.

Raising a use. Creating, establishing, or calling into existence a use. Thus, if a man conveyed land to another in fee, without any consideration, equity would presume that he meant it to be to the use of himself, and would, therefore, raise an implied use for his benefit.

Raising portions. In old English law, when a landed estate was settled on an eldest son, it was generally burdened with the payment of specific sums of money in favor of his brothers and sisters. A direction to this effect was called a direction for "raising portions for younger children;" and, for this purpose, it was usual to demise or lease the estate to the required portions by a sale or mortgage of the same.

Rake-off. Share of profits of transaction or business, demanded, paid, or otherwise taken illegally. Illegal pay-off or bribe, or skimming of profits.

Ran. Sax. In Saxon and old English law, open theft, or robbery.

Rancho /ré'ncho/. Sp. A small collection of men or their dwellings; a hamlet. As used, however, in Mexico and in the Spanish law formerly prevailing in California, the term signifies a ranch or large tract of land suitable for grazing purposes where horses or cattle are raised, and is distinguished from hacienda, a cultivated farm or plantation.

Range, v. To have or extend in certain direction, to correspond in direction or line, or to trend or run.

Range, n. In the government survey of the United States, one of the divisions of a state, consisting of a row or tier of townships as they appear on the map. A division of a state in the government survey, being a six mile wide row of townships, running North and South, and used in legal descriptions.

A tract or district of land within which domestic animals in large numbers range for subsistence; an extensive grazing ground. The term is used on the great plains of the United States to designate a tract commonly of many square miles occupied by one or different proprietors and distinctively called a cattle range, stock range, or sheep range. The animals on a range are usually left to take care of themselves during the whole year without shelter, except when periodically gathered in a round-up for counting and selection, and for branding, when the herds of several proprietors run together.

Ranger. In old English law, a sworn officer of the forest, whose office chiefly consisted in three points: To walk daily through his charge to see, hear, and inquire as well of trespasses as trespassers in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of venery and chace, out of the deafforested into the forested lands; and to present all trespassers of the forest at the next courts holden for the forest.

Person responsible for maintaining and patrolling forests. Member of police force in Texas.

Rank, n. Position in society. Grade of quality or value. Grade of official standing. The order or place in which certain officers are placed in the army and navy, in relation to others. Rank is often used to express something different from office. It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position in reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments. This is the case with the staff officers of the army. Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct.Cl. 151, 159.

Rank, adj. Excessive; too large in amount. Indecent. Absolute; complete.

Ranking of creditors. See Preference; Priority.
Ransom. The money, price, or consideration paid or demanded for redemption of a kidnapped person or persons; a payment that releases from captivity. Whoever knowingly receives, possesses, or disposes of such commits a crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1202; Model Penal Code § 212.1(a). See Kidnapping.

In international law, the redemption of captured property from the hands of an enemy, particularly of property captured at sea. A sum paid or agreed to be paid for the redemption of captured property.

In old English law, a sum of money paid for the pardoning of some great offense. The distinction between ransom and amerciament is said to be that ransom was the redemption of a corporeal punishment, while amerciament was a fine or penalty directly imposed, and not in lieu of another punishment. 4 Bl.Comm. 380. A sum of money paid for the redemption of a person from captivity or imprisonment. Thus one of the feudal "aids" was to ransom the lord's person if taken prisoner. 2 Bl.Comm. 63.

Ransom bill. A contract by which a captured vessel, in consideration of her release and of safe-conduct for a stipulated course and time, agrees to pay a certain sum as ransom.

Rap. Slang for criminal conviction.

Rape. Unlawful sexual intercourse with a female without her consent. The unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by a man forcibly and against her will. The act of sexual intercourse committed by a man with a woman not his wife and without her consent, committed when the woman's resistance is overcome by force or fear, or under other prohibitive conditions. State v. Lora, 213 Kan. 184, 515 P.2d 1086, 1093.

A male who has sexual intercourse with a female not his wife is guilty of rape if: (a) he compels her to submit by force or by threat of imminent death, serious bodily injury, extreme pain or kidnapping, to be inflicted on anyone; or (b) he has substantially impaired her power to appraise or control her conduct by administering or employing without her knowledge drugs, intoxicants or other means for the purpose of preventing resistance; or (c) the female is unconscious; or (d) the female is less than 10 years old. Model Penal Code, § 213.1.

Under some statutes, crime embraces unnatural as well as natural sexual intercourse; e.g. M.G.L.A. (Mass.) c. 277, § 38; and, may include intercourse between two males.

See also Assault with intent to commit rape; Carnal abuse; Carnal knowledge; Fresh complaint rule.

Statutory rape. Modern statutes, which often materially change the common-law definition, create an offense commonly known as "statutory rape," where the offense consists in having sexual intercourse with a female or male under statutory age. The offense may be either with or without the victim's consent; and mistake as to the victim's age is usually no defense. See also Statutory rape.
Taxable estate; the real and personal property which the legislature designates as "taxable."

Rate. Proportional or relative value, measure, or degree. The proportion or standard by which quantity or value is adjusted. Thus, the rate of interest is the proportion or ratio between the principal and interest; the buildings in a town are rated for insurance purposes; i.e., classified and individually estimated with reference to their insurable qualities. In this sense also we speak of articles as being in "first-rate" or "second-rate" condition.

A fixed relation of quantity, amount or degree; also, a charge, valuation, payment or price fixed according to ratio, scale or standard; comparative price or amount of demands. E. C. Miller Cedar Lumber Co. v. United States, Cust. & Pat.App., 86 F.2d 429, 434. Cost per unit of a commodity or service.

In connection with public utilities, a charge to the public for a service open to all and upon the same terms. The unit cost of a service supplied to the public by a utility. When used in connection with public utilities, such as a telephone company, generally means price stated or fixed for some commodity or service of general need or utility supplied to the public measured by specific unit or standard. Bird v. Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co., D.C.Mun.App., 185 A.2d 917, 918.

As used in the interstate commerce law, it means the net cost to the shipper of the transportation of his property; that is to say, the net amount the carrier receives from the shipper and retains. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Armour & Co., D.C.I11., 26 F.Supp. 964, 967.

See also Commodity rate; Confiscatory rates; Discount rate; Flat rate; Freight rate; Interest rate; Joint through rate; Meter rate; Prime interest rate.

Class rate. A single rate applying to the transportation of a number of articles of the same general character.

Commodity rate. A rate which applies to the transportation of a specific commodity alone.

Joint rate. A single rate applied jointly by two carriers to cover shipment in which one carrier operates over only part of route and other carrier serves remaining distance to destination. U.S. v. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc., C.A.Ga., 672 F.2d 469, 475.

Rate base. The amount of investment on which a regulated public utility is entitled to an opportunity to earn a fair and reasonable return. It represents the total investment in or fair value of the used and useful property which it necessarily devotes to rendering the regulated services. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 270 S.C. 590, 244 S.E.2d 278, 283. See also Rate of return, below.

Rate of exchange. In commercial law, the actual price at which a bill, drawn in one country upon another country, can be bought or obtained in the former country at any given time. Also, the price at which the money of one country may be exchanged for money of another country (e.g., dollars for marks).

Rate of interest. The charge imposed by a lender of money for the use of the money; the borrowing charge.

Discount rate. Rate charged to member banks by Federal Reserve Board for borrowing money from Federal Reserve.

Legal rate. The statutory maximum rate of interest which may be charged for loans. See also Usury.

Prime rate. The rate of interest charged for high quality commercial loans (i.e., rate charged by bank to its most credit worthy customers) which is pegged to the discount rate established by the Federal Reserve Board. This rate tends to establish the rate of interest charged for various types of personal and commercial loans.

Rate cap. Provision in loan agreement restricting interest rate increases. For example, in an adjustable rate mortgage (ARM), a clause which limits interest rate increases, on either an annual or a lifetime basis.

Rate of return. The annual return on an investment, generally referred to in terms of a percentage of the investment. The percentage by which the rate base is multiplied to provide a figure that allows a utility to collect revenues sufficient to pay operating expenses and attract investment. Providence Gas Co. v. Burman, 119 R.I., 78, 376 A.2d 687, 695. In the case of common stock, is the annual dividend yield as a percentage of the purchase price. See also Dividend yield; Fair return on investment; Yield.

Ratification. In a broad sense, the confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or by another; as, confirmation of a voidable act. The affirmation by a person of a prior act which did not bind him, but which was done or professedly done on his account, whereby the act, as to some or all persons, is given effect as if originally authorized by him. Askew v. Joachim Memorial Home, N.D., 234 N.W.2d 226, 237. The adoption by one, as binding upon himself, of an act done in such relations that he may claim it as done for his benefit, although done under such circumstances as would not bind him except for his subsequent assent. It is equivalent to a previous authorization and relates back to time when act ratified was done, except where intervening rights of third persons are concerned.

In contract law, the act of adopting or confirming a previous act which without ratification would not be an enforceable contractual obligation, or confirming an obligation by one without the authority to make or do (or who was incompetent at the time the contract was made). The act of ratification causes the obligation to be binding as if such was valid and enforceable in the first instance.

Approval, as by legislatures or conventions, of a constitutional amendment proposed by two-thirds of both houses of Congress. Approval by the electorate of a proposed State constitutional amendment.

In the law of principal and agent, the adoption and confirmation by one person with knowledge of all material facts, of an act or contract performed or entered into in his behalf by another who at the time assumed without authority to act as his agent. Essence of "ratification" by principal of act of agent is manifestation of mental determination by principal to affirm the act, and this may be manifested by written word or by spoken word or by conduct, or may be inferred from known circumstances and principal's acts in relation thereto.

Express ratifications are those made in express and direct terms of assent. Implied ratifications are such as the law presumes from the acts of the principal.

Estoppel and ratification distinguished, see Estoppel. See also Acknowledgment; Approval; Confirmation.

Ratify. To approve and sanction; to make valid; to confirm; to give sanction to. To authorize or otherwise approve, retroactively, an agreement or conduct either expressly or by implication. See Approval; Confirm; Ratification.

Ratihabitio /rátahabishlyow/. Lat. Confirmation, agreement, consent, approbation of a contract.

Ratihabitio mandato equiparatur /rátahabishlyow mandéytow ekwapréytar/. Ratification is equivalent to express command.

Rating. See Credit rating.

Ratio. Rate; proportion; degree. Reason, or understanding. Also a cause, or giving judgment therein. The number resulting when one number is divided by another.

Ratio decidendi /réysh(i)yow désdédénday/. The ground or reason of decision. The point in a case which determines the judgment.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis /réysh(i)yow ést forméyalis kóz kawnsat(y)úwdsás/. Reason is the formal cause of custom.

Ratio est legis anima; mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex /réysh(i)yow ést liyjss éstánnm; myuvtétya liyjss ráshiyownyly myuvtétya ét léka/. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of law being changed the law is also changed.

Ratio est radius divini luminis /réysh(i)yow ést réyd(i)yow dáványá l(y)úwmsás/. Reason is a ray of the divine light.

Ratio et auctoritas, duo clarissima mundi lumina /réysh(i)yow ét októrátas, d(y)úwows klárissmás mánday l(y)úwmsás/. Reason and authority, the two brightest lights of the world.

Ratio in jure aequitas integra /réysh(i)yow in júriy ékwátas intégrá/. Reason in law is perfect equity.

Ratio legis /réysh(i)yow liyjss/. The reason or occasion of a law; the occasion of making a law.

Ratio legis est anima legis /réysh(i)yow liyjss ést énnmá liyjss/. The reason of law is the soul of law.

Rationalibus divisis /ráshsinybálybí éstsvíríyam/. A Latin phrase equivalent to "alimony."

Rationaliblí parte bonorum /ráshsinybelay pártí yánrórm/. A writ that lay for the wife against the executors of her husband, to have the third part of his goods after his just debts and funeral expenses had been paid.

Rational basis test. Under this test, an appellate court will not second-guess the legislature as to the wisdom or rationality of a particular statute if there is a rational basis for its enactment, and if the challenged law bears a reasonable relationship to the attainment of some legitimate governmental objective. The same test may be applied when a court is reviewing a decision of an administrative body because of the expertise of such body. It has been said that the protection of the public from unwise or improvident statutes is to be found at the voting polls or by referendum, not in court. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 134, 24 L.Ed. 77. This test does not apply, of course, if the statute or decision is unconstitutional.

As a standard of review for statutory enactments challenged on equal protection grounds, this test requires that classifications created by a state must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must rest on some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation, so that all persons similarly circumstanced shall be treated alike. Aladdin's Castle, Inc. v. City of Mesquite, C.A.Tex., 630 F.2d 1029, 1039.

Rational doubt. A doubt based upon reasonable inferences such as are ordinarily drawn by ordinary men in the light of their experiences in ordinary life. Hicks v. State, 66 Ga.App. 577, 18 S.E.2d 637, 640. See also Reasonable doubt.

Rationalibus divis /rásht(y)ánylbas dáváyzas/. An abolished writ which lay where two lords, in divers towns, had seignories adjoining for him who found his waste by little and little to have been encroached upon, against the other, who had encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds.

Rational purpose test. See Rational basis test.

Ratione impotentiæ /ráshiwyoníy impówntníy/. Lat. On account of inability. A ground of qualified property in some animals fera naturae; as in the young ones, while they are unable to fly or run.

Ratione materiæ /ráshiwyoníy mótwíy/. Lat. By reason of the matter involved; in consequence of, or from the nature of, the subject-matter.
Ratione personas /raeshiyowniy persowniy/. Lat. By reason of the person concerned; from the character of the person.

Ratione privilegii /raeshiyowniy privvoliyjiyay/. Lat. This term describes a species of property in wild animals, which consists in the right which, by a peculiar franchise anciently granted by the English crown, by virtue of its prerogative, one man may have of killing and taking such animals on the land of another.

Rationes /raeshiyowniyz/. In old law, the pleadings in a suit. Rationes exercere, or ad rationes stare, to plead.

Ratione soli /rafeshiyowniy psrsowniy/. Lat. By reason of the person.

Ratione tenurae /raeshiyowniy tenysriy/. L. Lat. By reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure.

Ratio non clauditur loco /reysh(iy)ow non klodatsr/. Reason is not confined to any place.

Ratio potest allegari deficiente lege; sed ratio vera et legalis, et non apparens /reysh(iy)ow powtsst et legalis, et non apaeranz/. Reason may be alleged when law is defective; but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent.

Rattening /ratiqing/. The offense on the part of members of a trade union, of causing the tools, clothes, or other property of a workman to be taken away or hidden, in order to compel him to join the union or cease working. It is, in England, an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Ravine. A long, deep, and narrow hollow, worn by a stream or torrent of water; a long, deep, and narrow hollow or pass through the mountains.

Ravish. To have carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will; to rape. State v. Harvey, Mo. App., 544 S.W.2d 593, 595.

Ravisher. One who has carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her consent. Hart v. State, 144 Tex.Cr.R. 161, 161 S.W.2d 791, 793.

Ravishment. See Rape; Ravish.

Ravishment de gard /ravashmunt do gars/. L. Fr. An abolished writ which lay for a guardian by knight’s service or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward.

Ravishment of ward. In old English law, the marriage of an infant ward without the consent of the guardian.

Raw land. Unimproved land.

Raw materials. Goods purchased for use in manufacturing a product; e.g. wood, steel.

Raze /reyz/. To erase.

Razón /ra6owm/ra6owm/. In Spanish law, cause (causa).

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST

Re /ry/. Lat. In the matter of; in the case of. A term of frequent use in designating judicial proceedings, in which there is only one party. Thus, “Re Vivian” signifies “In the matter of Vivian,” or in “Vivian’s Case.”

R.E.A. Rural Electrification Administration.

Reacquired stock. See Treasury stock.

Readjustment. A voluntary reorganization of a corporation which is in financial difficulties by the stockholders themselves without the intervention of a receiver or a court appointed fiduciary.

Ready. Prepared for what one is about to do or experience; equipped or supplied with what is needed for some act or event; prepared for immediate movement or action. Fitted, arranged, or placed for immediate use; causing no delay for lack of being prepared or furnished.

Ready and willing. Implies capacity to act as well as disposition; e.g. ready, willing and able buyer.

Reaffirmation. In bankruptcy, refers to post-petition agreement to pay pre-petition obligations. Court approval is required.

Reaffirmation agreement. Agreement made prior to discharge in bankruptcy to pay certain debts that otherwise would be discharged through the bankruptcy proceeding. Such agreements are subject to certain requirements and limitations.

Real. In civil law, relating to a thing (whether movable or immovable), as distinguished from a person.

Relating to land, as distinguished from personal property. This term is applied to lands, tenements, and hereditaments.

As to real Action; Asset; Chattel; Contract; Covenant; Estate; Issue; Obligation; Party; Privilege; Property; Representative; Right; Security; Servitude; Statute, and Wrong, see those titles.

Real authority. Authority manifested by the principal to the agent either expressly or by implication.

Real defenses. Defenses to which a holder in due course is subject in enforcing an instrument, especially defenses listed in U.C.C. § 3–305(2).

Real earnings. Wages, salaries, and other earnings adjusted for inflation to determine actual changes in purchasing power over a given period.

Real estate. Land and anything permanently affixed to the land, such as buildings, fences, and those things attached to the buildings, such as light fixtures, plumbing and heating fixtures, or other such items which would be personal property if not attached. The term is generally synonymous with real property. See also Property (Real property).

Real estate broker. See Broker.

Real estate investment trust (REIT). Financial device in which investors purchase shares in a trust the rest of which is invested in real estate ventures. A company that invests in and manages a portfolio of real estate with the majority of its income distributed to the shareholders. A closed-end mutual fund that invests in real estate or mortgages. See also Trust; Massachusetts trust.

Real estate listing. See Listing.

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act. See RESPA.

Real evidence. Evidence furnished by things themselves, on view or inspection, as distinguished from a description of them by the mouth of a witness; e.g., the physical appearance of a person when exhibited to the jury, marks, scars, wounds, fingerprints, etc.; also, the weapons or implements used in the commission of a crime, and other inanimate objects, and evidence of the physical appearance of a place (the scene of an accident or of the commission of a crime or of property to be taken under condemnation proceedings) as obtained by a jury when they are taken to view it. That type of evidence which is produced by providing for inspection at trial a particular item rather than having witnesses describe it. State v. Barfield, 298 N.C. 306, 259 S.E.2d 510, 533. See also Demonstrative evidence.

Realignment. The process by which the court, for determining diversity jurisdiction, realigns the parties as plaintiffs and defendants according to the ultimate interest of each.

Real income. A measure of the real purchasing power of nominal income; real income is nominal income adjusted for changes in the general price level, or income corrected for inflation or deflation. See also Real earnings.

Real injury. In the civil law, an injury arising from an unlawful act, as distinguished from a verbal injury, which was done by words. See Injury.

Realize. To convert any kind of property into money; but especially to receive the returns from an investment.

Realized. Term, in tax law, means received, paid, debited or incurred, in accordance with method of accounting authorized for use by taxpayer. Altsuler v. Peters, 190 Neb. 113, 206 N.W.2d 570, 577.

Realized gain or loss. Gain (or loss) resulting from an identifiable event, such as a sale or an exchange of property. The amount of realized gain from the sale or other disposition of property is the excess of the amount realized over the adjusted basis of the property; the amount of realized loss is the excess of the property's adjusted basis over the amount realized. I.R.C. § 1001. See also Recognized gain or loss.

Real law. Real estate law. The body of laws relating to real property. This use of the term is popular rather than technical.

In the civil law, a law which relates to specific property, whether movable or immovable.

Realm /relm/. A kingdom; a country.
Reappraiser. A person who, in certain cases, is appointed to make a revaluation or second appraisement of imported goods at the customhouse.

Reargument. Purpose of reargument is to demonstrate to court that there is some decision or principle of law which would have a controlling effect and which has been overlooked, or that there has been a misapprehension of facts. In re Hooker's Estate, 173 Misc. 515, 18 N.Y.S.2d 107, 110. See also Rehearing; Retrial.

Reason. A faculty of the mind by which it distinguishes truth from falsehood, good from evil, and which enables the possessor to deduce inferences from facts or from propositions. Also an inducement, motive, or ground for action, as in the phrase "reasons for an appeal."

Reasonable. Fair, proper, just, moderate, suitable under the circumstances. Fit and appropriate to the end in view. Having the faculty of reason; rational; governed by reason; under the influence of reason; agreeable to reason. Thinking, speaking, or acting according to the dictates of reason. Not immoderate or excessive, being synonymous with rational, honest, equitable, fair, suitable, moderate, tolerable. Cass v. State, 124 Tex. Cr.R. 208, 61 S.W.2d 500.

As to reasonable Aids; Care; Diligence; Doubt; Notice, Skill, and Time, see those titles. See also Fair.

Reasonable act. Such as may fairly, justly, and reasonably be required of a party.

Reasonable and probable cause. Such grounds as justify any one in suspecting another of a crime, and placing him in custody thereon. It is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant reasonable man in belief that charge is true. Henry v. U. S., 361 U.S. 98, 80 S.Ct. 168, 4 L.Ed.2d 134; Com. v. Stewart, 358 Mass. 747, 267 N.E.2d 213. See also Probable cause.

Reasonable belief. "Reasonable belief" or "probable cause" to make an arrest without a warrant exists when facts and circumstances within arresting officer's knowledge, and of which he had reasonably trustworthy information, are sufficient to give him such certainty as is reasonably strong to warrant reasonable man in that belief. Brown v. State, 249 Ala. 950, 192 So.2d 135, 141. See also Probable cause; Reasonable and probable cause.

The words "reasonably believes" are used throughout the Restatement, Second, Torts to denote the fact that the actor believes that a given fact or combination of facts exists, and that the circumstances which he knows, or should know, are such as to cause a reasonable man so to believe. Sec. 11.

Reasonable care. That degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise in the same or similar circumstances. Pierce v. Horvath, 142 Ind.App. 278, 233 N.E.2d 811, 815. That degree of care which ordinarily prudent and competent person engaged in same line of business or endeavor should exercise under similar circumstances. Warner v. Kiowa County Hospital Authority, Okl.App., 551 P.2d 1179, 1188. Due care, or ordinary care, under all the circumstances. Failure to exercise such care is ordinary negligence. See also Care.

Reasonable cause. As basis for arrest without warrant, is such state of facts as would lead man of ordinary care and prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain honest and strong suspicion that person sought to be arrested is guilty of committing a crime. People v. Knutson, 60 C.A.3d 856, 131 Cal.Rptr. 846, 850. See also Probable cause; Reasonable and probable cause; Reasonable belief.

Reasonable certainty, rule of. This rule permits recovery of damages only for such future pain and suffering as is reasonably certain to result from the injury received. Prettyman v. Topkis, Del., 3 A.2d 708, 710. To authorize recovery under such rule for permanent injury, permanency of injury must be shown with reasonable certainty, which is not mere conjecture or likelihood or ever a probability of such injury. State v. Kansas City Public Service Co. v. Shain, 350 Mo. 316, 165 S.W.2d 428, 430.

To establish damages for lost profits due to breach of contract with "reasonable certainty" does not mean that such damages must be established in exact pecuniary amount; evidence must, however, lay some foundation enabling fact finder to make fair and reasonable estimate of amount of damage. Better Community Developers, Inc., 38 Md.App. 119, 165 S.W.2d 428, 430.

Reasonable compensation. Sum which would reasonably compensate person for injuries, for pain and suffering, for past, present and future expenses reasonably necessary or incidental to his efforts to alleviate his injuries and in all pecuniary losses suffered, or to be suffered, as result of inability to engage in his usual occupation. Kavanagh v. Butorac, 140 Ind.App., 139, 121 N.E.2d 627, 641.

Reasonable doubt. The standard used to determine the guilt or innocence of a person criminally charged. To be guilty of a crime, one must be proved guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt." Reasonable doubt which will justify acquittal is doubt based on reason and arising from evidence or lack of evidence, and it is doubt which reasonable man or woman might entertain, and it is not fanciful doubt, is not imagined doubt, and is not doubt that juror might conjure up to avoid performing an unpleasant task or duty. U. S. v. Johnson, C.A.N.Y., 343 F.2d 5, 6. Reasonable doubt is a doubt as would cause prudent men to hesitate before acting in matters of importance to themselves. U. S. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc., D.C.N.Y., 367 F.Supp. 91, 101. Doubt based on reason which arises from evidence or lack of evidence. Johnson v. Louisiana, 406 U.S. 356, 360, 92 S.Ct. 1620, 1624, 32 L.Ed.2d 152. See also Beyond a reasonable doubt; Doubt.

Reasonable expectation doctrine. Doctrine of "reasonable expectations" is that when ambiguities exist in insurance policy they are to be resolved in accordance with the reasonable expectations of the insured. Auto-Owners Ins. Co. v. Jensen, C.A.N.D., 667 F.2d 714, 721.
Reasonable force. That degree of force which is not excessive and is appropriate in protecting oneself or one's property. When such force is used, a person is justified and is not criminally liable, nor is he liable in tort.

Reasonable grounds. Reasonable grounds within statute authorizing arrest without warrant by officer who has reasonable grounds for believing that person to be arrested has committed criminal offense means substantially probable cause. Beyer v. Young, 32 Colo.App. 273, 513 P.2d 1086, 1088. See also Probable cause; Reasonable and probable cause; Reasonable cause.

Reasonable inference rule. Under this rule the trier of fact may consider as evidence not only the testimony and real evidence presented at trial but also all inferences which may be reasonably drawn, though they are not necessary inferences.

Reasonable man doctrine or standard. The standard which one must observe to avoid liability for negligence is the standard of the reasonable man under all the circumstances, including the foreseeability of harm to one such as the plaintiff.

Reasonable needs of the business. A term used in connection with the accumulated earnings tax. A corporation may avoid a penalty on the unreasonable accumulation of earnings if it can show that there is a reasonable business need, and a definite plan for the use of the funds. I.R.C. § 535.

Reasonable notice. While the term is relative, State v. Boles, 5 Conn.Cir. 22, 240 A.2d 920, it is notice which is plainly calculated to apprise the appropriate person of its contents. See also Notice.

Reasonable part. In old English law, that share of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children after his decease. 2 Bl. Comm. 492.

Reasonable suspicion. Such suspicion which will justify officer, for Fourth Amendment purposes, in stopping defendant in public place is quantum of knowledge sufficient to induce ordinarily prudent and cautious man under circumstances to believe criminal activity is at hand. People v. Johnson, 56 A.D.2d 766, 392 N.Y.S.2d 294, 295. It must be based on specific and articulable facts, which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant intrusion. Curry v. State, Tex.App. 14 Dist., 699 S.W.2d 331, 333. See also Probable cause; Reasonable cause.

Reasonable time. Such time as is necessary conveniently to do what a contract requires to be done, and as soon as circumstances will permit. Ridglea Interests, Inc. v. General Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 343 S.W.2d 490, 493. In determining what is a "reasonable time" for performance, court should consider such factors as relationships between parties, subject matter of contract, and time that a person of ordinary diligence and prudence would use under similar circumstances. Glen Cove Marina, Inc. v. Vessel Little Jennie, D.C.N.Y., 269 F.Supp. 877, 879.

Any time which is not manifestly unreasonable may be fixed by agreement of the parties, and what is reasonable depends on the nature, purpose and circumstances of each case. U.C.C. § 1–204(1)(2). Acceptance of an offer must be made within a reasonable time if no time is specified. U.C.C. §§ 2–206(2), 207. See also U.C.C. § 2–512(1) (buyer's right to inspection of goods); § 2–610 (anticipatory repudiation); § 2–508(2) (substitution of conforming goods for rejected goods).

Where contract does not fix a time for performance, the law allows "reasonable time" for performance, defined as such time as is necessary, conveniently, to do what the contract requires to be done, as soon as circumstances will permit. Houston County v. Leo L. Landauer & Associates, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 424 S.W.2d 458, 463.

See also Time.

Reasonable use theory. A riparian owner may make reasonable use of his water for either natural or artificial wants. However, he may not so use his rights so as to affect the quantity or quality of water available to a lower riparian owner. Tucker v. Bodoian, 376 Mass. 907, 384 N.E.2d 1195. See also Common enemy doctrine.

Reassessment. Re-estimating the value of a specific property or all property in a given area for tax assessment purposes.

Reassurance. Exists where an insurer procures the whole or a part of the sum which he has insured (i.e., contracted to pay in case of loss, death, etc.) to be insured again to him by another insurer. See also Reinsurance.

Rebate. Discount; deduction or refund of money in consideration of prompt payment. A deduction from a stipulated premium on a policy of insurance, in pursuance of an antecedent contract. A deduction or drawback from a stipulated payment, charge, or rate (as, a rate for the transportation of freight by a railroad), not taken out in advance of payment, but handed back to the payer after he has paid the full stipulated sum.

Refund of portion of purchase price made by manufacturer to consumer to induce purchase of product. Such is commonly obtained by sending proof of purchase to manufacturer.

Portion of a transportation charge refunded to a shipper. Rebates are forbidden by the Interstate Commerce Act.

Tax rebate is an amount returned (i.e., refunded) to the taxpayer after he has made full payment of the tax. See also Discount; Elkins Act; Kickback; Refund.

In old English law, also a contempt of a court manifested by disobedience to its process, particularly of the court of chancery. If a defendant refused to appear, after attachment and proclamation, a "commission of rebellion" issued against him. 3 Bl.Comm. 444.

Rebellious assembly. In old English law, a gathering of twelve persons or more, intending, going about, or practicing unlawfully and of their own authority to change any laws of the realm; or to destroy the inclosure of any park or ground inclosed, banks of fish-ponds, pools, conduits, etc., to the intent the same shall remain void; or that they shall have way in any of the said grounds; or to destroy the deer in any park, fish in ponds, coneyes in any warren, dovehouses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents or prices of victuals, etc. See also Unlawful assembly.

Rebus sic stantibus /riybas sik stsentobss/. Lat. At 1267.

Rebut. In pleading and evidence, to defeat, refute, or rebuttable presumption. In the law of evidence, a rebuttal evidence. Evidence given to explain, repel, or show the void; or that they shall have way in any of the said grounds; or to destroy the deer in any park, fish in ponds, coneyes in any warren, dovehouses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents or prices of victuals, etc. See also Unlawful assembly.

Rebut. In pleading and evidence, to defeat, refute, or take away the effect of something. When a plaintiff in an action produces evidence which raises a presumption of the defendant's liability, and the defendant adduces evidence which shows that the presumption is ill-founded, he is said to "rebut it." See Rebuttable presumption; Rebuttal evidence.

Rebuttable presumption. In the law of evidence, a presumption which may be rebutted by evidence. Otherwise called a "disputable" presumption. A species of legal presumption which holds good until evidence contrary to it is introduced. Beck v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo.App., 48 S.W.2d 213, 215. It shifts burden of proof. Heiner v. Donnan, 286 U.S. 312, 52 S.Ct. 358, 362, 76 L.Ed. 772. It gives particular effect to certain groups of facts in absence of further evidence, and presumption provides prima facie case which shifts to defendant the burden to go forward with evidence to contradict or rebut fact presumed. Gulle v. Boggs, Fla., 174 So.2d 26, 28. And which standing alone will support a finding against contradictory evidence. Liever v. Rigby, 34 Cal.App.2d 582, 94 P.2d 49, 50. See also Presumption.

Rebuttal evidence. Evidence given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the opposing party. That which tends to explain or contradict or disprove evidence offered by the adverse party. Layton v. State, 261 Ind. 251, 301 N.E.2d 633, 636. Rebuttal occurs during the trial stage where evidence is given by one party to refute evidence introduced by the other party. Evidence which is offered by a party after he has rested his case and after the opponent has rested in order to contradict the opponent's evidence. See also Rejoinder.

Also evidence given in opposition to a presumption of fact or a prima facie case; in this sense, it may be not only countering evidence, but evidence sufficient to counteract, that is, conclusive. See Rebuttable presumption.

Rebutter. In common law pleading, a defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's surrejoinder; the third pleading in the series on the part of the defendant.

Recall. A method of removal of official in which power of removal is either granted to or reserved by the people. Jones v. Harlan, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 251, 254. Right or procedure by which a public official may be removed from office before the end of his term of office by a vote of the people to be taken on the filing of a petition signed by required number of qualified voters. Wallace v. Tripp, 358 Mich. 668, 101 N.W.2d 312, 314. Recall may also be applicable to judges.

Under federal Consumer Product Safety Act, government has power to require recall of unsafe products for repair, replacement or refund. See 16 U.S.C.A. § 2064(c)-(f).

To summon a diplomatic minister back to his home court, at the same time depriving him of his office and functions.

Recall a judgment. To revoke, cancel, vacate, or reverse a judgment for matters of fact. When it is annulled by reason of errors of law, it is said to be "reversed."

Recant. To withdraw or repudiate formally and publicly. Pradlik v. State, 131 Conn. 682, 41 A.2d 906, 907.

Recapitalization. A process whereby stock, bonds or other securities of a corporation are adjusted or restructured as to type, amount, income or priority. A restructuring of the capital of a corporation through amendment of the articles of incorporation or a merger with a subsidiary or parent corporation. Recasting of capital structure (e.g. exchange of bonds for stock) within framework of existing corporation. Helvering v. Southwest Consol. Corporation, La., 315 U.S. 194, 203, 62 S.Ct. 546, 552, 86 L.Ed. 789. See also Reorganization.

Recapture. To recover (by IRS) the tax benefit of a deduction or a credit previously taken by tax payer. See, e.g., Recapture of depreciation.
The taking from an enemy, by a force friendly to the former owner, of a vessel previously taken for prize by such enemy.

Recapture clause. In contracts, a provision for determining rates in the event that the contract rate is more favorable than anticipated. Also, a provision in a contract for recovering possession of goods. As used in leases, a clause giving the lessor a percentage of profits above a fixed amount of rent; or, in a percentage lease, a clause granting landlord right to terminate lease if tenant fails to realize minimum sales.

Recapture of depreciation. Upon the sale or disposition of depreciable property, the portion of the gain which represents the accelerated depreciation previously taken is taxed as ordinary income. Since Tax Reform Act of 1986, there is no monetary difference because capital gains and ordinary income are taxed at the same rate. The recapture of depreciation rules do not apply when the property is disposed of at a loss.

Recapture of investment tax credit. When investment tax credit property is disposed of or ceases to be used in the trade or business of the taxpayer, some of the investment tax credit claimed on such property may be recaptured as additional tax liability. The amount of the recapture (by IRS) is the difference between the amount of the credit originally claimed and what should have been claimed in light of the length of time the property was actually held or used for qualifying purposes. See Investment tax credit.

Receditur a placistis juris, potius quam injurie et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law (as distinguished from maxims or conclusions of reason) will be receded from (given up or dispensed with), rather than that crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished.

Receipt. Written acknowledgment of the receipt of money, or delivery of a thing of value, without containing any affirmative obligation upon either party to it; a mere admission of a fact, in writing. And, being a mere acknowledgment of payment, is subject to parol explanation or contradiction.

A writing which acknowledges taking or receiving either money or goods which have been paid or have been delivered. Manley v. Nelson, 50 Hawaii 484, 524, 443 P.2d 155, 158. Act of receiving; also, the fact of receiving or being received; that which is received. That which comes in, in distinction from what is expended, paid out, sent away, and the like. State v. Texas Co., 173 Tenn. 154, 116 S.W.2d 583, 584.

It requires delivery or change of possession from seller to buyer, and can only be accomplished, in absence of tortious appropriation, by affirmative assent and conduct of seller. Gerner v. Vaubey, 75 Wis.2d 660, 250 N.W.2d 319, 324, 97 A.L.R.3d 897.

Receiver's certificate. A non-negotiable evidence of debt, or debenture, issued by authority of a court of chancery, as a first lien upon the property of a debtor corporation in the hands of a receiver.

Receivership. Legal or equitable proceeding in which a receiver is appointed for an insolvent corporation, partnership or individual to preserve its assets for benefit of affected parties. The state or condition of a corporation, partnership, financial institution, or individual over whom a receiver has been appointed for protection of its assets and for ultimate sale and distribution to creditors. See also, Receiver; Trustee. Compare Bankruptcy proceedings.

Regulatory receivership. Receivership by a governmental agency; e.g., of an insolvent financial institution.

Receiving stolen goods or property. Criminal offense of receiving any property with the knowledge that it has been feloniously, or unlawfully stolen, taken, extorted, obtained, embezzled, or disposed of.

Receiving stolen property—a statutory crime separate from the crime involved in the stealing of the property—is defined in the typical statute as the receiving of stolen property knowing that it is stolen. Although most statutes do not specifically mention it, the receiver must, in addition to knowing the property is stolen, intend to deprive the owner of his property. Four elements are necessary to constitute crime of "receiving stolen goods": (1) the property must be received; (2) it must, at time of its receipt, be stolen property; (3) the receiver must have guilty knowledge that it is stolen property; and (4) his intent in receiving it must be fraudulent. Fletcher v. State, 231 Md. 190, 189 A.2d 641, 643.

A person is guilty of theft if he purposely receives, retains, or disposes of movable property of another knowing that it has been stolen, or believing that it has probably been stolen, unless the property is received, retained, or disposed with purpose to restore it to the owner. "Receiving" means acquiring possession, control or title, or lending on the security of the property. Model Penal Code, § 2313 (receipt of stolen vehicles), § 2315 (receipt of stolen goods, money, etc.).

To "receive" stolen property, means acquisition of control in sense of physical dominion or apparent legal power to dispose of property and envisages possession or control as an essential element. U.S. v. Walker, D.C. Tenn., 384 F.Supp. 262, 263.

Recens insecutio /ryɛnʂ inseŋky̝wʃ(y)ˈkow/. In old English law, fresh suit; fresh pursuit. Pursuit of a thief immediately after the discovery of the robbery. See Fresh pursuit.

Receptus /ɾeˈspɛtəs/. Lat. In the civil law, the name sometimes given to an arbitrator, because he had been received or chosen to settle the differences between the parties.

Recess. In the practice of the courts, a short interval or period of time during which the court suspends business, but without adjourning. The period between sessions of court. A temporary adjournment of a trial or a hearing that occurs after a trial or hearing has commenced. State v. Charles, La., 350 So.2d 595, 598.

In legislative practice, the interval, occurring in consequence of an adjournment, between the sessions of the same continuous legislative body; not the interval between the final adjournment of one body and the convening of another at the next regular session. Compare Continuance.

Recession. The act of ceding or falling back. Term is commonly used with reference to a temporary set-back or slow-down in the economic growth of a nation, but less severe than a depression.

Recrssus maris /ɾɛʃəs məˈrɛs/. Lat. In old English law, a going back; reliction or retreat of the sea.

Recht /rɛkt/. Ger. Right; justice; equity; the whole body of law; unwritten law; law; also a right.

Recidivist /ɾɛsidəˈvɪst/. A habitual criminal; a criminal repeater. An incorrigible criminal. One who makes a trade of crime. See also Habitual criminal.

Reciprocal. Given or owed mutually as between two persons; interchanged. Reciprocal obligations are those due from one person to another and vice versa. See also Reciprocity.

Reciprocal contract. A contract, the parties to which enter into mutual engagements. A mutual or bilateral contract.

Reciprocal dealing arrangement. As included within prohibitions of Sherman Act and Clayton Act exists when two parties face each other as both buyer and seller and one party offers to buy other party's goods, but only if second party buys other goods from first party. Spartan Grain & Mill Co. v. Ayers, C.A.Ga., 581 F.2d 419, 424. See also Tying arrangement.

Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. Uniform law, adopted in most all states, by which a court in the jurisdiction of a wife or mother can commence proceedings for support against the husband or father residing in another state. The court in the jurisdiction where he lives issues process for his appearance and an order of support is made. This is transmitted to the court of the initiating state.

Reciprocal laws. Laws of one state which extend rights and privileges to citizens of another state if such state grants similar privileges to citizens of the first state; e.g. Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act. See also Comity.

Reciprocal or interinsurance exchange. Group or association of persons cooperating through an attorney in fact for purpose of insuring themselves and each other. In re Minnesota Ins. Underwriters, D.C.Minn., 36 F.2d 371, 372.

Reciprocal promises. Mutual promises exchanged between two parties. See also Reciprocal contract.
Reciprocal trade agreements. Agreement between two countries providing for interchange of goods between them at lower tariffs and better terms than exist between one such country and other countries; e.g. U.S. Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934.

Reciprocal trusts. Mutual trusts in one of which A is beneficiary of trust established by B and B is beneficiary of trust settled by A. Commonly these trusts are established by husband and wife.

Reciprocal wills. Wills made by two or more persons in which they make reciprocal testamentary provisions in favor of each other, whether they unite in one will or each executes a separate one. This may be done by one will, in which case the will is both joint and reciprocal, or it may be done by separate wills. Father Flanagan’s Boys’ Home v. Turpin, 252 Iowa 603, 106 N.W.2d 637, 639.

Reciprocity. Mutuality. The term is used to denote the relation existing between two states when each of them gives the subjects of the other certain privileges, on condition that its own subjects shall enjoy similar privileges at the hands of the latter state. Term may also refer to practice, prohibited by Sherman Antitrust Act, whereby a company, overtly or tacitly, agrees to conduct one or more aspects of its business so as to confer a benefit on the other party to the agreement, the consideration being the return promise in kind by the other party, and it is basically a policy of favoring one’s customers in purchasing commodities sold by them. The legality of reciprocity agreements under the anti-trust laws is analyzed in much the same way as the legality of tying arrangements. Stavrides v. Mellon Nat. Bank & Trust Co., D.C.Pa., 353 F.Supp. 1072, 1077. See also Reciprocal; Tying arrangement.

Recision of contract. See Rescission of contract.

Recital. The formal statement or setting forth of some matter of fact, in any deed or writing, in order to explain the reasons upon which the transaction is founded. The recitals are situated in the premises of a deed, that is, in that part of a deed between the date and the habendum, and they usually commence with the formal word "whereas."

In pleading, the statement of matter as introductory to some positive allegation, beginning in declarations with the words, "For that whereas."

Recite. To state in a written instrument facts connected with its inception, or reasons for its being made. Also to quote or set forth the words or the contents of some other instrument or document; as, to "recite" a statute.

Reck. To take heed; have a care, mind, heed.

Reckless. Not recking; careless, heedless, inattentive; indifferent to consequences. According to circumstances it may mean desperately heedless, wanton or willful, or it may mean only careless, inattentive, or negligent. For conduct to be "reckless" it must be such as to evince disregard of, or indifference to, consequences, under circumstances involving danger to life or safety to others, although no harm was intended. Duckers v. Lynch, 204 Kan. 649, 465 P.2d 945, 948. See also Recklessly; Recklessness; Wanton.

Reckless disregard of rights of others. As used in automobile guest law, means the voluntary doing by motorist of an improper or wrongful act, or with knowledge of existing conditions, the voluntary refraining from doing a proper or prudent act when such act or failure to act evinces an entire abandonment of any care, and heedless indifference to results which may follow and the reckless taking of chance of accident happening without intent that any occur. Boswell v. State, 250 Ind. 607, 238 N.E.2d 283, 286.

"Reckless disregard" so as to show actual malice in publication may be shown to exist where there exists sufficient evidence to permit conclusion that defendant in fact entertained serious doubts as to truth of his publication or where there are obvious reasons to doubt veracity of informant or accuracy of his reports. Pape v. Time, Inc., D.C.I11., 294 F.Supp. 1087, 1088.

Reckless driving. Operation of motor vehicle manifesting reckless disregard of possible consequences and indifference to others’ rights. To establish statutory offense of reckless driving requires proof that defendant in management of motor vehicle intentionally did something with knowledge that injury to another was probable or acted with wanton and reckless disregard for safety of others and in reckless disregard of consequences of acts. People v. Schumacher, 194 C.A.2d 335, 14 Cal.Rptr 924, 926. Within meaning of statutory prohibition is a conscious and intentional driving which driver knows, or should know, creates unreasonable risk of harm to others, even though he has no actual intent to harm. State v. Saulnier, 109 R.I. 115, 280 A.2d 85, 87.

Reckless homicide. A species of statutory homicide in some states characterized by a wilful and wanton disregard of consequences and resulting in death. In some states, it may amount to manslaughter. See Homicide (Vehicular homicide).

Recklessly. A person acts recklessly with respect to a material element of an offense when he consciously disregards a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the material element exists or will result from his conduct. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that, considering the nature and purpose of the actor's conduct and the circumstances known to him, its disregard involves a gross deviation from the standard of conduct that a law-abiding person would observe in the actor's situation. Model Penal Code, § 2.02(c).

Person acts "recklessly" within meaning of requirement for commission of involuntary manslaughter when he consciously disregards substantial and unjustifiable risk that his acts are such as are likely to cause death or great bodily harm to some individual and where such disregard constitutes gross deviation from standard of Reckless misconduct. A person is guilty of reckless misconduct when he intentionally does an act, or fails to do an act in violation of his duty, with knowledge of serious danger to others involved in it or of facts which would disclose such danger to a reasonable man. State v. Vertefeuille, 3 Conn.Cir. 508, 217 A.2d 725, 726. Such misconduct means that the actor intentionally does an act or fails to do an act which it is his duty to another to do, knowing or having reason to know of facts which would lead a reasonable man to conclude that such conduct creates an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to the other. Saabye v. Penn Cent. Transp. Co., D.C.Pa., 438 F.Supp. 65, 69.

Reclaim. The process of bringing economically un­ usable land to a higher dollar value by physically changing it; e.g. draining a swamp, irrigating desert, re­ planting a forest.

A banking term used to describe a draft or check set aside because of an error in the listing of the check in clearing house balance.

Reclamation Act. The Reclamation Act of 1902 (43 U.S.C.A. § 391 et seq.), authorized the Secretary of the Interior to locate, construct, operate, and maintain works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands in the Western States. To perform these functions, the Secretary in July 1902 established a Reclamation Service in the Geological Survey. In March 1907 the Reclamation Service was separated from the Survey, and in June 1923 the name was changed to Bureau of Reclamation. The basic objectives of the Federal Reclamation program, as administered by the Bureau of Reclamation, are to assist the States, local governments, and other Federal agencies to stabilize and stimulate local and regional economies, enhance and protect the environment, and improve the quality of life through development of water and related land resources throughout the 17 contiguous Western States and Hawaii.

Reclamation Bureau. See Reclamation Act.

Reclamation district. A subdivision of a state created by legislative authority, for the purpose of reclaiming swamp, marshy, or desert lands within its boundaries and rendering them fit for habitation or cultivation, generally with funds raised by local taxation or the issue of bonds, and sometimes with authority to make rules or ordinances for the regulation of the work in hand.

Reclusion /rək(ˈljuːʃən/). In French law and in Louisiana, incarceration as a punishment for crime; a temporary, afflictive, and infamous punishment, consisting in being confined at hard labor in a penal institution, and carrying civil degradation. Solitary confinement in prison.

Recognition. Ratification; confirmation; an acknowledg­ ment that something done by another person in one's name had one's authority.

Recognition of gain or loss. See Recognized gain or loss.

Recognizance /rək(ˈɡnɪznəs/). An obligation entered into before a court or magistrate duly authorized for that purpose whereby the recognizor acknowledges that he will do some act required by law which is specified therein. The act of recognizing is performed by the recognizor's assenting to the words of the magistrate and acknowledging himself to be indebted to a certain party in a specific amount to be paid if he fails to perform the requisite act. State v. Vinal, 113 R.I. 426, 325 A.2d 81, 83.

An obligation undertaken by a person, generally a defendant in a criminal case, to appear in court on a particular day or to keep the peace. It runs to the court and may not require a bond. In this case it is called personal recognizance. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3142; Fed.R.Crim.P. 46. See Release on own recognizance.

Recognize /rək(ˈɡnəz/). To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. Also to enter into a recognizance.

Recognized. Actual and publicly known.
Recognized gain or loss. The portion of realized gain or loss that is subject to income taxation. See also Realized gain or loss.

Recognized market. Under Uniform Commercial Code provision allowing secured party to dispose of collateral without notification if collateral is type of property customarily sold in "recognized market," "recognized market" is one in which sales involve many items so similar that individual differences are nonexistent or immaterial, where haggling and competitive bidding are not primary factors in each sale, and where prices paid in actual sales of comparable property are currently available by quotation, for example, the New York Stock Exchange and bond and commodity markets. First Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Kehn Ranch, Inc., S.D., 394 N.W.2d 709, 714.

Recognizee. He to whom one is bound in a recognizance.

Recognizor. He who enters into a recognizance.

Recollection. The act of recalling something to mind. In evidence, a person may use almost anything to refresh his recollection of an event in order to testify and the evidence then is his testimony not the document which has refreshed his recollection.

A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly is not excluded by the hearsay rule. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. See Fed.Evid.Rules 612 and 803(5).

See also Past recollection recorded; Recorded past recollection; Refreshing the memory.

Recommendation. In feudal law, a method of converting allodial land into feudal property. The owner of the allod surrendered it to the king or a lord, doing homage, and received it back as a benefice or feud, to hold to himself and such of his heirs as he had previously nominated to the superior.

The act of one person in giving to another a favorable account of the character, responsibility, or skill of a third.

Recommendation refers to an action which is advisory in nature rather than one having any binding effect. People v. Gates, 41 C.A.3d 590, 116 Cal.Rptr. 172, 178.

Letter of recommendation. A writing whereby one person certifies concerning another that he is of good character, solvent, possessed of commercial credit, skilled in his trade or profession, or otherwise worthy of trust, aid, or employment. It may be addressed to an individual or to whom it may concern, and is designed to aid the person commended in obtaining credit, employment, etc. See Letter of credit.

Recommendatory. Precatory, advisory, or directory. Recommendatory words in a will are such as do not express the testator's command in a peremptory form, but advise, counsel, or suggest that a certain course be pursued or disposition made.

Recompense /rékampēns/. A reward or payment for services; remuneration paid for goods or other property.

Recompense or recovery in value. That part of the judgment in a "common recovery" by which the tenant is declared entitled to recover lands of equal value with those which were warranted to him and lost by the default of the vouchee. 2 Bl.Comm. 385-389.

Reconciliation /rēkansliyéyshan/. The renewal of amicable relations between two persons who had been at enmity or variance; usually implying forgiveness of injuries on one or both sides. In law of domestic relations, a voluntary resumption of marital relations in the fullest sense. Keller v. Keller, 122 Cal.App. 712, 10 P.2d 541. It means something more than mere resumption of cohabitation and observance of civility, and comprehends a fresh start and genuine effort by both parties to avoid pitfalls originally causing separation. Gutmann v. Gutmann, 70 N.J.Super. 266, 175 A.2d 470, 474.

In bookkeeping, it is the practice of adjusting the bank statement with the depositor's books. Also, a statement showing the consistency of two or more other financial statements. See also Reconciliation statement.

Reconciliation statement. In accounting, a statement prepared to bring two or more accounts which show a discrepancy into agreement.

Reconditio. In the civil law, a renewing of a former lease; relocation.

Reconsideration. As normally used in context of administrative adjudication "reconsideration" implies reexamination, and possibly a different decision by the entity which initially decided it. Kerr-McGee Nuclear Corp. v. New Mexico Environmental Imp. Bd., App., 97 N.M. 88, 637 P.2d 38, 42.

Reconsignment. A change in the terms of a consignment after the goods are in transit. Privilege extended by carriers to shippers under which goods may be forwarded to a point other than their original destination, without removal from the car and at the through rate from initial point to that of final delivery. Southern Pac. Co. v. Brown, Alcantar & Brown, Inc., C.A.Tex., 409 F.2d 1331, 1332.

Reconstruct. To construct again, to rebuild, either in fact or idea, or to remodel. To form again or anew as in the imagination or to restore again as an entity the thing which was lost or destroyed. City of Seattle v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 12 Wash.2d 247, 121 P.2d 382, 386. See also Recollection.

Reconstruction. Act of constructing again. It presupposes the nonexistence of the thing to be reconstructed, as an entity; that the thing before existing has lost its entity. Miller Hatcheries v. Buckeye Incubator Co., C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 619.
Also the name commonly given to the process of reorganizing, by acts of congress and executive action, the governments of the states which had passed ordinances of secession, and of re-establishing their constitutional relations to the national government, restoring their representation in congress, and effecting the necessary changes in their internal government, after the close of the civil war.

Recontinuance. Used to signify that a person has recovered an incorporeal hereditament of which he had been wrongfully deprived.

Reconvenire /riykonvonayriy/. Lat. In the canon and civil law, an action by a defendant against a plaintiff in a former action; a cross-bill or litigation.

Reconversion. In the civil law, an action by a defendant against a plaintiff in a former action; a cross-bill or litigation.

The term is used in practice in the states of Louisiana and Texas, derived from the reconventio of the civil law. Reconversion is not identical with set-off, but more extensive. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 132 U.S. 531, 10 S.Ct. 166, 33 L.Ed. 450.

Reconventional demand. Any plea by a defendant which constitutes more than mere defense and amounts to counterclaim. Alfonso v. Ruiz, La.App., 2 So.2d 480, 483, 484.

Reconversion. That imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled and the property restored in contemplation of equity to its original actual quality.

Reconveyance. The return of title and ownership in real estate to a party that previously held title to it.

Record, v. To commit to writing, to printing, to inscription, or the like. To make an official note of; to write, transcribe, or enter in a book, file, docket, register, computer tape or disc, or the like, for the purpose of preserving authentic evidence of. To transcribe a document, or enter the history of an act or series of acts, in an official volume, for the purpose of giving notice of the same, of furnishing authentic evidence, and for preservation. Shimmel v. People, 108 Colo. 592, 121 P.2d 491, 493.

Record, n. A written account of some act, court proceeding, transaction, or instrument, drawn up, under authority of law, by a proper officer, and designed to remain as a memorial or permanent evidence of the matters to which it relates. People ex rel. Simons v. Dowling, 84 Misc. 201, 146 N.Y.S. 919, 920. A memorandum public or private, of what has been done, ordinarily applied to public records, in which sense it is a written memorial made by a public officer. Nogueira v. State, 123 Tex. Cr.R. 449, 59 S.W.2d 831. A computer printout qualifies as a "record" within business records exception to hearsay rule. American Oil Co. v. Valenti, 179 Conn. 349, 426 A.2d 305, 309.

The act or fact of recording or being recorded; reduction to writing as evidence, also, the writing so made. A register, a family record, official contemporaneous writing; an authentic official copy of document entered in book or deposited in keeping of officer designated by law; an official contemporaneous memorandum stating the proceedings of a court or official copy of legal papers used in a case. Shimmel v. People, 108 Colo. 592, 121 P.2d 491, 493.

Records are generally admissible under Fed.Evid.R. 803. See also Rules 901 and 902 (authentication), and Rule 1005 (public records). See Business entry rule.

The term "records" means accounts, correspondence, memorandums, tapes, discs, papers, books, and other documents or transcribed information of any type, whether expressed in ordinary or machine language. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

See also Business (Business records); Congressional Record; Court (Court of record); Defective record; Docket; File; Freedom of Information Act; Judgment book; Making record; Minutes book; Official record; Official Records Act; Of record; Public record; Sealing of records; Shop-book rule; Whole record test.

Arrest record. See Arrest record.

Court record of proceedings. The official collection of all the trial pleadings, exhibits, orders and word-for-word testimony that took place during the trial. The "record" includes pleadings, the process, the verdict, the judgment and such other matters as by some statutory or other recognized method have been made a part of it. C. J. Tower & Sons of Buffalo, Inc. v. U. S., Cust.Ct., 347 F.Supp. 1388, 1389.

A written memorial of all the acts and proceedings in an action or suit, in a court of record. The official and authentic history of the cause, consisting in entries of each successive step in the proceedings, chronicling the various acts of the parties and of the court, couched in the formal language established by usage, terminating with the judgment rendered in the case, and intended to remain as a perpetual and unimpeachable memorial of the proceedings and judgment. Such record in civil cases consists primarily of the "civil docket" (Fed.R.Civil P. 79); and in criminal cases of the "criminal docket" (Fed.R.Crim.P. 55). See also Docket; Transcript, and Record on appeal, below.

Courts of record. A court whose proceedings are recorded. Also a court of general jurisdiction. States vary as to the requirements and strata of courts qualifying as courts of record. See also Court (Court of record).

Debits of record. Those which appear to be due by the evidence of a court of record; such as a judgment, recognizance, etc.

Diminution of record. Incompleteness of the record sent up on appeal. See Diminution.

Face of record. See Face of record.

Judicial record. A precise history of civil or criminal proceeding from commencement to termination. See Docket.
RECORD

Matter of record. See that title.

Nul iel record. See Nul.

Of record. See that title.

Public record. A record, memorial of some act or transaction, written evidence of something done, or document, considered as either concerning or interesting the public, affording notice or information to the public, or open to public inspection. Any "writing" prepared, owned, used or retained by any agency in pursuance of law or in connection with the transaction of public business; and, "writings" means all documents, papers, letters, maps, books, photographs, films, sound recordings, magnetic or other tapes, electronic data-processing records, artifacts or other documentary material, regardless of physical form or characteristics.

Record commission. The name of a board of commissioners appointed for the purpose of searching out, classifying, indexing, or publishing the public records of a state or county.

Record date. The date on which a person must be registered as a shareholder on the stock book of a company in order to receive a declared dividend or, among other things, to vote on company affairs. Dividends are paid on payment date to those who own the stock on the record date.

Record of nisi prius. In England, formerly an official copy or transcript of the proceedings in an action, entered on parchment and "sealed and passed" as it is termed, at the proper office. It served as a warrant to the judge to try the cause, and was the only document at which he could judicially look for information as to the nature of the proceedings and the issues joined.

Record on appeal. In the practice of appellate tribunals, refers to the history of the proceedings on the trial of the action below (with the pleadings, offers, objections to evidence, rulings of the court, exceptions, charge, etc.), in so far as the same appears in the record furnished to the appellate court in the paperbooks or other transcripts. Hence, derivatively, it means the aggregate of the various judicial steps taken on the trial below, in so far as they were taken, presented, or allowed in the formal and proper manner necessary to put them upon the record of the court. This is the meaning in such phrases as "no error in the record," "contents of the record," "outside the record," etc.

The official documentation of all the proceedings in court in a particular case, including the pleadings, exhibits and commonly the transcript of the examination of witnesses; may also include docket entries. Fed.R.App.P. 10(a).

Record owner. The person in whose name stock shares are registered on the records of the corporation. A record owner is treated as the owner of the shares by the corporation whether or not that person is the beneficial owner of the shares. As regards real property ownership, is person in whose name title appears on official records in contrast with one who claims title through unrecorded documents.

Records of a corporation. Such records include the transcript of its charter and by-laws, the minutes of its meetings—the books containing the accounts of its official doings and the written evidence of its contracts and business transactions. U. S. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 236 U.S. 318, 35 S.Ct. 363, 368, 59 L.Ed. 598.

Trial by record. In old English law, a species of trial adopted for determining the existence or non-existence of a record. When a record was asserted by one party to exist, and the opposite party denied its existence under the form of a traverse that there was no such record remaining in court as alleged, and issue was joined thereon, this was called an "issue of nul iel record," and in such case the court awarded a trial by inspection and examination of the record. Upon this the party affirming its existence was bound to produce it in court on a day given for the purpose, and, if he failed to do so, judgment was given for his adversary.

Title of record. A title to real estate, evidenced and provable by one or more conveyances or other instruments all of which are duly entered on the public land records. See also Abstract of title.

Recordare. A writ to bring up judgments of justices of the peace.

Records facias loquem. A writ by which a suit or plaint in replevin could be removed from a county court to one of the courts of Westminster Hall. So termed from the emphatic words of the old writ, by which the sheriff was commanded to cause the plaint to be recorded, and to have the record before the superior court.

Records sunt vestigia vetustatatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth.

Recordation. The act or process of recording an instrument such as a deed or mortgage in a public registry. Also, the system of recording court proceedings by stenography, voice-writing or tapes.

Recordatur. In old English practice, an entry made upon a record, in order to prevent any alteration of it. An order or allowance that the verdict returned on the nisi prius roll be recorded.

Recorded past recollection. In evidence, a document which was prepared at a time when the events recorded were fresh in the mind and memory of the person preparing it may be admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if, as a preliminary matter, the judge is satisfied that it is the work of the witness and that it is the original unless such is excused under the best evidence rule. See Fed.Evid.R. 612 and 803(5). See also Past recollection recorded; Recollection.

Recorder, v. L Fr. In Norman law, to recite or testify on recollection what had previously passed in court. This was the duty of the judges and other principal persons who presided at the placitum; thence called "recordeurs."
Recorder, n. A magistrate, in the judicial systems of some of the states, who has a criminal jurisdiction analogous to that of a police judge or other committing magistrate, and usually a limited civil jurisdiction, and sometimes authority conferred by statute in special classes of proceedings. An officer appointed to make record or enrolment of deeds and other legal instruments authorized by law to be recorded. A local government officer in whose office deeds, mortgages, liens, and other instruments are registered.

Record, estoppel by. An "estoppel by record" is the preclusion to deny the truth of a matter set forth in a record, whether judicial or legislative, also to deny the facts adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction. An estoppel by record cannot be invoked where allegations or recitals did not conclude pleader in prior proceeding. Blackburn v. Blackburn, Tex.Civ.App., 163 S.W.2d 251, 255. It bars a second action between the same parties or those in privity with them, in same case on same issues. Smith v. Maine, 145 Misc. 521, 260 N.Y.S. 425. The doctrine prevents a party not only from litigating again what was actually litigated in the former case, but litigating what might have been litigated therein.

Recording acts. Statutes enacted in the several states relative to the official recording of deeds, mortgages, security interests, etc. as notice to creditors, purchasers, encumbrancers, and others interested.

Notice acts. That type of recording statute provides that a person with notice of an unrecorded instrument is barred from claiming priority as of the date on which he received the instrument. See also Notice race statutes; Notice recording statutes.

Race acts. The first to record regardless of notice of an unrecorded deed earlier in time has the better rights under a race type recording statute. See Pure race statute.

Race-notice acts. The first to record in the chain of title without notice of a prior unrecorded deed or mortgage has the better rights under a race-notice type statute. See Race-notice recording statutes.

Record notice. When an instrument of conveyance or a mortgage is recorded in the appropriate public office, it is constructive notice of its contents to the whole world.

Recordum /rakordam/. A record; a judicial record. It is used in the phrase prout patet per recordum, which is a formula employed, in pleading, for reference to a record, signifying as it appears from the record.

Recoup, or recoupe /raküwp/. To deduct, defalk, discount, set off, or keep back; to withhold part of a demand. See Recoupment.

Recoupment /raküwpment/. To recover a loss by a subsequent gain. In pleading, to set forth a claim against the plaintiff when an action is brought against one as a defendant. A keeping back something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold it. A right of the defendant to have a deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's damages, for the reason that the plaintiff has not complied with the cross-obligations or independent covenants arising under the same contract. It implies that plaintiff has cause of action, but asserts that defendant has counter cause of action growing out of breach of some other part of same contract on which plaintiff's action is founded, or for some cause connected with contract.

The right of the defendant to have the plaintiff's monetary claim reduced by reason of some claim the defendant has against the plaintiff arising out of the very contract giving rise to plaintiff's claim. First Nat. Bank of Louisville v. Master Auto Service Corp., C.A. Va., 693 F.2d 308, 310. Unlike a counterclaim, recoupment only reduces plaintiff's claim; it does not allow recovery of affirmative money judgment for any excess over that claim. Tuloka Affiliates, Inc. v. Moore, 275 S.C. 199, 268 S.E.2d 293, 295.

Recoupment is a purely defensive matter growing out of transaction constituting plaintiff's cause of action and is available only to reduce or satisfy plaintiff's claim and permits of no affirmative judgment. Schroeder v. Prince Charles, Inc., Mo., 427 S.W.2d 414, 419.

Recoupment is the equivalent of the old counterclaim in which a defendant sets up a claim owed to him by the plaintiff though it need not arise out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim and the defendant may not recover more than the amount claimed by the plaintiff against him. Under rules practice, recoupment has been replaced by the modern counterclaim. See also Counterclaim.

Set-off distinguished. A "set-off" is a demand which the defendant has against the plaintiff, arising out of a transaction extrinsic to the plaintiff's cause of action, whereas a "recoupment" is a reduction or rebate by the defendant of part of the plaintiff's claim because of a right in the defendant arising out of the same transaction. Zweck v. D P Way Corp., 70 Wis.2d 426, 234 N.W.2d 921, 924. See also Set-off.

Recourse. To recurr. The right of a holder of a negotiable instrument to recover against a party secondarily liable, e.g., prior endorser or guarantor. Therefore, if a prior endorser signs without recourse, he exempts himself from liability for payment, but not from all warranties. U.C.C. § 3-414(1). See also Nonrecourse; Nonrecourse loan; Recourse loan; Without recourse; With recourse.

Recourse loan. Loan on which an endorser or guarantor is liable in event of default of borrower. See also Recourse; With recourse. Compare Nonrecourse loan.

Recover. To get or obtain again, to collect, to get renewed possession of; to win back. To regain, as lost property, territory, appetite, health, courage. In a narrower sense, to be successful in a suit, to collect or obtain amount, to have judgment, to obtain a favorable or final judgment, to obtain in any legal manner in contrast to voluntary payment. Olds v. General Acc.
Recovery. In its most extensive sense, the restoration or vindication of a right existing in a person, by the formal judgment or decree of a competent court, at his instance and suit, or the obtaining, by such judgment, of some right or property which has been taken or withheld from him. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wood, 242 Ark. 879, 416 S.W.2d 322, 327. This is also called a "true" recovery, to distinguish it from a "feigned" or "common" recovery.

The obtaining of a thing by the judgment of a court, as the result of an action brought for that purpose. The amount finally collected, or the amount of judgment. In re Lehm, 179 App.Div. 757, 167 N.Y.S. 217, 219. To be successful in a suit to obtain a judgment, Garza v. Chicago Health Clubs, Inc., D.C.I11., 347 F.Supp. 955, 962.

See Common recovery; Recoupment; Repossession; Restitution.

Final recovery. The final judgment or verdict in an action. See Judgment; Verdict.

Recreant /rekriyant/. Coward or craven. The word pronounced by a combatant in the trial by battle, when he acknowledged himself beaten. 3 Bl.Comm. 340.

Recrimination /rekrimaneyshan/. A charge made by an accused person against the accuser; in particular a counter-charge of adultery or cruelty made by one charged with the same offense in a suit for divorce, against the person who has charged him or her. Under doctrine of "recrimination", if conduct of both husband and wife has been such as to furnish grounds for divorce neither is entitled to relief. Mason v. Mason, 276 Ala. 265, 160 So.2d 881, 882. A showing by the defendant of any cause of divorce against the plaintiff, in bar of the plaintiff's cause of divorce. And to bar divorce, complainant's misconduct need not be of equal degree with that of defendant, but must be of same general character. The defense of recrimination has been abolished in many states with the enactment of "no-fault" divorce statutes.

Recross examination. An examination of a witness by a cross-examiner subsequent to a redirect examination of the witness.

Rectification. The act or process by which something is made right or by which a wrong is adjusted. See also Restitution.

Rectification of boundaries. In old English law, the action to rectify or ascertain the boundaries of two adjoining pieces of land.

Rectification of register. In old English law, the process by which a person whose name is wrongly entered on (or omitted from) a register may compel the keeper of the register to remove (or enter) his name.

Rectify. To correct or define something which is erroneous or doubtful. Thus, where the parties to an agreement have determined to embody its terms in the appropriate and conclusive form, but the instrument meant to effect this purpose (e.g., a conveyance, settlement, etc.) is, by mutual mistake, so framed as not to express the real intention of the parties, an action may be brought to have it rectified.

Rectitudo /rektyodow/. Lat. Right or justice; legal dues; tribute or payment.

Recto, breve de /brivydi de rekto/. A common law writ of right, which was of so high a nature that as other writs in real actions were only to recover the possession of the land, etc., in question, this aimed to recover the seisin and the property, and thereby both the rights of possession and property were tried together.

Recto de advocatione ecclesiae /rektoy di advokayshiyowin akliyziy/. A writ which lay at common law, where a man had right of advowson of a church, and, the parson dying, a stranger had presented.

Recto de custodia terae et heredis /rektoy di kastowiye tehtiy et harlydas/. A writ of right of ward of the land and heir. Abolished.

Recto de dote /rektoy di dowy/. A writ of right of dower, which lay for a widow who had received part of her dower, and demanded the residue, against the heir of the husband or his guardian. Abolished.

Recto de dote unde nihil habet /rektoy di dowyti aniidi nayishol hebay/. A writ of right of dower where of the widow had nothing, which lay where her deceased husband, having divers lands or tenements, had assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby was driven to sue for her thirds against the heirs or his guardian. Abolished.

Recto de rationabili parte /rektoy di reshaneybalay partyi/. A writ of right, of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood; as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee-simple.

Reditus succus /rêdâtas sikas/. Rent seek (q.v.).

Red lights ahead doctrine. Under this doctrine, third party obtaining securities is required to investigate only under exceptional circumstances which arise when a party to a transaction has knowledge that some fact or facts exist with respect to transaction which would prevent action by commercially honest men for whom law is made. Thomes v. Atkins, D.C.Minn., 52 F.Supp. 405, 410.

Redlining. Term used to refer to a pattern of discrimination in which financial institutions refuse to make mortgage loans, regardless of credit record of the applicant, on properties in specified areas because of alleged deteriorating conditions. At one time, lenders actually outlined these areas with a red pencil. Such practice violates federal laws. 12 U.S.C. § 2801 et seq. Such practice also includes a discriminatory failure or refusal to provide property insurance on dwellings. Dunn v. Midwestern Indem. Mid-American Fire and Cas. Co., D.C.Ohio, 472 F.Supp. 1106, 1110.

Redmans. In feudal law, men who, by the tenure or custom of their lands, were to ride with or for the lord of the manor, about his business.

Red tape. In a derivative sense, order carried to fastidious excess; system run out into trivial extremes. Term commonly refers to excessive bureaucracy.

Redubbbers /rêydbôborz/. In old English law, those who bought stolen cloth and dyed it of another color to prevent its being identified were anciently so called.

Reduced to practice. Invention which has been "reduced to practice" is an invention which has been sufficiently tested to demonstrate that it will work for its intended purpose. General Elec. Co. v. U.S., 654 F.2d 55, 60, 228 Ct.Cl. 192.

Reductio ad absurdum /rêdôksh(î)yow âd absîrdam/. Lat. In logic, the method of disproving an argument by showing that it leads to an absurd consequence.

Reduction into possession. The act of exercising the right conferred by a chose in action, so as to convert it. into a chose in possession; thus, a debt is reduced into possession by payment.

Reduction to possession. Conversion of a right existing as a claim into actual custody and enjoyment. Newell v. McLaughlin, 126 Conn. 138, 9 A.2d 815, 819.

Reduction to practice. As respects priority of invention for purposes of patentability is accomplished when inventor's conception is embodied in such form as to render it capable of practical and successful use. Pyrene-Minimax Corporation v. Palmer, 67 App.D.C. 33, 89 F.2d 505, 510. But device need not be perfect or commercial success. Pierson v. Beck, Cust. & Pat.App., 40 F.2d 769, 770.

Redundancy. Introducing superfluous matter into a legal instrument; particularly the insertion in a pleading of matters foreign, extraneous, and irrelevant to that which it is intended to answer. In re Wise's Estate, 144 Neb. 273, 13 N.W.2d 146, 151. Redundant matter in pleadings may be ordered stricken on motion. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Re-enact. To enact again; to revive.

Re-enactment rule. If the legislature enacts again a statute which had long continued executive construction by an agency, it can be said that the legislature has adopted that construction.

Re-entry. The act of resuming the possession of lands or tenements in pursuance of a right which party exercising it reserved to himself when he quit his former possession. The right reserved by a grantor to enter the premises on breach of a condition of the conveyance. See also Repossession.

Reeve /'rɪv/. An ancient English officer of justice inferior in rank to an alderman. He was a ministerial officer appointed to execute process, keep the King's peace, and put the laws in execution. He witnessed all contracts and bargains, brought offenders to justice and delivered them to punishment, took bail for such as were to appear at the county court, and presided at the court or folcmote. He was also called gerefa.

There were several kinds of reeves, as, the shire-gerefa, shire-reeve or sheriff; the heh-gerefa, or high-sheriff; tithing-reeve, burghor or borough-reeve.

Land reeve. See Land.

Re-examination. An examination of a witness after a cross-examination, upon matters arising out of such cross-examination.

Re-exchange. The damages or expenses caused by the dishonor and protest of a bill of exchange in a foreign country, where it was payable, and by its return to the place where it was drawn or indorsed, and its being there taken up.

Re-export. The act of exporting a product which has been imported and left relatively unchanged in form before exporting again.

Re-extent. In old English practice, a second extent made upon lands or tenements, upon complaint made that the former extent was partially performed.

Re. fa. lo. /'rɪf ʃɪ lə/-. The abbreviation of "recordari facias loquelam," (q.v.).

Refere /'rɪfər/. To bereave, take away, rob.

Reflection /'rɪfɛkʃən/. In the civil law, reparation; re-establishment of a building.

Refer. When a case or action involves matters of account or other intricate details which require minute examination, and for that reason are not fit to be brought before a jury, it is common to refer the whole case, or some part of it, to the decision of an auditor, master, or referee, and the case is then said to be referred. See Referee; Reference.

Taking this word in its strict, technical use, it relates to a mode of determining questions which is distinguished from "arbitration," in that the latter word imports submission of a controversy without any lawsuit having been brought, while "reference" imports a lawsuit pending, and an issue framed or question raised which (and not the controversy itself) is sent out. Thus, arbitration is resorted to instead of any judicial proceeding; while reference is one mode of decision employed in the course of a judicial proceeding.

To point, allude, direct, or make reference to. This is the use of the word in conveyancing and in literature, where a word or sign introduced for the purpose of directing the reader's attention to another place in the deed, book, document, etc., is said to "refer" him to such other connection.

Referee. A person to whom a cause pending in a court is referred by the court, to take testimony, hear the parties, and report thereon to the court. Person who is appointed by court to exercise certain judicial powers, to take testimony, to hear parties, and report his findings. Department of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court for Los Angeles County, 271 Cal.App.2d 770, 76 Cal.Rptr. 804, 806. He is an officer exercising judicial powers, and is an arm of the court for a specific purpose. Segal v. Jackson, 183 Misc. 460, 48 N.Y.S.2d 877, 879. Similar functions are performed by auditors, assessors, or masters (q.v.). See Fed.R.Civil P. 53. See also Magistrate; Master; Reference.

Referee in bankruptcy. An officer appointed by the courts of bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 (11 U.S.C.A. § 1) corresponding to the "registers in bankruptcy" under earlier statutes having administrative and quasi-judicial functions under the bankruptcy law, and whose functions and powers were to administer proceedings under the federal Bankruptcy Act (q.v.). Such referees (called "bankruptcy judges" after 1973) were abolished by the 1978 Bankruptcy Code; their functions now being performed by Bankruptcy Court judges.

Reference. The act of referring a case to a referee, auditor, or master to find facts and submit report to the court. The document by which the reference is made. Fed.R.Civ. P. 53. See also Master; Referee.

In contracts, an agreement to submit to arbitration; the act of parties in submitting their controversy to chosen referees or arbitrators.

A person who will provide information for you about your character, credit, etc. The act of sending or directing one person to another, for information or advice as to the character, solvency, standing, etc., of a third person, who desires to open business relations with the first, or to obtain credit with him.

Reference in case of need. When a person draws or indorses a bill of exchange, he sometimes adds the name of a person to whom it may be presented "in case of need," i.e., in case it is dishonored by the original drawee or acceptor.

Reference statutes. Statutes which refer to other statutes and make them applicable to the subject of legislation. Their object is to incorporate into the act of which they are a part the provisions of other statutes by reference and adoption. State ex rel. School Dist. of Kansas City v. Lee, 334 Mo. 513, 66 S.W.2d 521.

Referendarius /referend(ā)rius/. An officer by whom the order of causes was laid before the Roman emperor, the desires or petitioners made known, and answers returned to them.

Referendary /refer(ā)nd(ā)rē/. In Saxon law, a master of requests; an officer to whom petitions to the king were referred.

Referendo singula singulis /reférêndō sig(y)las sig(y)las/. Lat. Referring individual or separate words to separate subjects; making a distributive reference of words in an instrument; a rule of construction.

Referendum /refērēndəm/. The process of referring to the electorate for approval a proposed new state constitution or amendment (constitutional referendum) or of a law passed by the legislature (statutory referendum). Right constitutionally reserved to people of state, or local subdivision thereof, to have submitted for their approval or rejection, under prescribed conditions, any law or part of law passed by lawmaking body. Anne Arundel County v. McDonough, 277 Md. 271, 354 A.2d 788, 796. Not all state constitutions make provision for referendum process. See also Initiative; Plebiscite; Proposition.

In international law, a communication sent by a diplomatic representative to his home government, in regard to matters presented to him which he is unable or unwilling to decide without further instructions.

Refinance. To finance again or anew; to pay off existing debts with funds secured from new debt; to extend the maturity date and/or increase the amount of an existing debt; to arrange for a new payment schedule.

The discharge of an obligation with funds acquired through the creation of a new debt, often at a different interest rate. See also Debt adjustment; Recapitalization.

Reform. To correct, rectify, amend, remodel. Instruments inter partes may be reformed, when defective, by a court. By this is meant that the court, after ascertaining the real and original intention of the parties to a deed or other instrument (which intention they failed to sufficiently express, through some error, mistake of fact, or inadvertence), will decree that the instrument be held and construed as if it fully and technically expressed that intention. See also Reformation.

Reformation. A court-ordered correction of a written instrument to cause it to reflect the true intentions of the parties. Equitable remedy used to reframe written contracts to reflect accurately real agreement between contracting parties when, either through mutual mistake or unilateral mistake coupled with actual or equitable fraud by other party, the writing does not embody contract as actually made. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. v. Russell, C.A.Kan., 402 F.2d 339, 344.

If by mistake of fact as to the contents of a written agreement or conveyance, or by mistake of law as to its legal effect, the writing does not conform to the agreement of the parties to it, the writing can be reformed to accord with the agreement. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 8D.

Reformation means doing over to bring about a better result, correction or rectification. Tuel v. Gladden, 234 Or. 1, 379 P.2d 553, 555.

See also Reform.

Reformatory. A penal institution for youthful offenders where the emphasis is on reformation of the juvenile’s behavior.

Refreshing recollection. See Recollection; Recorded past recollection; Refreshing the memory.

Refreshing the memory. The act of a witness who consults his documents, memoranda, or books, to bring more distinctly to his recollection the details of past events or transactions, concerning which he is testifying. See Fed.Evid.R. 612. See also Past recollection recorded; Recollection; Recorded past recollection.

Refund, n. As generally referred to in connection with income taxes, is the amount a taxpayer or reporting entity would receive from the government due to an overpayment of taxes. See also Rebate.

Refund, v. To repay or restore; to return money in restitution or repayment; e.g. to refund overpaid taxes; to refund purchase price of returned goods. See also Rebate; Refund claim; Refunds.

To fund again or anew; specifically, finance, to borrow, usually by the sale of bonds, in order to pay off an existing loan with the proceeds. Street Improvement Dist. No. 315 v. Arkansas Highway Commission, 190 Ark. 1045, 83 S.W.2d 81, 82. See also Recapitalization; Refinance.
Refund claim. A request directed to the Internal Revenue Service for repayment (i.e., refund) of taxes overpaid.

Refunding. Type of refinancing (q.v.) in which the issuer of bonds replaces outstanding bonds with a new issue. In general, any act of repayment of a loan or money advanced. See also Recapitalization; Refinance.

Refunding bond. A bond which replaces or pays off outstanding bond which holder surrenders in exchange for new security. Fore v. Alabama State Bridge Corporation, 242 Ala. 455, 6 So.2d 508, 512. Also a bond given to an executor by a legatee, upon receiving payment of the legacy, conditioned to refund the same, or so much of it as may be necessary, if the assets prove deficient.

Refunds. Money received by the government or its officers which, for any cause, are to be refunded or restored to the parties paying them; such as excessive duties or taxes, duties paid on goods destroyed by accident, duties received on goods which are re-exported, etc. See also Rebate; Refund.

Refusal. The act of one who has, by law, a right and power of having or doing something of advantage, and declines it. Also, the declaration of a request or demand, or the omission to comply with some requirement of law, as the result of a positive intention to disobey. In the latter sense, the word is often coupled with "neglect," as if a party shall "neglect or refuse" to pay a tax, file an official bond, obey an order of court, etc. But "neglect" signifies a mere omission of a duty, which may happen through inattention, dilatoriness, mistake, or inability to perform, while "refusal" implies the positive denial of an application or command, or at least a mental determination not to comply. A rejection, a denial of what is asked. Board of Public Instruction of Palm Beach County, Fla. v. Cohen, C.A.Fla., 413 F.2d 1201, 1203. See also Rejection; Renunciation; Repudiation; Rescind.

Refuse, v. /refyúwz/. To deny, decline, reject. "Fail" is distinguished from "refuse" in that "refuse" involves an act of the will, while "fail" may be an act of inevitable necessity. Maestas v. American Metal Co. of New Mexico, 37 N.M. 203, 20 P.2d 924, 928.

Refuse, n. /refyúws/. That which is refused or rejected as useless or worthless. Worthless matter, rubbish, scum, leavings. In statute prohibiting discharge into navigable waters of refuse, "refuse" includes all foreign substances and pollutants other than liquid sewage. U. S. v. Kennebec Log-Driving Co., D.C.Me., 399 F.Supp. 754, 757.

Refutantia /refyúwtánsh(ə)yə/. In old English law, an acquittance or acknowledgment of renouncing all future claim.

Regale episcoporum /regéyli y apiskaporam/. The temporal rights and privileges of a bishop.

Regalia /regéyl(i)ya/. An abbreviation of "jura regalia," royal rights, or those rights which a King or Queen has by virtue of his or her prerogative, comprising: power of judicature; power of life and death; power of war and peace; masterless goods; assessments; minting of money. Owners of counties palatine were formerly said to have "jura regalia" in their counties as fully as the king in his palace. 1 Bl.Comm. 117. The term is sometimes used in the same sense in the Spanish law.

Also, the crown, sceptre and jewels used at a coronation.

Regalia facere /regéyl(i)ya fásorīy/. To do homage or fealty to the sovereign by a bishop when he is invested with the regalia.

Regard. In old English law, inspection; supervision. Also a reward, fee, or perquisite.

Regardant /ragárdant/. A term which was applied, in feudal law, to a villein annexed to a manor, and having charge to do all base services within the same, and to see the same freed from all things that might annoy his lord. Such a villein regardant was thus opposed to a villein en gros, who was transferable by deed from one owner to another.

Regarder of a forest. In old English law, an ancient officer of the forest, whose duty it was to take a view of the forest hunts, and to inquire concerning trespasses, offenses, etc.

Regard of the forest. In old English law, the oversight or inspection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice-seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs.

Rege inconstulo /riyjiy inkansiltow/. Lat. In old English law, a writ issued from the sovereign to the judges, not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until advised.

Regency. Rule; government; kingship; office or government of regent, or body of regents, during rule of regent. The man or body of men intrusted with the vicarious government of a kingdom during the minority, absence, insanity, or other disability of the King.

Regent. A governor or ruler. One who vicariously administers the government of a kingdom, in the name of the king, during the latter's minority or other disability.

A master, governor, director, or superintendent of a public institution, particularly a college or university. Board of Regents is the governing body of a state university or college system.

In the canon law, it signifies a master or professor of a college.

Regia dignitas est indivisibilis, et qualibet alia derivativa dignitas est similiter indivisibilis /riyj(i)yə dignıtäs ést indovazibálæs êt kwíjyäbэт éyli Lýə Regicide /řeːˈdɪsɪd/. The murder of a sovereign; also the person who commits such murder.

Regidor /rɛˈhiːdɔr/. In Spanish law, one of a body, called "capitulares."

Regime /rɛˈziːm/. In French law, a system of rules or regulations.

Regime dotal /rɛzhiːm dɔtɔl/. The dot, being the property which the wife brings to the husband as her contribution to the support of the burdens of the marriage, and which may either extend as well to future as to present property, or be expressly confined to the present property of the wife, is subject to certain regulations which are summarized in the phrase "régime dotal." The husband has the entire administration during the marriage; but, as a rule, where the dot consists of immovables, neither the husband nor the wife, nor both of them together, can either sell or mortgage it. The dot is returnable upon the dissolution of the marriage, whether by death or otherwise.

Régime en communauté /rɛzhiːm oʊˈkɑmənɑˈtʁi/. The community of interests between husband and wife which arises upon their marriage. It is either (1) legal or (2) conventional, the former existing in the absence of any "agreement" properly so called, and arising from a mere declaration of community; the latter arising from an "agreement," properly so called.

Regimiento /rɛˈhiːmyentɔ/. In Spanish law, the body of regidores, who never exceeded twelve, forming a part of the municipal council, or ayuntamiento, in every capital of a jurisdiction.

Regina /rɛˈdʒiːnə/. Lat. The Queen.

Regio assensus /rɛˈdʒiːoʊ əˈsɛnsəs/. A writ whereby the sovereign gives his assent to the election of a bishop.

Register, v. To record formally and exactly; to enroll; to enter precisely in a list or the like. Los Angeles County v. Craig, 38 Cal.App.2d 58, 100 P.2d 818, 820. To make correspond exactly one with another; to fit correctly in a relative position; to be in correct alignment one with another. Cover v. Schwartz, Cust. & Pat.App., 28 C.C.P.A. 831, 116 F.2d 512, 515. See also Record.

Register, n. An officer authorized by law to keep a record called a "register" or "registry."

A book of public facts such as births, deaths and marriages (also called a registry), or the public official who keeps such book. Other examples of public record books are the register of patents (a list of all patents granted) and the register of ships (kept by customs). Other examples of public record keeping officials are the register of copyrights, register of deeds (land records) and the register of wills (clerk of probate court). They are often called "Recorder" or "Registrar."

See also Federal Register.

Registered. Entered or recorded in some official register or record or list.

Registered bond. A bond entered on the books of the issuing corporation or of its transfer agent in the name of the purchaser, whose name also appears on the face of the bonds. Either principal alone or both principal and interest may be registered.

A bond the number of which is recorded by the seller in the name of the purchaser and which only the latter, or one legally authorized to act for him, can redeem. Principal of such a bond and interest, if registered as to interest, is paid to the owner listed on the books of the issuer, as opposed to a bearer bond where the possessor of the bond is entitled to interest and principal.

The bonds of the United States government (and of many municipal and private corporations) are either registered or "coupon bonds." In the case of a registered bond, the name of the owner or lawful holder is entered in a register or record, and it is not negotiable or transferable except by an entry on the register, and checks or warrants are sent to the registered holder for the successive installments of interest as they fall due. A bond with interest coupons attached is transferable by mere delivery, and the coupons are payable, as due, to the person who shall present them for payment. But the bond issues of many private corporations now provide that the individual bonds "may be registered as to principal," leaving the interest coupons payable to bearer, or that they may be registered as to both principal and interest, at the option of the holder.

Registered check. A check purchased by a person at a bank and drawn on funds of the bank that have been specially set aside to cover the check, though not certified by the bank; loosely called a money order. Compare Money order.

Registered mail. Type of special mailing privilege given by the U.S. Postal Service for an extra fee and which provides insurance of its delivery up to certain amount.

Registered representative. A person who has met the qualifications set by law or regulations (of e.g. SEC and New York Stock Exchange) to sell securities to the public.

Registered securities. See Registered bond; Registered stock; Registration of securities; Registration statement.

Registered stock. Stock issue that has been registered with Securities and Exchange Commission as a new issue or secondary offering. 15 U.S.C.A. § 77c et seq. See also Registration of securities; Registration statement.
Registered tonnage. The registered tonnage of a vessel is the capacity or cubical contents of the ship, or the amount of weight which she will carry, as ascertained in some proper manner and entered on an official register or record.

Registered trademark. A trademark filed in the United States Patent and Trademark office, with the necessary description and other statements required by the act of congress, and duly recorded, securing its exclusive use to the person causing it to be registered. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1051. See Trademark.

Registered voters. Persons whose names are placed upon the registration books provided by law as the record or memorial of the duly qualified voters of the state or county. See also Councillor.

Register in bankruptcy. An officer of the courts of bankruptcy, under the earlier acts of congress having substantially the same powers and duties as the "referees in bankruptcy" under the Act of 1898 (11 U.S.C. A.). See Referee in bankruptcy.

Register of deeds. The name given in some states to the officer whose duty is to record deeds, mortgages, and other instruments affecting realty in the official books provided and kept for that purpose; also commonly called "registrar" or "recorder" of deeds.

Register of land office. Formerly, a federal officer appointed for each federal land district, to take charge of the local records and attend to the preliminary matters connected with the sale, preemption, or other disposal of the public lands within the district.

Register of ships. A register kept by the collectors of customs, in which the names, ownership, and other facts relative to merchant vessels are required by law to be entered. This register is evidence of the nationality and privileges of an American ship. The certificate of such registration, given by the collector to the owner or master of the ship, is also called the ship's register.

Register of the Treasury. An officer of the United States Treasury, whose duty is to keep all accounts of the receipt and expenditure of public money and of debts due to or from the United States, to preserve adjusted accounts with vouchers and certificates, to record warrants drawn upon the treasury, to sign and issue government securities, and take charge of the registry of vessels under United States laws. 31 U.S.C. A. § 161.

Register of wills. An officer in some of the states, whose function is to record and preserve all wills admitted to probate, to issue letters testamentary or of administration, to receive and file accounts of executors, etc., and generally to act as the clerk of the probate court.

Registrar's court. A court, formerly in the state of Pennsylvania which had jurisdiction in matters of probate. See Orphan's Courts.

Registrant. One who registers; particularly, one who registers anything (e.g., a trademark) for the purpose of securing a right or privilege granted by law on condition of such registration.

Registrar /réjeistraør/. An officer who has the custody and charge of keeping of a registry or register. Person in educational institution in charge of registering students for enrollment, maintaining academic records, etc. Person in hospital responsible for admitting of patients.

An agent, usually a bank or trust company, appointed by a corporation to keep records of the names of bond and stockholders and distributions of earnings. See Registration of securities.

Registrarius /réjestrar(i)as/. In old English law, a notary; a registrar or register.

Registrar of deeds. A term used in some states to describe the person in charge of records instruments affecting land title. Also commonly called a recorder or register (q.v.).

Registration. Recording; enrolling; inserting in an official register. Enrollment, as registration of voters, registration for school, etc. The act of making a list, catalogue, schedule, or register, particularly of an official character, or of making entries therein.

Any schedule containing a list of voters, the being upon which constitutes a prerequisite to vote.

Land. System by which owner of real property may petition court for certificate of title by which state certifies such title as being in the owner whose name appears on certificate of title. See, e.g., Mass.G.L. c. 185, §§ 26 et seq. See also Torrens title system.

Registration of securities. Recording in the official books of the company of the name and address of the holder of each bond or certificate of stock, with the date of its issue, and, in the case of a transfer of stock from one holder to another, the names of both parties and such other details as will identify the transaction and preserve an official record of its essential facts. Such information is required for paying of dividends, mailing of proxies, annual reports, etc.

Statutory procedure requiring the filing with the S.E.C. of various documents including a prospectus in order for securities to be publicly offered. Clearance must be obtained from the S.E.C. before the securities may be sold. There is no ceiling relative to the number of shares or dollar amount that may be registered. 15 U.S.C. § 77f et seq. See also Registered stock; Registration statement; Regulation A; Shelf registration.

Registration statement. Document required by the Securities Act of 1933 of most companies wishing to issue securities to the public or by the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 of a company wishing to have its securities traded in public markets. The statement discloses financial data, purpose of securities offering, and other items of interest to potential investors. Such statements must be submitted to and approved by the SEC. 15 U.S.C.A. § 77f et seq. See Letter of comment; Prospectus; Registration of securities; Regulation A.
Registry. A register, or book authorized or recognized by law, kept for the recording or registration of facts or documents.

The list or record of ships subject to the maritime regulations of a particular country. The listing of a vessel at a custom house under the name of the country whose flag it flies, though such flag is not necessarily indicative of the nationality of the owner. Generally, "registry" applies to vessels in foreign commerce, whereas "enrollment" refers to coastwise navigation. R. C. Craig Limited v. Ships of Sea Inc., D.C.Ga., 345 F.Supp. 1066, 1070.

Registry of deeds. See Register of deeds; Registrar of deeds.

Regnal years /regnal yirz/. Statutes of the British parliament are usually cited by the name and year of the sovereign in whose reign they were enacted, and the successive years of the reign of any king or queen are denominated the "regnal years." Since 1683, acts of Parliament have been numbered by the calendar year without reference to the regnal year.

Regnant /regnant/. One having authority as a king; one in the exercise of royal authority.

Reg. Orig. An abbreviation of "Registrum Originalis," the register of original writs.

Regrant /regrant/. In the English law of real property, when, after a person has made a grant, the property granted comes back to him (e.g., by escheat or forfeiture), and he grants it again, he is said to regrant it. The phrase is chiefly used in the law of copyholds.

Regrating. In old English law, the offense of buying or getting into one's hands at a fair or market any provisions, corn, or other dead victual, with the intention of selling the same again in the same fair or market, or in some other within four miles thereof, at a higher price. The offender was termed a "regrator."

Regress. To return, go back or re-enter. Used principally in the phrase "free entry, egress, and regress" but it is also used to signify the reentry of a person who has been disseised of land.

Regressive tax. A tax levied at rates which increase less rapidly than the increase of the tax base, thus bearing more heavily on poorer taxpayers. Tax for which the rate decreases as the taxed base, such as income, increases. Compare Progressive tax.

Regs. An abbreviation for U.S. Treasury Department Regulations. See Regulations.
A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnoses, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. Fed.Evid.R. 803(6); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1732. See Business entry rule.

For purposes of the Uniform Business Records Act, "regular course of business" means in the inherent nature of the business in question, and in the method systematically employed for the conduct of the business as a business. Missouri Valley Walnut Co. v. Snider, Mo.App., 569 S.W.2d 324, 328.

In commercial law, a requirement for due negotiation of a document of title that limits U.C.C. Article 7’s good-faith-purchase protection to normal and usual mercantile dealings in the trade.

Term is also descriptive of sales which are ordinarily made by a business in contrast to a bulk sale.

Regular entries. Entries made in books of account in regular course of business. See also Regular course of business.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda /régýlarité nnon véelät péktam diy ré miy nnon éýiyománda/. It is a rule that a compact not to alienate my property is not binding.

Regularly /régýlarilý/. At fixed and certain intervals, regular in point of time. In accordance with some consistent or periodical rule or practice.

Regular on its face. Process is "regular on its face" when it proceeds from a court, officer, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature, and is legal in form and contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise any one that it is issued without authority.

Regular use. Term, for purposes of exclusionary language of automobile liability policy excluding coverage where automobile was "furnished for regular use," is defined as continuous use, uninterrupted normal use for all purposes, without limitation as to use, and customary use as opposed to occasional use or special use. Central Sec. Mut. Ins. Co. v. DePinto, 9 Kan.App.2d 85, 673 P.2d 122, 124.

Regulate. To fix, establish, or control; to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. The power of Congress to regulate commerce is the power to enact all appropriate legislation for its protection or advancement; to adopt measures to promote its growth and insure its safety; to foster, protect, control, and restrain. Virginian Ry. Co. v. System Federation No. 40, Railway Employees Department of American Federation of Labor, C.C.A.Va., 84 F.2d 641, 650. It is also power to prescribe rule by which commerce is to be governed, and embraces prohibitory regulations. United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 61 S.Ct. 451, 456, 85 L.Ed. 609. Regulate means to govern or direct according to rule or to bring under control of constituted authority, to limit and prohibit, to arrange in proper order, and to control that which already exists. Farmington River Co. v. Town Plan and Zoning Commission of Town of Farmington, 25 Conn.Sup. 125, 197 A.2d 653, 660.

Regulation. The act of regulating; a rule or order prescribed for management or government; a regulating principle; a precept. Rule of order prescribed by superior or competent authority relating to action of those under its control. Regulation is rule or order having force of law issued by executive authority of government (e.g. by federal administrative agency). State ex rel. Villines v. Freeman, Okl., 370 P.2d 307, 309. See Regulations.

Regulation J. Administrative rules issued by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System governing the collection of checks and transfer of funds, directly or indirectly, through federal Reserve Banks.

Regulation T. Securities and Exchange Commission regulation governing extension of credit by securities brokers to customers. See Margin account.

Regulation charge. Charge exacted for privilege or as condition precedent to carrying on business. See also Privilege (Privilege tax).

Regulation of an executive department. The general rules relating to the subject on which a department acts, made by the head of the department under some act of Congress conferring power to make such regulations, and thereby give to them the force of law. State ex rel. Kaser v. Leonard, 164 Or. 579, 102 P.2d 197.

Regulations. Such are issued by various governmental departments to carry out the intent of the law. Agencies issue regulations to guide the activity of those regulated by the agency and of their own employees and to ensure uniform application of the law. Regulations are not the work of the legislature and do not have the effect of law in theory. In practice, however, because of the intricacies of judicial review of administrative action, regulations can have an important effect in determining the outcome of cases involving regulatory activity. United States Government regulations appear first in the Federal Register, published five days a week, and are subsequently arranged by subject in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Treasury Regulations. Treasury Department Regulations (abbr. "Treas. Regs.") represent the position of the Internal Revenue Service as to how the Internal Revenue Code is to be interpreted. Their purpose is to provide taxpayers and I.R.S. personnel with rules of general and specific application to the various provisions of the tax law. Such regulations are published in the Federal Register and in tax services.

Truth-in-Lending Act. See Regulation Z.

Rehabilitation agency. See Administrative agency.

Rehabilitation. Investing or clothing again with some right, authority, or dignity. Restoring person or thing to a former capacity; reinstating; qualifying again. In re Coleman, D.C.Ky., 21 F.Supp. 923, 924, 925. Restoration of individual to his greatest potential, whether physically, mentally, socially, or vocationally. Jones v. Grinnell Corp., 117 R.I. 44, 362 A.2d 139, 143. For rehabilitation of debtor, see Bankruptcy proceedings; Wage earner's plan.

Alimony. Term "rehabilitative alimony" contemplates sums necessary to assist a divorced person in regaining a useful and constructive role in society through vocational or therapeutic training or retraining and for the further purpose of preventing financial hardship on society or individual during the rehabilitative process. Sever v. Sever, Fla.App., 467 So.2d 492, 494.

Corporation. Attempt to conserve and administer assets of insolvent corporation in hope of its eventual return from financial stress to solvency. In re Title & Mortgage Guarantee Co. of Buffalo, 152 Misc. 428, 274 N.Y.S. 270. Contemplates continuance of corporate life and activities, and its effort to restore and reinstate corporation to former condition of successful operation and solvency. New York Title & Mortgage Co. v. Friedman, 153 Misc. 697, 276 N.Y.S. 72. See Bankruptcy Code, Ch. 11 (11 U.S.C.A.). See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Receivership; Reorganization.

Witness. After cross examination, a witness whose credibility has suffered may be examined again (redirect examination) to improve his standing with the trier of fact in matters covered on cross examination. This process is called "rehabilitation" of the witness. See Fed.R.Evid. 608(a).

Rehearing. Second consideration of cause for purpose of calling to court's or administrative board's attention any error, omission, or oversight in first consideration. A retrial of issues which presumess notice to parties entitled thereto and opportunity for them to be heard. Yee v. State Board of Equalization of California, 16 Cal.App.2d 417, 60 P.2d 322, 323. Reconsideration of a case by the same court in which the original determination was made. Kerr-McGee Nuclear Corp. v. New Mexico Environmental Imp. Bd., App., 97 N.M. 85, 637 P.2d 38, 46. Administrative decisions and determinations in social security cases may be reopened for "good cause" and other specified grounds. See also Rearrangement; Retrial; Trial (Triad de novo).

Rehypothecation /riyayhpóò/kéyeshan/. To pledge to another or to transfer to another a note, goods, or other collateral which have been already pledged; e.g. a broker may pledge securities pledged to him by a customer (under e.g. a margin account) to finance his borrowings from a bank.

Reif /riyf/. A robbery.

Reification. The embodiment of a right to the payment of money in an instrument so that transfer of the instrument transfers also the right. The term can also refer generally to the embodiment of any other property in a writing, which writing represents the property.

Rei interventus /riyay intervénonts/. Lat. Things intervening: that is, things done by one of the parties to a contract, in the faith of its validity, and with the assent of the other party, and which have so affected his situation that the other will not be allowed to repudiate his obligation, although originally it was imperfect.

Reimburse. To pay back, to make restoration, to repay that expended; to indemnify, or make whole. Los Angeles County v. Frisbie, 19 Cal.2d 634, 122 P.2d 526. See also Restitution.

Reimbursement. With respect to a surety, the common-law right to get indemnity, or otherwise recoup, from the principal debtor the value of the surety's performance in satisfying the principal debtor's duty. Also refers to the right of an issuer of a letter of credit to recoup from its customer upon duly honoring the credit.

Reincorporation. A new incorporation of a business which had already been incorporated. Also, a new incorporation of a document by reference which had previously been incorporated by reference but subsequently disassociated.

Reinstall. To reinstall; to reestablish; to place again in a former state, condition, or office; to restore to a state or position from which the object or person had been removed. Lowry v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 505, 507.

Reinstall a case. To place case again in same position as before dismissal. United States v. Green, C.C.A. Mont., 107 F.2d 19, 22.

Reinstatement. In insurance, a restoration of the insured's rights under a policy which has lapsed or been cancelled. To reinstate a policy holder or one who has allowed his policy to lapse does not mean new insurance or taking out a new policy, but does mean that the insured has been restored to all the benefits accruing to him under the policy contract, the original policy. See also Reinstatement.

Reinsurance. A contract by which an insurer procures a third person to insure him against loss or liability by reason of original insurance. A contract that one insurer makes with another to protect the latter from a risk already assumed. It binds the reinsurer to pay to the reinsured the whole loss sustained in respect to the subject of the insurance to the extent to which he is reinsured. Also the substitution, with the consent of the insured, of a second insurer for the first, so that the original insurer is released.

An agreement to indemnify the assured, partially or altogether, against a risk assumed by it in policy issued.
REINSURANCE

Related. Standing in relation; connected; allied; akin. Nowland Realty Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.7, 47 F.2d 1018, 1021. Goods are "related" for trademark purposes if they are used in conjunction with one another or are associated together in some way in the minds of the consuming public. Alfred Dunhill of London, Inc. v. Kasser Distillers Products Corp., D.C.Pa., 350 F.Supp. 1341, 1352. See also Relative.

Related claim. Related claims may be joined under Fed.R.Civil P. 18(a). Within statute permitting joining of claim for unfair competition with substantial and related claim under patent laws is claim resting on substantially identical facts. Lyon v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Ill., 200 F.Supp. 89, 91.

Related goods. Courts will find trademark infringement in cases where the goods sold by the defendant and the mark owner do not directly compete, if the goods are related. Goods are considered related if consumers would assume that, when marked with the same trademark, they come from a common source or are sponsored by the same party.

Related party transactions. The tax law places restrictions upon the recognition of gains and losses between related parties due to the potential for abuse. For example, restrictions are placed upon the deduction of losses from the sale or exchange of property between related parties. A related party includes a corporation which is controlled by the taxpayer. I.R.C. § 267.

Related proceedings. As used in bankruptcy context are those civil proceedings, that, in absence of petition in bankruptcy court, could have been brought in federal district court or state court. Hotel Corp. of the South v. Rampart 920, Inc., D.C.La., 46 B.R. 758, 769. A "related proceeding" must in some way relate to the administration of the bankrupt estate; there must be some reason why adjudication of the claim is better placed with the bankruptcy court as opposed to a state court. In re American Energy, Inc., Bktcy.N.D., 50 B.R. 175, 179. See also Core proceeding.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum /raleyəsh(y)əw èst fiksh(ə)yəw jůras èt antəntə ad yůwnəm/. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing.

The words "relatives" and "relations," in their primary sense, are broad enough to include any one connected by blood or affinity, even to the remotest degree, but where used in wills, as defining and determining legal succession, are construed to include only those persons who are entitled to share in the estate as next of kin under the statute of distributions.

The connection of two persons, or their situation with respect to each other, who are associated, whether by the law, by their own agreement, or by kinship, in some social status or union for the purposes of domestic life; as the relation of guardian and ward, husband and wife, master and servant, parent and child; so in the phrase "domestic relations."

The doctrine of "relation" is that principle by which an act done at one time is considered by a fiction of law to have been done at some antecedent period. It is usually applied where several proceedings are essential.
to complete a particular transaction, such as a conveyance or deed. The last proceeding which consummates the conveyance is held for certain purposes to take effect by relation as of the day when the first proceeding was had. Knapp v. Alexander-Edgar Lumber Co., 237 U.S. 162, 35 S.Ct. 515, 517, 59 L.Ed. 894; U. S. v. Anderson, 194 U.S. 394, 24 S.Ct. 716, 48 L.Ed. 1035. See also Relation back.

A recital, account, narrative of facts; information given. Thus, suits by quo warranto are entitled "on the relation of" a private person, who is called the "relator." But in this connection the word seems also to involve the idea of the suggestion, instigation, or instance of the relator. See also Blood relations; Kin or kindred; Next of kin; Relative.

Relation back. General rule of "relation back" is that a pleading may not be amended to allege a new or different claim or defense unless it arose out of, or is based on or related to, claim, transaction or occurrence originally set forth or attempted to be set forth. Harastej v. Reliable Car Rental, Inc., D.C. Puerto Rico, 58 F.R.D. 197, 198. See also Amended pleadings, below. A principle that an act done today is considered to have been done at an earlier time. A document held in escrow and finally delivered is deemed to have been delivered as of the time at which it was escrowed. See Ex post facto.

Amended pleadings. Whenever the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading, the amendment relates back to the date of the original pleading. Fed.R.Civ. P. 15(c).

Relations. A term which, in its widest sense, includes all the kindred of the person spoken of.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio /reláysh(í)yow sémpar fáysh ut váléysh dispáysh(í)yow/. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail.

Relative. A kinsman; a person connected with another by blood or affinity. When used generically, includes persons connected by ties of affinity as well as consanguinity, and, when used with a restrictive meaning, refers to those only who are connected by blood.

Individual related by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree as determined by the common law, or individual in a step or adoptive relationship within such third degree. Bankruptcy Code, § 101. A person or thing having relation or connection with some other person or thing; as, relative rights, relative powers, infra. See also Relation.

Relative convenience doctrine. Equity may refuse an injunction or other equitable relief if the inconvenience to one party is great while to the other party there is little or no inconvenience. Duke v. Crossfield, 241 Mo. App. 579, 240 S.W.2d 180.

Relative fact. In the law of evidence, a fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance.

Relative powers. Those which relate to land; so called to distinguish them from those which are collateral to it.

Relative rights. Those rights of persons which are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other. Those rights of persons in private life which arise from the civil and domestic relations.

Relativorum, cognito uno, cognoscitur et alterum /réltávórom, kógnostów yúnwov, kagnóstov ét óltárom/. Of relatives, one being known, the other is also known.

Relator. An informer. The person upon whose complaint, or at whose instance certain writs are issued such as information or writ of quo warranto, and who is quasi the plaintiff in the proceeding. For example if John Smith is the relator and Jones is the defendant, the citation would read, State ex rel. John Smith v. Jones. A party in interest who is permitted to institute a proceeding in the name of the People or the Attorney General when the right to sue resides solely in that official. Veterans' Industries, Inc., of Long Beach, Cal. v. Lynch, 8 Cal.App.3d 902, 88 Cal.Rptr. 303, 317. See also Ex relations; Parens patriae; Real party in interest.

Relatrix /relátriks/. A female relator or petitioner.

Relaxatio /rélegséysh(í)yow/. In old conveyancing, a release; an instrument by which a person relinquishes to another his right in anything.

Release, v. To discharge a claim one has against another, as for example in a tort case the plaintiff may discharge the liability of the defendant in return for a cash settlement. To lease again or grant new lease. See Accord and satisfaction.

Release, n. A writing or an oral statement manifesting an intention to discharge another from an existing or asserted duty. The relinquishment, concession, or giving up of a right, claim, or privilege, by the person in whom it exists or to whom it accrues, to the person against whom it might have been demanded or enforced. Abandonment of claim to party against whom it exists, and is a surrender of a cause of action and may be gratuitous or for consideration. Melo v. National Fuse & Powder Co., D.C. Colo., 267 F.Supp. 611, 612. Giving up or abandoning of claim or right to person against whom claim exists or against whom right is to be exercised. Adder v. Holman & Moody, Inc., 288 N.C. 484, 219 S.E.2d 190, 195.

A discharge of a debt by act of party, as distinguished from an extinguishment which is a discharge by operation of law, and, in distinguishing release from receipt, "receipt" is evidence that an obligation has been discharged, but "release" is itself a discharge of it. Glickman v. Weston, 140 Or. 117, 11 P.2d 281, 284.

An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means. An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement. A release by operation of law is one which, though not expressly made, the law pre-assumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, the others are also released by operation of law.

Liberation, discharge, or setting free from restraint or confinement. Thus, a man unlawfully imprisoned may obtain his release on habeas corpus. See also Bail.

The abandonment to (or by) a person called as a witness in a suit of his interest in the subject-matter of the controversy, in order to qualify him to testify, under the common-law rule.

A receipt or certificate given by a ward to the guardian, on the final settlement of the latter's accounts, or by any other beneficiary on the termination of the trust administration, relinquishing all and any further rights, claims, or demands, growing out of the trust or incident to it.

In admiralty actions, when a ship, cargo, or other property has been arrested, the owner may obtain its release by giving bail, or paying the value of the property into court.

The conveyance of a person's interest or right which he has in a thing to another that has the possession thereof or some estate therein. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the property, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished.

Conditional release. See that title.

Deed of release. A deed operating by way of release; but more specifically, in those states where deeds of trust are in use instead of common-law mortgages, as a means of pledging real property as security for the payment of a debt, a "deed of release" is a conveyance in fee, executed by the trustee or trustees, to the grantor in the deed of trust, which conveys back to him the legal title to the estate, and which is to be given on satisfactory proof that he has paid the secured debt in full or otherwise complied with the terms of the deed of trust.

Release by way of enlarging an estate. A conveyance of a person's interest or right which he has in a thing to another that has the possession thereof or some estate therein. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the property, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished.

Relevant evidence is such evidence as relates to, or bears directly upon, the point or fact in issue, and proves or has a tendency to prove the proposition alleged; evidence which conduces to prove a pertinent theory in a case. It does not mean evidence addressed with positive directness to the point but that which according to the common course of events either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present or future existence or nonexistence of the other.

Relevancy of evidence refers to its probative value in relation to the purpose for which it is offered. Vine Street Corp. v. City of Council Bluffs, Iowa, 220 N.W.2d 860, 863. Term describes the logical relationship between a proffered item of evidence and a proposition that is material or provable in a given case, U. S. v. Allison, C.A.La., 474 F.2d 286, 289; and means a logical relation between evidence and fact to be established. State v. Whalon, 1 Wash.App. 785, 464 P.2d 730, 735. As used in connection with admission of evidence, means to tend to establish a material proposition. State v. Thurman, App., 84 N.M. 5, 498 P.2d 697, 699.

See also Material evidence; Relevant evidence.

Relevant. See Material; Material evidence; Relevancy; Relevant evidence.

Relevant evidence. Evidence tending to prove or disprove an alleged fact. Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Fed. Evid.R. 401. Evidence is "relevant" if it tends to make existence of material fact more or less probable. City of Seattle v. Boulanger, 37 Wash.App. 357, 680 P.2d 67, 68.

Basic test for admissibility of evidence is relevancy, and testimony is "relevant" if reasonable inferences can be drawn therefrom regarding or if any light is shed upon, a contested matter. State v. Smith, 5 Wash.App. 237, 487 P.2d 227, 229. Evidence is "relevant" not only when it tends to prove or disprove precise fact in issue but when it tends to establish fact from which existence or nonexistence of fact in issue can be directly inferred. People v. Warner, App., 270 C.A.2d 900, 76 Cal.Rptr. 160, 165.

See also Material; Material evidence; Relevancy; Unfair prejudice.

Relevant market. To establish claim of monopolization or of attempt to monopolize under the Sherman Act, plaintiff must define the "relevant market" within which defendant allegedly possesses monopoly power, and such "relevant market" is the geographic market composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for purposes for which they are produced, considering their price, use and quality. Tire Sales Corp. v. Cities Service Oil Co., D.C.Ill., 410 F.Supp. 1222, 1230; U. S. v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 77 S.Ct. 872, 1 L.Ed.2d 1057. Term, in relation to case involving alleged violation of Sherman Act, consists of both a product market and a geographic market. U. S. v. Otter Tail Power Co., D.C.Minn., 331 F.Supp. 54, 58.

It is one in which product effectively competes with functionally equivalent products. Central Chemical Corp. v. Agrico Chemical Co., D.C Md., 531 F.Supp. 533, 549. See also Market.

Reliable. Trustworthy, worthy of confidence.

Reliance. In tort for deceit, it is necessary for plaintiff to prove that he relied on misrepresentation though such misrepresentation need not be the sole or even dominant reason for acting if it was a substantial factor in the plaintiff's decision. For fraud purposes, "reliance" might be defined as a belief which motivates an act. Berry v. Robotka, 9 Ariz.App. 461, 453 P.2d 972, 979.

The test of "reliance" on misrepresentation in sale of stock as ground for recovery under Securities Exchange Act is whether the misrepresentation is a substantial factor in determining the course of conduct which results in the recipient's loss. Where case involves primarily a failure to disclose, positive proof of reliance is not a prerequisite for recovery; all that is necessary is that the facts withheld be material in sense that reasonable investor might have considered them important in making of such decision. Gordon v. Burr, D.C.N.Y., 366 F.Supp. 156, 165.

Term "reliance" as used in rule imposing liability on one who volunteers to undertake action for the protection of another's person or things for failure to exercise reasonable care if harm is suffered because of the other's reliance upon the undertaking connotes dependence; it bespeaks a voluntary choice of conduct by the person harmed and infers that the person exercising it can decide between available alternatives. Barnum v. Rural Fire Protection Co., 24 Ariz.App. 233, 537 P.2d 618, 622.

See also Estoppel; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Reliance on promise. In promissory estoppel, the plaintiff is required to prove that he relied on promise of defendant to his damage. See also Promissory estoppel.

Relict /relaktırslikt/. A widow or widower. The relict of a pair (or of the marriage union), not the relict of an altered pair (or of a pair of married people, whether the survivor is a widow or widower. See also Promissory estoppel.

Relicta verificatione /rělikts vehrifikatio/ny/. (Lat. his pleading being abandoned.) A confession of judgment made after plea pleaded; viz., a cognovit actionem accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea.

Reliccion /relikshən/. An increase of the land by the permanent withdrawal or retrocession of the sea or a river. Process of gradual exposure of land by permanent recession of body of water. State Engineer v. Cowles Bros., Inc., 86 Nev. 872, 478 P.2d 159, 161. The alteration of a boundary line due to the gradual removal of land by a stream serving as the boundary. See also Accretion; Aluvion; Dereliction.

Relief. The public or private assistance or support, pecuniary or otherwise, granted to indigent persons.
Deliverance from oppression, wrong, or injustice. In this sense it is used as a general designation of the assistance, redress, or benefit which a complainant seeks at the hands of a court, particularly in equity. It may be thus used of such remedies as specific performance, injunction, or the reformation or rescission of a contract. Meir v. Walton, 6 N.C.App. 415, 170 S.E.2d 166, 169.

See also Cause of action; Remedy.

Relieve. To give ease, comfort, or consolation to; to give aid, help, or succor to; to alleviate, assuage, ease, mitigate; succor, assist, aid, help; support, sustain; lighten, diminish. Brollier v. Van Alstine, 236 Mo.App. 1233, 163 S.W.2d 109, 115.

To release from a post, station, or duty; to put another in place of, or to take the place of, in the bearing of any burden, or discharge of any duty. Kemp v. Stanley, 204 La. 110, 15 So.2d 1, 11.

Religion. Man's relation to Divinity, to reverence, worship, obedience, and submission to mandates and precepts of supernatural or superior beings. In its broadest sense includes all forms of belief in the existence of superior beings exercising power over human beings by volition, imposing rules of conduct, with future rewards and punishments. Bond uniting man to God, and a virtue whose purpose is to render God worship due him as source of all being and principle of all government of things. Nikulnikoff v. Archbishop, etc., of Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, 142 Misc. 894, 255 N.Y.S. 653, 663.

Religion, offenses against. In old English law, they were enumerated by Blackstone as including: (1) Apostasy; (2) heresy; (3) reviling the ordinances of the church; (4) blasphemy; (5) profane swearing; (6) conjunction or witchcraft; (7) religious imposture; (8) simony; (9) profanation of the Lord's day; (10) drunkenness; (11) lewdness. 4 Bl.Comm. 43.

Religio sequitur patrem /rielji(y)ow sekswar patram/. The father's religion is prima facie the infant's religion. Lit. Religion will follow the father.

Religious freedom. Within Constitution (First Amendment) embraces not only the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience, but also the right to do, or forbear to do, any act, for conscience sake, the doing or forbearing of which is not inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society. Barnette v. West Virginia State Board of Education, D.C.W.Va., 47 F.Supp. 251, 253, 254. See also Establishment clause.

Religious liberty. See Liberty.
An estate in remainder which is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, by which no present or particular interest passes to the remainder-man, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined and the remainder never take effect. A remainder limited so as to depend upon an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding estate.

Cross-remainder. Where land is devised or conveyed to two or more persons as tenants in common, or where different parts of the same land are given to such persons in severalty, with such limitations that, upon the determination of the particular estate of either, his share is to pass to the other, to the entire exclusion of the ultimate remainderman or reversioner until all the particular estates shall be exhausted, the remainders so limited are called "cross-remainders." In wills, such remainders may arise by implication; but, in deeds, only by express limitation.

Executed remainder. A remainder which vests a present interest in the tenant, though the enjoyment is postponed to the future.

Executory remainder. A contingency remainder; one which exists where the estate is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event.

Vested remainder. An estate by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate has been spent. One limited to a certain person at a certain time or upon the happening of a necessary event.

Remainder interest. The property that passes to a beneficiary after the expiration of an intervening income interest. If, for example, G places real estate in trust with income to A for life and remainder to B upon A's death, B has a remainder interest.

Remainderman. One who is entitled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired. One who becomes entitled to estate after intervention of precedent estate or on termination by lapse of time of rights of precedent estate created at same time. In re Washburn's Will, 44 Misc.2d 56, 252 N.Y.S.2d 948, 952.

Under a will, the remainderman is the party who will receive what is left of the decedent's property after all specific bequests have been satisfied.

Remainder vested subject to being divested. A remainder given to one person, with proviso that it shall go to another under certain contingencies. In re Barnes' Estate, 155 Misc. 320, 379 N.Y.S. 117.

Remand. To send back. The act of an appellate court when it sends a case back to the trial court and orders the trial court to conduct limited new hearings or an entirely new trial, or to take some other further action. Amalgamated Workers Union of Virgin Islands v. Hess Oil Virgin Islands Corp., C.A.Virgin Islands, 478 F.2d 540, 543. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2106. When a prisoner is brought before a judge on habeas corpus, for the purpose of obtaining liberty, the judge hears the case, and either discharges him or remands him. See also Procedendo.

Remanentia /rêmânensh(y)a/. In old English law, a remainder. A perpetuity, or perpetual estate.

Remanent pro defectu emptorum /rêmânyant prô défekt(y)uw em(p)toram/. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, that the same remains unsold for want of buyers.

Remanet /rêmanet/. A remnant; that which remains. Thus the causes of which the trial is deferred from one term to another, or from one sitting to another, are termed "remanets."

Remargining. The furnishing of additional security when securities which were originally purchased on margin decline in value below a certain percent of their market price at the time of purchase. See Margin.

Remedial. Affording a remedy; giving means of obtaining redress; of the nature of a remedy; intended to remedy wrongs and abuses, abate faults, or supply defects; pertaining to or affecting remedy, as distinguished from that which affects or modifies the right. Schultz v. Gosselink, 260 Iowa 115, 148 N.W.2d 434, 436. See Remedy.

Remedial action. One which is brought to obtain compensation or indemnity. Cummings v. Board of Education of Oklahoma City, 190 Okl. 533, 125 P.2d 989, 994.

Remedial laws or statutes. Legislation providing means or method whereby causes of action may be effectuated, wrongs redressed and relief obtained is "remedial". Schmitt v. Jenkins Truck Lines, Inc., 260 Iowa 556, 149 N.W.2d 789, 792. Statutes which afford a remedy, or improve or facilitate remedies already existing for enforcement of rights and redress of injuries. Chappy v. Labor and Industry Review Comm'n, App., 128 Wis.2d 318, 381 N.W.2d 552, 556. Those statutes which pertain to or affect a remedy, as distinguished from those which affect or modify a substantive right or duty. Perkins v. Willamette Industries, Inc., Or., 542 P.2d 473, 475.

Those designed to correct imperfections in the prior law and to cure a wrong where an aggrieved party had an ineffective remedy under existing statutes. Application of City of New York, 71 Misc.2d 1019, 337 N.Y.S.2d 753, 756. One that intends to afford a private remedy to a person injured by the wrongful act. That which is designed to correct an existing law, redress an existing grievance, or introduce regulations conducive to the public good. A statute giving a party a mode of remedy for a wrong, where he had none, or a different one, before. One which furnishes new remedy to claimant who has suffered injustice due to technical requirements of general statute. In re McCracken's Estate, 9 Ohio Misc. 195, 224 N.E.2d 181, 182.
The underlying test to be applied in determining whether a statute is penal or remedial is whether it primarily seeks to impose an arbitrary, deterring punishment upon any who might commit a wrong against the public by a violation of the requirements of the statute, or whether the purpose is to measure and define the damages which may accrue to an individual or class of individuals, as just and reasonable compensation for a possible loss having a causal connection with the breach of the legal obligation owing under the statute to such individual or class.

See also Curative (Curative statute).

Remedy. The means by which a right is enforced or the violation of a right is prevented, redressed, or compensated. Long Leaf Lumber, Inc. v. Svolos, La.App., 258 So.2d 121, 124. The means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury, as distinguished from right, which is a well founded or acknowledged claim. Chelentis v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 247 U.S. 372, 38 S.Ct. 501, 503, 62 L.Ed. 1171.

The rights given to a party by law or by contract which that party may exercise upon a default by the other contracting party, or upon the commission of a wrong (a tort) by another party.

Remedy means any remedial right to which an aggrieved party is entitled with or without resort to a tribunal. "Rights" includes remedies. U.C.C. § 1-201.

That which relieves or cures a disease, including a medicine or remedial treatment.

See also Adequate remedy; Administrative remedy; Alternative relief; Cause of action; Extraordinary remedies; Inadequate remedy at law; Mutuality of remedy; Provisional remedy.

Civil remedy. The remedy afforded by law to a private person in the civil courts in so far as his private and individual rights have been injured by a delict or crime; as distinguished from the remedy by criminal prosecution for the injury to the rights of the public.

Cumulative remedy. See Cumulative.

Equitable remedy. See Equity; Injunction; Performance (Specific performance); Reformation.

Extraordinary remedy. See Extraordinary.

Joinder of remedies. See Joinder.

Legal remedy. A remedy available, under the particular circumstances of the case, in a court of law, as distinguished from a remedy available only in equity. Procedurally, this distinction is no longer generally relevant, for under Rules of Civil Procedure there is only one form of action known as a "civil action." Rule 2. Compare Equity.

Remedy over. A person who is primarily liable or responsible, but who, in turn, can demand indemnification from another, who is responsible to him, is said to have a "remedy over." For example, a city, being compelled to pay for injuries caused by a defect in the highway, has a "remedy over" against the person whose act or negligence caused the defect, and such person is said to be "liable over" to the city. See Subrogation.

REMIC. A Real Estate Mortgage Investment Conduit created by the 1986 Tax Reform Act for years beginning in 1987 providing a special tax vehicle for organizations that issue to investors different classes of interests which are backed by a pool of mortgages on real estate.

Remise /remiz/. To remit or give up. A formal word in deeds of release and quitclaim; the usual phrase being "remise, release, and forever quitclaim."

Remise de la dette /remisy da la dét/. In French law, the release of a debt.

Remission. A release or extinguishment of a debt. It is conventional, when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a creditor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature constituting the obligation.

A diminution or abatement of symptoms of a disease; also the period during which such diminution occurs. In re Meyers, 410 Pa. 455, 189 A.2d 852, 862. Forgiveness or condonation of an offense or injury.

At common law, the act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven. United States v. Morris, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 246, 6 L.Ed. 314.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur /remiss impiranty miyl(i)y3 pariytsr/. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed.

Remissiveness. The doing of the act in question in a tardy, negligent, or careless manner; but term does not apply to the entire omission or forbearance of the act.

Remit. To send or transmit; as to remit money. To send back, as to remit a check or refer a case back to a lower court for further consideration. To give up; to pardon or forgive; to annul; to relinquish; as to remit a fine, sentence, or punishment.

Remittance /rmitmant/. The act of sending back to custody; an annulment.

Remittance /rmitans/. Money sent by one person to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, check, or otherwise.

Remittee. A person to whom a remittance is made.

Remitter /rmitar/. The relation back of a later defective title to an earlier valid title. Remitter occurs where he who has the true property or jus proprietatis in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and has no right to enter without recovering possession in an action, has afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent and of course defective title. In this case he is remitted, or sent back by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title.

Remitting bank. Any payor or intermediary bank remitting for an item. U.C.C. § 4-105(f).

Remittit damna /ramitst đemna/. Lat. An entry on the record, by which the plaintiff declares that he remits Remittitur /ramitatar/. The procedural process by which an excessive verdict of the jury is reduced. Pipp pen v. Denision, Division of Abex Corp., 66 Mich.App. 664, 239 N.W.2d 704, 710. If money damages awarded by a jury are grossly excessive as a matter of law, the judge may order the plaintiff to remit a portion of the award. In the alternative, the court may order a complete new trial or a trial limited to the issue of damages. The court may also condition a denial of a motion for new trial upon the filing of a remittitur in a stated amount. Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(a). Compare Additur.

Remittitur of record /ramitatar av rékard/. The returning or sending back by a court of appeal of the record and proceedings in a cause, after its decision thereon, to the court whence the appeal came, in order that the cause may be tried anew (where it is so ordered), or that judgment may be entered in accordance with the decision on appeal, or execution be issued, or any other necessary action be taken in the court below.

Remitter /ramitar/. A person who makes a remittance to another.

Remnant rule. The rule that width of lot, frontage of which is not specified on plat specifying frontage of all other lots in same block, is length of block, minus total width of other lots.

Remodel. To model anew; reconstruct, recast, reform, reshape, reconstruct, to make over in a somewhat different way. Board of Com’rs of Guadalupe County v. State, 43 N.M. 409, 94 P.2d 515, 520.

Remonitization. Removal of one type of money from a country's legal tender list. Also, the reestablishment of a currency system which has not functioned for a time.

Remonstrance /ramonstrans/. Expostulation; showing of reasons against something proposed; a representation drawn and presented by aggrieved citizens. As used in statutes relative to removal from state is often limited to such absence from state as amounts to a change of residence. See also Asporation.

Removal. In a broad sense, the transfer of a person, thing, or case from one place to another. See also Asporation. As used in statutes relative to removal from state is often limited to such absence from state as amounts to a change of residence. See also Recall.

Removal bond. In customs law, a bond furnished for possible duties by one who removes imported goods from a warehouse for export. Also, bond required in some states when a party to pending action in one court desires to remove action to another court.

Removal from office. Deprivation of office by act of competent superior officer acting within scope of authority. "Suspension" is the temporary forced removal from the exercise of office; "removal" is the dismissal from office. See Election (Recall election), Impeachment.
Removal of causes. The transfer of a case from one court to another; e.g., from one state court to another, or from state court to federal court. Commonly used of the transfer of the jurisdiction and cognizance of an action commenced but not finally determined, with all further proceedings therein, from one trial court to another trial court. More particularly, the transfer of a cause of action, before trial or final hearing thereof, from a state court to the United States District Court, under 28 U.S.C.A. § 1441 et seq.

Removal to avoid tax. Within a statute relating to forfeiture, some transfer of the thing involved from some definite place of manufacture, production, origin, or the like to some other place, whereat or wherefrom collection of tax on it might be less easily effected.

Removing cloud from title. Acts or proceedings necessary to render title marketable. See Action to quiet title.

Remuneration /remyounaréshyan/. Payment; reimbursement. Reward; recompense; salary; compensation.

Rencontre /renkawntor/. A sudden hostile collision, as with an enemy; an unexpected encounter or meeting, as of travelers; a contest or debate; a sudden meeting as opposed to a duel which is deliberate.

Render, v. To give up; to yield; to return; to surrender. Also to pay or perform; used of rents, services, and the like.

Render judgment. To pronounce, state, declare, or announce the judgment of the court in a given case or on a given state of facts; not used with reference to judgments by confession, and not synonymous with "entering," "docketing," or "recording" the judgment. Judgment is "rendered" when decision is officially announced, either orally in open court or by memorandum filed with the clerk. Wooldridge v. Groos Nat. Bank, Tex. Civ.App., 603 S.W.2d 335, 344. See Rendition of judgment.

Render verdict. To agree on and to report the verdict in due form. To return the written verdict into court and hand it to the trial judge who announces it in open court.

Render, n. In feudal law, used in connection with rents and heriots. Goods subject to rent or heriot-service were said to lie in render, when the lord might not only seize the identical goods, but might also distrain for them.

Rendezvous /ro1d8evwuv/"diy/ Fr. A place appointed for meeting. Especially used of places appointed for the assembling of troops, the coming together of the ships of a fleet, or the meeting of vessels and their convoy.

Rendition. The return of a fugitive to the State in which he is accused of having committed a crime, by the order of the governor of the State to which the fugitive has gone. See also Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Rendition of judgment. Rendition of a judgment is effected when trial court in open court declares the decision of the law upon the matters at issue, and it is distinguishable from "entry of judgment," which is a purely ministerial act by which the judgment is made of record and preserved. Ex parte Gnesoulis, Tex.Civ.App., 525 S.W.2d 205, 209. A judgment is rendered as of date on which trial judge declares in open court his decision on matters submitted to him for adjudication, and oral pronouncement by the court of its decision is sufficient for "rendition of judgment." Farr v. McKinzie, Tex.Civ.App., 477 S.W.2d 672, 676.

It is the pronouncement of the court of its conclusions and decision upon the matter submitted to it for adjudication; a judgment may be rendered either orally in open court or by memorandum filed with the clerk. Travelers Express Co., Inc. v. Winters, Tex.Civ.App., 488 S.W.2d 890, 892. "Rendition" of judgment is distinguishable from its "entry" in the records. Rehm v. Fishman, Mo.App., 395 S.W.2d 251, 255. See Entering judgment; Judgment.

Rendition of verdict. See Render.

Renegotiation. Lit. To negotiate again (e.g., the terms of a contract or lease). As to government contracts, it consists of a review of a contract after its performance to determine whether excess profits have been made. If they were made, the government can recapture them.

Renegotiation Act. Federal law which provides for reexamination of government contracts to determine whether excess profits were made which could be recaptured by the government. 50 U.S.C.A.App. 1191 et seq. See Renegotiation Board.

Renegotiation Board. The Renegotiation Board was created as an independent establishment in the executive branch by the Renegotiation Act of 1951 (65 Stat. 7; 50 U.S.C.A.App. § 1211) and was organized on October 8, 1951. The Board’s function was the elimination of excessive profits on defense and space contracts and related subcontracts. This federal agency was terminated and its property and records were transferred to General Services Administration in 1979 pursuant to Pub.L. 95-431, Title V, § 501.

Renew. To make new again; to restore to freshness; to make new spiritually; to regenerate; to begin again; to recommence; to resume; to restore to existence; to revive; to reestablish; to recreate; to replace; to grant or obtain an extension of. To "renew" a contract means to begin again or continue in force the old contract. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO v. Fibreboard Paper Products Corp., D.C.Cal., 285 F.Supp. 282, 287.

Renewal. The act of renewing or reviving. A renewal or rehabilitation of an expiring subject; that which is made anew or re-established. The substitution of a new right or obligation for another of the same nature. A change of something old to something new. To grant or obtain extension of; to continue in force for a fresh period, as commonly used with reference to notes and bonds importing a postponement of maturity of obligations dealt with. An extension of time in which that obligation may be discharged; an obligation being "renewed" when the same obligation is carried forward by the new paper or undertaking, whatever it may be. Campbell River Timber Co. v. Vierhus, C.C.A.Wash., 86 F.2d 673, 675.

Renounce. To make an affirmative declaration of abandonment. To reject; cast off; repudiate; disclaim; forsake; abandon; divest one's self of a right, power, or privilege. Usually it implies an affirmative act of disclaimer or disavowal. See also Renunciation; Repudiation.

Renovare /renaveriy/. Lat. In old English law, to renew. Annuatim renovare, to renew annually. A phrase applied to profits which are taken and the product renewed again.

Rent. Consideration paid for use or occupation of property. In a broader sense, it is the compensation or fee paid, usually periodically, for the use of any rental property, land, buildings, equipment, etc.

At common law, term referred to compensation or return of value given at stated times for the possession of lands and tenements corporeal. A sum of money or other consideration, issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal; something which a tenant renders out of the profits of the land which he enjoys; a compensation or return, being in the nature of an acknowledgment or recompense given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. 2 Bl.Comm. 41. In re Perlmutter's Will, 156 Misc. 571, 282 N.Y.S. 282.

The payment of royalty under a mineral lease. Robinson v. Horton, 197 La. 919, 2 So.2d 647, 649.

In Louisiana, the contract of rent of lands is a contract by which one of the parties conveys and cedes to the other a tract of land, or any other immovable property, and stipulates that the latter shall hold it as owner, but reserving to the former an annual rent of a certain sum of money, or of a certain quantity of fruits, which the other party binds himself to pay him. It is of the essence of this conveyance that it be made in perpetuity. If it be made for a limited time, it is a lease. Civ.Code La. arts. 2779, 2780.

Base rent. A specific amount used as a minimum rent in a lease which uses a percentage or overhead for additional rent.

Fee farm rent. A rent charge issuing out of an estate in fee; a perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance of land in fee simple.

Ground rent. See that title.

Net rent. Rent after all expenses.

Quit rent. Certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors were so called, because by their payment the tenant was free and "quit" of all other services.
Rentier /rəntiˈeɪ/ In French law, a fundholder, a person having an income from personal property.

Rent strike. An organized undertaking by tenants in which rent is withheld until grievances between landlord and tenants are settled.

Renunciation. The act by which a person abandons a right acquired without transferring it to another.

The Model Penal Code (§ 501(4)) recognizes renunciation of criminal purpose (e.g., abandonment of effort to commit crime) as an affirmative defense. See e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 373(b). See Withdrawal from criminal activity.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code the unilateral act of the holder, usually, without consideration, whereby he expresses the intention of abandoning his rights on the instrument or against one or more parties thereto. U.C.C. § 1-107. A means whereby a holder discharges a party's liability on an instrument by declaring an intention to discharge in a signed and delivered writing. U.C.C. § 3-608(1)(b). Within Uniform Commercial Code it is a gratuitous abandonment or giving up of right, and does not require a consideration. Miller v. Gayman, Mo., 482 S.W.2d 414 or 419.

In connection with wills, the act of waiving a will and claiming a statutory share as in the case of a spouse whose share under a will is less than her statutory share. See Election (law of wills); Election by spouse. See also Disclaimer; Repudiation.

Renvoi doctrine. /rənvoʊ/ The "doctrine of renvoi" is a doctrine under which court in resorting to foreign law adopts rules of foreign law as to conflict of laws, which rules may in turn refer court back to law of forum. Green v. Robertshaw-Fulton Controls Co., D.C.Ind., 29 F.R.D. 490, 500; Cooper v. Cherokee Village Development Co., 236 Ark. 37, 364 S.W.2d 168, 162.

Reo absent /riˈow̆ abˈsɛntɪ/ Lat. The defendant being absent; in the absence of the defendant.

Reopening a case. Is to permit the introduction of new evidence and, practically to permit a new trial.

General term describing corporate amalgamations or readjustments occurring, for example, when one corporation acquires another in a merger or acquisition, a single corporation divides into two or more entities, or a corporation makes a substantial change in its capital structure. The exchange of stock and other securities in a corporate reorganization can be effected favorably for tax purposes if certain statutory requirements are followed strictly.

The classification of the Internal Revenue Code (§ 368(a)(1)) is widely used in general corporate literature. A Class A reorganization is a statutory merger or consolidation (i.e., pursuant to the business corporation act of a specific state). A Class B reorganization is a transaction by which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for the voting shares of another corporation. A Class C reorganization is a transaction in which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for the property and assets of another corporation. A Class D reorganization is a "spin-off" of assets by one corporation to a new corporation; a Class E reorganization is a recapitalization; a Class F reorganization is a "mere change of identity, form, or place of organization, however effected." A Class G reorganization is a "transfer by a corporation of all or part of its assets to another corporation in a title 11 [bankruptcy] or similar case":

Reorganization of a corporation under Bankruptcy Code Chapter 11 proceedings involves the preparation of a plan of reorganization by the bankruptcy trustee, the submission thereof to the court, and, after a hearing, the determination of the feasibility of such plan by the court, followed by the court’s approval thereof if it finds such plan is feasible and proper. See also Bankruptcy proceedings.

Tax free reorganization. Under the Internal Revenue Code, a corporate reorganization wherein a corporation which is a party thereto exchanges property, pursuant to a plan of reorganization, solely for stock or securities of a second corporate party, without recognition of gain or loss. I.R.C. § 361.

Repair. To mend, remedy, restore, renovate. To restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction. Congress Bar and Restaurant Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 42 Wis.2d 56, 165 N.W.2d 409, 412. The word "repair" contemplates an existing structure or thing which has become imperfect, and means to supply in the original existing structure that which is lost or destroyed, and thereby restore it to the condition in which it originally existed, as near as may be. Childers v. Speer, 63 Ga.App. 848, 12 S.E.2d 439, 440.

In accounting, repairs are chargeable to current income whereas an improvement is a capital expenditure which requires depreciation over the life of the improvement. See also Extraordinary repairs.

Landlord has obligation to use reasonable care to keep premises in such repair as to meet local building and sanitary code requirements. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 831. See Habitability; Warranty (Warranty of habitability).

Reparation /rəˈpærəʃən/. Payment for an injury or damage; redress for a wrong done. Several states have adopted the Uniform Crime Victims Reparation Act. Certain federal statutes also provide for reparations for violation of Act; e.g., persons suffering losses because of violations of Commodity Futures Trading Act may seek reparation under the Act against violator. 7 U.S.C.A. § 18. See also Restitution.

Payment made by one country to another for damages during war.
Repeal. The abrogation or annulling of a previously existing law by the enactment of a subsequent statute which declares that the former law shall be revoked and abrogated (which is called "express" repeal), or which contains provisions so contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the earlier law that only one of the two statutes can stand in force (called "implied" repeal). To revoke, abolish, annul, to rescind or abrogate by authority. Golconda Lead Mines v. Neill, 82 Idaho 96, 350 P.2d 221, 223. See also Abrogation; Express repeal.

Repeal. The abrogation or annulling of a previously existing law by the enactment of a subsequent statute which declares that the former law shall be revoked and abrogated (which is called "express" repeal), or which contains provisions so contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the earlier law that only one of the two statutes can stand in force (called "implied" repeal). To revoke, abolish, annul, to rescind or abrogate by authority. Golconda Lead Mines v. Neill, 82 Idaho 96, 350 P.2d 221, 223. See also Abrogation; Express repeal.

Amendment distinguished. "Repeal" of a law means its complete abrogation by the enactment of a subsequent statute, whereas the "amendment" of a statute means an alteration in the law already existing, leaving some part of the original still standing.

Repeaters. Persons who commit crime and are sentenced, and then commit another and are sentenced again. See Habitual criminal; Recidivist.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis /rapélástar éy sakraméntow infémas/. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath.

Repetition. In the civil law, a demand or action for the restoration of money paid under mistake, or goods delivered by mistake or on an unperformed condition. See Soluto indebiti.

Repentimony /rapétilam néymiyan/. A repeated, second, or reciprocal distress; withernam Repentande, or pecunie repentande: (pskyúwniyiyi) répatsándiy/. In Roman law, the terms used to designate such sums of money as the socie of the Roman state, or individuals, claimed to recover from magistratus, judices, or publici curatores, which they had improperly taken or received in the provincin, or in the urbs Roma, either in the discharge of their jurisdiccion, or in their capacity of judices, or in respect of any other public function. Sometimes the word "repentanda" was used to express the illegal act for which compensation as sought.

Repentandarum crimen /répatsándéram krayman/. In Roman law, the crime of bribery or extortion in a magistrate, or person in any public office.

Replace. To place again; to restore to a former condition. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Franklin County, 387 Ill. 301, 56 N.E.2d 775, 779. Term, given its plain, ordinary meaning, means to supplant with substitute or equivalent. Olenick v. Government Employees Ins. Co., 42 A.D.2d 760, 346 N.Y.2d 320, 321. To take the place of.

Replacement cost. The present cost of replacing the improvement with one having the same utility. State Highway Commission v. Demarest, 263 Or. 590, 503 P.2d 682, 690. Cost of replacing lost, stolen or destroyed property to its former use and value.

Replacement insurance. Insurance coverage which provides that the loss will be measured by replacement of the property new. If the property is actually replaced, the measure is the difference between the depreciated value and the replacement cost.

Repleader. To plead anew; to file new pleadings.

Repleader. In common law pleading, when, after issue has been joined in an action, and a verdict given thereon, the pleading is found (on examination) to have miscarried and failed to effect its proper object, viz., of raising an apt and material question between the parties, the court will, on motion of the unsuccessful party, award a repleader; that is, will order the parties to plead de novo for the purpose of obtaining a better issue. Under modern rules practice, amendments to pleadings are liberally allowed. Fed.R.Civ. P. 15.

Replegiare /rapéljiyeriy/. To replevy; to redeem a thing detained or taken by another by putting in legal sureties.

Repleviable, or repleviable /rapléviysbal/raplévzabal/. Property is said to be repleviable or repleivable when proceedings in replevin may be resorted to for the purpose of trying the right to such property.

Replevin /raplévan/. An action whereby the owner or person entitled to possession of goods or chattels may recover those goods or chattels from one who has wrongfully distrained or taken or who wrongfully detains such goods or chattels. Jim's Furniture Mart, Inc. v. Harris, 42 Ill.App.3d 488, 1 Ill.Dec. 175, 176, 356 N.E.2d 175, 176. Also refers to a provisional remedy that is an incident of a replevin action which allows the plaintiff at any time before judgment to take the disputed property from the defendant and hold the property pendente litem. Other names for replevin include Claim and delivery, Detinue, Revendication, and Sequestration (q.v.).

Under the following conditions a buyer of goods may have the right of replevin: "The buyer has a right of replevin for goods identified to the contract if after reasonable effort he is unable to effect cover for such goods or the circumstances reasonably indicate that such effort will be unavailing or if the goods have been shipped under reservation and satisfaction of the security interest in them has been made or tendered." See U.C.C. § 2-711(2)(b); § 2-716(3).

See also Replevy; Self-help.

Personal replevin. At common law, a species of action to replevy a man out of prison or out of the custody of any private person. It took the place of the old writ de homine replegiando; but, as a means of examining into the legality of an imprisonment, it is now superseded by the writ of habeas corpus.

Replevin bond. A bond executed to indemnify the officer who executed a writ of replevin and to indemnify the defendant or person from whose custody the property was taken for such damages as he may sustain. Such bond guarantees that the replevisor will have the property in the same condition to abide the decision of the court. Kelso v. Hanson, Tex.Civ.App., 388 S.W.2d 396, 399.

Replevin cepit. Replevin action in case where defendant has both wrongfully taken and wrongfully detained the property. Compare Replevin in detinet, below.

Replevin in detinet. Replevin action in case where defendant rightfully obtained possession of property but wrongfully detains it. Compare Replevin in cepit, above.

Replevish /replevish/. In old English law, to let one to mainprise upon surety.

Replevisor /replevazar/. The plaintiff in an action of replevin.

Replevy /repleviy/. In reference to the action of replevin, to redeliver goods which have been distrained, to the original possessor of them, on his pledging or giving security to prosecute an action against the distrainor for the purpose of trying the legality of the distress. Also the bailing or liberating a man from prison on his finding bail to answer for his forthcoming at a future time. See also Replevin.

Replevy bond. Such bond guarantees that the replevisor will have the property in the same condition to abide the decision of the court. Kelso v. Hanson, Tex., 388 S.W.2d 396, 399.

Repliante, or replicant /repelayant/replakant/. A litigant who replies or files or delivers a replication.

Replicare /replokeryi/. Lat. In the civil law and old English pleading, to reply; to answer a defendant’s plea.

Replicatio /replokeryiow/. Lat. In the civil law and old English pleading, the plaintiff’s answer to the defendant’s exception or plea; corresponding with and giving name to the replication in modern pleading.

Replication. In common law pleading, a reply made by the plaintiff in an action to the defendant’s plea, or in a suit in chancery to the defendant’s answer. See Reply.

In equity practice (now obsolete in the federal and most state courts), a general replication is a general denial of the truth of defendant’s plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff’s suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. A special replication is occasioned by the defendant’s introducing new matter into his plea or answer, which makes it necessary for the plaintiff to put in issue some additional fact on his part in avoidance of such new matter.

Reply. In its general sense, the plaintiff’s answer to the defendant’s set-off or counterclaim. Under Fed.R.Civil P. 7(a), a reply is only allowed in two situations: to a counterclaim denominated as such, or, on order of court to an answer or a third-party answer. Compare Answer.

Report. An official or formal statement of facts or proceedings. To give an account of, to relate, to tell, to convey or disseminate information. State v. Fenster, 2 Conn.Cir. 184, 199 A.2d 177, 181. See also Annual report; Consumer report; Credit report.

The formal statement in writing made to a court by a master, clerk, or referee, as the result of his inquiries into some matter referred to him by the court. Fed.R.Civil P. 53. See Master’s report.

A “report” of a public official is distinguished from a “return” of such official, in that “return” is typically concerned with something done or observed by officer, while “report” embodies result of officer’s investigation not originally occurring within his personal knowledge. E. K. Hardison Seed Co. v. Jones, C.C.A.6, 149 F.2d 252, 257.

The name is also applied (usually in the plural) to the published volumes, appearing periodically, containing accounts of the various cases argued and determined in the various courts of record with the decisions and opinions thereon. See Reporter; Reports or reporters.

Reporter. A person who reports the decisions of a court of record; also, published volumes of decisions by a court or group of courts. The “court reporter” is the person who records court proceedings in court and later transcribes such. See also Court reporter; Reports or reporters.

Report of legislative committee. That communication which the chairman of the committee makes to the house at the close of the investigation upon which it has been engaged.

Reports or reporters. Published volumes of case decisions by a particular court or group of courts; e.g., Supreme Court Reporter, Federal Reporter, Federal Supplement.

Term includes: (1) (court reports) published judicial cases arranged according to some grouping, such as jurisdiction, court, period of time, subject matter or case significance, (2) (administrative reports or decisions) published decisions of an administrative agency, (3) annual statements of progress, activities or policy issued by an administrative agency or an association.

See also Law reporters or reports; Reporter; United States Reports.

Reports. The. The name given, par excellence, to Lord Coke’s Reports, from 14 Eliz. to 13 Jac. I, which are cited as “Rep.” or “Coke.” They are divided into thirteen parts, and the modern editions are in six volumes, including the index.

Repose statutes. See Statute (Statute of repose).

Repositorium /rapozstor(i)yam/. A storehouse or place wherein things are kept; a warehouse.
Repossession. To take back—as when a seller or bank or finance company repossesses or takes back an item if the buyer misses an installment payment. To recover goods sold on credit or in installments when the buyer fails to pay for them. U.C.C. § 9-503. The conditions for repossession are entirely statutory and due process fails to pay for them. U.C.C. § 9-503. The conditions for repossession are entirely statutory and due process failures to notice, manner, etc.

Self-help (i.e. without legal process) repossession of collateral is permitted under U.C.C. § 9-503. See Self-help.

Represent. To appear in the character of; personate; to exhibit; to expose before the eyes. To represent a thing to produce it publicly. To represent a person is to stand in his place; to speak or act with authority on behalf of such person; to supply his place; to act as substitute or agent. See also Agent; Power of appointment; Representative.

Representation. Any conduct capable of being turned into a statement of fact. Scandrett v. Greenhouse, 244 Wis. 108, 11 N.W.2d 510, 512. Statement of fact made to induce another to enter into contract. As element of actionable fraud includes acts or artifices calculated to mislead another, as well as words or positive assertions. Kestner v. Jakobe, Mo.App., 446 S.W.2d 188, 193. See also Material fact; Misrepresentation; Reliance.

Act of representing another. See Represent.

Attorney, right to. See Counsel, right to.

Contracts. A statement express or implied made by one of two contracting parties to the other, before or at the time of making the contract, in regard to some past or existing fact, circumstance, or state of facts pertinent to the contract, which is influential in bringing about the agreement.

False representation. See False representation; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Insurance. A collateral statement, either by writing not inserted in the policy or by parol, of such facts or circumstances, relative to the proposed adventure, as are necessary to be communicated to the underwriters, to enable them to form a just estimate of the risks. The allegation of any facts, by the applicant to the insurer, or vice versa, preliminary to making the contract, and directly bearing upon it, having a plain and evident tendency to induce the making of the policy. The statements may or may not be in writing, and may be either express or by obvious implication.

Law of distribution and descent. The principle upon which the issue of a deceased person take or inherit the share of an estate which their immediate ancestor would have taken or inherited, if living; the taking or inheriting per stirpes. In re Paterson’s Estate, Cal.App., 76 P.2d 138, 143.

Material representation. One having been a real moving cause inducing the making of a contract. A representation is “material” if it relates directly to matter in controversy and is of such nature that ultimate result would not have followed if there had been no representation or if one who acted upon it had been aware of its falsity. Schoen v. Lange, Mo.App., 256 S.W.2d 277, 281.

To be “material”, a representation must be of such character that if it had not been made, the contract or transaction would not have been entered into. Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., Cal.App., 141 P.2d 948, 958.

In life insurance, one that would influence a prudent insurer in determining whether or not to accept the risk, or in fixing the amount of the premium in the event of such acceptance.

See Material fact; also, Misrepresentation, below.

Misrepresentation. An intentional false statement respecting a matter of fact, made by one of the parties to a contract, which is material to the contract and influential in producing it. See False representation; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Promissory representation. A term used chiefly in insurance, and meaning a representation made by the assured concerning what is to happen during the term of the insurance, stated as a matter of expectation or even of contract, and amounting to a promise to be performed after the contract has come into existence.

Representation, estoppel by. It arises when one by acts, representations, admissions, or silence when he ought to speak out, intentionally or through culpable negligence induces another to believe certain facts to exist and such other rightfully relies and acts on such belief, so that he will be prejudiced if the former is permitted to deny the existence of such facts. Carter v. Curlew Creamery Co., 16 Wash.2d 476, 134 P.2d 66, 73. It differs from estoppel by record, deed, or contract, in that it is not based on agreement of parties or finding of fact which may not be disputed, and is not mutural, but applies to only one party.

It is the effect of voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is absolutely precluded from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed. Strand v. State, 16 Wash.2d 107, 132 P.2d 1011, 1015. It is a species of “equitable estoppel” or estoppel by matter in pais. Elements or essentials of such estoppel include change of position for the worse, Campbell v. Salyer, 290 Ky. 493, 161 S.W.2d 596, 599; detriment or injury or prejudice to party claiming estoppel, Abbott v. Bean, 295 Mass. 268, 3 N.E.2d 762, 768; express or implied representations; false representation, Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sawyer, 176 Okl. 446, 56 P.2d 418, 420; ignorance of facts by person claiming estoppel, United States v. Dickinson, C.C.A.Mass., 95 F.2d 65, 68; inducement to action by party claiming estoppel; intent that other party should act on representation or gross and culpable negligence of party sought to be estopped; knowledge, actual or constructive, or facts of person estopped, Rhoads v. Rhoads, 342 Mo. 934, 119 S.W.2d 247, 252; misleading of person claiming estoppel, Campbell v. Salyer, 290 Ky. 493, 161 S.W.2d 596, 599; reliance of one party on conduct of other party, Mosley v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 45 N.M. 230, 114 P.2d 740, 751. The doctrine ordinarily applies only to representations as to past or Representative action. An action is a "representative action" when it is based upon a primary or personal right belonging to the plaintiff stockholder and those in his class. Lehman v. Godchaux Sugars, 207 Misc. 314, 138 N.Y.S.2d 163, 166. A stockholder's action against corporation is "representative," when based on personal or personal right of plaintiff and other stockholders of his class, and "derivative" when based on corporation's primary right, asserted on its behalf by plaintiff because of corporation's failure to act. Gordon v. Elliman, 202 Misc. 612, 115 N.Y.S.2d 567, 568, 571, 572. See also Class or representative action; Derivative action.

Representative capacity. The office or other position an agent holds in relation to his or her principal which, along with the principal's name, should be indicated on any instrument the agent signs for the principal so that the agent herself avoids personal liability. See U.C.C. §§ 3-403(2) & (3).

Reprieve. Temporary relief from or postponement of execution of criminal punishment or sentence. It does no more than stay the execution of a sentence for a time, and it is ordinarily an act of clemency extended to a prisoner to afford him an opportunity to procure some amelioration of the sentence imposed. It differs from a commutation which is a reduction of a sentence and from a pardon which is a permanent cancellation of a sentence; Compare Clemency.

Reprima /réprá'ma/. To reprove severely; to censure formally, especially with authority. Federal Labor Union 23393, American Federation of Labor v. American Can Co., 28 N.J.Super. 306, 100 A.2d 693, 695. A public and formal censure or severe reproof, administered to a person in fault by his superior officer or by a body or organization to which he belongs. Thus, a member of a legislative body may be reprimanded by the presiding officer, in pursuance of a vote of censure, for improper conduct in the house; similarly, an attorney might be reprimanded by the Supreme Court or Bar Association of his State for unethical or improper conduct.

Reprisal /reprá'sal/. In general, any action taken by one person either in spite or as a retaliation for an assumed or real wrong by another. The forcible taking by one nation of a thing that belonged to another, in return or satisfaction for an injury committed by the latter on the former.

General reprisals. Take place by virtue of commissions delivered to officers and citizens of the aggrieved nation, directing them to take the persons and property belonging to the offending nation wherever found.

Negative reprisals. Take place when a nation refuses to fulfill a perfect obligation which it has contracted, or to permit another state to enjoy a right which it justly claims.

Positive reprisals. Consist in seizing the persons and effects belonging to the other nation, in order to obtain satisfaction.

Special reprisals. Such as are granted in times of peace to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the citizens or subjects of the other nation.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem /repró'ba'ta páký'swńi lí'berat sól'ventəm/. Money refused [the refusal of money tendered] releases him who pays [or tenders it].

Reprobation /repró'bá'shan/. In ecclesiastical law, the interposition of objections or exceptions; as to the competency of witnesses, to the due execution of instruments offered in evidence and the like.

Republic. A commonwealth; that form of government in which the administration of affairs is open to all the citizens. In another sense, it signifies the state, independently of its form of government.

Republication. The re-execution or reestablishment by a testator of a will which he had once revoked. A second publication of a will, either expressly or by construction. A codicil duly executed is a republication of the will. For "Express republication," see that title.

Repudiate. To put away, reject, disclaim, or renounce a right, duty, obligation, or privilege.

Repudiation. A rejection, disclaimer, or renunciation of a contract before performance is due that does not operate as an anticipatory breach unless the promisee elects to treat the rejection as a breach and brings a suit for damages. The rejection or refusal of an offered or available right or privilege, or of a duty or relation. The act of a buyer or seller in rejecting a contract of sale either partially or totally. U.C.C. §§ 2–610, 2–703, 2–708, 2–711.

Repudiation of a contract means refusal to perform duty or obligation owed to other party. Pitcher v. Lauritzen, 18 Utah 2d 368, 423 P.2d 491, 493. Such consists in such words or actions by contracting party as indicate that he is not going to perform his contract in the future. Continental Cas. Co. v. Boerger, Tex.Civ.App., 389 S.W.2d 566, 568.

Repudiation of contract is in nature of anticipatory breach before performance is due, but does not operate as anticipatory breach unless promisee elects to treat repudiation as breach, and brings suit for damages. Such repudiation is but act or declaration in advance of any actual breach and consists usually of absolute and unequivocal declaration or act amounting to declaration on part of promisor to promisee that he will not make performance on future day at which contract calls for performance. Robinson v. Raquet, 1 Cal.App.2d 533, 36 P.2d 821, 825.

In the civil law, the casting off or putting away of a woman betrothed; also, but less usually, of a wife; divorcement. In ecclesiastical law, the refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

See also Refusal; Renunciation.

Anticipatory repudiation. See Anticipatory breach of contract.

Repudium /rep'yúwdiom/. Lat. In Roman law, a breaking off of the contract of espousals, or of a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated "divorce;" but this was not the proper sense.

Inconsistency; a condition which occurs if one part of a document is true (or correct), so that another part cannot be true (or correct).

Repugnancy. An inconsistency, opposition, or contrariety between two or more clauses of the same deed, contract, or statute, or between two or more material allegations of the same pleading, or any two writings.

Within rule that repugnant counts cannot be joined in same declaration means affirmation of causes of action in one count the denial of that cause of action in another count. Necessary v. Gibson, 212 Tenn. 528, 370 S.W.2d 550, 556.

Inconsistent defenses or claims are permitted under Rule of Civil Proc. 8.

Repugnant verdict. See Verdict.

Repurchase. See Redemption.

Reputable. Worthy of repute or distinction, held in esteem, honorable, praiseworthy.

Reputable citizen. One who is well spoken of by his neighbors and hence presumably of good character. H. L. Shaffer & Co. v. Prosser, 99 Colo. 335, 62 P.2d 1161, 1163.

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Et vulgaris opinio est duplex, scil.: opinio voluntaria, orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis; et opinio tantum ors inter gravissimos et discretos homines, absque specie veritatis. See also Character; General reputation.

Reputed. Accepted by general, vulgar, or public opinion.
Reputed owner. See Owner.

Request, v. To ask for something or for permission or authority to do, see, hear, etc., something; to solicit. In its ordinary or natural meaning when used in a will, is precatory and not mandatory. Byars v. Byars, 143 Tex. 10, 182 S.W.2d 363, 364, 366.

Request, n. An asking or petition. The expression of a desire to some person for something to be granted or done, particularly for the payment of a debt or performance of a contract. Also, direction or command in law of wills. For Express request, see that title.

Request for admission. Written statements of facts concerning the case which are submitted to an adverse party and which that party is required to admit or deny; those statements which are admitted will be treated by the court as having been established and need not be proved at trial. Fed.R.Civ. P. 36.

Request for instructions. At the close of the evidence or at such earlier time during the trial as the court reasonably directs, any party may file written requests that the court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the requests. Fed.R.Civ. P. 51.

Requirement contract. One in which party promises to supply all specific goods or services which other party may need during a certain period at an agreed price, and in which other party expressly or implicitly promises he will obtain his goods or services from the first party exclusively. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Smith, C.A.Cal., 336 F.2d 528, 529. While such contracts were at one time void for indefiniteness of amount, they are now universally valid. UCC 2-306(1). See also Exclusive dealing arrangements.

Requisition. A demand in writing, or formal request or requirement. The taking or seizure of property by government.

The formal demand by one government upon another, or by the governor of one of the United States upon the governor of a sister state, of the surrender of a fugitive criminal. See Extradition.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the regulator and disposer of his own property.

Res /riz/. Lat. The subject matter of a trust or will. In the civil law, a thing; an object. As a term of the law, this word has a very wide and extensive signification, including not only things which are objects of property, but also such as are not capable of individual ownership. And in old English law it is said to have a general import, comprehending both corporeal and incorporeal things of whatever kind, nature, or species. By "res," according to the modern civilians, is meant everything that may form an object of rights, in opposition to "persona," which is regarded as a subject of rights. "Res," therefore, in its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds; while in its restricted sense it comprehends every object of right, except actions. This has reference to the fundamental division of the Institutes, that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions.

Res is everything that may form an object of rights and includes an object, subject-matter or status. In re Riggle's Will, 11 A.D.2d 51, 205 N.Y.S.2d 19, 21, 22. The term is particularly applied to an object, subject-matter, or status, considered as the defendant in an action, or as the object against which, directly, proceedings are taken. Thus, in a prize case, the captured vessel is "the res"; and proceedings of this character are said to be in rem. (See In Personam; In Rem.) "Res" may also denote the action or proceeding, as when a cause, which is not between adversary parties, is entitled "In re_____."

Classification

Things (res) have been variously divided and classified in law, e.g., in the following ways: (1) Corporeal and incorporeal things; (2) moveables and immovables; (3) res mancipi and res nec mancipi; (4) things real and things personal; (5) things in possession and choses (i.e., things) in action; (6) fungible things and things not fungible (fungibles vel non fungibles); and (7) res singula (i.e., individual objects) and universitates rerum (i.e., aggregates of things). Also persons are for some purposes and in certain respects regarded as things.

Res accessoria /riz ekssesoriyas/. In the civil law, an accessory thing; that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it.

Res adirata /riz adarityyas/. The gist of the old action for res adirata was the fact that the plaintiff had lost his goods, that they had come into the hands of the defendant, and that the defendant, on request, refused to give them up.

Res caducia /riz kad(y)uwkiyay/. In the civil law, a fallen or escheated thing; an escheat.

Res communes /riz komyuwniyay/. In the civil law, things common to all; that is, those things which are used and enjoyed by every one, even in single parts, but can never be exclusively acquired as a whole, e.g., light and air.

Res controversa /rīyz kōntravārs/. In the civil law, a matter controverted; a matter in controversy; a point in question; a question for determination.

Res coronae /rīyz kāroni/. In old English law, things of the crown; such as ancient manors, homages of the king, liberties, etc.

Res corporales /rīyz körpāryliyz/. In the civil law, corporeal things; things which can be touched, or are perceptible to the senses.

Res derelicta /rīyz dēhrāliktα/. Abandoned property; property thrown away or forsaken by the owner, so as to become open to the acquisition of the first taker or occupant.

Res fungibiles /rīyz fanjibaliyz/; /fānjibaliyz/. In the civil law, fungible things, things of such a nature that they can be replaced by equal quantities and qualities when returning a loan or delivering goods purchased, for example, so many bushels of wheat or so many dollars; but a particular horse or a particular jewel would not be of this character.

Schneider, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 738, 741. The "res gestae" rule is that where a remark is made spontaneously and concurrently with an affray, collision or the like, it carries with it inherently a degree of credibility and will be admissible because of its spontaneous nature.
"Res gestae" means literally things or things happened and therefore, to be admissible as exception to hearsay rule, words spoken, thoughts expressed, and gestures made, must all be so closely connected to occurrence or event in both time and substance as to be a part of the happening. McCandless v. Inland Northwest Film Service, Inc., 64 Wash.2d 523, 392 P.2d 613, 618. Those circumstances which are the automatic and undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, which may be separated from act by lapse of time more or less appreciable, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. The whole of the transaction under investigation and every part of it. Res gestae is considered as an exception to the hearsay rule. In its operation it renders acts and declarations which constitute a part of the things done and said admissible in evidence, even though they would otherwise come within the rule excluding hearsay evidence or self-serving declarations.
The rule is extended to include, not only declarations by the parties to the suit, but includes statements made by bystanders and strangers, under certain circumstances.

A spontaneous declaration made by a person immediately after an event and before the mind has an opportunity to conjure a falsehood. It represents an exception to the hearsay rule and should be referred to as a spontaneous explanation rather than res gestae. See e also Excited utterance; Verbal act doctrine.

Res gestae witness. An eyewitness to some event in the continuum of the criminal transaction and one whose testimony will aid in developing a full disclosure of the facts surrounding the alleged commission of the charged N.W.2d 535, 537.

Res habiles /rīyz hāboliy/. In the civil law, things which are prescriptible; things to which a lawful title may be acquired by ordinary prescription.

Res immobiles /rīyz imōwbaliyz/. In the civil law, immoveable things; including land and that which is con-N.E.2d 770, 779. And to be applicable, requires identity in thing sued for as well as identity of cause of action, of persons and parties to action, and of quality in persons for or against whom claim is made. The sum and subject of the whole rule is that a matter once judicially decided is finally decided. Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 101 S.Ct. 411, 415, 66 L.Ed.2d 308. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Final decision rule; Issue preclusion.

Collateral estoppel compared. "Res judicata" bars relitigation of the same cause of action between the same parties where there is a prior judgment, whereas "collateral estoppel" bars relitigation of a particular issue or determinative fact. Roper v. Mabry, 15 Wash.App. 819, 551 P.2d 1381, 1384.

Estoppel and res judicata distinguished, see Estoppel.

Res litigiosae /riyz latljijoways/. In Roman law, things which are in litigation; property or rights which constitute the subject-matter of a pending action.

Res mancipi /riyz maznapays/. See Mancipi res.

Res mobiles /riyz movbalijy/. In the civil law, movable things; things which may be transported from one place to another, without injury to their substance and form.

Things corresponding with the chattels personal of the common law.

Res nova /riyz nowva/. A new matter; a new case; a question not before decided.

Res nullius /riyz nalayz/. The property of nobody. A thing which has no owner, either because a former owner has finally abandoned it, or because it has never been appropriated by any person, or because (in the Roman law) it is not susceptible of private ownership.

Res perit domino /riyz pehrjyest domanowy/. A phrase used to express that, when a thing is lost or destroyed, it is lost to the person who was the owner of it at the time.

Res privata /riyz pravjytjy/. In the civil law, things the property of one or more individuals.

Res publicae /riyz pilbasy/. Things belonging to the public; public property; such as the sea, navigable rivers, highways, etc.

Res quotidianae /riyz kwowtidiyenyi/. Every-day matters; familiar points or questions.

Res religiosa /riyz raljyoway/. Things pertaining to religion. In Roman law, especially, burial-places, which in Roman law (as, to a municipality), the use and enjoyment of which, according to their proper purpose, is free to every member of the community, but which cannot be appropriated to the exclusive use of any individual; such as the public buildings, streets, etc.

Res accendent lumina rebus /riyz aksejandant lyewmona riyoas/. One thing throws light upon others.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem /riyz akssaojiy yekswejtar prinsejypelysm/. The accessory follows the principal.

Resale. Exists where a person who has sold goods or other property to a purchaser sells them again to someone else. Sometimes a vendor reserves the right of reselling if the purchaser commits default in payment of the purchase money, and in some cases (e.g., on a sale of perishable articles) the vendor may do so without having reserved the right. U.C.C. § 2-706 provides the conditions under which a seller has a right of resale on breach by the buyer of the sales contract.

Term may also refer to act of retailer who purchases goods from manufacturer or wholesaler for purpose of selling such goods in normal course of business. See also Retail; Retailer.

Resale price maintenance. An agreement between a manufacturer and retailer that the latter should not resell below a specified minimum price. Such schemes operate to prevent price competition between the various dealers handling a given manufacturer's product with the manufacturer generally suggesting an appropriate resale price and enforcing dealer acquiescence through some form of coercive sanction. Donahue v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 633 F.Supp. 1423, 1428. Until 1976, federal statutes exempted such state-permitted agreements from antitrust actions. See also Vertical price-fixing contract.

Rescett /rsiyt/. In old English practice, an admission or receiving a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two others; as, in an action by tenant for life or years, he in the reversion might come in and pray to be received to the land, and to plead with the demandant.

Rescett of homage /rsiyt av (h)omay/. In old English law, the lord's receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land.

Rescind. See Rescission of contract.

Rescissio /rashishi(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, an annulling; avoiding, or making void; abrogation; rescission.

Rescission of contract. To abrogate, annul, avoid, or cancel a contract; particularly, nullifying a contract by the act of a party. The right of rescission is the right to cancel (rescind) a contract upon the occurrence of certain kinds of default by the other contracting party. To declare a contract void in its inception and to put an end to it as though it never were. Russell v. Stephens, 191 Wash. 314, 71 P.2d 30, 31. A "rescission" amounts to the unmaking of a contract, or an undoing of it from the beginning, and not merely a termination, and it may be effected by mutual agreement of parties, or by one of the parties declaring rescission of contract without consent of other if a legally sufficient ground therefor exists, or by applying to courts for a decree of rescission. Abdallah, Inc. v. Martin, 242 Minn. 416, 65 N.W.2d 641, 644. It necessarily involves a repudiation of the contract and a refusal of the moving party to be further bound by it. Nonetheless, not every default in a contract will give rise to a right of rescission. See also Cancellation; Renunciation; Repudiation; Revocation; Termination.
An action of an equitable nature in which a party seeks to be relieved of his obligations under a contract on the grounds of mutual mistake, fraud, impossibility, etc.

Rescissory damages. See Damages.

Rescous /riskywy/. Rescue. The taking back by force goods which had been taken under a distress, or the violently taking away a man who is under arrest, and setting him at liberty, or otherwise procuring his escape, are both so denominated. This was also the name of a writ which lay in cases of rescue.

Rescript /riyskript/. A written order from the court to Rescriptum /raskriptam/. Lat. In the civil law, a position of a case. The written statement by an appellate court of its decision in a case, with the reasons therefor, sent down to the trial court. A short appellate opinion which does not bear the name of any justice.

At common law, a counterpart, duplicate, or copy. In the civil law, a species of imperial constitutions, being the answers of the prince in individual cases, chiefly given in response to inquiries by parties in relation to litigated suits, or to inquiries by the judges, and which became rules for future litigated or doubtful legal questions.

In canon law, a term including any form of apostolical letter emanating from the Pope. The answer of the Pope in writing.

Rescriptum /raskriptum/. Lat. In the civil law, a species of imperial constitution, in the form of an answer to some application or petition; a rescript.

Rescue. Act of saving or freeing. At common law, forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest, imprisonment or legal custody without any effort by prisoner to free himself. Merrill v. State, 42 Ariz. 341, 26 P.2d 110. The unlawfully or forcibly taking back goods which have been taken under a distress for rent, damage feasant, etc. See also Repossession.

In admiralty and maritime law, the deliverance of property taken as prize, out of the hands of the captors, either when the captured party retake it by their own efforts, or when, pending the pursuit or struggle, the party about to be overpowered receive reinforcements, and so escape capture.

Rescue doctrine. Under this doctrine, one who has, through his negligence, endangered safety of another may be held liable for injuries sustained by third person who attempts to save other from injury. National Dairy Products Corp. v. Freschi, Mo.App., 393 S.W.2d 48, 57. Danger invites rescue.

"Rescue", "humanitarian" or "good samaritan" doctrine is that one who sees a person in imminent and serious peril through negligence of another cannot be charged with contributory negligence, as a matter of law, in risking his own life or serious injury in attempting to effect a rescue, provided the attempt is not recklessly or rashly made. Jobst v. Butler Well Servicing, Inc., 190 Kan. 86, 372 P.2d 55, 59. See also Humanitarian doctrine.

Rescyt /rasyyt/. L. Fr. Receit; receipt; the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of a crime.

Res denominatur a principali parte /riyz danomnánéytor éy pranspéyay pártý/. The thing is named from its principal part.

Resealing writ. In English law, the second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue it, or to cure it of an irregularity.

Reservation. A clause in a deed or other instrument of conveyance by which the grantor creates, and reserves to himself, some right, interest, or profit in the estate granted, which had no previous existence as such, but is first called into being by the instrument reserving it; such as rent, or an easement. Reservation occurs where granting clause of the deed operates to exclude a portion of that which would otherwise pass to the grantee by the description in the deed and "reserves" that portion unto the grantor. Board of County Com'rs of Weld County v. Anderson, 34 Colo.App. 37, 525 P.2d 478, 482.

A right created and retained by a grantor. The reservation may be temporary (such as a life estate) or permanent (such as an easement running with the land).

The reservation of a point of law is the act of the trial court in setting it aside for future consideration, allowing the trial to proceed meanwhile as if the question had been settled one way, but subject to alteration of the judgment in case the court in banc should decide it differently.

For exception and reservation distinguished, see and compare Exception.

A reservation is a tract of land, more or less considerable in extent, which is by public authority withdrawn from sale or settlement, and appropriated to specific public uses; such as parks, military posts, Indian lands, etc. A tract of land (under control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs) to which an American Indian tribe retains its original title to ownership or which has been set aside for its use out of the public domain.

Reservation of claim. A draft or demand presented under a letter of credit is non-complying if there is an explicit reservation of claim. U.C.C. § 5-110.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficiuis ipsis, quia ea concedundur, sed de redivo novo extra proficuus /rezarvéysh(i)yow nôn débat ésiy diy prafikyuwas íppas, kwáya ńya konsááántar sèd diy rédat(y)w yw nówów ýkástra prafikyuwa/. A reservation ought not to be of the profits themselves, because they are granted, but from the new rent, apart from the profits.

Reserve, v. To keep back, to retain, to keep in store for future or special use, and to retain or hold over to a future time. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Strong Mfg. Co., C.C.A.6, 124 F.2d 360, 363. To set aside funds, usually for indefinite contingencies, such as future maintenance of a structure, or to pay future claims.

Reserve, n. Funds set aside to cover future expenses, losses, claims, or liabilities. Sums of money an insurer is required to set aside as a fund for the liquidation of future unaccrued and contingent claims, and claims

"With reserve" in an auction means that the thing will not be sold if the highest bid is not high enough. To "reserve title" is to keep an ownership right as security that the thing will be fully paid for.

Bad debt reserve. In accounting, a reserve set aside for losses on uncollectible accounts and notes receivable. An account for bad debts is offset by a reserve for bad debts. When accounts become uncollectible they are written off against the reserve. For tax years beginning after 1986, the Internal Revenue Service repealed the use of the bad debt reserve method for tax purposes, requiring most taxpayers to use the specific charge-off method for receivables which become uncollectible after 1986.

Contingency reserve (or fund). See that title.

Depreciation reserve. An account used in connection with diminishing assets such as mines, timber, etc. to reflect the depletion of the asset.

Depletion reserve. An account used to recover the cost of an asset by writing off a portion of the cost over the life of the asset or by some other acceptable method. The depletion reserve is listed on the balance sheet as a reduction in the cost of the related asset.

Legal reserve. A reserve account required by law for insurance companies and banks as protection against losses.

Replacement reserve. An account set up for the actual replacement of machinery and equipment.

Required reserves. The minimum amount of reserves that must be held by banks as required by the Federal Reserve Board. The Board requires banks and other financial institutions that accept deposits to hold specified minimum reserves in the form of vault cash or deposits with the nearest Federal Reserve District Bank.

Sinking fund reserve. An account set up for the redemption of long term debt. It is commonly required by a bond indenture.

Reserve banks. Member banks of Federal Reserve System.

Reserve Board. See Federal Reserve Board of Governors.

Reserve clause. A clause included in contracts of professional athletes whereby the athlete’s service is reserved for the team holding his contract. It represents a hold on the player by the team which has contracted with him, and such team has the exclusive right to trade the player to another team without his consent. Such reserve clauses in professional baseball contracts have long since been held to be exempt from federal antitrust laws. Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356, 374 S.Ct. 78, 98 L.Ed. 64; Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258, 92 S.Ct. 2099, 32 L.Ed.2d 728.

Reserved. Retained, kept or set apart, for a purpose or a person.

Reserved land. Public land that has been withheld or kept back from sale or disposition. See Reservation.

Reserved power. A power specifically withheld because not mentioned or reasonably implied in other powers conferred by a constitution or statute. See also Power (Constitutional powers).

Reserve fund. See Reserve.

Reserve ratio. In banking, the primary reserve ratio is the ratio of the balance of Federal Reserve balance of the bank plus cash in vault to the demand deposits of the bank. The secondary ratio is the ratio between the government securities of the bank and its demand deposits. There is also a ratio between time deposits and Federal Reserve balances plus cash in vault.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum /riyz est misare yúwbay jáš èst végam èt soäsáram/. It is a wretched state of things when law is vague and mutable.

Reset. In old English law, the receiving or harboring an outlawed person.

Resettlement. The reopening of an order or decree for the purpose of including therein some recital or provision which should have been included and was initially omitted through inadvertence. In re Bartlett’s Will, 164 Misc. 524, 299 N.Y.S. 316, 317.

Res generalem habet significationem quia tam corpora quam incorpora cujuscunque sunt generis, nature, sive speciei, comprehendit /riyz jenareybm hékbat signaʃkéʃhiyónam kwáy tóm korpórya kwém inkorpóriya k(y)ülwóʃkákwiwi sant jenaras, natyúríy sáyvíy spýšíhyay, kómpřehéndat/. The word "thing" has a general signification, because it comprehends corporeal and incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species.

Res geste. See Res.

Resilience /réziyans/. Residence, abode, or continuance.

Resistant /réziyant/. In old English law, continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident; a resident.

Reside. Live, dwell, abide, sojourn, stay, remain, lodge. Western-Knapp Engineering Co. v. Gilbank, C.C.A.Cal., 129 F.2d 135, 136. To settle oneself or a thing in a place, to be stationed, to remain or stay, to dwell permanently or continuously, to have a settled abode for a time, to have one’s residence or domicile; specifically, to be in residence, to have an abiding place, to be present as an element, to inhere as a quality, to be vested as a right. State ex rel. Bowden v. Jensen, Mo., 359 S.W.2d 343, 349. A foreign business corporation, for venue purposes, "resides" in county where its registered office and registered agent is located. State ex rel. Bowden v. Jensen, Mo., 359 S.W.2d 343, 351.

Residence. Place where one actually lives or has his home; a person’s dwelling place or place of habitation; an abode; house where one's home is; a dwelling house.

Perez v. Health and Social Services, 91 N.M. 334, 573
P.2d 689, 692. Personal presence at some place of abode with no present intention of definite and early removal and with purpose to remain for undetermined period, not infrequently, but not necessarily combined with design to stay permanently. T.P. Laboratories, Inc. v.

Residence implies something more than mere physical presence and something less than domicile. Petition of Castrinakis, D.C.Md., 179 F.Supp. 444, 445. The terms
"resident" and "residence" have no precise legal mean¬ ing; sometimes they mean domicile plus physical pres¬ cence; sometimes they mean domicile; and sometimes they mean something less than domicile. Willenbrook
v. Rogers, C.A.Pa., 255 F.2d 236, 237. See also Abode; Domicile; Legal residence; Principal residence.

"Domicile" compared and distinguished. As "domicile" and "residence" are usually in the same place, they are frequently used as if they had the same meaning, but they are not identical terms, for a person may have two places of residence, as in the city and country, but only one domicile. Residence means living in a particular locality, but domicile means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home. Resi¬ dence simply requires bodily presence as an inhabitant in a given place, while domicile requires bodily presence in that place and also an intention to make it one's domicile. Fuller v. Hofferbert, C.A.Ohio, 204 F.2d 592, 597. "Residence" is not synonymous with "domicile," though the two terms are closely related; a person may have only one legal domicile at one time, but he may have more than one residence. Fielding v. Casualty Reciprocal Exchange, La.App., 331 So.2d 186, 188.

In certain contexts the courts consider "residence" and "domicile" to be synonymous (e.g. divorce action, Cooper v. Cooper, 269 Cal.App.2d 6, 74 Cal.Rptr. 439, 441); while in others the two terms are distinguished (e.g. venue, Fromkin v. Loehmann's Hewlett, Inc., 16 Misc.2d 117, 184 N.Y.S.2d 63, 65).

Immigration law. The place of general abode; the place of general abode of a person means his or her principal, actual dwelling place in fact, without regard to intent.

Legal residence. See that title.

Residency requirements. Broad term to describe terms of residence required by states for such things as welfare benefits, admission to the bar, divorce, etc. As regards divorce and welfare prerequisites, the requirements must not be so stringent as to violate due process or equal protection. See Right to travel.

Resident. Any person who occupies a dwelling within the State, has a present intent to remain within the State for a period of time, and manifests the genuineness of that intent by establishing an ongoing physical presence within the State together with indicia that his presence within the State is something other than merely transitory in nature. The word "resident" when used as a noun, means a dweller, habitant or occupant; one who resides or dwells in a place for a period of more, or less, duration; it signifies one having a residence, or one who resides or abides. Hanson v. P. A. Peterson Home Ass'n, 35 Ill.App.2d 134, 182 N.E.2d 237, 240. Word
"resident" has many meanings in law, largely deter¬ mined by statutory context in which it is used. Kelm v.
Carlson, C.A.Ohio, 473 F.2d 1267, 1271. See also Resi¬ dence.

Resident agent. Person in a jurisdiction authorized to accept service of process for another, especially a corpo¬ ation.

Resident alien. One, not yet a citizen of this country, who has come into the country from another with the intention to abandon his former citizenship and to reside here.

Resident freeholder. A person who resides in the par¬ ticular place (town, city, county, etc.) and who owns an estate in lands therein amounting at least to a freehold interest. Brodie v. City of Missoula, 155 Mont. 185, 468
P.2d 778, 782.

Residential cluster. An area to be developed as a single entity according to a plan containing residential housing units which have a common or public open space area as an appurtenance. See also Planned unit development.

Residential density. The number of dwelling units per gross acre of residential land area including streets, easements and open space portions of a development.

Residual. /rzədjuəl/. Pertaining to the resid¬ ue; relating to the resid¬ e; to the part remaining; that which is left over. Term may also refer to deferred commissions.

Residual value. Value of depreciable asset after depre¬ ciation charges have been deducted from original cost.
See also Salvage (salvage value).

Residuary /rzədjuəri/. Pertaining to the residue; constituting the residue; giving or bequeathing the resid¬ ue; receiving or entitled to the residue. See Residue.

Residuary account. In English practice, the account which every executor and administrator, after paying the debts and particular legacies of the deceased, and before paying over the residuum, must pass before the board of inland revenue.

Residuary bequest. A bequest of all of testator's estate not otherwise effectually disposed of.

Residuary clause. Clause in will by which that part of property is disposed of which remains after satisfying bequests and devises. Any part of the will which dispos¬ es of property not expressly disposed of by other provi¬ sions of the will. Jackson v. Jackson, 217 Kan. 448, 536
P.2d 1400, 1406. See also Residuary estate.

Residuary devise and devisee. See Devise.

Residuary estate. That which remains after debts and expenses of administration, legacies, and devises have been satisfied. That portion of person's estate which has not otherwise been particularly devised or bequeathed. It consists of all that has not been legally disposed of by will, other than by residuary clause.
Res inter alios judicatae nullum aliis praejudicium faciunt. Res inter alios acta aliter nocere non debet. Res inter alios judicatae nullum aliis praejudicium faciunt. Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Res inter alios acta /riyz intar élyiyowz ákta/. The rule "res inter alios acta" forbids the introduction of collateral facts which by their nature are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal matter in dispute, and thus evidence as to acts, transactions or occurrences to which accused is not a party or is not connected is inadmissible. State v. McCarthy, Iowa, 179 N.W.2d 548, 550.

In law of evidence, a thing or event which occurs at a time different from the time in issue is generally not admissible to prove what occurred at the time in issue. Also events which involve those not parties to an action are generally not admissible because they are immaterial and commonly not relevant.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet /riyz intar élyi/lyowz ákta oltaray nasiiry nón débét/. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them.

Res inter alios acta /riyz intar élyi/lyowz júwkàkéytyi nálam élyiyas préjuwdisht(ly)ásm fáshiýant/. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it.

Res ipsa loquitur. See Res.

Res judicata. See Res.

Res judicata facta ex albo nigrum; ex nigro, album; ex curvo, rectum; ex recto, curvum /riyz júwkàkéyta fëysst éks álbow náygrsm, éks náygrw ólbum, éks kàrwóv rëktom, éks rëktw kàrwvm/. A matter adjudged [the solemn judgment of a court] makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur /riyz júwkàkéyta prów vëhrstétyti akstipstar/. A matter adjudged is taken for truth. A matter decided or passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction is received as evidence of truth.

Res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis /riyz náláyas nëtëryrélylstárt fit práymay ókysáptántos/. A thing which has no owner naturally belongs to the first finder.

Resolution. A formal expression of the opinion or will of an official body or a public assembly, adopted by vote; as a legislative resolution. Such may be either a simple, joint or concurrent resolution.

The term is usually employed to denote the adoption of a motion, the subject-matter of which would not properly constitute a statute, such as a mere expression of opinion; an alteration of the rules; a vote of thanks or of censure, etc. Such is not law but merely a form in which a legislative body expresses an opinion. Baker v. City of Milwaukee, 271 Or. 500, 533 P.2d 772, 775.

The chief distinction between a "resolution" and a "law" is that the former is used whenever the legislative body passing it wishes merely to express an opinion as to some given matter or thing and is only to have a temporary effect on such particular thing, while by a "law" it is intended to permanently direct and control matters applying to persons or things in general.

Concurrent resolution. An action of Congress passed in the form of a resolution of one house, the other concurring, which expresses the sense of Congress on a particular subject.

Resist. To oppose. This word properly describes an opposition by direct action and quasi forcible means.

Resistance. The act of resisting opposition. The employment of forcible means to prevent the execution of an endeavor in which force is employed; standing against; obstructing. Withstanding the force or effect of or the exertion of oneself to counteract or defeat. Landry v. Daley, D.C.III., 280 F.Supp. 938, 959. See Self-defense.

Resisting an officer. In criminal law, the offense of obstructing, opposing, and endeavoring to prevent (with or without actual force) a peace officer in the execution of a writ or in the lawful discharge of his duty while making an arrest or otherwise enforcing the peace. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 111. See also Resisting arrest.

RESIDUARY ESTATE

Gross estate less all charges, debts, costs, and all other legacies. In re Miller's Estate, Fla.App., 301 So.2d 137, 139. See also Residuary clause.

Residuary gift. See Legacy.

Residuary legacy. See Legacy.

Residuary legatee. See Legatee.

Residue. The surplus of a testator's estate remaining after all the debts, taxes, costs of administration, and particular legacies have been discharged. See also Residuary estate.

Residuum /raziyuvam/. That which remains after any process of separation or deduction; a residue or balance. That which remains of a decedent's estate, after debts have been paid and legacies deducted. See also Residuary estate.

Residuum rule. While a decision of an administrative board may be based partly on hearsay evidence introduced at the hearing, it will be upheld on judicial review only if there is a residuum of competent evidence on which it is founded. The residuum rule has generally been rejected by the federal courts. See Richardson v. Perales, 402 U.S. 389, 91 S.Ct. 1420, 28 L.Ed.2d 842.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio /rezagnéysh(ly)ow ést júras prówpréiyay spontéy-n(ly)yó réfywétshéysh(ly)ów/. Resignation is a spontaneous relinquishing of one's own right.

Resignation. Formal renouncement or relinquishment of an office. It must be made with intention of relinquishing the office accompanied by act of relinquishment.

Resilire /rezaláryi/. Lat. In old English law, to draw back from a contract before it is made binding.

Res inter alios acta /riyz intar élyi/lyowz âkta/. The rule "res inter alios acta" forbids the introduction of collateral facts which by their nature are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal matter in dispute, and thus evidence as to acts, transactions or occurrences to which accused is not a party or is not connected is inadmissible. Concurrent resolution. An action of Congress passed in the form of a resolution of one house, the other concurring, which expresses the sense of Congress on a particular subject.
Corporate resolution. Formal documentation of action taken by board of directors of corporation (e.g. declaration of stock dividend).

Joint resolution. A resolution adopted by both houses of congress or a legislature. When such a resolution has been approved by the president or passed with his approval, it has the effect of a law.

The distinction between a joint resolution and a concurrent resolution of congress, is that the former requires the approval of the president while the latter does not.

Ordinance distinguished. "Resolution" denotes something less formal than "ordinance"; generally, it is mere expression of opinion or mind of council concerning some matter of administration, within its official cognizance, and provides for disposition of particular item of administrative business of a municipality; it is not a law, and in substance there is no difference between resolution, order and motion. City of Salisbury v. Nagel, Mo.App., 420 S.W.2d 37, 43.

Resolution Trust Corporation. A federal agency which succeeds the former Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) as conservator or receiver of federal savings and loan associations which became insolvent while insured by the FSLIC. One of agency's functions is to dispose of assets of insolvent S & L's. With the abolition of the FSLIC in 1989, such associations are now insured by the FDIC. See also Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Resoluto jure concedentis resolvitur jus concessum /rēzōlytoj(y)ūwtō juri̇y kōnsadēntēsat rzāzōlyvāt jas kānsēsam/. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished.

Resoluto jure concedentis resolvitur jus concessum /rēzōlytoj(y)ūwtō juri̇y kōnsadēntēsat rzāzōlyvāt jas kānsēsam/. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished.

Resolutory condition /rzāzōlyt(ə)ri̇y kandishan/. See Condition.

Resort, v. To frequent; to go, especially to go frequent-ly, customarily, or usually. To have recourse; to look to for relief or help.

Resort, n. Recourse; a person or thing that is looked to for help. A place of frequent assembly; a haunt. U. S. ex rel. Dobra v. Lindsey, D.C.Tex., 51 F.2d 141, 142.

Court of last resort. A court whose decision is final and without further appeal in reference to the particular case; e.g. Supreme Court of the United States.

Resources. Money or any property that can be converted to meet needs; means of raising money or supplies; capabilities of raising wealth or to supply necessary wants; available means or capability of any kind. Cer-enzia v. Department of Social Security of Washington, 18 Wash.2d 230, 138 P.2d 868, 871. See also Natural resources.

RESPA (Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act). A federal statute governing disclosure of settlement costs in the sale of residential (one to four family) improved property which is to be financed by a federally insured lender. 12 U.S.C.A. § 2601 et seq. See also Closing.

Respective. Relating to particular persons or things, each to each; particular; several; as, their respective homes.

Respectu computi vicecomitis habendo /rāspēkt(y)uw kompyuvi̇st(y)uw vāyslykōmətstas habēndō/. A writ for respi-ting a sheriff's account addressed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer.

Res per pecuniam astitutum, et non pecunia per rem /rēz per pākvyūn(y)i̇yam ēstamēytar ēt nōn pākvyūn(y)īyam pār rēm/. The value of a thing is estimated according to its worth in money, but the value of money is not estimated by reference to a thing.

Respiciendum est judicanti ne quid aut durius aut remissius constituatur quam causa depositi; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiae gloria affectanda est /rāspēshlēyēmdān ēst jūwdākāntēt ni̇y kīwīd őt dyūrīyās őt rāmēsīlīyəs kənt(ə)stl(i)j(y)uwēytar kwām kōzō ədōpōst, nēk īyəm őt səvēhrēstēyēs őt kīməlēsīlijēyēs gūlirīyə afēktəntā ēst/. The judge must see that no order be made or judgment given or sentence passed either more harshly or more mildly than the case requires; he must not seek renown, either as a severe or as a tender-hearted judge.

Respite /rēspət/rāspət/. The temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence; a reprieve; a delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

In the civil law, an act by which a debtor, who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment, transacts (compromises) with his creditors, and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. The respite is either voluntary or forced. It is voluntary when all the creditors consent to the proposal, which the debtor makes, to pay in a limited time the whole or a part of the debt. It is forced when a part of the creditors refuse to accept the debtor's proposal, and when the latter is obliged to compel them by judicial authority to consent to what the others have determined, in the cases directed by law.

Respite of appeal. Adjourning an appeal to some future time.

Respite of homage. To dispense with the performance of homage by tenants who held their lands in consideration of performing homage to their lords.

Respondent ouster /rāspōndēyast əwstər/. Upon an issue in law arising upon a dilatory plea, the form of judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant answer over, which is thence called a judgment of "respondent ouster." This not being a final judgment, the pleading is resumed, and the action proceeds.

Respondent raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit /rāspōndēyast rēptar kwāy ignarērīy non pōtuwāt kwōd p(y)əpiləm āli̇yənəm əbdākstə/. Let the ravisher answer, for he cannot be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward.

Respondent superior /rāspōndēyast s(y)əpərəyər/. Let the master answer. This doctrine or maxim means that a master is liable in certain cases for the wrongful acts of his servant, and a principal for those of his agent. Burger Chef Systems, Inc. v. Govro, C.A.Mo., 407 F.2d 921, 925. Under this doctrine master is responsible for want of care on servant’s part toward those to whom master owes duty to use care, provided failure of servant to use such care occurred in course of his employment. Shell Petroleum Corporation v. Magnolia Pipe Line Co., Tex.Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 829, 832. Under doctrine an employer is liable for injury to person or property of another proximately resulting from acts of employee done within scope of his employment in the employer’s service. Mid-Continent Pipeline Co. v. Crauthers, Okl., 267 F.2d 568, 571. Doctrine applies only when relation of master and servant existed between defendant and wrongdoer at time of injury sued for, in respect to very transaction from which it arose. Hence, doctrine is inapplicable where injury occurs while employee is acting outside legitimate scope of authority. Rogers v. Town of Black Mountain, 224 N.C. 119, 29 S.E.2d 203, 205. But if deviation be only slight or incidental, employer may still be liable. Klotzch v. P. F. Collier & Son Corporation, 349 Mo. 40, 159 S.W.2d 589, 593, 595. See Scope of employment; Vicarious liability.

Respondent /ˈrespənt/ /. In equity practice, the party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in equity. In appellate practice, the party who contends against an appeal; the party against whom the appeal is taken, i.e. the appelee.

In the civil law, one who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor.

Respondentia /ˈrespəndəntiə/ /. The hypothecation of the cargo or goods on board a ship as security for the repayment of a loan, the term “bottomry” being confined to hypothecations of the ship herself; but now the term “respondentia” is seldom used, and the expression “bottomry” is generally employed, whether the vessel or her cargo or both be the security.

A contract by which a cargo, or some part thereof, is hypothecated as security for a loan, the repayment of which is dependent on maritime risks.

Respondera son soveraine /ˈresponderə sɔn sɔvəˈreɪn/ /. His superior or master shall answer.

Respondere non debet /ˈresponderiə nɔn dɛbɛt/ /. Lat.

In common law pleading, the prayer of a plea where the defendant insists that he ought not to answer, as when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador.

Responisal /ˈrespənəsəl/ /. In old English law, one who appeared for another.

In ecclesiastical law, a proctor.

Responisal ad lucrandum vel petendum /ˈrespənəsəl əd lɪkˈrɑːndəm vɛl ˈpɛtəndəm/ /. He who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned; a proctor, attorney, or deputy.

Responsa prudentium /ˈrespənso prəˈwʌndəntjʊəm/ /

Lat. Answers of jurists; responses given upon cases or questions of law referred to them, by certain learned Roman jurists, who, though not magistrates, were autho-
Res quae intra presidia perductae nondum sunt, quamquam ab hostibus occupate, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominium nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure /riyz kwiy intra presiçia pârdãkkty nóndám sât, kwákkwam âb (h)ôstâbas okyápèiytîy, ïdíyôw powâtîymây nônd ýyjant kwáô yámûnnêm sóndam mywôtêran ýk sênh(i)ym jùriy. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy’s lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed.

Res sacra non recipit aestimationem /riyz sêkrô nônd réspat étâmêshiyôwínm. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation.

Resseiser /räziyzt/. The taking of lands into the hands of the crown, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused.

Res sua nemini servit /riyz suyu wâm némânay sárvat/. No one can have a servitude over his own property.

Rest, v. In the trial of an action, a party is said to “rest,” or “rest his case,” when he advises the court or intimates that he has produced all the evidence he intends to offer at that stage, and submits the case, either finally, or subject to his right to afterwards offer rebutting evidence.

Rest, n. Repose; cessation or intermission of motion, exertion or labor; freedom from activity; quiet. Corrugating Machinery Corporation v. Progressive Corrugated Paper Machinery Co., D.C. N.Y., 47 F.2d 273, 275. See also Residue.

Restatement of Law. A series of volumes authored by the American Law Institute that tell what the law in a general area is, how it is changing, and what direction the authors (who are leading legal scholars in each field covered) think this change should take; for example, Restatement of the Law of Contracts; Restatement of the Law of Torts. The various Restatements have been a formidable force in shaping the disciplines of the law covered; they are frequently cited by courts and either followed or distinguished; they represent the fruit of the labor of the best legal minds in the diverse fields of law covered.

Restaur, or restor /rästóér/. In old English law, the remedy or recourse which marine underwriters have against each other, according to the date of their assurances, or against the master, if the loss arise through his default, as through ill loading, want of caulking, or want of having the vessel tight; also the remedy or recourse a person has against his guarantor or other person who is to indemnify him from any damage sustained.

Resting a case. See Rest.

Restitutio in integrum /rästôtiyôwíyôkôw in intêgrêm/ Let. In the civil law, restoration or restitution to the previous condition. This was effectuated by the praetor on equitable grounds, at the prayer of an injured party, by rescinding or annulling a contract or transaction valid by the strict law, or annulling a change in the legal condition produced by an omission, and restoring the parties to their previous situation or legal relations. The restoration of a cause to its first state, on petition of the party who was cast, in order to have a second hearing.

Maximum measure of damages awarded in event of a marine collision is “restitutio in integrum” which strictly construed limits damages to the difference in value of vessel before and after collision, but measure is equated with the cost of necessary repairs and loss of earnings while they are being made. Delta Marine Drilling Co. v. M/V Baroid Ranger, C.A.La., 454 F.2d 128, 129.

Restitution. An equitable remedy under which a person is restored to his or her original position prior to loss or injury, or placed in the position he or she would have been, had the breach not occurred. Act of restoring; restoration; restoration of anything to its rightful owner; the act of making good or giving equivalent for any loss, damage or injury; and indemnification. State v. Barnett, 110 Vt. 221, 3 A.2d 521, 525, 526. Act of making good or giving an equivalent for or restoring something to the rightful owner. Antoine v. McCaffery, Mo.App., 335 S.W.2d 474, 489. Compensation for the wrongful taking of property. Com. v. Fuqua, 267 Pa.Super. 504, 407 A.2d 24, 25. Restoration of status quo and is amount which would put plaintiff in as good a position as he would have been if no contract had been made and restores to plaintiff value of what he parted with in performing contract. Explorers Motor Home Corp. v. Aldridge, Tex.Civ.App., 541 S.W.2d 851, 852. See Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 373.

A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other. Restatement of the Law, Restitution, § 1.

In torts, restitution is essentially the measure of damages, while in contracts a person aggrieved by a breach is entitled to be placed in the position in which he would have been if the defendant had not breached.

In the law of commercial sales, the buyer’s rights to restitution are governed by U.C.C. §§ 2-711 and 2-718.

See also Unjust enrichment, doctrine of.

Criminal law. The federal courts and many states have restitution programs under which the criminal offender is required to repay, as a condition of his sentence, the victim or society in money or services. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3663, 3664.

Maritime law. The placing back or restoring articles which have been lost by jettison: This is done, when remainder of the cargo has been saved, at the general charge of the owners of the cargo.

Restitution of conjugal rights. In English ecclesiastical law, a species of matrimonial cause or suit which was brought whenever either a husband or wife was guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lived separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction compelled them to come together again, if either be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Bl.Comm. 94.

Writ of restitution. See that title.
Restrictive covenant. See also Restrictive covenant.

Restrained. Confinement, abridgment, or limitation.

Restraining. To limit, confine, abridge, narrow down, restrict, obstruct, impede, hinder, stay, destroy. To prohibit from action; to put compulsion upon; to restrict; to hold or press back. To keep in check; to hold back from acting, proceeding, or advancing, either by physical or moral force, or by interposing obstacle; to repress or suppress; to curb. N. L. R. B. v. Exchange Parts Co., C.A.5, 304 F.2d 368, 374. To restrict a person’s movements in such manner as to interfere substantially with his liberty. People v. Daniels, 71 C.2d 1119, 80 Cal.Rptr. 897, 909, 459 P.2d 225.

To enjoin. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Restraining order. An order in the nature of an injunction which may issue upon filing of an application for an injunction forbidding the defendant from doing the threatened act until a hearing on the application can be had. It is distinguishable from an injunction, in that the former is intended only as a restraint until the propriety of granting an injunction can be determined and it does no more than restrain the proceeding until such determination. Such an order is limited in its operation, and extends only to such reasonable time as may be necessary to have a hearing on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America v. State Bd. of Equalization, 134 Mont. 526, 335 P.2d 310, 311. See also Injunction; Order; Temporary restraining order.

Restraining powers. Restrictions or limitations imposed upon the exercise of a power by the donor thereof.

Restraint. Confinement, abridgment, or limitation. Prohibition of action; holding or pressing back from action. Hindrance, confinement, or restriction of liberty. Obstruction, hindrance or destruction of trade or commerce. See Restrain of trade; Stop.

Unlawful restraint. Unlawful restraint is knowingly and without legal authority restraining another so as to interfere substantially with his liberty.

A person is “restrained” or “imprisoned” for false imprisonment purposes when he is deprived of either liberty of movement or freedom to remain in place of his lawful choice, and such restraint or imprisonment may be accomplished by physical force alone, by threat of force, or by conduct reasonably implying that force will be used. Kilcup v. McManus, 64 Wash.2d 771, 394 P.2d 375, 379.

Person is guilty of “unlawful restraint” if he knowingly: (1) restrains another unlawfully in circumstances exposing him to risk of serious bodily injury; or (2) holds another in a condition of involuntary servitude. 18 Pa.C.S.A. § 2902. See also Imprisonment (False imprisonment); Kidnapping.

Term may also refer to restraint of person for search or seizure without lawful warrant or probable cause. See Search.

Restraint of marriage. The law will not enforce a general restraint of marriage which bars the donee or legatee from ever marrying as a condition of receiving the gift or legacy; but limitations on a gift which conditions it on the donee’s or legatee’s marrying within a certain religion or nationality have been upheld.

Restrain of princes and rulers. In marine and war risk policies, refers to operation of sovereign power by exercise of vis major, in its sovereign capacity, controlling and divesting for the time, the authority of owner over ship, and clause applies only to acts done in exercise of sovereign power. Baker Castor Oil Co. v. Ins. Co. of North America, 157 F.2d 13. Where the “restraint of princes” clause or similar language is found in the contract, a reasonable apprehension of capture or destruction of the ship or cargo will justify nonperformance of the agreement to carry. The George J. Goulard, D.C.Me., 36 F.Supp. 827, 830, 834. A “restraint of princes” may be an act performed for purposes connected with the prosecution of war, or some other act, such as quarantines or prohibition of entry into port for sanitary reasons.

Restrain of trade. Contracts or combinations which tend or are designed to eliminate or stifle competition, effect a monopoly, artificially maintain prices, or otherwise hamper or obstruct the course of trade and commerce as it would be carried on if left to the control of natural economic forces. U. S. v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26, 40 S.Ct. 425, 429, 64 L.Ed. 760; U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 221, 61 S.Ct. 811, 84 L.Ed. 1129. Term as used in Sherman Act means “unreasonable restraints of trade” which are illegal per se restraints interfering with free competition in business and commercial transactions which tend to restrict production, affect prices, or otherwise control market to detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services, or those restraints of trade, ordinarily reasonable, but made unreasonable because accompanied with specific intent to accomplish equivalent of a forbidden restraint. Klor’s Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., C.A.Cal., 255 F.2d 214, 230. To restrain interstate trade and commerce means to interfere unreasonably with the ordinary, usual and freely-competitive pricing or distribution system of the open market in interstate trade and commerce. A conspiracy may restrain interstate commerce even though some or all of the defendants are not engaged in interstate commerce, and even though some or all of the means employed may be acts wholly within a state, if there is a substantial and direct effect on interstate commerce. Sherman Antitrust Act, § 1. See also Rule (Rule of reason); Sherman Antitrust Act.

Restraint on alienation. A provision in an instrument of conveyance which prohibits the grantee from selling or transferring the property which is the subject of the conveyance. Most such restraints are unenforceable as against public policy and the law’s policy of free alienability of land. See Restrictive covenant.
Any provision in a trust or other instrument which, either by express terms or by implication, purports to prohibit or penalize the use of the power of alienation; the trusts usually involved are spendthrift, discretionary and support trusts. Philip v. Trainor, Fla.App., 100 So.2d 181, 183. See also Perpetuity.

Res transit cum suo onere /riyz trsenzat ksm s(y)uwow ównary/. The thing passes with its burden. Where a thing has been incumbered by mortgage, the incumbrance follows it wherever it goes. Restrict. To restrain within bounds; to limit; to confine. See also Restraint.

Restricted securities. Securities acquired directly or indirectly from an issuer, or from a person in a controlled relationship with the issuer (an "affiliate") in a transaction or chain of transactions not involving any public offering; Bader v. Fleschner, D.C.N.Y., 463 F.Supp. 976, 979. Those securities that either by contract or by law cannot be distributed to public; a "restricted security" is one that has no market. Eastern Service Corp. v. C.I.R., C.A.2, 650 F.2d 379, 383.

Restricted surplus. The portion of retained earnings which cannot be distributed as dividends. The restrictions are generally due to preferred dividends in arrears, covenants in a loan agreement, or a decision by the Company's Board of Directors.

Restriction. A limitation, often imposed in a deed or lease respecting the use to which the property may be put. See e.g. Restrictive covenant.

Also, clauses in contracts of partnership and employment which limit a contracting party after termination of the contract in performing similar work for a period of time and within a certain geographical area. If reasonable as to time and area, such clauses are enforceable.

Restrictive indorsement. An indorsement so worded as to restrict the further negotiability of the instrument. Thus, "Pay the contents to J. S. only," or "to J. S. for my use," are restrictive indorsements, and put an end to the negotiability of the paper.

An indorsement is restrictive which either (a) is conditional; or (b) purports to prohibit further transfer of the instrument; or (c) includes the words "for collection", "for deposit", "pay any bank", or like terms signifying a purpose of deposit or collection; or (d) otherwise states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person. U.C.C. § 3-205.

Resulting powers. Powers of the federal government derived from a combination of several grants or the aggregate of power granted to the federal government. See Power (Constitutional powers).

One in which a party, through no actual or constructive fraud, becomes invested with legal title, but holds that title for the benefit of another, although without expressed intent to do so, because of a presumption of such intent arising by operation of law. First Nat. Bank of Denver v. Harry W. Rabb Foundation, 29 Colo.App. 34, 479 P.2d 986, 988, 989. A "resulting trust" arises where a person makes or causes to be made a disposition of property under circumstances which raise an inference that he does not intend that person taking or holding the property should have the beneficial interest therein, unless inference is rebutted or the beneficial interest is otherwise effectively disposed of. Lifemark Corp. v. Merritt, Tex.App. 14 Dist., 655 S.W.2d 310, 316. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 404.

Resulting use. See Use.

Resummons. A second summons. The calling a person a second time to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated upon any occasion; as the death of a party, or the like.

Resumption. In old English law, the taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements as before, upon false suggestion, or other error, he had delivered to the heir, or granted by letters patent to any man.

Resurrender. Where copyhold land has been mortgaged by surrender, and the mortgagee has been admitted, then, on the mortgage debt being paid off, the mortgagor is entitled to have the land reconveyed to him, by the mortgagee surrendering it to the lord to his use. This is called a resurrender.

Retail, v. To sell by small quantities, in broken lots or parcels, not in bulk, directly to consumer. Sales made in minimal quantities to ultimate consumer to meet personal needs, rather than for commercial or industrial users. Witco Chemical Corp. v. U.S., 2 Cl.Ct. 504, 507.

In general, wholesalers sell to retailers who in turn sell to consumers.

Retail, n. A sale for final consumption in contrast to a sale for further sale or processing (i.e. wholesale). A sale to the ultimate consumer.

Retailer. A person engaged in making sales to ultimate consumers. One who sells personal or household goods for use or consumption.

The essential distinction between a "wholesaler" and "retailer" as respects application of the Fair Labor Standards Act is that the person buying from the retailer is the ultimate user or consumer of the article or commodity or does not sell it again whereas the one buying from a wholesaler buys only for the purpose of selling the article again. Haynie v. Hogue Lumber & Supply Co. of Gulfport, 96 F.Supp. 214, 216.

Retail installment account. An account established by an agreement entered into pursuant to which the buyer promises to pay, in installments, to a retail seller his outstanding balance incurred in retail installment sales, whether or not a security interest in the goods sold is retained by the seller, and which provides for a finance charge which is expressed as a percent of the periodic balances to accrue thereafter providing such charge is not capitalized or stated as a dollar amount in such agreement. Calif.Civil Code, § 1802.7.

Retail installment contract. Any contract for a retail installment sale between a buyer and seller, entered into or performed which provides for (a) repayment in installments, whether or not such contract contains a title retention provision, and in which the buyer agrees to pay a finance charge, or in which the buyer does not agree to pay a finance charge but the goods or services are available at a lesser price if paid for by either cash or credit card, or in which the buyer would have received any additional goods or services or any higher quality goods or services at no added cost over the total amount payable in installments if the sale had been for cash, or (b) which provides for payment in more than four installments. Calif. Civil Code, § 1802.6.

Retail sale. A sale in small quantities or direct to consumer, as distinguished from sale at “wholesale” in large quantity to one who intends to resell. Mitchell v. Sorvas, D.C.Pa., 182 F.Supp. 800, 802. The ordinary meaning of term “retail sale” within sales tax statutes is a sale to an ultimate consumer. Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. State, 87 Wash.2d 56, 355 P.2d 349, 352. See also Retail.

Retain. To continue to hold, have, use, recognize, etc., and to keep.

To engage the services of an attorney or counsellor to manage a specific matter or action or all legal matters in general. See Retainer.

Retained earnings. An account on the balance sheet which represents the accumulated earnings of a corporation less any dividend distributions (including capitalization through stock dividends). It is usually a credit balance and a component of stockholder’s equity. Retained earnings are also called “undistributed profits” or “earned surplus.” See Accumulated earnings tax; Earned surplus; Surplus; Undistributed profits.

Retainer. The act of withholding what one has in one’s own hands by virtue of some right. In the practice of law, when a client hires an attorney to represent him, the client is said to have retained the attorney. This act of employment is called the retainer. The retainer agreement between the client and attorney sets forth the nature of services to be performed, costs, expenses, and related matters. If the client employs the attorney for a specific case, that is called a special retainer. In contrast, if a client hires a lawyer for a specific length of time (e.g., a year) rather than for a specific project, that is called a general retainer. The lawyer, during the period of the general retainer, may not accept any conflicting employment.

Right to retainer. The right which the executor or administrator of a deceased person has to retain out of the assets sufficient to pay any debt due to him from the deceased in priority to the other creditors whose debts are of equal degree. In re Smith’s Estate, 179 Wash. 417, 38 P.2d 244, 245.

Retaining fee. A fee given to counsel on engaging his services. See Retainer.

Retaining lien. A possessory lien which attaches to client’s papers, money and property which came into attorney’s hands during course of his employment. Application of Fox, 22 Misc.2d 177, 198 N.Y.S.2d 759, 791. Attorney’s right to retain possession of property belonging to his client which comes into his hands within the scope of his employment until his charges are paid. Jovan v. Starr, 87 Ill.App.2d 350, 231 N.E.2d 637, 639. See also Attorney’s lien.

Retaking. The taking one’s goods, from another, who without right has taken possession thereof. See Recapitulation.

Reclamiation. See Lex talionis.

Retaliatory eviction. Act of landlord in commencing eviction proceedings against tenant because of tenant’s complaints, participation in tenant’s union, or like activities with which the landlord is not in agreement. In some states, such retaliation will bar the landlord from enforcing his normal remedies against tenant.

Retaliatory law. Restraints placed by state law on foreign companies equal to the restraints placed by such foreign jurisdictions on companies doing business in such states. Many states have such laws. For example, in Pennsylvania if by laws of any other state or foreign government any taxes, fines, penalties, license fees or other obligations or prohibitions additional to or in excess of those imposed by Pennsylvania laws on insurance companies, associations and exchanges of other states, are imposed on insurance companies, associations and exchanges of Pennsylvania doing business in such state, like obligations and prohibitions are imposed on insurance companies, associations and exchanges of such state doing business in Pennsylvania.

Reatalia /rétáliya/. In old English law, retail; the cutting up again, or division of a commodity into smaller parts.

Retenementum /réténéméntum/. In old English law, restraint; detainment; withholding.

Retinencia /réténésh(ía)/. A retinue, or persons retained by a prince or nobleman.

Retirement. Termination of employment, service, trade or occupation upon reaching retirement age, or earlier at election of employee, self-employed, or professional. Removal of fixed asset from service.

Retirement annuity. Type of pension plan paid through annuities to those who have retired. Plans differ as to the rights of survivors of the annuitant.

Retirement of securities. Cancellation of reacquired or redeemed stocks or bonds. See also Redemption; Stock (Stock redemption).

Retirement plans. General term referring to various types of retirement benefit plans provided by employers or established individually by self-employed. See Individual retirement account (I.R.A.); Keogh plan; Money-purchase plan, Pension plan; Retirement annuity. Most such plans are regulated by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).

Retorna brevium /rátória břjvijyam/. The return of the writs. The indorsement by a sheriff or other officer of his doings upon a writ.

Retorno habendo /ratónow habédow/. A writ that layed for the distrainor of goods (when, on replevin brought, he had proved his distress to be a lawful one) against him who was so distracted, to have them returned to him according to law, together with damages and costs.

Retorsion /rátórshan/. In international law, a species of retaliation, which takes place where a government, whose citizens are subjected to severe and stringent regulation or harsh treatment by a foreign government, employs measures of equal severity and harshness upon the subjects of the latter government found within its dominions.

Retraction. To take back. To retract an offer is to withdraw it before acceptance. In law of defamation, a formal recanting of the defamatory material. Retraction is not a defense but, under certain circumstances, it is admissible in mitigation of damages.

In probate practice, a withdrawal of a renunciation, (q.v.).

Retraxit /ratrěksat/. Lat. He has withdrawn.

A retraxit is a voluntary renunciation by plaintiff in open court of his suit and cause thereof, and by it plaintiff forever loses his action. Virginia Concrete Co. v. Board of Sup’rs of Fairfax County, 197 Va. 821, 91 S.E.2d 415, 419. It is equivalent to a verdict and judgment on the merits of the case and bars another suit for the same cause between the same parties. Dutta v. Staab, 343 P.2d 977, 982, 173 C.A.2d 613. Under rules practice, this is accomplished by a voluntary dismissal. Fed.R.Civ. P. 41(a). Dismissal with prejudice is the modern name for "retraxit". Robinson v. Hiles, 119 C.A.2d 666, 260 P.2d 194, 197.

Retreat, n. A place for contemplation especially of a religious nature. The totality of exercises in a religious house where a person may "take stock" of himself.

Retreat, v. To withdraw from the world or from an encounter.

Something the defendant must sometimes do before using deadly force in self-defense or defense of others. Model Penal Code §§ 3.04(2), 3.05(2).

Retreat to the wall. A common law requirement that an endangered person use all reasonable means to avoid the necessity of taking human life before resorting to deadly force in self-defense. Soberon v. State, Fla.App., 545 So.2d 490, 492. The requirement is abandoned now in the majority of jurisdictions, which hold that one assaulted in a place where he has a right to be is under no duty to retreat before using deadly force in self-defense. People v. White, 127 Misc.2d 219, 484 N.Y.S.2d 994, 995. See Model Penal Code §§ 3.04(2), 3.05(2).

Retrial. A new trial of an action which has already been once tried. See also Rehearing; Trial (New trial; Trial de novo). Compare Mistrial.

Retribution. Something given or demanded in payment. In criminal law, it is punishment based on the theory which bears its name and based strictly on the fact that every crime demands payment in the form of punishment. See also Retribution.

Retro /rétrow/. Lat. Back; backward; behind. Retrofiedum, a rereief, or arriere fief.

Retroactive inference. The inferring of a previous fact from present conditions by a trier of facts. Gray v. Kurn, 345 Mo. 1027, 137 S.W.2d 558, 568.

Retroactive law. "Retroactive" or "retrospective" laws are generally defined from a legal viewpoint as those which take away or impair vested rights acquired under existing laws, create new obligations, impose a new duty, or attach a new disability in respect to the transactions or considerations already past. Barbieri v. Morris, Mo., 315 S.W.2d 711, 714. One which is intended to act on things that are past. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Richardelle, Tex.Civ.App., 528 S.W.2d 280, 284. A statute which creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past or destroys or impairs vested rights. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Pittman, 69 Ga. App. 146, 25 S.E.2d 60, 65, 66. Such laws may be unenforceable because violative of the ex post facto clause of the U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 9, Cl. 3. See also Retrospective law.

Retrocession /rétrásešhan/. In the civil law, when the assignee of heritable rights conveys his rights back to the cedent.

Retrospective. Looking backward; contemplating what is past; having reference to a state of things existing before the act in question.

Retrospective law. A law which looks backward or contemplates the past; one which is made to affect acts or facts occurring, or rights accruing, before it came into force. Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past. One that relates back to a previous transaction and gives it a different legal effect from that which it had under the law when it occurred. Bear Val. Mut. Water Co. v. San Bernardino County, 242 Cal.App.2d 68, 51 Cal.Rptr. 53, 56. See also Ex post facto; Retroactive law.

Return. To bring, carry, or send back; to place in the custody of; to restore; to re-deliver. "Return" means that something which has had a prior existence will be brought or sent back. Sims v. Western Steel Co., C.A. Utah, 551 F.2d 811, 820.

The act of a sheriff, constable, marshall, or other ministerial officer, in delivering back to the court a writ, notice, process or other paper, which he was required to serve or execute, with a brief account of his doings under the mandate, the time and mode of service or execution, or his failure to accomplish it, as the case may be. Also the indorsement made by the officer upon the writ or other paper, stating what he has done under it, the time and mode of service, etc. Such return (proof of service) is required under Rule of Civil Procedure 4. See False return; Return day, below.

A schedule of information required by governmental bodies, such as the tax return required by the Internal Revenue Service. See Joint tax return; Tax return.

Merchandise which is brought back to the seller for credit or refund.

Profit on sale, or income from investments (usually expressed as annual percentage rate). See Income; Profit; Rate (Rate of return); Return on assets; Return on equity; Revenue.

The report made by the court, body of magistrates, returning board, or other authority charged with the official counting of the votes cast at an election.

In English practice, the election of a member of parliament.

Fair return. See Fair return on investment.

False return. A return of a writ or process in which the officer charged with it falsely reports that he served it, when he did not, or makes some other false or incorrect statement, whereby injury results to a person interested. In taxation, a return that is incorrect. To constitute civil or criminal fraud under the Internal Revenue laws, such falsity must have been intentional. Mitchell v. C. I. R., C.C.A.Ga., 118 F.2d 308.

Return day. The day named in a writ or process, upon which the officer is required to return it. Under Fed.R. Civil P. 4 the person serving the process shall make proof of service (return) to the court promptly and in any event within the time during which the person served must respond to the process.

Day on which votes cast are counted and the official result is declared. Landrum v. Centennial Rural High School Dist. No. 2, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 353, 354. See also Ex post facto; Retroactive law.

Return of premium. The repayment of the whole or a ratable part of the premium paid for a policy of insurance, upon the cancellation of the contract before the time fixed for its expiration. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Johnson, 53 Cal.App.2d 49, 127 P.2d 95.

Returnable. To be returned; requiring a return. When a writ or process is said to be "returnable" on a certain day, it is meant that on that day the officer must return it.

Return day. See Return.

Returning board. This is the official title in some of the states of the board of canvassers of elections.

Return of process. See Return.

Return on assets. Ratio of net income to total assets. See Return on equity.

Return on equity. The relationship of the amount of annual earnings available after all expenses are paid to the total value of all the common shareholders investment. Return on equity is calculated by dividing common stock equity (net worth as shown on the books of the corporation) at the beginning of an accounting period into net income for the period after payment of preferred stock dividends but before payment of common stock dividends. Return on equity indicates the amount earned on each dollar of invested capital; it is expressed as a percentage and is a guide to common shareholders as to how effectively their money is being employed.

Return on investment. Amount earned per year on an investment, usually expressed as percentage. See also Rate (Rate of return); Return on assets; Return on equity.

Reus /riyas/. Lat. In the civil and canon law, the defendant in an action or suit. A person judicially accused of a crime; a person criminally proceeded against.

A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant; a litigant. This was the ancient sense of the word.

A party to a contract. Reus stipulandi, a party stipulating; the party who asked the question in the form prescribed for stipulations. Reus promittendi, a party promising; the party who answered the question.

Revaluation. The restoration of purchasing power to an inflated currency. Change in value by a government of its currency in relation to currencies of other countries. Also, the resetting of the tax base by recomputing the value of real estate subject to taxation. See also Devaluation.

Reve /riyv/. In old English law, the bailiff of a franchise or manor; an officer in parishes within forests, who marks the commenable cattle.

The gross receipts of a business, individual, or other reporting entity. The receipts are paid to the government, or other reporting entity. The receipts are usually the results of product sales, services rendered, interest earned, etc. See also Gross revenue.

As applied to the income of a government, a broad and general term, including all public moneys which the state collects and receives, from whatever source and in whatever manner. See Public revenues, below.

Public revenues. The income which a government collects and receives into its treasury, and is appropriated for the payment of its expenses. Public Market Co. v. City of Portland, 171 Or. 522, 130 P.2d 624, 644. Annual or periodical yield of taxes, excise, custom, dues, rents, etc., which a nation, state or a municipality collects and receives into treasury for public use; public income of whatever kind. City of Phoenix v. Arizona Sash, Door & Glass Co., 80 Ariz. 100, 293 P.2d 438, 440. Current income of nation, state, or local government from whatever source derived which is subject to appropriation for public uses. Spink v. Kemp, 365 Mo. 368, 283 S.W.2d 502, 513.

Revenue bills. Legislative bills that levy or raise taxes. Bills for raising federal revenue must arise in the House of Representatives. Art. I, Sec. 7, U.S.Const. See also Revenue law or measure.

Revenue bonds. Type of bond issued by a state or local government repayable by the particular unit of government which issues it. Also, a bond issued for a specific public purpose such as the construction or maintenance of a bridge and repayable from income generated by such project. Term is a descriptive qualification which indicates that the instruments are payable solely from a revenue producing public project. Dalton v. State Property and Buildings Commission, Ky., 304 S.W.2d 342, 352.

Revenue law or measure. Any law which provides for the assessment and collection of a tax to defray the expenses of the government. Such legislation is commonly referred to under the general term "revenue measures" or "revenue bills", and those measures include all the laws by which the government provides means for meeting its expenditures. Western Heights Land Corp. v. City of Fort Collins, 146 Colo. 464, 362 P.2d 155, 158. See also Revenue bills.

Revenue neutral. Changes in the tax law which result in the same amount of overall total revenue (i.e., no overall increase or decrease in general revenue) though received from different sources. For example, a tax act might require corporations to pay more in taxes, but such excess revenue is offset by individuals paying less.

Revenue Procedure. A matter of procedural importance to both taxpayers and the I.R.S. concerning the administration of the tax laws is issued as a Revenue Procedure (abbreviated as "Rev.Proc."). A Revenue Procedure is first published in an Internal Revenue Bulletin (I.R.B.) and later transferred to the appropriate Cumulative Bulletin (C.B.). Both the Internal Revenue Bulletins and the Cumulative Bulletins are published by the U.S. Government Printing Office and many commercial tax services.

Revenue Ruling. A Revenue Ruling (abbreviated "Rev. Rul.") is issued by the National Office of the I.R.S. to express an official interpretation of the tax law as applied to specific transactions. Unlike a Regulation, it is more limited in application. A Revenue Ruling is first published in an Internal Revenue Bulletin (I.R.B.) and later transferred to the appropriate Cumulative Bulletin (C.B.). Both the Internal Revenue Bulletins and the Cumulative Bulletins are published by the U.S. Government Printing Office and many commercial tax services. I.R.C. § 7805. See also Letter ruling; Private letter ruling.

Revenue stamps. Formerly, a federal tax on sale of real property; since replaced by state tax stamps. The stamps are affixed to the conveying instrument (deed), or a rubber stamp is used to show the amount of the tax.

Revenue stamps. The income which a government collects and receives into its treasury, and is appropriated for the payment of its expenses. Public Market Co. v. City of Portland, 171 Or. 522, 130 P.2d 624, 644. Annual or periodical yield of taxes, excise, custom, dues, rents, etc., which a nation, state or a municipality collects and receives into treasury for public use; public income of whatever kind. City of Phoenix v. Arizona Sash, Door & Glass Co., 80 Ariz. 100, 293 P.2d 438, 440. Reversionary interest. The interest which a person has in the reversion of lands or other property. A right to the future enjoyment of property, at present in the possession or occupation of another. The property that reverts to the grantor after the expiration of an intervening income interest. Assume, for example, G places real estate in trust with income to A for eleven years and, upon the expiration of this term, the property returns to G. Under these circumstances, G has retained a reversionary interest in the property. A reversionary interest is the same as a remainder interest except that in the latter case the property passes to someone other than the original owner (e.g., the grantor of a trust) upon the expiration of the intervening interest. See also Clifford trust; Remainder; Reversion.

Reversionary lease. One to take effect in futuro. A second lease, to commence after the expiration of a former lease.

Reversioner. A person who is entitled to an estate in reversion. By an extension of its meaning, one who is entitled to any future estate or any property in expectancy. See also Reversion; Reversionary interest.

Reversio terrae est tanquam terra revertens in posses¬sione donatorii, sive heredibus suis post donum finitu¬rum... A reversal of land is, as it were, the return of the land to the possession of the donor or his heirs after the termination of the estate granted. See also Reversal; Reversionary interest.

Revert. To turn back, to return to. With respect to property to go back to and in future owner, who parted with it by creating estate in another which has expired, or to his heirs. As used in a deed connotes an undisposed of residue and imports that property is to return to a person who formerly owned it, but who parted with the possession or title by creating an estate in another person which has terminated by his act or by operation of law. Thurman v. Hudson, Ky., 280 S.W.2d 507, 508. See also Reversion; Reversionary interest.

Reverter. A possessor is said to reverter, where it is acquired a second time by the party out of whom it has been divested. Opposed to "divest." The words "revert" and "divest" are also applicable to the mere right or title, as opposed to the possession.

Revestire. In old European law, to re-vest, to vest again. A seisin is said to vest, where it has been received; to reinvest; to re-enfeoff. See also Escheat; Possibility (Possibility of reverting); Reversionary interest. Compare Remainder.

Review. To re-examine judicially or administratively. A reconsideration; second view or examination; revision; consideration for purposes of correction. Used especially of the examination of a decision of a lower court or administrative body by an appellate court or appellate administrative body (e.g., Appeals Council in social security cases). See Appeal; Board of review; Rehearing; Retrial.

Bill of review. In equity practice, a bill, in the nature of a writ of error, filed to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a decree made upon a former bill, which decree has been signed and enrolled. See also Bill.
Revised statutes. A body of statutes which have been revised, collected, arranged in order, and re-enacted as a whole. This is the legal title of the collections of compiled laws of several of the states, and also of the United States. Such a volume is usually cited as “Rev.Stat.” “Rev.Stat.,” or “R.S.” See also Code.

Revision. A re-examination or careful reading over for correction or improvement.

Revision of statutes. A "revision of law" on any subject may be a restatement of the law in a corrected or improved form, in which case the statement may be with or without material change, and is substituted for and displaces and repeals former laws relating to the same subject and within the purview of the revising statute. State v. Pitet, 69 Wyo. 478, 243 P.2d 177, 184. Such is more than a restatement of the substance thereof in different language, but implies a reexamination of them, and may constitute a restatement of the law in a corrected or improved form, in which case the statement may be with or without material change, and is substituted for and displaces and repeals the former law as it stood relating to the subjects within its purview. Elite Laundry Co. v. Dunn, 126 W.Va. 858, 30 S.E.2d 454, 458. See also Codification; Revised statutes.

Revisor of statutes. Person or body charged with revising statutes.

Revival. The process of renewing the operative force of a judgment which has remained dormant or unexecuted for so long a time that execution cannot be issued upon it without new process to reanimate it.

The act of renewing the legal force of a contract or obligation, which had ceased to be sufficient foundation for an action, on account of the running of the statute of limitations, by giving a new promise or acknowledgment of it.

A will may be revived under certain conditions if the testator revokes an instrument which purported to revoke his or her will. Many states require republication (q.v.) of the former will as a requisite to revival.

Revival of action. Under certain conditions, a cause of action barred by the statute of limitations may be brought to life again. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2415.

The substitution of the personal representative of a deceased party will revive an action and make it prosecutable by the substituted party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 17(a). Grant v. McAuliffe, 41 Cal.2d 859, 264 P.2d 944. See also e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 2404.

Revival of will. See Revival.

Revival statutes. State and federal laws which provide for the renewal of actions, wills and the legal effect of documents.

Revive. To renew, revivify; to make one's self liable for a debt barred by the statute of limitations by acknowledging it; or for a matrimonial offense, once condoned, by committing another.

Revivor, bill of. In equity practice, a bill filed for the purpose of reviving or calling into operation the proceedings in a suit when, from some circumstance (as the death of the plaintiff), the suit had abated.

Revivor, writ of. In English practice, where it became necessary to revive a judgment, by lapse of time, or change by death, etc., of the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution might sue out a writ of revivor in the form given in the act, or apply to the court for leave to enter a suggestion upon the roll that it appeared that he was entitled to have and issue execution of the judgment, such leave to be granted by the court or a judge upon a rule to show cause, or a summons, to be served according to the then present practice.

Revocable. Susceptible of being revoked, withdrawn or cancelled; e.g. revocable letter of credit.

Revocable credit. A credit which can be withdrawn or cancelled before its expiration date and without the consent of the person in whose favor it was drawn. Used in foreign trade. U.C.C. § 5-103(a).

Revocable letter of credit. Letter of credit which can be cancelled or withdrawn at any time. U.C.C. § 5-103(a).

Revocable transfer. A transfer of property whereby the transferor retains the right to recover the property. The creation of a revocable trust is an example of a revocable transfer. See IRC § 2038. See also Incomplete transfer.

Revocable trust. A trust in which the settlor reserves the right to revoke. Such provision may have tax implications depending upon the time following its creation within which the settlor may revoke.

Revocation /revakiʃeʃən/. The withdrawal or recall of some power, authority, or thing granted, or a destroying or making void of some will, deed, or offer that had been valid until revoked. In contract law, the withdrawal by the offeror of an offer that had been valid until withdrawn. It may be either general, all acts and things done before; or special, revoking a particular thing.

Revocation by act of the party is an intentional or voluntary revocation. The principal instances occur in the case of authorities and powers of attorney and wills. In contract law, the withdrawal of an offer by an offeror; unless the offer is irrevocable, it can be revoked at any time prior to acceptance without liability.

In criminal law, may refer to termination of a probation or parole order because of either a rule violation or a new offense, and forcing the offender to begin or continue serving his or her sentence.

A revocation in law, or constructive revocation, is produced by a rule of law, irrespectively of the intention of the parties. Thus, a power of attorney is in general revoked by the death of the principal. See also Abrogation; Cancel; Cancellation; Rescind.
Revolving credit. Type of consumer credit arrangement which permits a buyer or a borrower to purchase goods or secure loans on a continuing basis so long as the outstanding balance of the account does not exceed a certain limit. Loans are repaid and new loans granted in a cycle. See also Charge account; Open-end credit.

In commercial financing, binding agreement that commits a bank to make loans to a company up to a predetermined credit limit. To obtain this type of commitment from a bank, a company usually pays a commitment fee based on the unused portion of the pledged funds.

Revolving fund. A fund from which withdrawals are made either as loans or as disbursements, with the obligation of repaying the fund (with or without interest) to keep the fund intact. A fund whose amounts are continually expended and then replenished; for example, a petty cash fund.

Revolving letter of credit. A self-renewing letter of credit. The unused portion of the credit is cumulative.

Revolving loan. A loan which is expected to be renewed (i.e. turned over) at maturity.

Revocation of probate. Exists where probate of a will, having been granted, is afterwards recalled by the court of probate, on proof of a subsequent will, or other sufficient cause.

Revocation of will. The recalling, annulling or rendering inoperative an existing will, by some subsequent act of the testator, which may be by the making of a new will inconsistent with the terms of the first, or by destroying the old will, or by disposing of the property to which it related, or otherwise.

Revocation /rijvowkjetar/. Lat. It is recalled. This is the term, in English practice, appropriate to signify that a judgment is annulled or set aside for error in fact; if for error in law, it is then said to be reversed.

Revoke. To annul or make void by recalling or taking back. To cancel, rescind, repeal, or reverse, as to revoke a license or will. See also Revocation.

Revolv. A revolt goes beyond insurrection in aim, being an attempt actually to overthrow the government itself; whereas insurrection has as its objective some forcible change within the government. A large-scale revolt is called a rebellion and if it is successful it becomes a revolution. See also Insurrection; Rebellion.

The endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his will to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to some other person. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2192, 2193. See also Mutiny.

Revolution. A complete overthrow of the established government in any country or state by those who were previously subject to it. Gitlow v. Kiley, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 232. The word in its broadest significance is generally used to designate a sweeping change as applied to political change, it denotes a change in a method or system of government, or of the power which controls the government. It is frequently accomplished by or accompanied by violent acts, but it need not be violent in its methods and it does not necessarily denote force or violence. U.S. v. Foster, D.C.N.Y., 9 F.R.D. 367, 394. See Insurrection; Rebellion.

Revolutionary, adj. Pertaining to or connected with, characterized by, or of nature of, revolution. Gitlow v. Kiley, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 233.

Revolutionary, n. One who instigates or favors revolution or one taking part therein.

Revolving charge account. See Revolving credit.

Revenue Ruling. See Rev. Rul.

Revenue Procedure. See Revenue Procedure.

Revolving loan. A loan which is expected to be renewed (i.e. turned over) at maturity.

Rev. Rul. See Revenue Ruling.

Reward. A recompense or premium offered or bestowed by government or an individual in return for special or extraordinary services to be performed, or for special attainments or achievements, or for some act resulting to the benefit of the public; as, a reward for useful inventions, for the discovery and apprehension of criminals, for the restoration of lost property. That which is offered or given for some service or attainment; sum of money paid or taken for doing, or forbearing to do, some act. See also Award; Prize.

Rex /reks/. Lat. The king. The king regarded as the party prosecuting in a criminal action; as in the form of entitling such actions, "Rex v. Doe."

Rex debet esse sub lege quia lex facit regem /reks debet esiy sab ljiy kwaiya leks feysat ryjym/. The king ought to be under the law, because the law makes a king. 1 Bl.Comm. 239.

Rex est legalis et politicus /reks est lagaylas et politikas/. The king is both a legal and political person.

Rex est lex vivens /reks est leks vyvenz/. The king is the living law.

Rex est major singulis, minor universis /reks est meyjar singy/las, maynar yuwnavrasas/. The king is greater than any single person, less than all.

Rex hoc solum non potest facere quod non potest injuste agere /reks hok sowlom non powtast feysari kwod nnon powtast injastiy ajarliy/. The king can do everything but an injustice.

Rex non debit esse sub homine, sed sub deo et sut homaniy sed sab dyo et sab diyo, kwaiya leks feysat ryjym/. The king ought to be under no man, but under God and the law, because the law makes a king.
Rex non potest peccare /réks nòn pówtast pakery/. The king cannot do wrong; the king can do no wrong. An ancient and fundamental principle of the English constitution.

Rex nunquam moritur /réks nágkwam mórsár/. The king never dies.

R.F.D. Rural Free Delivery.

R.G. An abbreviation for Regula Generalis, a general rule or order of court; or for the plural of the same.

Rhandir. A part in the division of Wales before the Conquest. Every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir.

Rhodian laws /röwdiyän lóz/. The earliest code or collection of maritime laws. It was formulated by the people of the island of Rhodes, who, by their commercial prosperity and the superiority of their navies, had acquired the sovereignty of the seas. Its date is very uncertain, but is supposed (by Kent and others) to be about 900 B.C. Nothing of it is now extant except the article on jettison, which has been preserved in the Roman collections or Pandects (Dig. 14, 2; 3 Kent, Comm. 232, 233 "Lex Rhodia de Jactu."). The Lex Rhodia de Jactu provided that when the goods of an owner are thrown overboard for the safety of the ship or of the property of other owners, he becomes entitled to a ratable contribution. It has been adopted into the law of all civilized nations. Another code, under the same name, was published in more modern times, but is generally considered, by the best authorities, to be spurious.

Rial /riyál/. A piece of gold coin current for 10s., in the reign of Henry VI, at which time there were half-rials and quarter-rials or rial-farthings. In the beginning of Queen Elizabeth’s reign, golden rials were coined at 15s. a piece; and in the time of James I there were rose-rials of gold at 30s. and spur-rials at 15s.

Ribaud /riybow/. A rogue; vagrant; whoremonger; a person given to all manner of wickedness.

RICO laws. Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations laws. Federal and state laws designed to investigate, control, and prosecute organized crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq. Both criminal prosecution and civil actions may be brought under RICO statutes.

Federal RICO laws prohibit a person from engaging in activities which affect interstate or foreign commerce, including: (1) using income received from a pattern of racketeering to acquire an interest in an enterprise; (2) acquiring or maintaining an interest in an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering; (3) conducting or participating in the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering; and, (4) conspiring to commit any of the above offenses. To establish a prima facie RICO claim, a civil plaintiff or prosecutor must allege the existence of seven elements: "(1) that the defendant (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a 'pattern' (4) of 'racketeering activity' (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an 'enterprise' (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce." 18 U.S.C.A. § 1962. Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., C.A. N.Y., 719 F.2d 5, 17.

See also Pattern of racketeering activity.

Rider. A schedule or small piece of paper reflecting an amendment, addition or endorsement annexed to some part of a contract, document, insurance policy, or record. Any kind of a schedule or writing annexed to a document which cannot well be incorporated in the body of such document. Such are deemed to be incorporated into the terms of the document. Thus, in passing bills through a legislature, when a new clause or law is added after the bill has passed through committee, such new law or clause is termed a "rider." Another common example of a rider is an attachment to an insurance policy that modifies the conditions of the policy by expanding or restricting its benefits or excluding certain conditions from coverage. With the use of the rider the entire document need not to have to be rewritten or re-drafted again.

Rien culp. In old pleading, not guilty.

Rien dit. In old pleading, says nothing (nil dicit).

Riens passa per le fait. Nothing passed by the deed. A plea by which a party might avoid the operation of a deed, which had been enrolled or acknowledged in court; the plea of non est factum not being allowed in such case.

Riens per descent. Nothing by descent. The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and has no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands.

Rier county /rir kawntiy/. In old English law, after the end of the county court. A time and place appointed by the sheriff for the receipt of the king’s money after the end of his county, or county court.

Rifflare /rifleriý/. To take away anything by force.

Rigging the market. A term of the stock-exchange, denoting the practice of inflating the price of given stocks, or enhancing their quoted value, by a system of pretended purchases, designed to give the air of an unusual demand for such stocks.

Right. As a noun, and taken in an abstract sense, means justice, ethical correctness, or consonance with the rules of law or the principles of morals. In this significance it answers to one meaning of the Latin "jus," and serves to indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. As a noun, and taken in a concrete sense, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person and incident upon another. Rights are defined generally as "powers of free action." And the primal rights pertaining to men are enjoyed by human beings purely as such, being grounded in personality, and existing antecedently to their recognition by positive law. But leaving the abstract moral sphere, and giving to the term a juristic content, a "right" is well defined as "a capacity residing in one man of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of others."

As an adjective, the term "right" means just, morally correct, consonant with ethical principles or rules of positive law. It is the opposite of wrong, unjust, illegal.

A power, privilege, or immunity guaranteed under a constitution, statutes or decisional laws, or claimed as a result of long usage. See Bill of rights; Civil liberties; Civil Rights Acts; Natural rights.

In a narrower signification, an interest or title in an object of property; a just and legal claim to hold, use, or enjoy it, or to convey or donate it, as he may please.

A legally enforceable claim of one person against another, that the other shall do a given act, or shall not do a given act. Restatement of the Law of Property, § 1.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from him, or not in his possession. In this sense "right" has the force of "claim," and is properly expressed by the Latin "jus."

See also Conditional right; Correlative rights; Droit; Jus; Justice; Natural rights; Power; Recht; Vested rights.

General Classification

Rights may be described as perfect or imperfect, according as their action or scope is clear, settled, and determinate, or is vague and unfixed.

Rights are also either in personam or in rem. A right in personam is one which imposes an obligation on a definite person. A right in rem is one which imposes an obligation on persons generally; i.e., either on all the world or on all the world except certain determinate persons. Thus, if I am entitled to exclude all persons from a given piece of land, I have a right in rem in respect of that land; and, if there are one or more persons, A., B., and C., whom I am not entitled to exclude from it, my right is still a right in rem.

Rights may also be described as either primary or secondary. Primary rights are those which can be created without reference to rights already existing. Secondary rights can only arise for the purpose of protecting or enforcing primary rights. They are either preventive (protective) or remedial (reparative).

Preventive or protective secondary rights exist in order to prevent the infringement or loss of primary rights. They are judicial when they require the assistance of a court of law for their enforcement, and extrajudicial when they are capable of being exercised by the party himself. Remedial or reparative secondary rights are also either judicial or extrajudicial. They may further be divided into (1) rights of restitution or restoration, which entitle the person injured to be replaced in his original position; (2) rights of enforcement, which entitle the person injured to the performance of an act by the person bound; and (3) rights of satisfaction or compensation.

With respect to the ownership of external objects of property, rights may be classed as absolute and qualified. An absolute right gives to the person in whom it inheres the uncontrolled dominion over the object at all times and for all purposes. A qualified right gives the possessor a right to the object for certain purposes or under certain circumstances only. Such is the right of a bailee to recover the article bailed when it has been unlawfully taken from him by a stranger.

Rights are also either legal or equitable. The former is the case where the person seeking to enforce the right for his own benefit has the legal title and a remedy at law. The latter are such as are enforceable only in equity; as, at the suit of ceusti que trust. Procedurally, under Rules of Civil Procedure, both legal and equitable rights are enforced in the same court under a single cause of action.

Constitutional Rights

There is also a classification of rights, with respect to the constitution of civil society. Thus, according to Blackstone, "the rights of persons, considered in their natural capacities, are of two sorts,—absolute and relative; absolute, which are such as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or single persons; relative, which are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other." 1 Bl.Comm. 123.

Rights are also classified in constitutional law as natural, civil, and political, to which there is sometimes added the class of "personal rights."

Natural rights are those which grow out of the nature of man and depend upon personality, as distinguished from such as are created by law and depend upon civilized society; or they are those which are plainly assured by natural law; or those which, by fair deduction from the present physical, moral, social, and religious characteristics of man, he must be invested with, and which he ought to have realized for him in a jural society, in order to fulfill the ends to which his nature calls him. Such are the rights of life, liberty, privacy, and good reputation.

Civil rights are such as belong to every citizen of the state or country, or, in a wider sense, to all its inhabitants, and are not connected with the organization or administration of government. They include the rights of property, marriage, equal protection of the laws, freedom of contract, trial by jury, etc. Or, as otherwise defined, civil rights are rights appertaining to a person by virtue of his citizenship in a state or community. Such term may also refer, in its very general sense, to rights capable of being enforced or redressed in a civil action. Also, a term applied to certain rights secured to Right in court.

See Rectus in curia.

Right in action. This is a phrase frequently used in Right and wrong test. Under this test of criminal responsibility, if, at the time of committing an act, the party was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality thereof, that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong, he should not be held criminally responsible for his act. State v. Wallace, 170 Or. 60, 131 P.2d 222, 229, 230. See Insanity with respect to other criminal responsibility defenses. See also M'Naghten Rule.

Right in action. This is a phrase frequently used in place of chose in action, and having an identical meaning.

Right in court. See Rectus in curia.

Right of contribution. See Contribution.

Right of entry. The right of taking or resuming possession of land by entering on it in a peaceable manner.

Right of first refusal. Right to meet terms of proposed contract before it is executed; e.g. right to have first opportunity to purchase real estate when such becomes available, or right to meet any other offer. The holder of such a right has the option to purchase the grantor's real estate on the terms and conditions of sale contained in a bona fide offer by a third party to purchase such real estate, provided it is an offer that the grantor is otherwise willing to accept. See also Option.

Right of local self-government. Power of citizens to govern themselves, as to matters purely local in nature, through officers of their own selection. City of Ardmore v. Excise Board of Carter County, 155 Okl. 126, 8 P.2d 2, 11. See Home rule.

Right of possession. Right which may reside in one person while another has the actual possession, being the right to enter and turn out such actual occupant; e.g. the right of a disseisee; right of ejectment or eviction. An apparent right of possession is one which may be defeated by a better right; an actual right of possession is one which will stand the test against all opponents. See also Repossession.

Right of property. The mere right of property in land; the abstract right which remains to the owner after he has lost the right of possession, and to recover which the writ of right was given. United with possession, and the right of possession, this right constitutes a complete title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments.

Right of publicity. The right of individual, especially public figure or celebrity, to control commercial value and exploitation of his name or picture or likeness or to prevent others from unfairly appropriating that value for their commercial benefit. Presley's Estate v. Rus sen, D.C.N.J., 513 F.Supp. 1339, 1353.

Right of redemption. The right to rescind property or to free it from a claim or lien; specifically, the right (granted by statute only) to free property from the encumbrance of a foreclosure or other judicial sale, or to recover the title passing thereby, by paying what is due, with interest, costs, etc. Not to be confused with the "equity of redemption," which exists independently of statute but must be exercised before sale. See also Redemption.

Right of subrogation. The right of a person to substitute one person in the place of another, giving the...
RIGHT OF SUBROGATION

RIGHT OF SURVIVORSHIP. The right of survivor of a deceased person to the property of said deceased. A distinguishing characteristic of a joint tenancy relationship. Upon the death of any joint tenant, the deceased tenant's interest passes, not to the tenant's lawfully designated beneficiaries or heirs, but to the surviving joint tenants. See also Tenancy (Joint tenancy; Tenancy by the entirety).

RIGHT OF WAY. Term used to describe a right belonging to a party to pass over land of another, but it is also used to describe that strip of land upon which railroad companies construct their road bed, and, when so used, the term refers to the land itself, not the right of passage over it. Bouche v. Wagner, 206 Or. 621, 293 P.2d 203, 209.

As used with reference to right to pass over another's land, it is only an easement; and grantee acquires only right to a reasonable and usual enjoyment thereof with owner of soil retaining rights and benefits of ownership consistent with the easement. Minneapolis Athletic Club v. Kohler, 287 Minn. 254, 177 N.W.2d 786, 789. See also Easement.

"Right of way" is also used to refer to a preference of one of two vehicles, or as between a vehicle and a pedestrian, asserting right of passage at the same place and time, but it is not an absolute right in the sense that possessor thereof is relieved from duty of exercising due care for his own safety and that of others. Cheramie v. Scott, Tex.Civ.App., 324 S.W.2d 87, 90.

With respect to intersections, the term has been described as the right of one driver to cross before the other; and it has been defined by statute as the right of a vehicle to proceed uninterruptedly in a lawful manner in the direction in which it is moving in preference to another vehicle approaching from a different direction into its path. The "right-of-way rule" is simply a rule of precedence as to which of two users of intersecting highways shall have the immediate right of crossing first at an intersection where the users simultaneously approach the intersection on the intersecting streets so nearly at the same time and at such rates of speed that, if they proceed without regard to each other, a collision or interference between them is reasonably to be apprehended.

RIGHT PATENT. An old English writ, which was brought for lands and tenements, and not for an advowson, or common, and lay only for an estate in fee-simple, and not for him who had a lesser estate; as tenant in tail, tenant in frank marriage, or tenant for life.

RIGHTS OFFERING. The sale of new shares of common stock by distributing stock purchase rights to a firm's existing shareholders. This is also termed a privileged subscription. See also Rights, stock.

RIGHTS, PETITION OF. See Petition.

RIGHTS, STOCK. Short term options to purchase shares from an issuer at a fixed price. Rights are often issued as a substitute for a dividend or as a "sweetener" in connection with the issuance of senior or debt securities. Rights are often publicly traded. Compare Warranty. See also Rights offering; Stock (Stock rights).

RIGHT TO ATTORNEY. See Counsel, right to.

RIGHT TO DIE LAWS. Cases and statutes which recognize in some instances the right of a dying person to decline extraordinary treatment to prolong life, or right of person's guardian to request such. Clear and convincing proof of patients' wishes is required. See Cruzan v. Director, Missouri Dept. of Health, 110 S.Ct. ___ (1990). See also Death (Natural death acts); Life sustaining procedures; Will (Living will).

RIGHT TO KNOW ACTS. Federal and state legislation requiring disclosure by certain businesses (e.g., chemical manufacturers) to the public and to workers of information about hazardous substances in order that such persons might learn the full range of risks they face concerning their employment and living conditions.

RIGHT TO REDEEM. See Right of redemption.

RIGHT TO TRAVEL. Basic constitutional right exemplified in case of persons applying for welfare assistance in a state in which they have not resided for a prescribed period of time. It is said that to deny such a right to such persons is to inhibit their right to travel and hence to deny them equal protection of the law. Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600.

RIGHT TO WORK LAWS. Such state laws (as permitted by Sec. 14(b) of the National Labor Relations Act) that provide in general that employees are not to be required to join a union as a condition of receiving or retaining a job. The wording of these state statutes (existing in about 20 states) vary, with some states generally barring discrimination in employment so as to encourage union membership, others more vaguely barring an employment "monopoly" by a labor union, but most expressly barring the requirement of union membership (or paying dues to a union) as a condition of employment. See also Open shop.

RIGOR JURIS /rigor juras/. Lat. Strictness of law. Distinguished from gratia curiae, favor of the court.

RIGOR MORTIS /rigor mortis/. Cadaveric rigidity; a rigidity or stiffening of the muscular tissue and joints of the body, which sets in at a greater or less interval after death, but usually within a few hours, and which is one of the recognized tests of death.

RING. A clique; an exclusive combination of persons for control of the market or the stock-exchange, engage in criminal acts, etc.

RINGING THE CHANGES. A larceny effected by tendering a large bill or coin in payment of a small purchase and after correct change has been given, asking for other change and repeating the request until in the confusion of mind created by so many operations, more money is obtained than the thief is entitled to.
Riotous assembly. In old English criminal law, the rioter. One who encourages, promotes, or takes part in riot, but shall not be deemed to mean the mere oral or written (1) advocacy of ideas or (2) expression of belief, not involving advocacy of any act or acts of violence or assertion of the rightness of, or the right to commit, any such act or acts. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2102(b).

See also Unlawful assembly.

Riotous assembly. In old English criminal law, the unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more, to the disturbance of the peace, and not dispersing upon proclamation. 4 Bl.Comm. 142. See also Unlawful assembly.

Riparian /raperiyan/. Belonging or relating to the bank of a river or stream; of or on the bank. Land lying beyond the natural watershed of a stream is not “riparian.” The term is sometimes used as relating to the shore of the sea or other tidal water, or of a lake or other considerable body of water not having the character of a watercourse. But this is not accurate. The proper word to be employed in such connections is “littoral.”

Riparian land. Land so situated with respect to a body of water that, because of such location, the possessor of the land is entitled to the benefits incident to the use of the water. Mayer v. Grueber, 29 Wis.2d 168, 138 N.W.2d 197, 202. Parcel of land which includes therein a part of or is bounded by a natural watercourse. Thompson v. Enz, 379 Mich. 667, 154 N.W.2d 473, 478. See Riparian; Riparian owner.

Riparian lease. The written instrument setting forth the terms, conditions, and the date of expiration of the rights to use lands lying between the high water mark and the low water mark.

Riparian owner. One who owns land on bank of river, or one who is owner of land along, bordering upon, bounded by, fronting upon, abutting or adjacent and contiguous to and in contact with river. State ex rel. Buckson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Del.Super., 228 A.2d 587, 594.

Riparian proprietor. An owner of land, bounded generally upon a stream or river of water, and as such having a qualified property in the soil to the thread of the stream or river with the privileges annexed thereto by law. Potomac Steamboat Co. v. Upper Potomac Steamboat Co., 109 U.S. 672, 3 S.Ct. 445, 27 L.Ed. 1070.

Riparian rights. The rights of the owners of lands on the banks of watercourses, relating to the water, its use, ownership of soil under the stream, accretions, etc. Term is generally defined as the right which every person through whose land a natural watercourse runs has to benefit of stream as it passes through his land for all useful purposes to which it may be applied. People ex rel. State Water Resources Control Bd. v. Forni, 54 Cal.App.3d 743, 126 Cal.Rptr. 851, 857. Such rights include those such as hunting, fishing, boating, sailing, irrigating, and growing and harvesting wild rice, which rights extend over lakes and wetlands. Application of Cent. Baptist Theological Seminary, Minn.App., 370 N.W.2d 642, 646. See also Water (Water rights).

Riparian water. Water which is below the highest line of normal flow of the river or stream, as distinguished from flood water. See also Water (Water rights).

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis /raperam yuwzas pablakas êst jùriy jénshiyam, akat ipsáay fluwmanas/. The use of river-banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself.

Ripe for judgment. An action that is so far advanced, by verdict, default, confession, the determination of all pending motions, or other disposition of preliminary or disputed matters, that nothing remains for the court but to render the appropriate judgment. A case is ripe for decision by an appellate court if the legal issues involved are clear enough and well enough evolved and presented so that a clear decision can come out of the case.
Ripeness doctrine. The principle that the federal courts require an actual, present controversy, and therefore will not act when the issue is only hypothetical or the existence of a controversy merely speculative. The constitutional mandate of case or controversy, U.S. Const. Art. III, requires an appellate court to consider whether a case has matured or ripened into a controversy worthy of adjudication before it will determine the same.

The question in each case is whether there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment. Lake Carriers’ Ass’n v. MacMullan, 406 U.S. 498, 92 S.Ct. 1749, 32 L.Ed.2d 257.

Basic rationale of “ripeness doctrine” arising out of courts’ reluctance to apply declaratory judgment and injunctive remedies unless administrative determinations arise in context of a controversy ripe for judicial resolution, is to prevent courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties, and court is required to evaluate both fitness of issues for judicial decision and hardship to parties of withholding court consideration. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 1515, 18 L.Ed.2d 681.

See Case (Cases and controversies), Final decision rule; Justiciable controversy; Standing.

Rising of court. Properly the final adjournment of the court for the term, though the term is also sometimes used to express the cessation of judicial business for the day or for a recess; it is the opposite of “sitting” or “session.” This term is generally obsolete.

Risk. In insurance law, the danger or hazard of a loss of the property insured; the casualty contemplated in a contract of insurance; the degree of hazard; a specified contingency or peril; and, colloquially, the specific house, factory, ship, etc., covered by the policy. Hazard, danger, peril, exposure to loss, injury, disadvantage or destruction, and comprises all elements of danger. Knox Jewelry Co., Inc. v. Cincinnati Ins. Co., 130 Ga. App. 519, 203 S.E.2d 739, 740.

In general, the element of uncertainty in an undertaking; the possibility that actual future returns will deviate from expected returns. Risk may be moral, physical or economic.

Risk of loss in commercial sales contracts as between buyer and seller is governed by U.C.C. § 2-509 (e.g., financial responsibility for damage or destruction of property when transferred between seller and buyer). See also Assumption of risk; Ex ship; Incurred risk.

Obvious risk. See Obvious.

Ordinary risk. See Ordinary.

Risk arbitrage. A strategy employed in takeover situations in which shares of a corporation that is about to be taken over are bought, while shares of the acquiring corporation that are to be exchanged are sold short or on a when-issued basis.

Risk capital. Money or property invested in a business venture, generally in exchange for common stock in a business, or capital in a partnership, as distinguished from loans or bonded indebtedness. See also Seed money; Venture capital.

Risk capital test. Under this test, for determination of whether an investment is a security in the form of an investment contract, requires consideration of whether funds are being raised for business venture or enterprise, whether transaction is offered indiscriminately to the public at large, whether investors are substantially powerless to affect success of enterprise, and whether investors’ money is substantially at risk because it is inadequately secured. Moreland v. Department of Corporations, 5 Dist., 194 C.A.3d 506, 239 Cal.Rptr. 558, 566.

Risk incident to employment. Within worker’s compensation acts, one growing out of or connected with what worker must do in fulfilling his or her contract of service, and may be either ordinary risk, directly connected with employment, or extraordinary risk indirectly connected with employment because of its special nature.

Risk premium. Extra compensation paid to an employee or extra interest paid to a lender, over amounts usually considered normal, in return for their undertaking to engage in activities more risky than normal.

River. A natural stream of water, of greater volume than a creek or rivulet, flowing in a more or less permanent bed or channel, between defined banks or walls, with a current which may either be continuous in one direction or affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. Public river. A river capable in its natural state of some useful service to the public because of its existence as such, navigability being not the sole test. St. Regis Paper Co. v. New Hampshire Water Resources Board, 92 N.H. 164, 26 A.2d 832, 838.

River banks. The boundaries which confine the water to its channel throughout the entire width when stream is carrying its maximum quantity of water. Mammoth Gold Dredging Co. v. Forbes, 39 Cal.App.2d 739, 104 P.2d 131, 137.

R.L. This abbreviation may stand either for “Revised Laws” or “Roman law.”

Road. A highway; an open way or public passage; a line of travel or communication extending from one town or place to another; a strip of land appropriated and used for purposes of travel and communication between different places. See also Highway.

In maritime law, an open passage of the sea that receives its denomination commonly from some part.
adjacent, which, though it lie out at sea, yet, in respect of the situation of the land adjacent, and the depth and wideness of the place, is a safe place for the common riding or anchoring of ships.

Law of the road. Custom or practice which has become crystallized into accepted system of rules regulating travel on highways. Short v. Robinson, 280 Ky. 707, 134 S.W.2d 594, 596. It relates to safety of travel, and is adjustment of rights of travelers using highway at same time. For example, "law of the road" refers to the rule which requires that vehicles meeting shall keep to the right of the middle of the highway. See also Right of way.

Public road. A highway; a road or way established and adopted (or accepted as a dedication) by the proper authorities for the use of the general public, and over which every person has a right to pass and to use it for all purposes of travel or transportation to which it is adapted and devoted. The proper test in determining whether road is a "public" or "private road" is use to which such roadway is put, and fact that road has been constructed at public expense is not conclusive. Kitchens v. Duffield, 83 Ohio App. 41, 76 N.E.2d 101, 105, 38 O.O. 142.

Road districts. Public or quasi municipal corporations organized or authorized by statutory authority in many of the states for the special purpose of establishing, maintaining, and caring for public roads and highways within their limits, sometimes invested with powers of local taxation, and generally having elective officers styled "overseers" or "commissioners" of roads.

Rob. To take personality in possession of another from his person or his presence, feloniously and against his will, by violence or by putting him in fear. People v. Flohr, 30 Cal.App.2d 576, 86 P.2d 862, 864. See Robbery.

Robbery. Felonious taking of money, personal property, or any other article of value, in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear. People v. Eddy, 123 Cal.App.2d 826, 268 P.2d 47, 51.

A person is guilty of robbery if, in the course of committing a theft, he: (a) inflicts serious bodily injury upon another; or (b) threatens another with or purposely puts him in fear of immediate serious bodily injury; or (c) commits or threatens immediately to commit any felony of the first or second degree. An act shall be deemed "in the course of committing a theft" if it occurs in an attempt to commit theft or in flight after the attempt or commission. Model Penal Code, § 222.1.

Most jurisdictions today divide robbery, for purposes of punishment, into simple robbery and aggravated robbery, the principal example of the latter being "armed" robbery.

For various types of federal crimes involving robbery, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 2111 et seq. See also Assault; Armed robbery; Hobbs Act. Compare Burglary; Theft.

Aggravated robbery. A robbery committed by a person who is armed with a dangerous weapon or who inflicts bodily harm upon any person in the course of such robbery. See also Armed robbery.

Highway robbery. The crime of robbery committed upon or near a public highway. The felonious and forcible taking of property from the person of another on a highway. It differs from robbery in general only in the place where it is committed. Robbery by hold-up originally applied to the stopping and robbery of traveling parties, but the term has acquired a broader meaning. It has come to be applied to robbery in general, by the use of force or putting in fear. See Hijacking.

Robinson-Patman Act. Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1936 by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 13) makes it unlawful for any seller engaged in commerce to directly or indirectly discriminate in the price charged purchasers on the sale of commodities of like grade and quality where the effect may be to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who grants or knowingly receives a discrimination, or the customer of either. See also Price discrimination.

Rod. A lineal measure of 5½ yards or 16½ feet; otherwise called a "perch." See also Land measure.

Rogationes, questiones, et positiones debent esse simplices. Demands, questions, and claims ought to be simple.

Rogatio testium. This in making a nuncupative will, is where the testator formally calls upon the persons present to bear witness that he has declared his will.

Rogator. In Roman law, the proposer of a law or rogation.

Rogatory letters. A commission from one judge to another in a foreign country requesting him to examine a witness. See Fed.R.Civil P. 28(b); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1781. See also Letters rogatory.

Rogue. An idle and disorderly person; a trickster; a wandering beggar; a vagrant or vagabond; a scoundrel. 4 Bl.Comm. 169.

Roll, n. Record of the proceedings of a court or public office. See Judgment roll, below.

A register; list of persons belonging to particular group. See also Roster.

In taxation, the list or record of taxable persons and property, as compiled by assessors. See Tax roll, below.

Judgment roll. Such is required to be filed in certain states by the clerk when he enters judgment. It normally contains the summons, pleadings, admissions, and each judgment and each order involving the merits or necessarily affecting the final judgment. New York C.P.L.R. § 5017. In the federal and most state courts, Roomer. A lodger; one who rents a room or rooms.

Root of descent. The same as "stock of descent."

Rood of land. The fourth part of an acre in square measure, or one thousand two hundred and ten square yards.

Roll-over paper. Short term notes which may be extended (rolled over) or converted to installment payments, after the initial due date.

Roman Catholic Church. The juristic personality of the Roman Catholic Church, with the right to sue and to take and hold property has been recognized by all systems of European law from the fourth century. It was formally recognized between Spain and the Papacy by Spanish laws from the beginning of the settlements in the Indies, also by our treaty with Spain in 1898, whereby its property rights were solemnly safeguarded. Municipalities of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, 210 U.S. 296, 28 S.Ct. 737, 52 L.Ed. 1068; Santos v. Roman Catholic Church, 212 U.S. 463, 29 S.Ct. 338, 53 L.Ed. 599.

Roman law. In a general sense, comprehends all the laws which prevailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the collections of Justinian. In a more restricted sense, the Germans understand by this term merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them.

In England and America, it appears to be customary to use the phrase, indifferentily with "the civil law," to designate the whole system of Roman jurisprudence, including the Corpus Juris Civilis; or, if any distinction is drawn, the expression "civil law" denotes the system of jurisprudence obtaining in those countries of continental Europe which have derived their juridical notions from the Justinian collection, while "Roman law" is reserved as the proper appellation of the body of law developed under the government of Rome from the earliest times to the fall of the empire. See Civil law.

sense a share of products or proceeds therefrom, reserved to owner of land for permitting another to use the property. Barry v. Frizzell, Okl., 371 P.2d 460, 464.

In patent law, signifies sums paid to owner of a patent for its use or for the right to operate under it, and may also refer to obligation giving rise to the right to such sums. Taylor v. Peck, 160 Ohio St. 288, 116 N.E.2d 417, 418.

See also Minimum royalty clause; Overriding royalty; Shut-in royalty.

Reasonable royalty. Under patent law, a “reasonable royalty” is that amount which the trier of facts estimates a person desiring to use a patent right would be willing to pay for its use and a patent owner desiring to license the patent would be willing to accept. University Computing Co. v. Lykes-Youngstown Corp., C.A.Ga., 504 F.2d 518, 538.

Overriding royalty. A retained royalty by a lessee when the property is subleased. Common in oil and gas leases.

Royalty acres. That part of the oil that goes to landowner, whether it be in place or after production. Dickens v. Tisdale, 204 Ark. 838, 164 S.W.2d 990, 992.

Roy est l’original de tous franchises. The king is the origin of all franchises.

Roy n’est lie per ascun statute si il ne soit expressement nosmee. The king is not bound by any statute, unless expressly named.

Roy poet dispenser ove malum prohibitum, mais non malum per se. The king can grant a dispensation for a malum prohibitum, but not for a malum per se.

R.S. An abbreviation for "Revised Statutes."

Rubber check. Slang for a check which has been returned by the drawee bank because of insufficient funds in the account of the drawer.

Rudeness. Roughness; incivility; violence. Touching another with rudeness may constitute a battery.

Rule, v. To command or require by a rule of court; as, to rule the sheriff to return the writ, to rule the defendant to plead, to rule against an objection to evidence. To settle or decide a point of law arising upon a trial, and, when it is said of a judge presiding at such a trial that he “ruled” so and so, it is meant that he laid down, settled, or decided such and such to be the law.

Rule, n. An established standard, guide, or regulation. Prescribed guide for conduct or action, regulation or principle. State ex rel. Villines v. Freeman, Okl., 370 P.2d 307, 309. A principle or regulation set up by authority, prescribing or directing action or forbearance; as, the rules of a legislative body, of a company, court, public office, of the law, of ethics. Precept attaching a definite detailed legal consequence to a definite detailed state of facts.

An order made by a court, at the instance of one of the parties to a suit, commanding a ministerial officer, or the opposite party, to do some act, or to show cause why some act should not be done. It is usually upon some interlocutory matter. See also Decree; Order.

For purposes of the Administrative Procedure Act, includes each agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect that implements, interprets, or prescribes law or policy. Vega v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., Inc., 67 Haw. 148, 682 P.2d 73, 78.

A rule of law. Thus, we speak of the rule against perpetuities; the Rule in Shelley’s Case, etc. See also Rule of law, below.

Rule absolute. One which commands the subject-matter of the rule to be forthwith enforced. It is common, for example, when the party has failed to show sufficient cause against a rule nisi, to “make the rule absolute,” i.e., imperative and final.

Rule against perpetuities. Principle that no interest in property is good unless it must vest, if at all, not later than 21 years, plus period of gestation, after some life or lives in being at time of creation of interest. Perkins v. Iglehart, 183 Md. 520, 39 A.2d 672, 676; St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Bassett, 337 Mo. 604, 85 S.W.2d 559, 575. The “rule against perpetuities” prohibits the granting of an estate which will not necessarily vest within a time limited by a life or lives then in being and 21 years thereafter together with the period of gestation necessary to cover cases of posthumous birth. Nelson v. Mercantile Trust Co., Mo., 335 S.W.2d 167, 172.

This common law rule or principle has been modified by statute in certain states; e.g. under some statutes an inquiry may be made as to whether the gift did vest in fact within the period. If it actually vested, it will be upheld. Under original rule, the inquiry was whether it must vest by its terms. See e.g. M.G.L.A. c. 184A (Mass.).

See also Perpetuity.

Rule in Shelley's Case. See Shelley's Case, Rule in.

Rule nisi. A rule which will become imperative and final unless cause be shown against it. This rule commands the party to show cause why he should not be compelled to do the act required, or why the object of the rule should not be enforced. An ex parte order directing the other party to show cause why such a temporary order should not become permanent.

Rule of apportionment. Rule that, where subdivided tract contains more or less than aggregate amount called for, excess or deficiency is apportioned among several tracts.

Rule of four. Working rule devised by Supreme Court for determining if a case is deserving of review; the theory being that if four justices find that a legal question of general importance is raised, that is ample proof that the question has such importance. Rogers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., Ill., 352 U.S. 521, 77 S.Ct. 459, 478, 1 L.Ed.2d 515.
Rule of law. A legal principle, of general application, sanctioned by the recognition of authorities, and usually expressed in the form of a maxim or logical proposition. Called a "rule," because in doubtful or unforeseen cases it is a guide or norm for their decision. The rule of law, sometimes called "the supremacy of law," provides that decisions should be made by the application of known principles or laws without the intervention of discretion in their application. See e.g. Rule against perpetuities, above; also, Shelley's Case, Rule in. See also Stare decisis.

Rule of lenity. Where the intention of Congress is not clear from the act itself and reasonable minds might differ as to its intention, the court will adopt the less harsh meaning. U.S. v. Callanan, D.C.Mo., 173 F.Supp. 98, 100. The judicial doctrine by which courts decline to interpret criminal statutes so as to increase penalty imposed, absent clear evidence of legislative intent to do otherwise; in other words, where there is ambiguity in a criminal statute, doubts are resolved in favor of defendant. State v. Stephens, 22 Wash.App. 548, 591 P.2d 827, 832. Under "rule of lenity," statute establishing penalty which is susceptible of more than one meaning should be construed so as to provide most lenient penalty. State v. Andrews, Alaska App., 707 P.2d 900, 907.

Rule of necessity. While a judge should disqualify himself when called upon to decide a matter in which he has a direct interest, if he is the only judge with power to hear and determine the matter, the rule of necessity requires that he hear it. Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 40 S.Ct. 550, 64 L.Ed. 887.

Rule of presumption. Rule changes one of burdens of proof, that is, it declares that main fact will be inferred or assumed from some other fact until evidence to contrary is introduced. Barrett v. U.S., C.A.Ga., 322 F.2d 292, 294. See Presumption.

Rule of reason. Under "rule of reason" test for determining whether alleged acts violated § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act [15 U.S.C.A. § 1], which declares conspiracies in restraint of trade to be illegal, fact finder must weigh all circumstances of the case to decide whether practice unreasonably restrains competition, and the test requires that plaintiff show anticompetitive effects, or actual harm to competition, and not whether the practices were unfair or tortious. Richard Hoffman Corp. v. Integrated Bldg. Systems, D.C.II., 610 F.Supp. 19, 22. Under the "rule of reason" in antitrust law the legality of restraints on trade is determined by weighing all the factors of the case such as the history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy and the purpose or end sought to be attained. U.S. v. National Soc. of Professional Engineers, D.C.D.C., 404 F.Supp. 457, 463.

To constitute a crime under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, the defendant's conduct must result in an unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce. It is for the jury to determine from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, including the economic conditions of the industry and the effect on competition, whether defendants' conduct creates an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 S.Ct. 502, 55 L.Ed. 619; Best Advertising Corp. v. Illinois Bell Tel. Co., C.A.II., 339 F.2d 1095; Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S.Ct. 347, 15 L.Ed. 2d 247. The "rule of reason" test is not however applied in instances of per se antitrust violations; e.g. price-fixing. Compare Per se doctrine; Per se violations.

Rule of road. See Right of way; Road.

Rule to show cause. A rule commanding the party to appear and show cause why he should not be compelled to do the act required, or why the object of the rule should not be enforced; a rule nisi (q.v.). See Show cause order.

Rulemaking power. Congress has from time to time conferred upon the Supreme Court power to prescribe rules of procedure to be followed by the lower trial and appellate courts of the United States. Pursuant to these statutes (28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2071-2075, re Civil, Criminal, Appellate, Bankruptcy, Evidence Rules) there are now in force rules promulgated by the Court to govern civil and criminal cases in the district courts, bankruptcy courts, courts of appeals, and proceedings before U.S. magistrates. Certain other federal courts are empowered to enact their own rules of court (e.g., Tax Court, 26 U.S.C.A. § 7453). See also Rules Enabling Act of 1934.

Rule of 72. Used to determine number of years it will take to double money when earning compound interest (interest rate paid on principal is divided into 72).

Rule of 78. Method of computing refunds of unearned finance charges on early payment of loan so that refund is proportional to the monthly unpaid balance. 78 is the sum of the digits of one to twelve, i.e., the number of months in a one-year installment contract.

Rules of court. Such regulate practice and procedure before the various courts; e.g. Rules of Civil, Criminal, or Appellate Procedure; Rules of Evidence. In most jurisdictions, these rules are issued by the court itself, or by the highest court in that jurisdiction, while in others, such are adopted or enacted by the legislature. See also Court rule; Rulemaking power.

Rules of Decision Act. See Section 34 of the Judiciary Act of 1789—the famous Rules of Decision Act—provided that "the laws of the several states, except where the constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply." The statute has remained substantially unchanged to this day. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1652.

Rules of Evidence. See Rules of court which govern the admissibility of evidence at trials and hearings; e.g. Federal Rules of Evidence (applicable in U.S. district courts and federal bankruptcy courts); Uniform Rules of Evidence; Maine Rules of Evidence; California Evidence Code. See Federal Rules of Evidence.

Rules of Civil Procedure. The Model Rules of Professional Conduct of the American Bar Association set standards for such matters as client-lawyer relationships, fees, conflict of interest, role of lawyer as counselor and advocate, transactions with persons other than clients, responsibilities of law firms and associations, public service, and dissemination of information about legal services (including advertising). Such Rules replaced the former ABA Code of Professional Responsibility.

Rule 10b-5. This Rule of the Securities and Exchange Commission makes it unlawful, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security, to make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of circumstances under which they were made, not misleading. See also Sec. 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78j(b). See also Insider; Material fact.

Ruling. A judicial or administrative interpretation of a provision of a statute, order, regulation, or ordinance; e.g. Revenue Rulings. May also refer to judicial determination of admissibility of evidence, allowance of motion, etc. See also Decree; Order; Rule.

Rumor. A current story passing from one person to another without any known authority for the truth of it. Such are not generally admissible in evidence.

Run, v. To have currency or legal validity in a prescribed territory; as, the writ runs throughout the county.

To have applicability or legal effect during a prescribed period of time; as, the statute of limitations has run against the claim.

To follow or accompany; to be attached to another thing in pursuance of a prescribed course or direction; as, the covenant runs with the land.

To conduct, manage, carry on.

Run, n. A watercourse of small size. In business, a continuous round of manufacturing. In banking, a widespread and sudden withdrawal of deposits from a bank because of fear of the bank's collapse.

Runaway shop. An employer who moves his business to another location or temporarily closes his business for anti-union purposes.

Runner. Person who solicits business for attorney from accident victims. Also means a person employed by a bail bondsman for the purpose of assisting the bail bondsman in presenting the defendant in court when required, or to assist in apprehension and surrender of defendant to the court, or keeping defendant under necessary surveillance, or to execute bonds on behalf of the licensed bondsman when the power of attorney has been duly recorded. See also Ambulance chaser.

Running account. An open unsettled account, as distinguished from a stated and liquidated account. Running accounts mean mutual accounts and reciprocal demands between the parties, which accounts and demands remain open and unsettled. See also Charge account; Revolving credit.

Running at large. Refers to candidate for public office who seeks election from entire town or city and not just from one ward or district. Term is also applied to wandering or straying animals.

Running days. Days counted in their regular succession on the calendar, including Sundays and holidays.

Running of the statute of limitations. A metaphorical expression, by which is meant that the time specified in the statute of limitations is considered as having passed and hence the action is barred. United States v. Markowitz, D.C.Cal., 34 F.Supp. 827, 829.

Running policy. One which contemplates successive insurances, and which provides that the object of the policy may be from time to time defined, especially as to the subjects of insurance, by additional statements or indorsements.

Running with the land. Praxe referring generally to covenants that pass with transfer of the land. A covenant is said to run with the land when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that land. Usually concerned with easements and covenants.

Running with the reversion. A covenant is said to run with the reversion when either the liability to perform it... or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that reversion.

Rural. Concerning the country, as opposed to urban (concerning the city).

Rusticum judicium /ʁastakam juwdish(iy)am/. Lat. In maritime law, a rough or rude judgment or decision. A judgment in admiralty dividing the damages caused by a collision between the two ships.

Rustler. Cattle thief.

Rustling. Larceny of cattle.

---

Ruta /ruwta/. Lat. In the civil law, things extracted from land; as sand, chalk, coal, and such other matters.

Ruta et cesa /ruwta et siyza/. In the civil law, things dug (as sand and lime), and things cut (as wood, coal, etc.).

Rylands v. Fletcher case. The early English case which is the progenitor of the doctrine of absolute liability for abnormally dangerous things and activities. 3 H.L. 330. See Strict liability.
S. As an abbreviation, this letter stands for "section," "statute," and various other words of which it is the initial.

S-1. A form that must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission before a company's securities may be listed and traded on a national securities exchange. See Registration of securities.

Sabbath. One of the names of the first day of the week; more properly called "Sunday" (q.v.). The day of rest and religious worship. Named in the Ten Commandments as Saturday, the seventh day, and observed thereon by the Jews and some Christian sects; but observed on Sunday, the first day, by most Christian churches.

Sabbath-breaking. The offense of violating the laws prescribed for the observance of Sunday; i.e. violation of Sunday closing laws (Blue-laws).

Sabotage /səbəˈtāzh/. Term has reference to the wilful destruction or injury of, or defective production of, war material or national-defense material, or harm to war premises or war utilities. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2151 et seq. Term also refers to wilful and malicious destruction of employer's property during a labor dispute or interference with his normal operations. Burns v. U. S., 274 U.S. 328, 47 S.Ct. 650, 71 L.Ed. 1077.

Sac /sæk/. In old English law, a liberty of holding pleas; the jurisdiction of a manor court; the privilege claimed by a lord of trying actions of trespass between his tenants, in his manor court, and imposing fines and amerciaments in the same.

Sacaburth, sacabere, sakabere /säˈkæbərθ/. In old English law, he that was robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and put in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit.

Saccabor /səˈkæbur/. In old English law, the person from whom a thing had been stolen, and by whom the thief was freshly pursued.

Sacramentales /səˈkraməntəliːlz/. L. Lat. In feudal law, compurgators; persons who came to purge a defendant by their oaths that they believed him innocent.

Roman law. An oath, as being a very sacred thing; more particularly, the oath taken by soldiers to be true to their general and their country.

In one of the formal methods of beginning an action at law (legis actiones) known to the early Roman jurisprudence, the sacramentum was a sum of money deposited in court by each of the litigating parties, as a kind of wager or forfeit, to abide the result of the suit. The successful party received back his stake; the losing party forfeited his, and it was paid into the public treasury, to be expended for sacred objects (in sacris rebus), whence the name.

Sacramentum decisionis /səˈkræməntəm dɛˈʃənəsənz/. The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him.

Sacramentum fidelitatis /səˈkræməntəm fəˈdɛlətətəs/. In old English law, the oath of fealty.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites,—veritatem, justitiam, et judicium; veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et justicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts,—truth, justice, and judgment; truth in the party swearing; justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium /səˈkræməntəm səˈfætuəm ˈfjʊərət, lɪˈsɛt ˈfɔlsəm, təˈmæn nɔn ˈkəmɪtɪt pərjuːrɪəm/. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury.

Sacrilege /səˈkræli dʒ/. In old English criminal law, larceny from a church. The crime of breaking a church or chapel, and stealing therein. The desecration of anything considered holy; the alienation to laymen or to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons and to pious uses.

Sacrilegium /səˈkræli ˈdʒiəm/. Lat. In the civil law, the stealing of sacred things, or things dedicated to sacred uses; the taking of things out of a holy place.

Sacrilegus /səˈkræli ˈɡʊs/. Lat. In the civil and common law, a sacrilegious person; one guilty of sacrilege.

Sacrilegus omnium praedonum cupiditatem et scelerar superat /səˈkræli ˈɡʊs ɒmˈniəm prəˈdoʊnəm kjuˈwpidətətəm ət ˈskɛlərə ˈskylərəpərət/. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupididity and wickedness of all other robbers.

Sacristan /səˈkræstən/. A sexton, anciently called "sag-erson," or "sagiston," the keeper of things belonging to divine worship.
Safe Harbor rule. A provision in the tax code which gives a taxpayer protection as long as efforts were made to comply with the law. An example would be with estimated taxes. If an individual pays 100% of their prior year tax liability in estimated installments, they may avoid the underpayment penalty.

Safe deposit box. A metal container kept by a customer in a bank in which he deposits papers, securities and other valuable items. Generally, there are two keys required to open, one retained by the bank and the other by the customer.

Safe deposit company. A company which maintains vaults for the deposit and safekeeping of valuables in which compartments or boxes are rented to customers who have exclusive access thereto, subject to the oversight and under the rules and regulations of the company. See Depository; Safe deposit box.

Safe Harbor rule. A provision in the tax code which gives a taxpayer protection as long as efforts were made to comply with the law. An example would be with estimated taxes. If an individual pays 100% of their prior year tax liability in estimated installments, they may avoid the underpayment penalty.

Safe limit of speed. As regards limitation on speed of automobiles at crossings, the limit at which one may discern an approaching train and stop before he is in the danger zone. Horton v. New York Cent. R. Co., 205 App.Div. 763, 200 N.Y.S. 365, 366.

Safe place to work. In the law of master and servant (employer and employee), a place in which the master has eliminated all danger which in the exercise of reasonable care the master should remove or guard against. Master's duty to provide a "safe place" to work includes places to and from which the employee might be required or expected to go. High Splint Coal Co. v. Ramsey's Adm'x., 271 Ky. 532, 112 S.W.2d 1007, 1008.

Federal, state, and local regulations and regulatory bodies require health and safety standards for workers. See e.g. Occupational Safety and Health Act.

Safety Appliance Act. Federal Act regulating safety of equipment used by common carriers engaged in interstate commerce. 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

Sagibaro /saegabaerow/. In old European law, a judge or justice; literally, a man of causes, or having charge or supervision of causes. One who administered justice and decided causes in the mallum, or public assembly.

Said. Before mentioned. This word is frequently used in contracts, pleadings, and other legal papers, with the same force as "aforesaid." Greeley Nat. Bank v. Wolf, C.C.A.Colo., 4 F.2d 67, 69.

Sail. To put to sea; to begin a voyage. To get ship under way in complete readiness for voyage, with purpose of proceeding without further delay.

Sailors. Seamen; mariners.

Sailors' Relief Act. See Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Sailors' will. A nuncupative or oral will which the law allows in the case of a sailor at sea. It has the power to pass personal property at death but not real estate. See also Nuncapative will.

Saisie /sézy/. Fr. In French law, a judicial seizure or sequestration of property, of which there are several varieties. See terms next following for various types of such seizure.

Saisie-arrêt. An attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

Saisie-exécution. A writ resembling that of fieri facias; defined as that species of execution by which a creditor places under the hand of justice (custody of the law) his debtor's movable property liable to seizure, in order to have it sold, so that he may obtain payment of his debt out of the proceeds.

Saisie-foraine. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which the former inhabits. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

Saisie-gagerie. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized; similar to the distress of the common law.

Saisie-immobilière. The proceeding by which a creditor places under the hand of justice (custody of the law) the Sale. A contract between two parties, called, respectively, the "seller" (or vendor) and the "buyer" (or purchaser), by which the former, in consideration of the payment or promise of payment of a certain price in money, transfers to the latter the title and the possession of property. Transfer of property as providing of services for consideration. A transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent. Grinnell Corp. v. U.S., 390 F.2d 932, 945, 947, 182 Ct.Cl. 702. Passing of title from seller to buyer for a price. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

A revenue transaction where goods or services are delivered to a customer in return for cash or a contractual obligation to pay. Term comprehends transfer of property from one party to another for valuable consideration. Herskovitz v. Vespio, 238 Pa.Super. 529, 362 A.2d 394, 396.

The general law governing the sale of goods is the Uniform Commercial Code (Art. 2).

A contract whereby property is transferred from one person to another for a consideration of value, implying the passing of the general and absolute title, as distinguished from a special interest falling short of complete ownership.

To constitute a "sale," there must be parties standing to each other in the relation of buyer and seller, their minds must assent to the same proposition, and a consideration must pass. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Freihofer, C.C.A.3, 102 F.2d 787, 789, 790.

The term "sale" includes any contract to sell or otherwise dispose of. Securities Exchange Act, § 3.

"Sale," "sell," "offer to sell," or "offer for sale" includes every contract of sale or disposition of, attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy, a security or interest in a security, for value. Any security given or delivered with, or as a bonus on account of, any purchase of securities or any other thing, shall be conclusively presumed to constitute a part of the subject of such purchase and to have been sold for value. Investment Company Act, § 2.

Sale, as applied to relation between landowner and real estate broker working to secure purchaser of land, means procuring purchaser able, ready and willing to buy on terms fixed by seller.

See also Approval sales; Auction; Bargain and sale; Bargain sale or purchase; Bootstrap sale; Bulk sale; Buy and sell agreement; Cash sale; Casual sale; Consignment; Contract of sale; Credit sale; Fire sale; Forced sale; Installment sale; Isolated sale; Judicial sale; Scapler; Sheriff's sale; Simulated sale; Symbolic delivery; Tax sale; Wash sale.

Other Terms Distinguished

The contract of "sale" is distinguished from "barter" (which applies only to goods) and "exchange" (which is used of both land and goods), in that both the latter terms denote a commutation of property for property; i.e., the price or consideration is always paid in money if the transaction is a sale, but, if it is a barter or exchange, it is paid in specific property susceptible of valuation. "Sale" differs from "gift" in that the latter transaction involves no return or recompense for the thing transferred. But an onerous gift sometimes approaches the nature of a sale, at least where the charge it imposes is a payment of money. "Sale" is also to be distinguished from "bailment," and the difference is to be found in the fact that the contract of bailment always contemplates the return to the bailor of the specific article delivered, either in its original form or in a modified or altered form, or the return of an article which, though not identical, is of the same class, and is equivalent. But sale never involves the return of the article itself, but only a consideration in money. This contract differs also from "accord and satisfaction," because in the latter the object of transferring the property is to compromise and settle a claim, while the object of a sale is the price given.

The cardinal difference between the relation of seller and buyer and that of principal and factor is that in a "sale" title passes to the buyer, while in a "consignment" by principal to factor title remains in principal, and only possession passes to factor. Also, a "sale" is distinguished from a mortgage, in that the former is a transfer of the absolute property in the goods for a price, whereas a mortgage is at most a conditional sale of property as security for the payment of a debt or performance of some other obligation, subject to the condition that on performance title shall revest in the mortgagor.

An abandonment must be made without any desire that any other person shall acquire the thing abandoned, since if it is made for a consideration it is a "sale" or "barter," and if made without consideration, but with an intention that some other person shall become the possessor, it is a "gift." Del Giorgio v. Powers, 27 Cal.App.2d 668, 81 P.2d 1006, 1014.

General Classification

Absolute and conditional sales. An absolute sale is one where the property in chattels passes to the buyer upon the completion of the bargain. A conditional sale is one in which the transfer of title is made to depend on the performance of a condition, usually the payment of the price; it is a purchase for a price paid or to be paid, to become absolute on a particular event, or a purchase accompanied by an agreement to resell upon particular terms. Under a conditional sale the seller retains title as security for payment for goods. See also Conditional sale contract; Secured transaction.

Auction sale. See Auction.

Bill of sale. See Bill.

Bulk sale. The sale of all or a substantial part of the seller's materials, supplies, merchandise, other inventory or in some cases equipment not in the ordinary course of business. U.C.C. § 6-102. Statutes prescribe the procedure for such sales because of the danger of fraud on the creditors of the seller.

Cash sale. A transaction where payment is to be in full on receipt of the goods. A sale where title is not to pass until the price is paid, or where title has passed, but possession is not to be delivered until payment is made. Compare Sale on credit, below.

Conditional sale. See Absolute and conditional sales, above.

Consignment sale. See Consignment.

Credit sale. See Sale on credit, below.

Exclusive sale. With respect to a real estate broker, an agreement by the owner that he will not sell the property during the life of the contract to any purchaser not procured by the broker in question. See Exclusive agency listing; Listing.

Executed and executory sales. An executed sale is one which is final and complete in all its particulars and details, nothing remaining to be done by either party to effect an absolute transfer of the subject-matter of the sale. An executory sale is one which has been definitely agreed on as to terms and conditions, but which has not yet been carried into full effect in respect to some of its terms or details, as where it remains to determine the price, quantity, or identity of the thing sold, or to pay installments of purchase-money, or to effect a delivery.

Execution sale. See Execution sale.

Fair sale. See Fair sale.

Forced sale. A sale made without the consent or concurrence of the owner of the property, but by virtue of judicial process, such as resulting from a writ of execution or an order under a decree of foreclosure. See Judicial sale; Sheriff's sale; Tax-sale, below.

Foreclosure sale. See Foreclosure.

Fraudulent sale. One made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the owner of the property, by covering up or removing from their reach and converting into cash property which would be subject to the satisfaction of their claims. Such sales may be voided by Bankruptcy Court.

Gross sale. In accounting, the total sales before deduction for return sales and allowances.

Installment sale. A sale in which the buyer makes periodic payments and generally the seller reserves title until full payment has been made. See Retail installment sale; Sale on credit, below.

Judicial sale. One made under the process of a court having competent authority to order it, by an officer duly appointed and commissioned to sell, as distinguished from a sale by an owner in virtue of his right of property. See also Sheriff's sale; Tax-sale, below.

Memorandum sale. That form of conditional sale in which the goods are placed in the possession of the vendee subject to his approval; the title remaining in the seller until they are either accepted or rejected by the vendee.

Net sale. Gross sales (q.v.) less returns and allowances.

Private sale. One negotiated and concluded privately between buyer and seller, and not made by advertisement and public notice or auction or through a broker or agent. See U.C.C. § 2-706.

Public sale. A sale made in pursuance of a notice, by auction or sheriff. See U.C.C. § 2-706. See also Judicial sale, above; Sheriff's sale; Tax-sale, below.

Retail installment sale. Sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments.

Sale and return. A species of contract by which the seller (usually a manufacturer or wholesaler) delivers a quantity of goods to the buyer, on the understanding that, if the latter should desire to retain or use or resell any portion of such goods, he will consider such part as having been sold to him, and will pay their price, and the balance he will return to the seller, or hold them, as bailee, subject to his order. Sturm v. Boker, 150 U.S. 312, 14 S.Ct. 99, 37 L.Ed. 1093. Under "contract of sale and return" title vests immediately in buyer, who has privilege of rescinding sale, and until privilege is exercised title remains in him. See U.C.C. § 2-326.

Sale by auction. See Auction.

Sale by sample. A sales contract in which it is the understanding of both parties that the goods exhibited constitute the standard with which the goods not exhibited correspond and to which deliveries should conform. Any sample which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model. U.C.C. § 2-313. See also Sample, sale by.
Sale in gross. A sale by the tract, without regard to quantity; it is in that sense a contract of hazard. See also Gross sale, above.

Sale-note. A memorandum of the subject and terms of a sale, given by a broker or factor to the seller, who bailed him the goods for that purpose, and to the buyer, who dealt with him. Also called "bought and sold notes."

Sale on approval. A species of conditional sale, which is dealt with him. Also called "bought and sold notes."

Sale on credit. A sale of property accompanied by delivery of possession, but where payment of the price is deferred to a future day. See Credit; also, Installment sale, above.

Sale or return. A type of conditional sale wherein the goods may be returned to the buyer though they conform to the contract and if they are primarily delivered for use. Generally, such goods are not subject to the claims of the creditors of the buyer until acceptance. U.C.C. §§ 2-326, 2-327.

Sale per aversionem. In the civil law, a sale where the goods are taken in bulk, or not by weight or measure, and for a single price, or where a piece of land is sold for a gross sum, to be paid for the whole premises, and not at a fixed price by the acre or foot. A sale per aversionem is sale of either distinct or separate immovable, such as a field enclosed or island in a river, or an immovable property sold by certain bounds or limits. Cornish v. Kinder Canal Co., La.App., 267 So.2d 625, 629. In such a sale, purchaser acquires property located within boundaries designated in sales agreement, irrespective of stated acreage in agreement; description of property by boundaries thus prevails over description referring to specific quantity or measurement. Deshotel v. Lachney, La.App. 3 Cir., 465 So.2d 974, 977.

Sale with all faults. Under what is called a "sale with all faults," "as is" or "sale as is", unless the seller fraudulently and inconsistently represents the article sold to be faultless, or contrives to conceal any fault from the purchaser, the latter must take the article for better or worse.

Sale with right of redemption. A sale in which vendor reserves right to take back property by returning price paid. See also Sale on approval; Sale or return, above.

Sheriff's sale. A sale of property, conducted by a sheriff, or sheriff's deputy by virtue of his authority as an officer holding process. See Forced sale; Judicial sale, above, also, Foreclosure; Sheriff's sale.

Short sale. See Short sale.

Tax-sale. A sale of land for unpaid taxes; a sale of property, by authority of law, for the collection of a tax assessed upon it, or upon its owner, which remains unpaid.

Voluntary sale. One made freely, without constraint, by the owner of the thing sold. Contrast Forced sale, above.

Wash sale. In security trading, a spurious transaction in which the same stock is sold and bought by the same person to create the impression of market activity or to establish a market for the stock. Such transactions are forbidden.

Sale against the box. A species of short sale (q.v.) at a time when the taxpayer owns substantially identical shares.

Sale and leaseback. A lease that is initiated when a firm sells an asset it owns to another firm and simultaneously leases the asset back for its own use. A sale of an asset to a vendee who immediately leases back to the vendor. The usual objectives are (1) to free cash in the amount of the purchase price for other uses by the vendor, (2) for benefits not otherwise available such a deduction by the vendor of the full value of the property for income tax purposes as rental payments over a period of time shorter than would be in depreciation where the base period is the allowable depreciable life. The rental payments total the purchase price plus interest less an estimated salvage value. Although the lease actually follows the sale, both are agreed to as part of the same transaction.

Sale on approval or return. A sale or return wherein the goods are delivered to the buyer, on trial, approves or is satisfied with the article sold. Also called "bought and sold notes."

Sale on credit. A sale of property accompanied by delivery of possession, but where payment of the price is deferred to a future day. See Credit; also, Installment sale, above.

Voluntary sale. One made freely, without constraint, by the owner of the thing sold. Contrast Forced sale, above.

The rental payments total the purchase price plus interest less an estimated salvage value. Although the lease actually follows the sale, both are agreed to as part of the same transaction.

Sale of land. See Conveyance; Conveyancing.

Sale or exchange. The term used in taxation in reference to a transaction which results in a gain or loss recognized for federal tax purposes. I.R.C. § 1001.

Sales agreement or contract. A contract to sell goods. A contract by means of which the ownership of goods is transferred from a seller to a buyer for a fixed price in money, paid or agreed to be paid by the buyer. It may refer to a contract for sale which includes both a present sale and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. § 2-106(1). Also, term used to describe a contract for the sale of real estate, including a contract for deed. See also Conditional sale contract; Sale.

Sales contract. See Sale; Sales agreement or contract.

Sales finance company. A business engaged primarily in the purchase of accounts receivable at a discount. The company then undertakes to collect them.

Sales invoice. See Invoice.

Salesman. See Commercial traveler; Dealer; Drummer; Hawker; Peddler.

Sales tax. A state or local-level tax on the retail sale of specified property or services. It is a percentage of the cost of such. Generally, the purchaser pays the tax, but the seller collects it, as an agent for the government.
Various taxing jurisdictions allow exemptions for purchases of specified items, including certain foods, services, and manufacturing equipment. If the purchaser and seller are in different states, a use tax usually applies.

Salus /séləs/. Lat. Health; prosperity; safety.

Salus populi suprema lex /séləs póp(y)ləy sapriyma léks//. The welfare of the people is the supreme law. Lingo Lumber Co. v. Hayes, Tex.Civ.App., 64 S.W.2d 835, 839.

Salvage. In general, that portion of goods or property which has been saved or remains after a casualty such as fire or other loss.

In business, any property which is no longer useful (e.g. obsolete equipment) but which has scrap value.

In insurance, that portion of property which is taken over by the insurance company after payment of a claim for the loss. The insurance company may deduct the salvage value from the amount of the claim paid and leave the property with the insured.

In maritime law, a compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a ship or its cargo has been saved, in whole or in part, from impending danger, or recovered from actual loss, in cases of shipwreck, derelict, or recapture. Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 119 U.S. 625, 7 S.Ct. 336, 30 L.Ed. 501. Elements necessary to valid “salvage” are marine peril, with service voluntarily rendered, when not required as existing duty, or from a special contract, and success in whole or in part, and that service rendered contributed to such success. Robert Sizer & Co. v. Chiarello Bros., D.C.N.Y., 32 F.2d 333, 335.

Equitable salvage. By analogy, the term “salvage” is sometimes also used in cases which have nothing to do with maritime perils, but in which property has been preserved from loss by the last of several advances by different persons. In such a case, the person making the last advance is frequently entitled to priority over the others, on the ground that, without his advance, the property would have been lost altogether. This right, which is sometimes called that of “equitable salvage,” and is in the nature of a lien, is chiefly of importance with reference to payments made to prevent leases or policies of insurance from being forfeited, or to prevent mines and similar undertakings from being stopped or injured.

Salvage charges. This term includes all the expenses and costs incurred in the work of saving and preserving the property which was in danger. The salvage charges ultimately fall upon the insurers.

Salvage loss. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. In the language of marine underwriters, this term means the difference between the amount of salvage, after deducting the charges, and the original value of the property insured.

Salvage service. A service voluntarily rendered to a vessel in need of assistance, and is designed to relieve her from distress or danger, either present or to be reasonably apprehended and for which a salvage reward is allowed by the maritime law. It is distinguished from “towage service,” in that the latter is rendered for the mere purpose of expediting a vessel’s voyage, without reference to any circumstances of danger, though the service in each case may be rendered in the same way. The Emanuel Stavrovdis, D.C.Md., 23 F.2d 214, 216.

Salvage value. That value of an asset which remains after the useful life of the asset has expired. It is commonly equivalent to scrap value and in most cases must be deducted in computing depreciation. Actual or estimated selling price, net of removal or disposal costs, of a used plant asset to be sold or otherwise retired.

It may consist of the actual resale price which taxpayer can expect to realize upon disposition of asset when taxpayer’s use of it in his business terminates; it is not some nominal or junk value. Hibernia Nat. Bank in New Orleans, Trust Div. v. U.S., C.A.La., 740 F.2d 382, 386.

The value of a building or portion of a building to be moved from one location for use at another site. Occurs in condemnation, especially for highway purposes, where large tracts of land must be cleared.

Salvo /sálvə/. Lat. Saving; excepting; without prejudice to. Salvo me et horedibus meis, except me and my heirs. Salvo jure cujuslibet, without prejudice to the rights of any one.

Salvor /sálvə/. A person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of that ship.

Salvus plegius /sálvəs pliyjɪəs/. L. Lat. A sure pledge; called, also, “certus plegius,” a sure pledge.

Same. Identical, equal, equivalent. The word “same”, however, does not always mean “identical.” It frequently means of the kind or species, not the specific thing. When preceded by the definite article, means the one just referred to.

Two offenses are “the same” under the double jeopardy clause of the Federal Constitution unless each requires proof of an additional fact that the other does not. Ex parte Joseph, Tex.Cr.App., 558 S.W.2d 891, 893. See also Jeopardy; Same offense.

Same evidence test. The “same-evidence test” used in determining issue of double jeopardy is whether facts alleged in second indictment, if introduced in evidence, would have sustained a conviction under the first indictment or whether the same evidence would support a conviction in each case. U.S. v. Liotard, C.A.N.J., 817 F.2d 1074, 1077. See Double jeopardy; Same offense.
Same invention. Within reissue statute, refers to whatever invention was described in original letters patent, and appears therein to have been intended to be secured thereby. Morgan v. Drake, Cust. & Pat.App., 36 F.2d 511, 512. It is not to be determined by the claims of the original patent but from the description and such other evidence as the commissioner may deem relevant. De trola Radio & Television Corporation v. Hazeltine Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 117 F.2d 238, 241.

Same offense. As used in Constitution, providing that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, does not signify the same offense eo nomine, but the same criminal act, transaction, or omission. Term "same offense" as used in statute relating to enhancement of punishment for subsequent conviction of same offense means a similar offense, one of the same character or nature. Cherry v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 447 S.W.2d 154, 158. However, under "same offense" test of double jeopardy, if there is any difference in elements to be proven, two instances are not the same offense. U.S. v. Martino, C.A.Fla., 648 F.2d 367, 382. See also Jeopardy; Same; Same evidence test.

Sample. A specimen. A small quantity of any commodity, presented for inspection or examination as evidence of the quality of the whole; as a sample of cloth or of wheat.

Sample, sale by. A sale at which only a sample of the goods sold is exhibited to the buyer. Any sample or model which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model. U.C.C. § 2-313(lXc). See also Sale.

Same mentis /sɛʃni attacked by. Lat. In old English law, of sound mind.

Sanctio /sæŋksh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, that part of a law by which a penalty was ordained against those who should violate it.

Sanction, n. Penalty or other mechanism of enforcement used to provide incentives for obedience with the law or with rules and regulations. That part of a law which is designed to secure enforcement by imposing a penalty for its violation or offering a reward for its observance. For example, Fed.R.Civil P. 37 provides sanctions for failure to comply with discovery orders, and Rule 11 empowers court to impose disciplinary sanctions on attorneys for other types of improper conduct. See also Contempt; Criminal sanctions.

A punitive act taken by one nation against another nation which has violated a treaty or international law.

Sanctuary. In old English law, a consecrated place which had certain privileges annexed to it, and to which offenders were accustomed to resort for refuge, because they could not be arrested there, nor the laws be executed. In general, any holy or consecrated place.

Sandwich lease. The first lease of property from lessor to lessee who in turn subleases to another. See Sublease.

Sanguis /sæŋgwgas/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, blood; consanguinity. The right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed.

Sanitary. That which pertains to health, with especial reference to cleanliness and freedom from infective and deleterious influences.

Sanitary code. Municipal ordinances regulating sanitary conditions of establishments which produce, distribute or serve food, or provide medical services.

Sanitation. Devising and applying of measures for preserving and promoting public health; removal or neutralization of elements injurious to health; practical application of sanitary science. See Sanitary code.

Sanity. Sound understanding; the normal condition of the human mind; the reverse of insanity (q.v.).

Sanity hearing. A preliminary inquiry into the mental competency of a person to stand trial, though it may be held at any time within the criminal proceeding. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 4241 et seq.; Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.

A proceeding to determine whether one should be confined under a civil commitment to an institution.

Sanity trial. In some states the issues of sanity and guilt may be tried separately in a bifurcated trial.

Sans ce que /sæns sɛ kə/. L. Fr. Without this. See Absque hoc.

Sans frais /sɔ̃fʁe/. Fr. Without expense.

Sans immeachment de wast /sænz ɪmˈʃɛmtment ðə wɛist/. L. Fr. Without impeachment of waste. See Absque impetitione vasit.

Sans jour /sɔ̃ zhœʁ/sænz jɜ/. Fr. Without day; sine die.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione /səˈʃɛpɪənɛnɛs ɪnˈsaɪʃənɪm, ʌlˈtʌmɪm ɪst ɪn ɪnˈkɛkʃənəni/.
Satisfaction. In the civil law, to guarantee satisfaction; the state of being satisfied. Act of satisfying.

Satisfaction of judgment. A document such as an execution enforced by the judgment creditor and indicating that the judgment has been paid. See Execution.

Satisfaction of lien. Document signed by a lien holder in which he releases the property subject to the lien.

Satisfaction of mortgage. A discharge signed by the mortgagee or holder of the mortgage indicating that the property subject to the mortgage is released or that the mortgage debt has been paid and that all terms and conditions of the mortgage have been satisfied. See also Redemption.

Satisfaction piece. A memorandum in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that satisfaction is acknowledged between the parties, plaintiff and defendant. Upon this being duly acknowledged and filed in the office where the record of the judgment is, the judgment becomes satisfied, and the defendant discharged from it. See New York CPLR § 5020. Also referred to as “Certificate of Discharge.” See Discharge.

Satisfactory. Where a contract provides that it is to be performed in a manner “satisfactory” to one of the parties, the provision must be construed as meaning that the performance must be such that the party, as a reasonable person, should be satisfied with it.

Satisfactory evidence. Such evidence as is sufficient to produce a belief that the thing is true; credible evidence. Such evidence as, in respect to its amount or weight, is adequate or sufficient to justify the court or jury in adopting the conclusion in support of which it is adduced. Sometimes called “sufficient evidence,” means that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. See Relevant evidence; Sufficient evidence.

Satisfied term. A term of years in land is thus called.
Saturday night special. In corporate law, a surprise tender offer which expires in one week. Designed to capitalize on panic and haste, such an offer may be made Friday afternoon to take advantage of the fact that markets and most offices are closed on Saturday and Sunday. Saturday night specials have been effectively prohibited by the Williams Act, § 14(e), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78n(e). Term also used in reference to type of handgun weapon used in armed crimes.

Saukfen /səʊkʃən/. L. Fr. End of blood; failure of the direct line in successions.

Sauvagine /soʊvæʒɛn/. L. Fr. Wild animals.

Save. To except, reserve, or exempt; as where a statute "saves" vested rights. To toll, or suspend the running or operation of; as to "save" the statute of limitations. See Saving clause.

Save harmless clause. A provision in a document by which one party agrees to indemnify and hold harmless another party as to claims and suits which may be asserted against him. In some states, such clauses are deemed against public policy and, hence, void. See also Hold harmless agreement.

Saver default. L. Fr. In old English practice, to excuse a default.

Saving. Preservation from danger or loss; economy in outlay; prevention of waste; something laid up or kept from becoming expended or lost; a reservation. Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Sisters of the Sorrowsful Mother, 186 Okl. 339, 97 P.2d 888, 892.

Saving clause. In a statute, an exception of a special thing out of the general things mentioned in the statute. Ordinarily a restriction in a repealing act, which is intended to save rights, pending proceedings, penalties, etc., from the annihilation which would result from an unrestricted repeal. That provision in a statute which rescues the balance of the statute from a declaration of unconstitutionality if one or more clauses or parts are invalidated. It is sometimes referred to as the severability clause. Such clause continues in force the law repealed as to existing rights. Dade County v. Wisehart, Fla.App., 198 So.2d 94, 97. See also Separability clause; Severable statute.

Savings account. Accounts maintained in commercial and savings banks for purpose of accumulating money, in contrast to a checking account. Savings accounts generally yield interest on the deposited funds, though the trend is to also pay interest on checking account balances.

Savings account trust. An account opened in the name of one person in trust for another; e.g. A in trust for B. See also Trust (Totten Trust).

Savings and loan association. One of a number of types of mutually-owned, cooperative, savings associations, originally established for the primary purpose of making loans to members and others, usually for the purchase of real estate or homes; though in the 1980's S & L's expanded into commercial and other non-mortgage loans and services. Such may be chartered by the state, or by the federal government, in which case it is known as a "Federal Savings and Loan Association." The deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Financial Institution's Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 significantly changed the capital requirements, loan powers, and regulatory control of S & L's. See also Building and loan association.

A bank chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and engaged primarily in making home loan mortgages from the savings accounts of the depositors. Associations at the federal level are regulated by the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

Savings bank. See Bank.

Savings bank trust. See Trust.

Savings bond. See Bond.

Savings notes. Short term paper issued by a bank and bearing interest. The U.S. government issues such notes on a 90 day basis and for other periods of time.

Saving to suitors clause. That provision in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1339(1) which gives the U.S. District Courts original jurisdiction, "exclusive of the courts of the state" of any civil case of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, "saving to suitors in all cases all other remedies to which they are otherwise entitled." The "saving to suitors" clause of the section of the Judiciary Act implementing constitutional provision extending federal judicial powers to cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction means that a suitor asserting an in personam admiralty claim may elect to sue in a "common law" state court through an ordinary civil action, and in such actions, the state courts must apply the same substantive law as would be applied had the suit been instituted in admiralty in a federal court. Shannon v. City of Anchorage, Alaska, 478 P.2d 815, 818.

Savour /səˈvɔːr/. To partake the nature of; to bear affinity to.

Say about. This phrase, like "more or less," is frequently introduced into conveyances or contracts of sale, to indicate that the quantity of the subject-matter is uncertain, and is only estimated, and to guard the vendor against the implication of having warranted the quantity.

S.B. Abbreviation for "Senate Bill."

S.B.A. Small Business Administration.

S.C. Abbreviation for "same case." Inserted between two citations, it indicates that the same case is reported in both places. Also an abbreviation for "supreme court."

Sc. An abbreviation for "scilicet"; that is to say.

Scab. Person who works for lower wages than or under conditions contrary to those prescribed by a trade union; also one who takes the place of a worker who is on strike. Non-union workers who pass through a union Scab /skəb/. A common or public school for the education of the children of all citizens without distinction. See also Public schools, below.

Scandal /ˈskændəl/. A division of a union into two factions resulting in one group leaving the union. In ecclesiastical law, a division or separation in a church or denomination of Christians, occasioned by a diversity of faith, creed, religious opinions, or repudiation of ecclesiastical authority.

School. An institution or place for instruction or education.

Common schools. Schools maintained at the public expense and administered by a bureau of the state, district, or municipal government, for the gratuitous education of the children of all citizens without distinction. See also Public schools, below.

Consolidated school district. A common school district where two or more existing schools have consolidated into one single district.

District school. A common or public school for the education at public expense of the children residing within a given district; a public school maintained by a "school district." See School district, below.

Schedule. A sheet of paper annexed to a statute, deed, deposition, tax return, or other instrument, exhibiting in detail the matters mentioned or referred to in the principal document; e.g. schedule of assets and liabilities (debts) in bankruptcy proceeding. See Tax rate schedules.

Any list of planned events to take place on a regular basis such as a train schedule or a schedule of work to be performed in a factory.

Scheduled injuries. Certain types of injuries involving partial disability that are specifically covered in state workers' compensation statutes, each of which has a predetermined amount of compensation that will be paid for an employee experiencing that injury.

Scheduled property. In insurance, a list of property and the value of each piece of such property for which the insurer will pay in the event of loss or damage.

Scheme or artifice to defraud. For purposes of fraudulent representation statutes, consists of forming plan or devising some trick to perpetrate fraud upon another. State v. Smith, 121 Ariz. 106, 588 P.2d 848. Such connotes a plan or pattern of conduct which is intended to or is reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension. U.S. v. Washita Const. Co., C.A.Okl., 789 F.2d 809, 817. "Scheme to defraud" within meaning of mail fraud statute (18 U.S.C. § 1341) is the intentional use of false or fraudulent representations for the purpose of gaining a valuable undue advantage or working some injury to something of value held by another. U.S. v. Mandel, D.C.Md., 415 F.Supp. 997, 1005. See also Artifice; Fraud; Mail fraud.

Schism /ˈskɪzm/. A division of a union into two factions resulting in one group leaving the union.
Private school. One maintained by private individuals, religious organizations, or corporations, not at public expense, and open only to pupils selected and admitted by the proprietors or governors, or to pupils of a certain religion or possessing certain qualifications, and generally supported, in part at least, by tuition fees or charges.

Public schools. Schools established under the laws of the state (and usually regulated in matters of detail by the local authorities), in the various districts, counties, or towns, maintained at the public expense by taxation, and open, usually without charge, to the children of all the residents of the city, town, or other district. Schools belonging to the public and established and conducted under public authority.

School board or committee. A board of municipal officers charged with the administration of the affairs of the public schools. They are commonly organized under the general laws of the state, and fall within the class of quasi corporations, sometimes coterminous with a county or district, but not necessarily so. The members of the school board or committee are usually elected by the voters of the school district. The circuit of their territorial jurisdiction is called a “school district,” and each school district is commonly a separate taxing district for school purposes.

School directors. See School board or committee, above.

School district. A public and quasi municipal corporation, organized by legislative authority or direction, comprising a defined territory, for the erection, maintenance, government, and support of the public schools within its territory in accordance with and in subordination to the general school laws of the state, invested, for these purposes only, with powers of local self-government and generally of local taxation, and administered by a board of officers, usually elected by the voters of the district, who are variously styled “school directors,” “school boards,” “school committees,” “trustees,” “commissioners,” or “supervisors” of schools.

School lands. Public lands of a state set apart by the state (or by congress in a territory) to create, by the proceeds of their sale, a fund for the establishment and maintenance of public schools.

Scienendum est /sayéndam ést/. Lat. It is to be known; be it remarked. In the books of the civil law, this phrase is often found at the beginning of a chapter or paragraph, by way of introduction to some explanation, or directing attention to some particular rule.

Scienter /sayéntør/. Lat. Knowingly. The term is used in pleading to signify an allegation (or that part of the declaration or indictment which contains it) setting out the defendant's previous knowledge of the cause which led to the injury complained of, or rather his previous knowledge of a state of facts which it was his duty to guard against, and his omission to do which has led to the injury complained of. The term is frequently used to signify the defendant's guilty knowledge.

Knowledge by the misrepresenting party that material facts have been falsely represented or omitted with an intent to deceive. Myzel v. Fields, C.A.Minn., 386 F.2d 718, 734.

The term “scienter,” as applied to conduct necessary to give rise to an action for civil damages under Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Rule 10b–5 refers to a mental state embracing intent to deceive, manipulate or defraud. Ernst and Ernst v. Hochfelder, Ill., 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375, 1381, 47 L.Ed.2d 668.

Scientia sciorum est mixta ignorantia /sayénshe(y)ə sayálərəm ést miksta ignșraensh(y)ə/. The knowledge of smatterers is diluted ignorance.

Scientia utrimque par pares contrahentes facit /sayénshe(y)ə ywytrirəmkwiə paér périz kontraheŋtəyə fęyəst/. Equal knowledge on both sides makes contracting parties equal. An insured need not mention what the underwriter knows, or what he ought to know.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria /sayəntay et vələntay nən fit ĭŋjərɪəyə/. An injury is not done to one who knows and wills it.

Sci. fa. /sáy féyə/. An abbreviation for “scire facias” (q.v.)

Scilicet /siləsət/sıyələsət/. Lat. To-wit; that is to say. A word used in pleadings and other instruments, as introductory to a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms.

Scintilla /sintiələ/. Lat. A spark; a remaining particle; a trifle; the least particle.

Scintilla juris /sintiələ jyrəs/. In real property law, a spark of right or interest. By this figurative expression was denoted the small particle of interest, which, by a fiction of law, was supposed to remain in a feoffee to use, sufficient to support contingent uses afterwards coming into existence, and thereby enable the statute of uses (27 Hen. VIII, c. 10) to execute them.

Scintilla of evidence rule /sintiələ ov ūvédədənə/. A spark of evidence. A metaphorical expression to describe a very insignificant or trifling item or particle of evidence; used in the statement of the common-law rule that if there is any evidence at all in a case, even a mere scintilla, tending to support a material issue, the case cannot be taken from the jury, but must be left to their decision.

The “scintilla evidence rule” requires that if there is even a scintilla of evidence presented to support the nonmoving party's position, summary judgment should not be granted. Chiniche v. Smith, Ala., 374 So.2d 872, 873. With regard to precluding summary judgment for defendant, “scintilla rule” requires only that the evidence, or reasonable inferences therefrom, furnish a mere gleam, glimmer, spark, the least bit, the smallest trace, in support of plaintiff's complaint. Wilson v. Liberty Nat. Life Ins. Co., Ala., 331 So.2d 617, 619.

Any material evidence that, if true, would tend to establish issue in mind of reasonable juror. Something of substance and relevant consequence and not vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter not carrying quality of proof or having fitness to induce conviction. Wiggins-Scire facias ad disprobandum debitum /sáyry féysh(iy)os ëd ñrhàbëndam tehrm/. Lies to enable a judgment debtor to recover back his lands taken under an elegit when the judgment creditor has satisfied or been paid the amount of his judgment.

Scire facias ad rehabilitam terrain /sáyry féysh(iy)os ëd ñrhàbëndam tehrm/. Lies to enable a judgment debtor to recover back his lands taken under an elegit when the judgment creditor has satisfied or been paid the amount of his judgment.

Scire facias quare restitutionem non /sáyry féysh(iy)os kwéry réststfyXiwshiyownam nón/. This writ lies where execution on a judgment has been levied, but the money has not been paid over to the plaintiff, and the judgment is afterwards reversed in error or on appeal; in such a case a scire facias is necessary before a writ of restitution can issue.

Scire facias sur mortgage /sáyry féysh(iy)os sár morgaj/. A writ issued upon the default of a mortgagee to make payments or observe conditions, requiring him to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed, and the mortgaged property taken and sold in execution.

Scire facias sur municipal claim /sáyry féysh(iy)os sár myuwñisspal kléým/. A writ authorized to be issued as a means of enforcing payment of a municipal claim (q.v.) out of the real estate upon which such claim is a lien.

Scire feci /sáyry fýsasy/. Lat. The name given to the sheriff's return to a writ of scire facias that he has caused notice to be given to the party or parties against whom the writ was issued.

Scire fieri inquiry /sáyry fáyayrây sákwáyry/in-kwaryi/. In old English law, the name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

Scire leges non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim ac potestatem /sáyry líyiyʒ nón hók ést vörbo íyéram taniriy sëd vim ëk pówtëstétym/. To know the laws is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power [that is, the essential meaning in which their efficacy resides].

Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere /sáyry prówpriyiy est rém rëshëyowniy ët pár kózam kagnòsary/. To know properly is to know a thing in its reason, and by its cause. We are truly said to know anything, where we know the true cause thereof.

Scirewyte /sáyrywáy/. In old English law, a tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts.

Scite or site /sáyty/. The sitting or standing on any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground whereon it stands.

Scold. At common law, a troublesome and angry person who, by brawling and wrangling among his or her neighbors, breaks the public peace, increases discord, and becomes a public nuisance to the neighborhood. A quarrelsome, brawling, vituperative person.
Scope of a patent. The boundaries or limits of the invention protected by the patent, which are not matters of metes and bounds and can never be defined in the definite sense employed in thinking of physical things, but must be determined by methods based upon established principles of patent law. Smith v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 106 F.2d 622, 624.

Scope of authority. In law of agency, includes not only actual authorization conferred upon agent by his principal, but also that which has apparently or impliedly been delegated to agent. Angerosa v. White Co., 248 App.Div. 425, 290 N.Y.S. 204, 208. Under doctrine of respondeat superior (q.v.) a principal is liable for the contracts of his agent if the agent contracted within the scope of his actual or apparent authority. See also Authority; Scope of employment.

Scope of employment. The activities in which an employee engages in the carrying out of the employer's business which are reasonably foreseeable by the employer. Under doctrine of respondeat superior (q.v.), a principal is liable for the torts of his agent committed within the scope, actual or apparent, of his employment.

An employee acts in scope of his employment, for purpose of invoking a doctrine of respondeat superior, when he is doing something in furtherance of duties he owes to his employer and where employer is, or could be, exercising some control, directly or indirectly, over employee's activities. Lundberg v. State, 255 N.E.2d 177, 179, 25 N.Y.2d 467, 306 N.Y.S.2d 947. Employee is in "scope of employment," such that corporate employer is liable to third party for his torts, whenever he is engaged in activities that fairly and reasonably may be said to be incident of the employment or logically and naturally connected with it. Daughdrill v. Diamond M. Drilling Co., C.A.La, 447 F.2d 781, 785.

See also Respondeat superior; Vicarious liability.

Scorn. To hold in extreme contempt; to reject as unworthy of regard; to despise, to contemn, to disdain.

S Corporation. See Corporation (S Corporation).

Scriba. A scribe; a secretary. Scriba regis /skràyba riyjəs/, a king's secretary; a chancellor.

Scribere est agere /skrâyberi est ájəri/. To write is to act. Reasonable words set down in writing amount to overt acts of treason.

Scrip. A document which entitles the holder to receive something of value. It is ultimately exchanged for money or some privilege. In corporations, when a stock dividend is declared, scrip is issued in place of fractional shares and when the holder has sufficient scrip he may exchange the scrip for a share.

Paper money issued for temporary use.

The term has also formerly been applied to warrants, certificates, or other like orders drawn on a municipal treasury showing the holder to be entitled to a certain portion or allotment of public or state lands, and also to the fractional paper currency issued by the United States during the period of the Civil War.

Scrip dividendum. Type of deferred dividend commonly in the form of a promissory note which is redeemable in stock or cash at a future time. See also Dividend.

Scriptum /skriptəm/. Lat. A writing; something written (e.g. manuscript). The original of an instrument or document. Where instruments are executed in part and counterpart, the original or principal is so called.

Scripte obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensus dissolvitur /skriptiy oblægyshiyōnij skripṭes tolśtər, ēt n(y)ūw-day kansénsəs oblægysh(i)yōw kontrěriyōw kanséns(y)uw dazólvətər/. Written obligations are superseded by writings, and an obligation of naked assent is dissolved by assent to the contrary.

Scriptum /skriptəm/. Lat. A writing; something written.

Scriptum indentatum /skriptəm indentěytəm/. A writing indented; an indenture or deed.

Scriptum obligatorium /skriptəm oblægotěriyəm/. A writing obligatory. The technical name of a bond in old proceedings. Any writing under seal.

Scrivener /skrəvənər/. A writer; scribe; conveyancer. One whose occupation is to draw contracts, write deeds and mortgages, and prepare other species of written instruments. Also an agent to whom property is intrusted by others for the purpose of lending it out at an interest payable to his principal, and for a commission or bonus for himself, whereby he gains his livelihood. Term is seldom used in United States.

Money scrivener. A money broker. The name was also formerly applied in England to a person (generally an attorney or solicitor) whose business was to find investments for the money of his clients, and see to perfecting the securities, and who was often intrusted with the custody of the securities and the collection of the interest and principal.

Scroll or scrawl. A mark intended to supply the place of a seal, made with a pen or other instrument of writing.

A paper or parchment containing some writing, and rolled up so as to conceal it.

Scruet-roll /skrútwét ról/. In old practice, a species of roll or record, on which the bail on habeas corpus was entered.

Scrutator /skruwteytar/. Lat. In old English law, a searcher or bailiff of a river; a water-bailiff, whose business was to look to the king's rights, as to his wrecks, his flotsam, jetsam, water-strays, royal fishes.

Scurrilous /skərˈrɪləs/. Low and indecent language; low indecency or abuse; mean; foul; vile. Synonymous with vulgar, foul or foul-mouthed.

Scutage /sk(y)uwtaj/. In feudal law, a tax or contribution raised by those that held lands by knight's service, towards furnishing the king's army, at the rate of one, two or three marks for every knight's fee.

A pecuniary composition or commutation made by a tenant by knight-service in lieu of actual service.

A pecuniary aid or tribute originally reserved by particular lords, instead or in lieu of personal service, varying in amount according to the expenditure which the lord had to incur in his personal attendance upon the king in his wars.

Scutaggio habendo /sk(y)atʃij(ə)jow habendow/. A writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight's service to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or pay a certain sum.

Scyra /ʃəˈrɪə/. In old English law, shire; county; the inhabitants of a county.

Scyregemote /ʃəˈrɪɡəmət/. In Saxon law, the meeting or court of the shire. This was the most important court in the Saxon polity, having jurisdiction of both ecclesiastical and secular causes. Its meetings were held twice in the year. Its Latin name was "curia comitatis".

Sea. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land. In marine insurance "sea" includes not only the high seas but the bays, inlets, and rivers as high up as the tide ebbs and flows. The "navigable sea" is divided into three zones: (1) nearest to the nation's shores are its internal or "inland waters"; (2) beyond the inland waters, and measured from their seaward edge, is a belt known as the marginal or "territorial sea"; and (3) outside the territorial sea are the "high seas". U.S. v. State of La., 89 S.Ct. 773, 781. See also Seaworthy.

High seas. The ocean; public waters. According to the English doctrine, the high sea begins at the distance of three miles from the coast of any country; according to the American view, at low-water mark, except in the case of small harbors and roadsteads inclosed within the fauces terrae. U.S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071. The open ocean outside of the fauces terrae, as distinguished from arms of the sea; the waters of the ocean without the boundary of any country. Any waters on the sea-coast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. Waters outside of territorial jurisdiction of nation.

Main sea. The open, uninclosed ocean; or that portion of the sea which is without the fauces terrae on the sea-coast, in contradistinction to that which is surrounded or inclosed between narrow headlands or promontories. U.S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071.

Sea bed. All that portion of land under the sea that lies beyond the sea-shore.

Sea-brief. See Sea letter, below.

Sea laws. Laws relating to the sea, as the laws of Oleron, etc.

Sea letter. A species of manifest, containing a description of the ship's cargo, with the port from which it comes and the port of destination. This is one of the documents necessary to be carried by all neutral vessels, in the merchant service, in time of war, as an evidence of their nationality. The last sea letter was issued at the Port of New York in 1806, and the use of sea letters was discontinued by proclamation of President Madison in 1815. See Manifest.

Sea-reeve. An officer in maritime towns and places who took care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, and watched the shore, and collected wrecks for the lord.

Sea-rovers. Pirates and robbers at sea.

Sea-shore. The margin of the sea in its usual and ordinary state. When the tide is out, low-water mark is the margin of the sea; and, when the sea is full, the margin is high-water mark. The sea-shore is therefore all the ground between the ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark. It cannot be considered as including any ground always covered by the sea, for then it would have no definite limit on the sea-board. Neither can it include any part of the upland, for the same reason. Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. State of New York, 271 U.S. 65, 46 S.Ct. 357, 362, 70 L.Ed. 838. That space of land over which the waters of the sea are spread in the highest water during the winter season.

Seal. An impression upon wax, wafer, or some other tenacious substance capable of being impressed. In current practice, a particular sign (e.g. L.S.) or the word "seal" is made in lieu of an actual seal to attest the execution of the instrument.
As regards sealing of records, means to close by any kind of fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained. See Sealing of records.

See also Contract under seal.

Corporate seal. A seal adopted and used by a corporation for authenticating its corporate acts and executing legal instruments.

Great seal. The United States and also each of the states has and uses a seal, always carefully described by law, and sometimes officially called the “great” seal, though in some instances known simply as “the seal of the United States,” or “the seal of the state.”

Private seal. The seal (however made) of a private person or corporation, as distinguished from a seal employed by a state or government or any of its bureaus or departments.

Public seal. A seal belonging to and used by one of the bureaus or departments of government, for authenticating or attesting documents, process, or records. An impression made of some device, by means of a piece of metal or other hard substance, kept and used by public authority. See also State seal.

Sealed. Authenticated by a seal; executed by the affixing of a seal.

Sealed and delivered. These words, followed by the signatures of the witnesses, constitute the usual formula for the attestation of conveyances.

Sealed bid. A method for submitting a bid to buy or to perform work on a proposed contract. In general, each party interested submits a bid in a sealed envelope, and all such bids are opened at the same time and the most favorable responsible bid is accepted.

Sealed instrument. An instrument of writing to which the party to be bound has affixed not only his name, but also his seal. See also Seal.

The affixing of a seal to a contract for sale or an offer to buy or sell goods does not make the writing a sealed instrument and the law of sealed instruments does not apply to such contract. U.C.C. § 2-203.

Sealed verdict. When the jury have agreed upon a verdict, if the court is not in session at the time, they are permitted (usually) to put their written finding in a sealed envelope, and then separate. This verdict they return when the court again convenes. The verdict thus returned has the same effect, and must be treated in the same manner, as if returned in open court before any separation of the jury had taken place.

Sealing. In matters of succession, the placing, by the proper officer, of seals on the effects of a succession for the purpose of preserving them, and for the interest of third persons. The seals are affixed by order of the judge having jurisdiction.

Sealing of records. Statutes in some states permit a person's criminal record to be sealed and thereafter such records cannot be examined except by order of the court or by designated officials. Such statutes commonly pertain to juvenile offenders.

Seaman's will. See Sailors' will.

Seamen. Sailors; mariners; persons whose business is navigating ships, or who are connected with the ship as such and in some capacity assist in its conduct, maintenance or service. Commonly exclusive of the officers of a ship. The Lillian, D.C.Me., 16 F.2d 146, 148. One whose occupation is to navigate vessels upon the sea including all those on board whose labor contributes to the accomplishment of the main object in which the vessel is engaged. Osland v. Star Fish & Oyster Co., C.C.A.Ala., 107 F.2d 113, 114. Term includes anyone who, in course of his work about a ship, exposes himself to risks traditionally associated with maritime duties of a member of ship's crew. Garrett v. Gutzeit, C.A.Va., 491 F.2d 228, 233.

Worker is "seaman" within meaning of Jones Act if he is assigned permanently to vessel in navigation or performs substantial part of his work on vessel, contributing to function of vessel or to accomplishment of its mission. Garrett v. Dean Shank Drilling Co., Inc., C.A. La., 799 F.2d 1007, 1009. To determine whether injured workman is a seaman with Jones Act rights, vessel he is on must be in navigation, there must be a more or less permanent connection with vessel, and he must be aboard primarily to aid in navigation. Sandoval v. Mitsui Sempaku K. K. Tokyo, D.C.Canal Zone, 313 F.Supp. 719, 725. See also Longshoreman.

Seance /seyons/ /seyons/. In French law, a session; as of some public body.

Search. "Search" consists of looking for or seeking out that which is otherwise concealed from view. People v. Carlson, Colo., 677 P.2d 310, 316. An examination of a person's house or other buildings or premises, or of his person, or of his vehicle, aircraft, etc., with a view to the discovery of contraband or illicit or stolen property, or some evidence of guilt to be used in the prosecution of a criminal action for some crime or offense with which he is charged. State v. Woodall, 16 Ohio Misc. 226, 241 N.E.2d 755, 757. A "search" implies prying into hidden places for that which is concealed and that the object searched for had been hidden or intentionally put out of the way; merely looking at that which is open to view is not a search. People v. Harris, 256 C.A.2d 455, 63 Cal.Rptr. 849, 852. It consists of probing or exploration for something that is concealed or hidden from searchers; an invasion, a quest with some sort of force, either actual or constructive. People v. Carroll, 12 Ill.App.3d 869, 299 N.E.2d 134, 140. Visual observation which infringes upon a person's reasonable expectation of privacy constitutes a "search" in the constitutional sense. People v. Harfmann, Colo.App., 555 P.2d 187, 189.

A "search" to which the exclusionary rule may apply is one in which there is a quest for, a looking for, or a seeking out of that which offends against the law by law enforcement personnel or their agents. Vargas v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 542 S.W.2d 151, 153.
Unreasonable searches and seizures are prohibited by the Fourth Amendment, U.S. Const.

See also Border search; Consent search; Exclusionary Rule; Exigent circumstances; Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine; Illegally obtained evidence; Incidental to arrest; Inspection searches; Inventory search; Knock and announce rule; Mapp v. Ohio; McNabb-Mallory Rule; Mere evidence rule; Plain view doctrine; Poisonous tree doctrine; Probable cause; Reasonable suspicion; Search warrant; Seizure; Stop and frisk; Totality of circumstances test; Warrant.

International law. The right of search is the right on the part of ships of war to visit and search merchant vessels during war, in order to ascertain whether the ship or cargo is liable to seizure. Resistance to visitation and search by a neutral vessel makes the vessel and cargo liable to confiscation. Numerous treaties regulate the manner in which the right of search must be exercised.

Title search. An examination of the official books, records and dockets, made in the process of investigating a title to land, for the purpose of discovering if there are any mortgages, judgments, tax-liens, or other incumbrances upon it. See also Abstract of title.

Unlawful or unreasonable search. Within constitutional immunity (Fourth Amendment) from unreasonable searches and seizures, an examination or inspection without authority of law of premises or person with view to discovery of stolen, contraband, or illicit property, or for some evidence of guilt to be used in prosecution of criminal action. Bush v. State, 64 Okl.Cr. 161, 77 P.2d 1184, 1187. See also Exclusionary Rule; Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine; Probable cause; Search warrant.

Voluntary search. As used in context of consent to search, means that consent was not result of duress or coercion, express or implied, or any other form of undue influence exercised against defendant. People v. Thiret, Colo., 685 P.2d 193, 200. See Consent search.

Search incident to arrest. A police officer who has the right to arrest a person either with or without a warrant may search his person and the immediate area of the arrest for weapons. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034, 23 L.Ed.2d 685. See also Search incident to arrest; Stop and frisk.

Seashore. That portion of land adjacent to the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flux and reflux of the tides.

Seasonable. An action is seasonable when taken within the time agreed or if no time is agreed within a reasonable time. U.C.C. § 1-204.

Seasonal employment. As used in compensation laws, as basis for determining right to and amount of compensation, refers to occupations which can be carried on only at certain seasons or fairly definite portions of the year, and does not include such occupations as may be carried on throughout entire year.

Seat. Membership on securities or commodities exchange.

Seated land. Land that is occupied, cultivated, improved, reclaimed, farmed, or used as a place of residence. Residence without cultivation, or cultivation without residence, or both together, impart to land the character of being seated.

Seat of government. The state capitol or the town within a district or county where the principal government offices and officers are located; e.g. "county seat."

Seawan. The name used by the Algonquin Indians for the shell beads (or wampum) which passed among the Indians as money.

Seaworthy. Ability to withstand ordinary stress of wind, waves and other weather which the vessel might normally be expected to encounter. Miles v. Royal Indem. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 589 S.W.2d 725, 729. This adjective, as applied to a vessel, signifies that she is properly constructed, prepared, manned, equipped, and provided, for the voyage intended. Robichaux v. Kerr Mcgee Oil Industries, D.C.La., 317 F.Supp. 587, 591. A seaworthy vessel must, in general, be sufficiently strong and staunch and equipped with appropriate appurtenances to allow it to safely engage in trade for which it was intended. Texaco v. Universal Marine, Inc., D.C. La., 400 F.Supp. 311, 320.
It is an implied condition of all policies of marine insurance, unless otherwise expressly stipulated, that the vessel shall be seaworthy. In marine insurance, a warranty of seaworthiness means that the vessel is competent to resist the ordinary attacks of wind and weather, and is competently equipped and manned for the voyage, with a sufficient crew, and with sufficient means to sustain them, and with a captain of general good character and nautical skill.

A warranty of seaworthiness extends not only to the condition of the structure of the ship itself, but requires that it be properly laden, and provided with a competent master, a sufficient number of competent officers and seamen, and the requisite appurtenances and equipments, such as ballast, cables and anchors, cordage and sails, food, water, fuel, and lights, and other necessary or proper stores and implements for the voyage.

See also Unseaworthy.

Secession. The act of withdrawing from membership in a group. Certain states attempted unsuccessfully to secede from the United States at the time of the Civil War.

Seek. A want of remedy by distress. Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. See Rent.

Second. This term, as used in law, may denote either sequence in point of time or inferiority or postponement in respect to rank, lien, order, or privilege.

As to second Cousin; Deliverance; Distress; Mortgage; and Surcharge, see those titles.

Second Amendment. The Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that a well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. State and federal laws however regulate the sale, transportation and possession of firearms.

Secondary, n. In English practice, an officer of the courts of king's bench and common pleas; so called because he was second or next to the chief officer. In the king's bench he was called "Master of the King's Bench Office," and was a deputy of the prothonotary or chief clerk. By St. 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., c. 30, the office of secondary was abolished.

Secondary, adj. Of a subsequent, subordinate, or inferior kind or class; generally opposed to "primary."

As to secondary Conveyance; Easement; Evidence; Franchise; Meaning; Use; and Vein, see those titles.

Secondary beneficially. The beneficiary next in line to collect should the primary beneficiary be unable to do so.

Secondary boycott. Any combination if its purpose and effect are to coerce customers or patrons, or suppliers through fear of loss or bodily harm, to withhold or withdraw their business relations from employer who is under attack. Wright v. Teamsters' Union Local No. 690, 33 Wash.2d 905, 207 P.2d 662, 665. Term refers to refusal to work for, purchase from or handle products of secondary employer with whom union has no dispute, with object of forcing such employer to stop doing business with primary employer with whom union has dispute. C. Comella, Inc. v. United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, 33 Ohio App.2d 61, 292 N.E.2d 647, 656. While secondary boycotts are generally prohibited by federal labor laws, such are allowed by transportation workers under the National Railway Labor Act. See also Boycott; Secondary picketing.

Secondary distribution. In securities, the new distribution of stock after it has been initially sold by the issuing corporation. It is not a new issue, but rather a public sale of stock which has previously been issued and held by large corporations and investors. Also, the sale of a large block of stock after the close of business of the exchange. See also Offering; Secondary offering.

Secondary easement. An easement to accomplish the intended purposes of the primary easement. One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement.

Secondary evidence. That which is inferior to primary evidence. Thus, a copy of an instrument, or oral evidence of its contents, is secondary evidence of the instrument and contents. It is that species of evidence which becomes admissible, when the primary or best evidence of the fact in question is lost or inaccessible; as when a witness details orally the contents of an instrument which is lost or destroyed. See also Circumstantial evidence; Hearsay; Second-hand evidence. Compare Best evidence.

Secondary lender. A wholesale mortgage buyer who purchases first mortgages from banks and savings and loan associations, enabling them to restock their money supply and loan more money.

Secondary liability. A liability which does not attach until or except upon the fulfillment of certain conditions; as that of a surety, or that of an accommodation indorser.

Secondary market. Securities exchanges and over-the-counter markets where securities are bought and sold after their original issue (which took place in the primary market). Proceeds of secondary market sales accrue to selling investors not to the company that originally issued the securities. See also Primary market.

Secondary meaning. Some words or other devices used as trademarks may not be distinctive when first adopted, but may acquire distinctiveness over time. When such a mark has come to signify that an item is produced or sponsored by a particular merchant it is said that the mark has secondary meaning. Types of marks requiring secondary meaning before they will be protected include (1) descriptive and misdescriptive terms; (2) geographically descriptive and misdescriptive terms and (3) surnames. Under the Lanham Act, five years of exclusive use of a mark is deemed prima facie evidence of secondary meaning. Perfect Fit Industries, Inc. v. Acme Quilting Co., Inc., C.A.N.Y., 618 F.2d 950, 952.
SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET

Secondary mortgage market. A national market in which existing mortgages are bought and sold; usually on a package basis. Contrasts with the primary market where mortgages are originated.

Secondary offering. See Offering; Secondary distribution.

Secondary parties. In negotiable instruments, a drawer or endorser. U.C.C. § 3-102(1)(d).

Secondary picketing. A form of picketing in which pressure is put on one business establishment with which there is no dispute in order to induce such business to put pressure on the business establishment with which the employees have a primary dispute. See also Secondary boycott; Secondary strike.

Secondary strike. A strike against firms which supply goods and materials to the firm with which there is a primary dispute. See also Secondary boycott.

Second degree crime. A crime of lesser gravity than a first degree crime. Some states have first, second and third degree crimes and the punishment for each varies according to the degree. See e.g. Second degree murder.

Second degree murder. The unlawful taking of human life with malice, but without the other aggravating elements of first degree murder; i.e. without deliberation or premeditation.

Second-hand evidence. Evidence which has passed through one or more media before reaching the witness; hearsay evidence. See also Circumstantial evidence; Hearsay; Secondary evidence.

Second lien. One which takes rank immediately after a first lien on the same property and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds.

Second mortgage. A mortgage on property which ranks in priority below a first mortgage. In title states, it is the transfer of the mortgagor's equity of redemption to secure a debt.

Secrecy. The quality or condition of being concealed or secret, as the proceedings of a grand jury are to be held in secrecy.

Secret. Concealed; hidden; not made public; particularly, in law, kept from the knowledge or notice of persons liable to be affected by the act, transaction, deed, or other thing spoken of. Something known only to one or a few and kept from others.

As to secret Committee; Equity; Partnership, and Trust, see those titles. See also Secret; Trade secret.

Secretary. In reference to a corporation or association, refers to an officer charged with the direction and management of that part of the business of the company which is concerned with keeping the records, the official correspondence, with giving and receiving notices, countersigning documents, etc. Also known sometimes as clerk of the corporation.

Also a name given to several of the heads of executive departments in the government of the United States; as the "Secretary of State", "Secretary of the Interior," etc.

Secret lien. A lien reserved by the vendor of chattels, who has delivered them to the vendee, to secure the payment of the price, which is concealed from all third persons.

Secret Service. The major powers and responsibilities of the U.S. Secret Service are defined in section 3056, Title 18, United States Code. The investigative responsibilities are to detect and arrest persons committing any offense against the laws of the United States relating to coins obligations, and securities of the United States and of foreign governments; and to detect and arrest persons violating certain laws relating to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal land banks, electronic fund transfer frauds, credit and debit card frauds, false identification documents. The protective responsibilities include protection of the President of the United States and the members of his immediate family; the President-elect and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; the Vice President or other officer next in the order of succession to the Office of the President, and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; the Vice President-elect, and the members of his immediate family unless the members decline such protection; the former President and his wife during his lifetime; the widow of a former President until her death or remarriage; the minor children of a former President until they reach 18 years of age, unless such protection is declined; a visiting head of a foreign state or foreign government and, at the direction of the President, other distinguished foreign visitors to the United States and official representatives of the United States performing special missions abroad.
In addition, 18 U.S.C.A. § 3056 authorizes the Secret Service to protect major Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, unless such protection is declined; the spouse of a major Presidential or Vice Presidential nominee, except that such protection shall not commence more than 120 days prior to the general Presidential election.

Sect. As applied to religious bodies, a party or body of persons who unite in holding certain special doctrines or opinions concerning religion, which distinguish them from others holding the same general religious belief.

Secta /séktə/. In old English law, suit; attendance at court; the plaintiff's suit or following, i.e., the witnesses whom he was required, in the ancient practice, to bring with him and produce in court, for the purpose of confirming his claim, before the defendant was put to the necessity of answering the declaration. A survival from this proceeding is seen in the formula still used at the end of declarations, "and therefore he brings his suit" (et inde pro ductit sectam). This word, in its secondary meaning, signifies suit in the courts; lawsuit.

Secta curiae /séktə kyəriyə/. In old English law, suit of the spouse of a major Presidential or Vice Presidential nominee, except that such protection shall not commence into half-sections and quarter-sections. See also Quarter section.

Secta est pugna civilis; sicut actores armantur ac tinguntur, ita rei muni tur exceptionibus, et defenduntur, quasi, clypeis /séktə èst pəŋə sivələs; sikst əktərɪˈriz ɑrˈmɛntər əkˈʃeɪliˈəʊnəbəz, ɛt, kwɛˈzɛyət, gləˈdɪsə əksəˈɡəntər, əɪts ˈriːə miəˈwɪniˈlɛntər əkˈseɪpəliˈəʊnəbəs, et ˈdefendəntər, kwɛˈzɛyət klɪˈpiːəz/. A suit is a civil warfare; for as the plaintiffs are armed with actions, and, as it were, girded with swords, so the defendants are fortified with pleas, and are defended, as it were, by shields.

Secta facienda per illam qua habet eniciam partem /séktə fəˈʃeɪliˈənds pər ɪləm kwə ˈhæbət ənikəˈjəm ˈpɔrtəm/. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform the suit and services for all the coparceners.

Secta que scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet /séktə kwə skrɪˈptu nɪˈtʊər ə skrɪˈptu vərəˈiərə sən d ˈdɛbət/. A suit which is based upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing.

Secta regalis /séktə rəˈɡɛləs/. In old English law, a suit so called by which all persons were bound twice in the year to attend in the sheriff's tourn, in order that they might be informed of things relating to the public peace. It was so called because the sheriff's tourn was the king's leet, and it was held in order that the people might be bound by oath to bear true allegiance to the king.

Sectarian. Denominational; devoted to, peculiar to, pertaining to, or promotive of, the interest of a sect, or sects. In a broader sense, used to describe the activities of the followers of one faith as related to those of adherents of another. The term is most comprehensive in scope. See also Sect.

Sectatores /sɛktəˈtɔrɪəz/. Suitors of court who, among the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law.

Secta unica tantum facienda pro pluribus hazreditati bus /sɛktə yʊˈwʊnsə tæntəm fæʃiˈɛnda prɔ pləˈrɪbrəz hərəˈdeɪtətəbəs/. In old English law, a writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him.

Section. In text-books, codes, statutes, and other juridical writings, the smallest distinct and numbered subdivisions are commonly called "sections," sometimes "articles," and occasionally "paragraphs."

Section of land. A division or parcel of land, on the government survey, comprising one square mile or 640 acres. Each "township" (six miles square) is divided by straight lines into thirty-six sections, and these are again divided into half-sections and quarter-sections. See also Quarter section.

Sectis non faciendis /sɛktəs nɔn fæʃiˈɛndəz/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a dowress, or one in wardship, to be free from suit of court.

Sectores /sɛktəˈriːəz/. Lat. In Roman law, purchasers at auction, or public sales.

Secular. Not spiritual; not ecclesiastical; relating to affairs of the present (temporal) world.

Secular business. As used in Sunday closing laws, this term includes all forms of activity in the business affairs of life, the prosecution of a trade or employment, and commercial dealings, such as the making of promissory notes, lending money, and the like.

Secular clergy. In ecclesiastical law, the parochial clergy, who perform their ministry in seculo (in the world), and who are thus distinguished from the monastic or "regular" clergy.

Secundum /səˈkændəm/. Lat. Next to; beside; immediately after. In the civil and common law, according to. Occurring in many phrases of familiar use, as follows:

Secundum aquam et bonum /səˈkændəm əˈkwəm ət ˈbɒnum/. According to what is just and right.

Secundum allegata et probata /səˈkændəm əˈlɛɡətə ət ˈprəbətə/. According to what is alleged and proved; according to the allegations and proofs.

Secundum formam chartae /səˈkændəm fɔrˈməm kɑrtə]. According to the form of the charter (deed).
Secured transaction. Any transaction, regardless of its form, that is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures, including goods, documents, and other intangibles. A transaction which is founded on a security agreement. Such agreement creates or provides for a security interest. U.C.C. § 9-105(h). See Security agreement.

Securitas /saküurataes/. In old English law, security; surety. In the civil law, an acquittance or release.

Securitatem invenienda /sakyürsteytam anviyinýen-dy/. An ancient writ, lying for the sovereign, against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of the kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth as the crown shall think fit.

Securitatis pacis /sakyürsteytas pęyas/. In old English law, security of the peace. A writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened.

Securities. Stocks, bonds, notes, convertible debentures, warrants, or other documents that represent a share in a company or a debt owed by a company or government entity. Evidences of obligations to pay money or of rights to participate in earnings and distribution of corporate assets. Instruments giving to their legal holders rights to money or other property; they are therefore instruments which have intrinsic value and are recognized and used as such in the regular channels of commerce. U.S. v. Canton, C.A.N.Y., 470 F.2d 861, 865.

See also Bond; Consolidated securities; Convertible securities; Debenture; Distribution; Growth stock; Letter stock; Listed security; Marketable securities; Municipal securities; Registration of securities; Security; Stock; Treasury stock; Watered stock. For marshalling of securities, see Marshalling assets.

Coupon securities. See Coupons.

Exempt securities. Those securities which need not be registered under provisions of Securities Act of 1933, § 3; 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 77c, 78c(12).

Securities Act of 1933. Federal law which provides for registration of securities which are to be sold to the public and for complete information as to the issuer and the stock offering. 15 U.S.C.A. § 77a et seq. See also Registration of securities; Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

Securities Acts. Federal and state statutes governing the registration, offering, sale, etc. of securities. Major federal acts include the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (q.v.). Such federal acts are administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Securities Act. See Registration of securities.

Securities broker. See Broker.
Securities Exchange Act of 1934. A federal law which governs the operation of stock exchanges and over the counter trading. It requires, among other things, publication of information concerning stocks which are listed on these exchanges. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78 et seq. See also Securities Act of 1933.

Securities exchanges. Markets for the purchase and sale of traditional securities at which brokers for purchasers and sellers may effect transactions. The best known and largest securities exchange is the New York Stock Exchange.

Securities offering. See Issue (Securities); Offering; Registration of securities; Underwrite.

Security. Protection; assurance; indemnification. The term is usually applied to an obligation, pledge, mortgage, deposit, lien, etc., given by a debtor in order to assure the payment or performance of his debt, by furnishing the creditor with a resource to be used in case of failure in the principal obligation. Collateral given by debtor to secure loan. Document that indicates evidence of indebtedness. The name is also sometimes given to one who becomes surety or guarantor for another.

Test for a "security" under securities laws is whether the scheme involves an investment of money in a common enterprise with profits to come solely from the efforts of others so that whenever an investor relinquishes control over his funds and submits their control to another for the purpose and hopeful expectation of deriving profits therefrom he is in fact investing his funds in a security. Investment Co. Institute v. Camp, D.C.D.C. 274 F.Supp. 624, 642. "Security" under Securities Act of 1933, means investment in common enterprise in which investors are purchasing interest and where growth of that investment is to result from efforts of promoter, Neuwirth Inv. Fund, Ltd., v. Swanton, D.C.N.Y., 422 F.Supp. 1187, 1194; and the label attached to the transaction is not determinative. McGovern Plaza Joint Venture v. First of Denver Mortg. Investors, 562 F.2d 645, 646.

"Security" includes any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in an oil, gas or mining title or lease or in payments out of production under such a title or lease, collateral trust certificate, transferable share, voting trust certificate or, in general, any interest or instrument commonly known as a security, or any certificate of interest or participation, any temporary or interim certificate, receipt or certificate of deposit for, or any warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201.

For purposes of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the term "security" embraces all investment contracts, and the test is whether the investment is made in a common enterprise which is premised upon the reasonable expectation of profits solely from the managerial or entrepreneurial efforts of others; such test contains three elements: the investment of money; a common enterprise; and profits or returns derived solely from efforts of others. Feltz v. National Account Systems Ass'n., Inc., D.C.Miss., 469 F.Supp. 54, 63. See 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 77b(1), 78c(10).

A note may be a security, and subject to federal securities laws, even if it has no fixed term and is payable on demand, depending on the economic realities of the transaction. Reves v. Ernst & Young, 110 S.Ct. 945, 108 L.Ed.2d 47.

The term "security" means any bond, debenture, note or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness, issued by a corporation or a government or political subdivision thereof, with interest coupons or in registered form, share of stock, voting trust certificate, or any certificate of interest or participation in, certificate of deposit or receipt for, temporary or interim certificate for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing; negotiable instrument; or money. I.R.C. § 6323(h)(4).

As defined in the Bankruptcy Code § 101, "security" includes: note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit, investment contract or certificate of interest, etc.

Under the U.C.C. (§ 8-102), a security is either a "certificated" or "uncertificated" security. See these terms below.

See also Collateral; Equity security; Hybrid securities; Internal security acts; Investment security; Junior security issue; Lien; Listed security; Pledge; Risk capital test; Securities; Stock.

Assessable security. A security on which a charge or assessment for the obligations of the issuing company may be made. In many instances, bank and insurance company stocks are assessable.

Certificated security. A "certificated security" is a share, participation, or other interest in property of or an enterprise of the issuer or an obligation of the issuer which is (i) represented by an instrument issued in bearer or registered form; (ii) of a type commonly dealt in on securities exchanges or markets or commonly recognized in any area in which it is issued or dealt in as a medium for investment; and (iii) either one of a class or series or by its terms divisible into a class or series of shares, participations, interests, or obligations. U.C.C. § 8-102(1)(a).

Collateral security. Property which has been pledged or mortgaged to secure a loan or a sale.

Convertible security. See Convertible securities.

Equity security. The term "equity security" means any stock or similar security; or any security convertible, with or without consideration, into such a security; or carrying any warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase such a security; or any such warrant or right; or any other security which the Securities and Exchange Commission shall deem to be of similar nature and consider necessary or appropriate, by such rules and regulations as it may prescribe in the public interest or for the protection of investors, to treat as an equity security. Securities Exchange Act, § 3; 15 U.S.C.A. § 78c(11).

(A) share in a corporation, whether or not transferable or denominated "stock", or similar security; (B) interest of a limited partner in a limited partnership; or (C) warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell, or subscribe to a share, security, or interest of a kind specified in subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Government security. Any security issued or guaranteed as to principal or interest by the United States, or by a person controlled or supervised by and acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States; or any certificate of deposit for any of the foregoing. Investment Company Act, § 2; 15 U.S.C.A. § 80a–2(a)(16).

Hybrid security. A security which combines features of both debt and equity; i.e. of both bond and stock. See also Hybrid securities.

Junior security. Security with priority claim on assets and income subordinate to senior security.

Listed security. A security which has been listed for trading on one of the stock exchanges or which has been listed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

 Marketable security. A security which is of reasonable investment caliber and which can be easily sold on the market.

Non-marketable security. A security which cannot be sold on the market such as certain government bonds and notes. It can only be redeemed by the holder. Also, a security which is not of investment quality.

Outstanding security. A security which is held by an investor and which has not been redeemed or purchased back by the issuing corporation.

Personal security. An obligation to repay a debt evidenced by a pledge, note or bond in contrast to collateral security. Evidences of debt which bind the person of the debtor, not real property. Merrill v. National Bank, 173 U.S. 131, 19 S.Ct. 360, 43 L.Ed. 640.

A person’s legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 BL.Comm. 129.

Public security. Bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and other negotiable or transferable instruments evidencing the public debt of a state or government.

Real security. The security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land. See Merrill v. National Bank, 173 U.S. 131, 19 S.Ct. 360, 43 L.Ed. 640. See also Collateral.

Redeemable security. Any security, other than short-term paper, under the terms of which the holder upon its presentation to the issuer or to a person designated by the issuer, is entitled (whether absolutely or only out of surplus) to receive approximately his proportionate share of the issuer’s current net assets, or the cash equivalent thereof. Investment Company Act, § 2; 15 U.S.C.A. § 80a–2(a)(32).

Security for costs. See Security for costs.

Security for good behavior. A bond or recognizance which the magistrate exacts from a defendant brought before him on a charge of disorderly conduct or threatening violence, conditioned upon his being of good behavior, or keeping the peace, for a prescribed period, towards all people in general and the complainant in particular. A peace bond.

Senior security. A security with rights that take precedence over those of other securities in a given capital structure.

Short term security. A bond or note which matures in and is payable within a short span of time. Such securities are purchased by institutional investors for income rather than for growth potential.

Treasury securities. See Treasury stock.

Uncertificated security. An “uncertificated security” is a share, participation, or other interest in property or an enterprise of the issuer or an obligation of the issuer which is (i) not represented by an instrument and the transfer of which is registered upon books maintained for that purpose by or on behalf of the issuer; (ii) of a type commonly dealt in on securities exchanges or markets; and (iii) either one of a class or series or by its terms divisible into a class or series of shares, participations, interests, or obligations. U.C.C. § 8–102(1b).

Unlisted security. An over the counter security which is not listed on a stock exchange.

Security agreement. An agreement which creates or provides for a security interest between the debtor and a secured party. U.C.C. § 9–105(h); Bankruptcy Code § 101. An agreement granting a creditor a security interest in personal property, which security interest is normally perfected either by the creditor taking possession of the collateral or by filing financing statements in the proper public records. See Perfection of security interest; Purchase money security interest; Secured transaction; Security interest.

Security Council. The executive body of the United Nations, charged with the duty of preventing or stopping wars by diplomatic, economic or military action. It is composed of five permanent members and six additional members elected at stated intervals.

Security deposit. Money deposited by tenant with landlord as security for full and faithful performance by tenant of terms of lease, including damages to premises. It is refundable unless the tenant has caused damage or injury to the property or has breached the terms of the tenancy or the laws governing the tenancy. Such deposits are regulated by statute in most states. Certain states also require the landlord to make a security deposit to cover essential repairs required on rental property.

Security for costs. Payment into court in the form of cash, property or bond by a plaintiff or an appellant to secure the payment of costs if such person does not prevail; e.g., Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(c) requires adequate security when restraining order or preliminary injunction is issued. See also Costs.

Security fund. See Client security fund.

Security interest. Interest in property obtained pursuant to security agreement. In re Wilson, Bkrtcy.Pa., 25 B.R. 61, 63. A form of interest in property which provides that the property may be sold on default in order to satisfy the obligation for which the security interest is given. An interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation, U.C.C. §§ 1-201(37), 9-102, including the interest of an assignee of the proceeds of a letter of credit, § 5-116(2). Lien created by an agreement. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Often, the term "lien" is used as a synonym, although lien most commonly refers only to interests providing security that are created by operation of law, not through agreement of the debtor and creditor. Compare Lien.

The term "security interest" means any interest in property acquired by contract for the purpose of securing payment or performance of an obligation or indemnifying against loss or liability. A security interest exists at any time, (A) if, at such time, the property is in existence and the interest has become protected under local law against a subsequent judgment lien arising out of an unsecured obligation, and (B) to the extent that, at such time, the holder has parted with money or money's worth. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Purchase money security interest. A secured interest which is created when a buyer uses the money of the lender to make the purchase and immediately gives to the lender a security interest. U.C.C. § 9-107. See Mortgage (Purchase money mortgage).

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident ocult quam oculus /sekyuriyas sksplydiyawtor nagowash(y) komlas pl(y)urabas, et plas väydanf ókyalay kwêm ókyalas/. SED QuæRE

Sed quære /sēd kwiriy/. Lat. But inquire; examine this further. A remark indicating, briefly, that the particular statement or rule laid down is doubted or challenged in respect to its correctness.

Seduce. To induce to surrender chastity. To lead away or astray. See also Seduction.

Seduction. The act of seducing. Act of man enticing woman to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, bribes or other means without employment of force. Lynn v. Shaw, Okl., 620 P.2d 899, 902. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 213.3(1)(d) (inducement by promise of marriage).

Segregation. The act or process of separation. The unconstitutional policy and practice of separating people on the basis of color, nationality, religion, etc. in housing and schooling. See De facto segregation: De jure segregation.

Seignior /sēn(y)iar/. In its general signification, means "lord," but in law it is particularly applied to the lord of a fee or of a manor; and the fee, dominions, or manor of a seignior is thence termed a "seigniory," i.e., a lordship. He who is a lord, but of no manor, and therefore unable to keep a court, is termed a "seignior in gross."

Seigniorage /sēnyərəj/. A royalty or prerogative of the sovereign, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed. Mintage; the charge for coining bullion into money at the mint.

A sum equivalent to the difference between interest payable upon a mortgage held by a title insurance and mortgage company at the rate named therein for any period and the interest payable for such period on securities issued by the company with respect to such mortgage, at the rate named in such securities. Commissioner of Insurance v. Conveyancers Title Ins. & Mortg. Co., 300 Mass. 457, 15 N.E.2d 820, 822.

Seignioresse /sēnyərəs/. A female superior.

Seigniory /sēnyərəri/. In English law, a lordship; a manor. The rights of a lord, as such, in lands.

Seisi /sīzay/. In old English law, seised; possessed.

Seisin /sīzan/. Possession of real property under claim of freehold estate. The completion of the feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the feu, and performed the rights of homage and fealty. Possession with an intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest. Right to immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. Williams v. Swango, 365 Ill. 549, 7 N.E.2d 306, 309.

Actual seisin. Possession of the freehold by the pedis positio of one's self or one's tenant or agent, or by construction of law, as in the case of a state grant or a conveyance under the statutes of uses, or (probably) of grant or devise where there is no actual adverse possession; it means actual possession as distinguished from constructive possession or possession in law.

Constructive seisin. Seisin in law where there is no seisin in fact; as where the state issues a patent to a person who never takes any sort of possession of the lands granted, he has constructive seisin of all the land in his grant, though another person is at the time in actual possession.

Covenant of seisin. See Covenant.

Equitable seisin. A seisin which is analogous to legal seisin; that is, seisin of an equitable estate in land. Thus a mortgagor is said to have equitable seisin of the land by receipt of the rents.

Livery of seisin. Delivery of possession; called, by the feudists, "investiture."

Prime seisin. In old English law, the right which the king had, when any of his tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bl.Com 66.

Quasi seisin. A term applied to the possession which a copyholder has of the land to which he has been admitted. The freehold in copyhold lands being in the lord, the copyholder cannot have seisin of them in the proper sense of the word, but he has a customary or quasi seisin analogous to that of a freeholder.

Seisin in deed. Actual possession of the freehold; the same as actual seisin or seisin in fact. Roetzler v. Beal, 196 Ark. 5, 116 S.W.2d 591, 593.

Seisin in fact. Possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest; the same as actual seisin.

Seisin in law. A right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. As the old doctrine of corporeal investiture is no longer in force, the delivery of a deed gives seisin in law.

Seisina /sīzana/. L. Lat. Seisin.

Seisina facit stipitem /sīzana feysat stipatam/. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bl.Com 209.

Seisesa habenda /sīzana habenda/. A writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the Seize /səˈzaɪz/. To put in possession, invest with fee simple, be seized of or in, be legal possessor of, or be holder in fee simple. Hanley v. Stewart, 155 Pa.Super. 535, 39 A.2d 323, 326. To "seize" means to take possession forcibly, to grasp, to snatch or to put in possession. State v. Dees, Fla.App., 280 So.2d 51, 52. See Seisin.

Seized. A person is "seized" within Fourth Amendment when police officer restrains person's freedom to walk away. State v. Ochoa, 112 Ariz. 582, 544 P.2d 1097, 1099. It exists when reasonable person would feel that he was not free to leave. U.S. v. Albert, C.A.N.C., 816 F.2d 958, 960. See Seize.

The status of legally owning and possessing real estate. See Seisin.

Seizin /səˈziːn/. See Seisin.

Seizure. The act of taking possession of property, e.g., for a violation of law or by virtue of an execution of a judgment. Term implies a taking or removal of something from the possession, actual or constructive, of another person or persons. Molina v. State, 53 Wis.2d 662, 193 N.W.2d 874, 877.

The act performed by an officer of the law, under the authority and exigence of a writ, in taking into the custody of the law the property, real or personal, of a person against whom the judgment of a competent court has passed, condemning him to pay a certain sum of money, in order that such property may be sold, by authority and due course of law, to satisfy the judgment. Or the act of taking possession of goods in consequence of a violation of public law.

A "seizure" of property (under Fourth Amendment) occurs when there is some meaningful interference with an individual's possessory interest in that property. U.S. v. Jacobsen, U.S.Minn., 466 U.S. 109, 104 S.Ct. 1652, 1656, 80 L.Ed.2d 85.

Seizure of an individual, within the Fourth Amendment, connotes the taking of one physically or constructively into custody and detaining him, thus causing a deprivation of his freedom in a significant way, with real interruption of his liberty of movement. U.S. v. Albert, C.A.N.C., 816 F.2d 958. Such occurs not only when an officer arrests an individual, but whenever he restrains the individual's freedom to walk away. Robins v. Harum, C.A.Wash., 773 F.2d 1004, 1009. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 41; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3101 et seq. See also Search.

See also Attachment; Capture; Confiscate; Forfeiture; Garnishment; Impound; Levy.

"Search" distinguished. A "search" is a probing or exploration for something that is concealed or hidden from the searcher, whereas a "seizure" is a forcible or secretive dispossession of something against the will of the possessor or owner. U. S. v. Marti, D.C.N.Y., 321 F.Supp. 59, 63. See also Search.

Select. To take by preference from among others; to pick out; to cull.

Select council. The name given, in some states, to the upper house or branch of the council of a city.

Selecti judices /səˈlɛktɪ ˈʃʌdɪʃəz/. Lat. In Roman law, judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the prator, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged, and sworn. 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Selective service system. An executive branch agency charged with the registration, examination, classification, selection, assignment, delivery for induction, and maintenance of records of persons subject to military service. It is maintained as an active standby organization when military personnel needs are met by a volunteer program. 50 U.S.C.A.App. § 460.

Selectmen. The name of certain municipal officers, in the New England states, elected by the towns to transact their general public business, and possessing certain executive powers.

Self-dealing. Exists where person in fiduciary or confidential relationship uses property of another for his own personal benefit. For example, where a trustee, acting for himself and also as "trustee," a relation which demands strict fidelity to others, seeks to consummate a deal wherein self-interest is opposed to duty. Cestui que trust has in such case the election to affirm or disaffirm, unless countervailing equities have intervened. See also Conflict of interest; Insider; Insider trading.

Self-defense. The protection of one's person or property against some injury attempted by another. The right of such protection. An excuse for the use of force in resisting an attack on the person.

Various state criminal statutes define the conditions of self defense. The Model Penal Code provides: "A person is justified in the use of force against an aggressor when and to the extent it appears to him and he reasonably believes that such conduct is necessary to defend himself or another against such aggressor's imminent use of unlawful force. One who is not the aggressor in an encounter is justified in using a reasonable amount of force against his adversary when he reasonably believes: (a) that he is in immediate danger of unlawful bodily harm from his adversary and (b) that the use of such force is necessary to avoid this danger. It may be reasonable to use nondeadly force against the adversary's nondeadly attack (i.e., one threatening only bodily harm), and to use deadly force against his deadly attack (an attack threatening death or serious bodily harm), but it is never reasonable to use deadly force against his nondeadly attack." Model Penal Code § 3.04.

The principles of self-defense as a justification for the torts or assault and battery are very similar to those governing self-defense as a justification in the criminal law. See Restatement, Second, Torts, §§ 633, 65, 67 (1965).

See also Apparent danger; Defense of others; Imminent danger; Justification; Reasonable force.

Self-employment tax. The social security tax imposed on the net earnings of a self-employed individual. The Self-executing. Anything (e.g., a document or legislation) which is effective immediately without the need of intervening court action, ancillary legislation, or other type of implementing action.

Self-executing constitutional provision. Term has reference to provisions which are immediately effective without the necessity of ancillary legislation. Constitutional provision is “self-executing” if it supplies sufficient rule by which right given may be enjoyed or duty imposed enforced; constitutional provision is not “self-executing” when it merely indicates principles without laying down rules giving them force of law.

Self-executing judgments. Those requiring no affirmative action of the court or action under process issued by the court to execute them.

Self-help. Taking an action in person or by a representative outside of the normal legal process with legal consequences, whether the action is legal or not; for example, a “self-help eviction” may be a landlord’s removing the tenant’s property from an apartment and locking the door against the tenant. Self-help repossession (i.e. without judicial process) of goods by creditor on default is permitted under U.C.C. § 9-503, if such can be done “without breach of the peace.”

Self-incrimination. Acts or declarations either as testimony at trial or prior to trial by which one implicates himself in a crime. The Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const., as well as provisions in many state constitutions and laws, prohibit the government from requiring a person to be a witness against himself involuntarily or to furnish evidence against himself. It is the burden of the government to accuse and to carry the burden of proof of guilt. The defendant cannot be compelled to aid the government in this regard. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 6001 et seq. See also Compulsory self-incrimination; Link-in-chain; Privilege against self-incrimination; Taking the Fifth.

Self-insurance. The practice of setting aside a fund to meet losses instead of insuring against such through insurance. A common practice of business is to self-insure up to a certain amount, and then to cover any excess with insurance. Workers’ compensation obligates may also be met through this method if statutory requirements are met.

Self-murder, self-destruction, or self-slaughter. See Felo de se; Suicide.

Self-serving declaration. A species of hearsay evidence consisting of an extrajudicial declaration by a party to an action, the import of which is to prove an essential element of his case. Such statements are inadmissible unless they fall under a recognized category of exception to the hearsay rule such as a business entry, declaration of a deceased party, etc., or unless they are offered for a non-hearsay purpose such as the fact that the party made the statement and not for the truth of the statement. Statement, oral or written, or equivalent act, by Self-employment tax is assessed in addition to an income tax up to an annual maximum, which is reduced by any wages previously subject to social security taxes.

Sell. To dispose of by sale (q.v.). To transfer title or possession of property to another in exchange for valuable consideration. K.C.S., Ltd. v. East Main Street Land Development Corp., 40 Md.App. 196, 388 A.2d 181, 183.

Seller. Vendor; one who has contracted to sell property. A person who sells or contracts to sell goods. U.C.C. § 2-103(1)(d).

Semel malus semper presumitur esse malus in eodem genere /sémal málas sempár pres(y)úmnstehr esíy málas ín iyówdam jénairy/. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same kind of affairs.

Selling stocks short. See Short sale.

Semel civis semper civis /sémal sívas sempár sivas/. Once a citizen always a citizen.

Semiaufragium /sémiyofreyj(i)am/. Lat. In maritime law, half-shipwreck, as where goods are cast overboard in a storm; also where a ship has been so much damaged that her repair costs more than her worth.

Semi-plena probatio /sémi-plénya probéysh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, half-full proof; half-proof. See Half-proof.

Semper /sémpar/. Lat. Always. A word which introduces several Latin maxims, of which some are also used without this prefix.

Semper in dubiis benigniora praeferenda sunt /sémpar in d(y)úwbiyas bóni-gnyóra préférénda sánt/. In doubtful cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred.

Semper in dubiis, quod minimum est /sémpar in d(y)úwbiyas kwod mínamam est/. In obscure constructions we always apply that which is the least obscure.

Semper in stipulationibus, et in ceteris contractibus, id sequitur quod actum est /sémpar in stipyaley-shiyównas, ét in sétaras kantréktobas, id sékwamar kwó déktaam ést/. In stipulations and in other contracts we follow that which was done [we are governed by the actual state of the facts].

Semper ita fiat ratio ut valeat dispositio /sémpar íta fáyt roléysh(y)ow íta vééliysh displazish(y)ow/. Reference [of a disposition in a will] should always be so made that the disposition may have effect.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit /sémpar náseéstáas prábánday inkámbt íyá kwáy éyjáy/. The claimant is always bound to prove [the burden of proof lies on the actor].

Semper paratus /sémpar paréytas/. Lat. Always ready. The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has always been ready to perform what is demanded of him.

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum /sémpar práz(y)úwmsatr prów lajiitméshiyóniyí púyú-waróom/. The presumption always is in favor of the legitimacy of children.

Semper præsumitur pro matrimonio /sémpar práz(y)úwmsatr prów matrómáwn(y)ow/. The presumption is always in favor of the validity of a marriage.

Semper præsumitur pro negante /sémpar práz(y)úwmsatr prów nágéntiy/. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies.

Semper præsumitur pro sententia /sémpar práz(y)úwmsatr prów sénéntsh(y)ya/. The presumption always is in favor of a sentence.

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire, mandare creditur /sémpar kwáy nón prów(h)abat prów síy intervónaýryí, mandéry créstdér/. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam femininum sexum continet /sémpar sékáas máskyaláyýnas íysh(y)om fémóyánýam sékáas kóntnàt/. The masculine sex always includes the feminine.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt /sémpar spéáshiyéylíyàs jénaráylabas insánt/. Specials are always included in generals.

Senage /siynaj/. Money paid for synodals.

Senate. The name of the upper chamber, or less numerous branch, of the Congress of the United States. Also the name of a similar body in the legislatures of most of the states.

The U.S. Senate is composed of 100 Members, 2 from each State, who are elected to serve for a term of 6 years. Senators were originally chosen by the State legislatures. This procedure was changed by the Seventeenth Amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1913, which made the election of Senators a function of the people. One-third of the Senate is elected every 2 years.

Senator. One who is a member of a senate, either of the United States or of a state. See Seventeenth Amendment.

Senatus /sáneýtaas/. Lat. In Roman law, the senate; the great national council of the Roman people. The place where the senate met.

Senatus consultum /sáneýtaas kánsááltam/. In Roman law, a decision or decree of the Roman senate, having the force of law, made without the concurrence of the people. These enactments began to take the place of laws enacted by popular vote, when the commons had grown so great in number that they could no longer be assembled for legislative purposes.

Senatus consultum ultime necessitatis /sáneýtaas kánsááltam náseéstéytas/. A decree of the senate of the last necessity. The name given to the decree which usually preceded the nomination of a dictator. 1 Bl. Comm. 136.

Senatus decreta /sáneýtaas dákrýtaas/. Lat. In the civil law, decisions of the senate. Private acts concerning particular persons merely.

Send. Term in connection with any writing or notice means to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication with postage or cost of transmission provided for and properly addressed and in the case of an instrument to an address specified thereon or otherwise agreed, or if there be none, to any address reasonable under the circumstances. The receipt of any writing or notice within the time at which it would have arrived if properly sent has the effect of a proper sending. U.C.C. § 1–201(38).

Senescallus /sénsékálas/. In old English law, a seneschal; a steward; the steward of a manor.
Seneschal /sénəšal/. In old European law, a title of office and dignity, derived from the middle ages, answering to that of steward or high steward in England. Seneschals were originally the lieutenants of the dukes and other great feudatories of the kingdom, and sometimes had the dispensing of justice and high military commands.

Senility /sənɪlɪtɪ/. Quality of being senile; an infirmity resulting from deterioration of mind and body experienced in old age. Feebleness of body and mind incident to old age; and an incapacity to contract arising from the impairment of the intellectual faculties by old age.

Senior. The elder. An addition to the name of the elder of two persons in the same family having the same name.

With reference to debt or security interests, means preference over junior obligations as to claims and payment.

Senior counsel. Of two or more counsel retained on the same side of a cause, he is the “senior” who is the elder, or more important in rank or estimation, or who is charged with the more difficult or important parts of the management of the case. May also refer to “lead” counsel in a class or multi-district action.

Senior interest. A debt security or preferred share that has a claim prior to that of junior obligations or common shares on a corporation’s assets and earnings. A interest or right that takes effect or has preference over that of others; e.g. a person with a perfected security interest has a senior interest over other security holders in the same property. Compare Junior interest.

Seniority. Precedence or preference in position over others similarly situated. As used, for example, with reference to job seniority, worker with most years of service is first promoted within range of jobs subject to seniority, and is the last laid off, proceeding so on down the line to the youngest in point of service. See also Dovetail seniority, Priority.

Seniority system. Any system or arrangement which recognizes length of service in promotions, layoffs, etc.

Senior judge. Of several judges composing a court, the one who holds the oldest commission, or who has served the longest time under his present commission. A judge in the federal system who qualifies for senior status and who chooses such status rather than retirement; e.g. senior judge of U.S. District Court or Court of Appeals. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 136.

Senior lien. A prior lien which has precedence as to the property under the lien over another lien or encumbrance. Compare Junior lien. See also Senior interest.

Senior mortgage. A mortgage which is of superior priority over others; above those which are often referred to as junior mortgages. Compare Junior mortgage. Sensus /sensəs/. Lat. Sense, meaning, signification. Malo sensu, in an evil or derogatory sense. Mitior sensu, in a milder, less severe, or less stringent sense. Sensu honesto, in an honest sense; to interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the persons concerned.

Sensus verborum est anima legis /sensus varbōrum est ānmə liyjəs/. The meaning of the words is the spirit of the law.

Sensus verborum est duplex—mitis et asper; et verba semper accipianda sunt in mitiori sensu /sensus varbōrum ēst d(y)wplekṣ—māyta ēt āsper, ēt vīrbo sempār skaspriyēnda sānt ēn mishiyōray sēn(y)uw/. The meaning of words is twofold—mild and harsh; and words are always to be received in their milder sense.

Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est; et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subiectam materiam /sensus varbōrum ēks kōsā dēsēndēy skaspriyēnda ēst; ēt sarmōnıyzyzh sempār skaspriyēnda sānt sēkdām sbjēktam matrīyam/. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them; and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. Sentence. The judgment formally pronounced by the court or judge upon the defendant after his conviction in a criminal prosecution, imposing the punishment to be inflicted, usually in the form of a fine, incarceration, or probation. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3551. Judgment of court formally advising accused of legal consequences of guilt which he has confessed of or of which he has been convicted. Sentencing may be carried out by a judge, jury, or sentencing council (panel or judges), depending on the statutes of the jurisdiction. The word is properly confined to criminal proceedings. In Civil cases, the terms “judgment,” “decision,” “award,” “finding,” etc., are used. Archer v. Snook, D.C.Ga., 10 F.2d 567, 569.

For review of sentence of federal prisoner, see Post conviction remedies. Concurrent sentence. A sentence imposed which is to be served at the same time as another sentence imposed earlier or at the same proceeding.

Consecutive sentence. See Cumulative sentences, below. Cumulative sentences. Separate sentences (each additional to the others) imposed upon a defendant who has been convicted upon an indictment containing several counts, each of such counts charging a distinct offense, or who is under conviction at the same time for several distinct offenses; one of such sentences being made to begin at the expiration of another. Carter v. McCloughry, 183 U.S. 365, 22 S.Ct. 181, 46 L.Ed. 236.
Deferred sentence. A sentence, the execution of which is postponed until a future time.

Definite sentence. Sentence set by law with no discretion for the judge or correctional officials to individualize punishment. See Fixed sentence, below.

Determinate sentence. A sentence for a fixed period of time. Also called Definite sentence, above. See Fixed sentence, below.

Ecclesiastical sentence. In ecclesiastical procedure, analogous to "judgment" (q.v.) in an ordinary action.

Final sentence. One which puts an end to a case. Distinguished from interlocutory.

A definite sentence is one which puts an end to the suit, and regards the principal matter in question as concluded. An interlocutory sentence determines only some incidental matter in the proceedings.

Fixed sentence. Fixed sentencing statutes specify the exact penalty that will follow conviction of each offense. See Mandatory sentence, below. See also Sentencing guidelines.

Indeterminate (indefinite) sentence. A form of sentence to imprisonment upon conviction of crime, authorized by statute in several states, which, instead of fixing rigidly the duration of the imprisonment, declares that it shall be for a period "not less than" so many years "nor more than" so many years, or not less than the minimum period prescribed by statute as the punishment for the particular offense nor more than the maximum period, the exact length of the term being afterwards fixed, within the limits assigned by the court or the statute, by an executive authority (the governor, board of pardons, etc.), on consideration of the previous record of the convict, his behavior while in prison or while out on parole, the apparent prospect of reformation and other such considerations. See also Presumptive sentence, below.

A sentence to incarceration with a spread of time between a minimum date of parole eligibility and a maximum discharge date. A completely indeterminate sentence has a minimum of one day and a maximum of natural life.

Interlocutory sentence. A temporary sentence imposed pending final sentencing. In the civil law, a sentence on some indirect question arising from the principal cause.

Life sentence. The disposition of a serious criminal case (e.g. capital offenses) by which the convicted defendant is sentenced to spend the rest of his natural life in prison.

Mandatory sentence. Statutes in some jurisdictions require a judge to sentence a convicted defendant to a penal institution for a prescribed time for the specific crime and furnish little or no room for discretion. These statutes generally provide that the sentence may not be suspended and that no probation may be imposed, leaving the judge with no alternative but commitment. See Fixed sentence, above, and Sentencing guidelines.

Maximum sentence. A maximum sentence sets the outer limit beyond which a prisoner cannot be held in custody.

Merger of sentences. See Merger.

Presumptive sentence. A sentence in which the judge is given guidelines that control the extent of the prison term. There is a presumptive average sentence for each type of offense which can be raised or lowered depending on the presence of mitigating or aggravating circumstances. See also Indeterminate (indefinite) sentence, above.

Sentence in absentia. Sentencing of defendant in his absence.

Split sentence. A sentence in which part of the time is served in confinement and the balance is served on probation or on terms imposed by the court. See also Split sentence.

Straight or flat sentence. Fixed sentence without a maximum or minimum.

Suspension of sentence. This term may mean either a withholding or postponing the sentencing of a prisoner after the conviction, or a postponing of the execution of the sentence after it has been pronounced. In the latter case, it may, for reasons addressing themselves to the discretion of the court, be indefinite as to time, or during the good behavior of the prisoner. See Suspended sentence.

Withheld sentence. Sentence not imposed.

Sentencing. The postconviction stage of the criminal justice process in which the defendant is brought before the court for imposition of sentence. Usually a trial judge imposes sentence, but in some jurisdictions sentencing is performed by jury or by sentencing councils.

For federal crimes, an individual may be sentenced either to a term of imprisonment, or to be required to pay a fine. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3551.

Sentencing has been held to be a "critical stage" of a criminal proceeding requiring assistance of appointed counsel. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254, 19 L.Ed.2d 338.

See also Pre-sentence hearing; Pre-sentence investigation; Pre-sentence report; Sentencing guidelines; Victim impact statement.

Imposition of sentence. Sentence shall be imposed without unreasonable delay. Before imposing sentence, the court shall afford counsel an opportunity to speak on behalf of the defendant and shall address the defendant personally and ask him if he wishes to make a statement in his own behalf and to present any information in mitigation of punishment. The attorney for the government shall have an equivalent opportunity to speak to the court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(a).
For federal crimes, the court, in determining the particular sentence to be imposed, shall consider: the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant; the need for the sentence imposed; and the kinds and sentencing range established under the sentencing guidelines. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3553. See also Sentencing guidelines.

Sentencing council. A panel of three or more judges which confers to determine a criminal sentence. Sentencing councils are not as commonly used as sentencing by a trial judge.

Sentencing hearings. See Pre-sentencing hearing.

Sententia /sentensh(iy)a/. Lat. In the civil law, sense; import; as distinguished from mere words. The deliberate expression of one's will or intention. The sentence of a judge or court.

Sententia a non judicata latu nemini debet nocere /sentensh(iy)a ey nôn jûwdaisy lêyta némnay débât nasîrîy/. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one.

Sententia contra matrimonium numquam transit in rem judicatam /sentensh(iy)a kôntrô màtràmôwn(î)yoym námkwâm trênsîzt i rêm jûwdaikéydam/. A sentence against marriage never becomes a matter finally adjudged, i.e., res judicata.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /sentensh(iy)a féysôt jás, êt lîyja îsîpraîstésh(y)îwôy lîyjas vim ôbôntat/. Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur /sentensh(iy)a féysôt jás, êt rîyj jûwdaikéyta prôw vêrâtétyti akîsipat/. Judgment creates right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest /sentensh(iy)a întêrôk(y)lâtôr(î)yà rîyvâkéray pôwtaît, defînîstâyôy nôn pôwtaît/. An interlocutory judgment may be recalled, but not a final.

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis /sentensh(iy)a nôn fârtôr diy rîybas nôn lîkwadôs/. Sentence is not given upon matters that are not clear.

SEP. See Simplified Employee Pension Plan.

Separability clause. A clause commonly found in contracts which provides that in the event that one or more provisions are declared void the balance of the contract remains in force. Such a provision is also commonly found in legislation. See also Saving clause; Severable contract; Severable statute.

Separable controversy. With respect to removal of case from state to federal court, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1441(c) provides: "Whenever a separate and independent claim or cause of action, which would be removable if sued upon alone, is joined with one or more otherwise non-removable claims or causes of action, the entire case may be removed and the district court may determine all issues therein, or, in its discretion, may remand all matters not otherwise within its original jurisdiction."

Separaliter /sêpârèïlïtär/ Lat. Separately. Used in indictments to indicate that two or more defendants were charged separately, and not jointly, with the commission of the offense in question.

Separate, v. To disunite, divide, disconnect, or sever. See Sever.

Separate. Individual; distinct; particular; disconnected. Generally used in law as opposed to "joint," though the more usual antithesis of the latter term is "several." Either of these words implies division, distribution, disconnection, or aloofness. As to separate Acknowledgment and Covenant, see those titles.

Separate action. As opposed to a joint action, an action brought for himself alone by each of several complainants who are all concerned in the same transaction, but cannot legally join in the suit. See also Joinder; Separate trial.

Separate and apart. Parties begin to live "separate and apart," for purpose of divorce statute, only where separation is coupled with independent intent by one of the parties to dissolve marital union. Sinha v. Sinha, 515 Pa. 14, 526 A.2d 765, 767.

Separate but equal doctrine. The doctrine first enunciated in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256, to the effect that equality of treatment is accorded when the races are provided substantially equal facilities even though these facilities be separate. This rule was declared to be unconstitutional with respect to educational facilities in Brown v. Board of Education, etc., 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, and as to other public facilities by other Supreme Court decisions and by various Civil Rights Acts.

Separate counts. Two or more criminal charges contained within one indictment, each count, in actuality, constituting a separate indictment for which the accused may be tried.

Separate demise in ejectment. A demise in a declaration in ejectment used to be termed a "separate demise" when made by the lessor separately or individually, as distinguished from a demise made jointly by two or more persons, which was termed a "joint demise." No such demise, either separate or joint, is now necessary in this action.
Separate estate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a marital or business relation, as distinguished from that which they own jointly or are jointly interested in. See also Community property; Separate property.

Separate examination. The interrogation of a married woman, who appears before an officer for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument, conducted by such officer in private or out of the hearing of her husband in order to ascertain if she acts of her own will and without compulsion or constraint of the husband. Also the examination of a witness in private or apart from, and out of the hearing of, the other witnesses in the same cause.

Separate maintenance. Money paid by one married person to the other for support if they are no longer living as husband and wife. Commonly it is referred to as separate support and follows from a court order. See also Alimony; Support.

Separate offenses. A person may be tried, convicted and sentenced for offenses which, though sharing many elements, are distinct. A particular act may offend more than one law and hence a person may be subjected to more than one punishment for acts arising out of the same event.

Separate property. Property owned by married person in his or her own right during marriage. State statutes commonly protect such separate property rights of each spouse. See e.g. Mass.Gen.L.A. c. 209, § 1. See also Separate and marital property, below.

Under statute governing distribution of property in marital dissolution proceeding includes property owned before marriage and maintained in separate names during marriage, property acquired during marriage solely from exchange of premarriage property and separately retained, any increase in value of separate property, gift or inheritance received and separately held, and property described in statute. Weast v. Weast, Mo.App., 655 S.W.2d 752, 755. See Equitable distribution.

Community property. In a community property jurisdiction, separate property is that property which belongs entirely to one of the spouses. Generally, it is property acquired before marriage or acquired after marriage by gift or inheritance. For purposes of community property settlement, "separate property" consists of all property brought to marriage by either spouse or acquired during marriage by gift, bequest, devise or descent, together with its rents, issues and profits. Portillo v. Shappie, 97 N.M. 59, 636 P.2d 878, 880. See also Community property.

Separate and marital property. A number of state divorce statutes use the concept of separate and marital property for purposes of dividing assets of the spouses on divorce. Such statutes generally define separate property as those assets owned by either spouse prior to the marriage and those acquired afterwards by gift, devise, or exchange for other separate property, and as marital property all assets acquired by either spouse during marriage except those which can be shown to be separate.

Separate return. See Tax return.

Separate support. See Separate maintenance.

Separate trial. The separate and individual trial of each of several persons jointly accused of a crime. Fed. R.Crim.P. 14. Court may also order separate trials in civil actions (e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 42) in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice, or when separate trials will be conducive to expedition and economy. Compare Bifurcated trial; Severance of actions or claims.

Separatim /séparétam/. Lat. In old conveyancing, severally. A word which made a several covenant.

Separation. The living apart of a husband and wife. If court ordered it is a "legal separation," in which event the details of support and maintenance are often spelled out specifically in a document issued by the court.

Separation agreement. Written arrangements concerning custody, child support, alimony and property division made by a married couple who are usually about to get a divorce or legal separation.

Separation a mensa et thoro /sépéréyshon ey mensa et thórow/. A partial dissolution of the marriage relation.

Separation from bed and board. A species of separation not amounting to a dissolution of the marriage. Same as separation a mensa et thoro (q.v.).

Separation of jury. After a case has been given to the jury for deliberation, they are not permitted to separate until a verdict is reached except under the control of the court through officers and sheriffs. In civil cases in some jurisdictions this rule is relaxed generally with admonition from the judge not to discuss the case with anybody. See also Sequester.

Separation of patrimony. In Louisiana probate law, the creditors of the succession may demand, in every case and against every creditor of the heir, a separation of the property of the succession from that of the heir. This is what is called the "separation of patrimony." The object of a separation of patrimony is to prevent property out of which a particular class of creditors have a right to be paid from being confounded with other property, and by that means made liable to the debts of another class of creditors.

Separation of powers. The governments of states and the United States are divided into three departments or branches: the legislative, which is empowered to make laws, the executive which is required to carry out the laws, and the judicial which is charged with interpreting the laws and adjudicating disputes under the laws. Under this constitutional doctrine of "separation of powers, one branch is not permitted to encroach on the domain or exercise the powers of another branch. See U.S. Constitution, Articles I-III. See also Power (Constitutional powers).
Separation of spouses. A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement, or, in the case of "judicial separation," under the decree of a court. Separation of spouses for a statutorily prescribed period is a prerequisite to "no-fault" divorce in many states. See also Living separate and apart; Separation agreement; Separation order.

Separation of witnesses. An order of the court requiring all witnesses, except the plaintiff and defendant, to remain outside the courtroom until each is called to testify.

Separation order. A decree or judgment of a court authorizing spouses to separate and generally included is an order respecting custody of children and support.

Sequela curiae /sakwiyla kyuriyiy/. Suit of court.

Separation of witnesses. An order of the court requiring all witnesses, except the plaintiff and defendant, to remain outside the courtroom until each is called to testify.

Separation of witnesses. An order of the court requiring all witnesses, except the plaintiff and defendant, to remain outside the courtroom until each is called to testify.

Separation of witnesses. An order of the court requiring all witnesses, except the plaintiff and defendant, to remain outside the courtroom until each is called to testify.

Sequela /sakwiyla/. L. Lat. In old English law, suit; Sequatur sub suo periculo /sskweytor sab s(y)uwow.

Sequela villanorum /sakwiyla vilanoram/. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.

Sequestrari facias /sekwsstreray feysh(iy)ow/. In English ecclesiastical practice, a process in the nature of a levari facias, commanding the bishop to enter into the rectory and parish church, and to take and sequester the same, and hold them until, of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof, and of the other ecclesiastical goods of a defendant, he having levied the plaintiff's debt. 3 Bl. Comm. 418.

Sequela curici /sakwiyla kyuryiyiy/. Suit of court.

Sequela villanorum /sakwiyla vilonorum/. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.

Sequester, n. /sakwester/. Lat. In the civil law, a person with whom two or more contending parties deposited the subject-matter of the controversy.

Sequestered account. In accounting, an account which has been ordered separated and impounded by order of the court. No disbursements may be made from this account without order of the court.

Sequestratio /sakwsstra(y)ish(ow)/. Lat. In the civil law, the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both parties that contend for it. It is two-fold,—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.

Sequestration /sakwsstraishon/siy/. In general, the process by which property or funds are attached pending the outcome of litigation. See also Sequester.

Order of "sequestration" is intended to assure that a witness will testify concerning his own knowledge of the case without being influenced by testimony of prior witnesses and to strengthen role of cross-examination in developing facts. State v. James, La.App. 3 Cir., 447 So.2d 580, 583.

The separation or removal of property from the person in possession, pending some further action or proceedings affecting the property.

Term is also used to refer to impoundment or stoppage of use of budget funds by governmental agencies as a result of, for example, spending restrictions. See Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendment.

Contracts. A species of deposit which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. Civ.Code La. art. 2973.

Debtor-creditor relations. In the law of creditors' rights, most often refers to an equitable form of attachment, although occasionally used (or misused) to identify a replevin-like process; very broad meaning implies any setting aside of a person's property to answer for the demands of another.

English ecclesiastical law. The act of the ordinary in disposing of the goods and chattels of one deceased, whose estate no one claims.

Equity practice. A writ authorizing the taking into the custody of the law of the real and personal estate (or rents, issues, and profits) of a defendant who is in contempt, and holding the same until he shall comply.
International law. The seizure of the property of an individual, and the appropriation of it to the use of the government. Expropriation.

Jury. See Jury, Sequester.

Sequestrator /sékwastrəˈyər/ˈsiːər/. One to whom a sequestration is made. One appointed or chosen to perform a sequestration, or execute a writ of sequestration.

Sequestro habendo /səkwɛstɾo həˈbɛndəʊ/. In English ecclesiastical law, a judicial writ for discharging of a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the person to appear at the suit of another. Upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration.

Sequidi debet potentiâ justitiam non precedere /sɪkˈwaɪ-di dɛbɛt pətənˈtiə jəstɨˈtjæm nɒn prɛsɪdər/. Power should follow justice, not precede it.

Serf. In the feudal polity, a class of persons whose social condition was servile, and who were bound to labor and perform onerous duties at the will of their lords. They differed from slaves only in that they were bound only to their native soil, instead of being the absolute property of a master.

Sergeant. Noncommissioned officer in armed forces. Officer in police force with rank below captain or lieutenant.

Sergeant-at-arms. Officer appointed by, and attending on, a legislative body or court, whose principal duties are to preserve order during the sessions of such body.

Serial bonds. A serial bond issue consists of a number of bonds issued at the same time but with different maturity dates (serially due), usually with interest rates varying for the different maturity dates. To be distinguished from the series bonds (q.v.). An issue of bonds that mature in part on one date, another part on another date, and so on; the various maturity dates usually are equally spaced. Compare Series bonds.

Serial note. A promissory note payable in installments.

Serial right. A right reserved in a publishing contract between author and publisher giving the author or publisher the right to have the manuscript published in installments in a magazine or periodical before or after the publication of the book.

Seriatim /səriˈətəm/. In series, or following one after another. In re Flint, 32 C.C.P.A. 1116, 150 F.2d 126, 131.

Seriatim /səriˈətəm/. Lat. Severally; separately; individually; one by one.

Serious. Important; weighty; momentous, grave, great, as in the phrases "serious bodily harm," "serious personal injury," etc.

Serious and wilful misconduct. In worker's compensation law, the intentional doing of something with the knowledge that it is likely to result in a serious injury, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences.

Serious bodily injury. For purposes of first degree assault prosecution, is defined as any bodily injury which involves a substantial risk of death. People v. Ybarra, Colo.App., 543 P.2d 529, 532.

Serious crime. For purpose of determining right to jury trial, crimes carrying more than six-month sentences are "serious crimes" and those carrying less are "petty crimes." Maita v. Whitmore, C.A.Cal., 508 F.2d 143, 145. See Felony.

Serious illness. In insurance law, an illness that permanently or materially impairs, or is likely to permanently or materially impair, the health of the applicant. Not every illness is serious. An illness may be alarming at the time, or thought to be serious by the one afflicted, and yet not be serious in the sense of that term as used in insurance contracts. An illness that is temporary in its duration, and entirely passes away, and is not attended, nor likely to be attended, by a permanent or material impairment of the health or constitution, is not a serious illness. It is not sufficient that the illness was thought serious at the time it occurred, or that it might have resulted in permanently impairing the health.

Serjeant-at-arms. See Sergeant-at-arms.

Serjeant at law. In England, the highest degree of the legal profession, having a monopoly of audience at the Court of Common Pleas until 1846 when the Court was abolished.

Serjeanty /sərˈʃɛnti/. A species of tenure by knight service, which was due to the king only, and was distinguished into grand and petit serjeanty. The tenant holding by grand serjeanty was bound, instead of attending the king generally in his wars, to do some honorary service to the king in person, as to carry his banner or sword, or to be his butler, champion, or other officer at his coronation. Petit serjeanty differed from grand serjeanty, in that the service rendered to the king was not of a personal nature, but consisted in rendering him annually some small implement of war, as a bow, sword, arrow, lance, or the like.

Serment /sərˈmɛnt/. In old English law, oath; an oath.

Sermo index animi /sərˈmɔːrə ˈɪndeks ˈænəmə/. Speech is an index of the mind.

Sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subiectam materiam, et conditionem personarum /sərˈmɔːniːz sɛmˈpɔːr əsksiˈpiːəndəʊ sɒnt ˈsækəndəm səbˈdʒɛktəm ˈmætrɪˈʃæm/. Language is always to be understood according to its subject-matter, and the condition of the persons.

Sermo relatus ad personam intelligi debet de conditione persona /sərˈmɔːrə rəˈleɪtsə əd ˈpɜːrsəˈnɒm ɪntəˈleɪtsə dɛbɛt dɪɨ kɒndɪʃəˈliːwɒnɪ ˈpɜːrsəˈnɒm/. Language which is referred to a person ought to be understood of the condition of the person.

Serological test. A laboratory test required in many states to determine the presence of venereal disease prior to marriage.

Serrated. Notched on the edge; cut in notches like the teeth of a saw. This was anciently the method of trimming the top or edge of a deed of indenture. See indent, v.

Servage /sərvəj/. In feudal law, where a tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, found one or more workmen for his lord's service.

Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur /sərvənda ɛst ɡənswəˈtuðo ˈlɔki əbiˈkoʊza ˈɑɡɪtə/. The custom of the place where the action is brought to be observed.

Servant. An employee. One employed to perform service in master's affairs, whose physical conduct in performance of the service is controlled or is subject to right to control by the master. Relling v. Missouri Ins.
Co., 236 Mo.App. 164, 153 S.W.2d 79; Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2. A person in the employ of another and subject to his control as to what work shall be done and the means by which it shall be accomplished. Hinson v. Culbeson-Stowers Chevrolet, Inc., 244 Ark. 853, 427 S.W.2d 539, 542. One who is employed to render personal service to another as opposed to another than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who, in such service, remains entirely under control and direction of employ-
A person of whatever rank or position in employ and subject to direction of control of another in any department of labor or business. A servant, for purposes of domestic relations. The "services" of a wife, for the loss of which occasioned by an injury to the wife, the husband may recover in an action against the tort-feasor include whatever of aid, assistance, comfort, and society the wife would be expected to render to bestow upon her husband in the circumstances in which they were situated. See Consortium.

Feudal law. The consideration which the feudal tenants were bound to render to the lord in recompense for the lands they held of him. The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base services, and, in respect of their quantity and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Practice. The exhibition or delivery of a writ, summons and complaint, criminal summons, notice, order, etc., by an authorized person, to a person who is thereby officially notified of some action or proceeding in which he is concerned, and is thereby advised or warned of some action or step which he is commanded to take or to forbear. Fed.R.Civil Proc. 4 and 5; Fed.R.Crim.P. 4 and 49. Pleadings, motions, orders, etc., after the initial summons are normally served on the party's attorney unless otherwise ordered by court. See Service of process, below.

General Classification

Civil service. See that title.

Public utilities. The furnishing of water, heat, light and power, etc., services by utility. Claxton v. Johnson County, 194 Ga. 43, 20 S.E.2d 606, 610.

Salvage service. See Salvage.

Secular service. Worldly employment or service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical.

Service of process. The service of writs, complaints, summons, etc., signifies the delivering to or leaving them with the party to whom or with whom they ought to be delivered or left; and, when they are so delivered, they are then said to have been served. In the pleading stage of litigation, is the delivery of the complaint to the defendant either to him personally or, in most jurisdictions, by leaving it with a responsible person at his place of residence. Usually a copy only is served and the original is shown. The service must furnish reasonable notice to defendant of proceedings to afford him opportunity to appear and be heard. Chemical Specialties Sales
Corp. Industrial Div. v. Basic Inc., D.C.Conn., 296
The various types of service of process are as follows:
Constructive service of process. Any form of service other than actual personal service. Notification of an action or of some proceeding therein, given to a person affected by sending it to him in the mails or causing it to be published in a newspaper. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(e). See also Service by publication; Substituted service, below.

Long arm statutes. Laws enacted in most states which permit courts to acquire personal jurisdiction of non-residents by virtue of activity within the state. See Foreign service; Long arm statutes; Minimum contacts.

Personal service. Actual delivery of process to person to whom it is directed or to someone authorized to receive it in his behalf. Green Mountain College v. Levine, 120 Vt. 332, 139 A.2d 822, 824. Personal service is made by delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to the person named or by leaving copies thereof at his dwelling or usual place of abode with some responsible person or by delivering a copy to an agent authorized to receive such. Special rules are also provided for service on infants, incompetents, corporations, the United States or officers or agencies thereof, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(d); Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(d). See also Substituted service, below.

Substituted service. Any form of service of process other than personal service, such as service by mail or by publication in a newspaper; service of a writ or notice on some person other than the one directly concerned, for example, his attorney of record, who has authority to represent him or to accept service for him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(d). See also Long arm statutes.

Service charge. That charge assessed by bank against a buyer's default or other credit loss; and (2) charges ever denominated, premium or other charge for any notice of the charges when the credit was granted. Obtaining the credit, irrespective of the person to whom the charges are paid or payable, unless the seller had no notice of the charges when the credit was granted. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 2.109.

Service contract. A written agreement to perform maintenance or repair (or both) service on a consumer product for a specified duration. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301. See Warranty (Extended service warranty).

Service establishment. Within Fair Labor Standards Act, an establishment which has ordinary characteristics of retail establishments except that services instead of goods are sold. An establishment the principal activity of which is to furnish service to the consuming public, and includes barber shops, beauty parlors, shoe shining parlors, clothes pressing clubs, laundries and automobile repair shops. Fleming v. A. B. Kirschbaum Co., C.C.A. Pa., 124 F.2d 567, 572.

Service life. Period of expected usefulness of an asset; such may not necessarily coincide with depreciable life for income tax purposes.

Service mark. A mark used in the sale or advertising of services to identify the services of one person and distinguish them from the services of others. West & Co., Inc. v. Arica Institute, Inc., C.A.N.Y., 557 F.2d 338, 340.

The term “service mark” means any word, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof—(1) used by a person, or (2) which a person has bona fide intention to use in commerce and applies to register on the principal register established by the Trademark Act, to identify and distinguish the services of one person, including a unique service, from the services of others and to indicate the source of the services, even if that source is unknown. Titles, character names, and other distinctive features of radio or television programs may be registered as service marks notwithstanding that they, or the programs, may advertise the goods of the sponsor. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127. Compare Trademark; Tradename.

Service occupation tax. Tax imposed on persons making sales of service and is computed as a percentage of net cost to servicemen of tangible personal property transferred as an incident to such sale. Hagerty v. General Motors Corp., 14 Ill.App.3d 33, 302 N.E.2d 678, 681.

Service of process. See Service.

Services. Things purchased by consumers that do not have physical characteristics (e.g., services of doctors, lawyers, dentists, repair personnel).

Service warranty. See Warranty (Extended service warranty).

Servicing. See Service charge.

Servient /sərv(i)ənt/. Serving; subject to a service or servitude. A servient estate is one which is burdened with a servitude.

Servient tenement /sərv(i)ənt təˈmɛnt/. The person whose land is subject to an easement. An estate in respect of which a service is owing, as the dominant tenement is that to which the service is due. Northwestern Improvement Co. v. Lowry, 104 Mont. 289, 66 P.2d 1369 SERVIENT TENEMENT
SERVIENT TENEMENT

792, 795. An estate burdened with a servitude. Most commonly a parcel of land subject to an easement for the benefit of another parcel (dominant tenement). See also Dominant estate or tenement.

Servitía personalia sequuntur personam /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əl pərˈsərnələ sɪkjuːntʊr ˈpɜːrsənəm/. Personal services follow the person.

Servitís acquietandís /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əl əkˈwiːtəndɪs/. A judicial writ for a man distracted for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services.

Servitium /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əm/. Lat. In feudal and old English law, the duty of obedience and performance which a tenant was bound to render to his lord, by reason of his fee.

Servitium foedale et prædiale /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əl ə ˈfɔːdəl ə ˈprɛdɪələ/. A personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee.

Servitium forinsecum /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əm fərɪnˈsɛkəm/. For-insec, foreign, or extra service; a kind of service that was due to the king, over and above (foris) the service due to the lord.

Servitium, in lege Angilae, regulariter accipitur pro servitio quod per tenentes dominis suis debetur ratione feodi sui /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əm ɪn ˈliːgə ˈændʒɪliː, ˈreɡɪlərətər əkˈsɪpɪtər ˈprɔ sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əʊ ˈkwɔːd ər tənəntɪz ˈdɔmɪnɪz ˈsjuː/ˌ. A service of plowing the lord’s land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the court, etc.

Servitium regale /sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əm ˈrɛɡəliː/ˌ. Royal service, or the rights and prerogatives of manors which belong to the king as lord of the same, and which were generally reckoned to be six, viz.:

1. Power of judicature, in matters of property; power of life and death, in felonies and murder; a right to waifs and strays; assessments; minting of money; and assise of bread, beer, weights, and measures.

2. Service of the shield; that is, knight-service.

3. Service of the plow; that is, socage.

Servitors of bills /sərvɪtərz əv ˈbɪlz/ˌ. In old English practice, servants or messengers of the marshal of the king’s bench, sent out with bills or writs to summon persons to that court. Thereafter commonly called “tip-staves.”

Servitude. The state of a person who is subjected, voluntarily or otherwise, to another person as his servant. A charge or burden resting upon one estate for the benefit or advantage of another; a species of incorporeal right derived from the civil law (see Servitus) and closely corresponding to the “easement” of the common-law, except that “servitude” rather has relation to the burden or the estate burdened, while “easement” refers to the benefit or advantage or the estate to which it accrues.

Classification

All servitudes which affect lands may be divided into two kinds—personal and real. Personal servitudes are those attached to the person for whose benefit they are established, and terminate with his life. This kind of servitude is of three sorts—usufruct, use, and habitation. Real servitudes, which are also called “predial” or “landed” servitudes, are those which the owner of an estate enjoys on a neighboring estate for the benefit of his own estate. They are called “predial” or “landed” servitudes because, being established for the benefit of an estate, they are rather due to the estate than to the owner personally. Frost-Johnson Lumber Co. v. Salling’s Heirs, 150 La. 756, 91 So. 207, 245; Tide-Water Pipe Co. v. Bell, 280 Pa. 104, 124 A. 351, 354.

Real servitudes are divided, in the civil law, into rural and urban servitudes. Rural servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of a landed estate; such, for example, as a right of way over the servient tenement, or of access to a spring, a coal-mine, a sand-pit, or a wood that is upon it. Urban servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of one building over another. (But the buildings need not be in the city, as the name would apparently imply.) They are such as the right of support, or of view, sewer, or the like.

Servitudes are also classed as positive and negative. A positive servitude is one which obliges the owner of the servient estate to permit or suffer something to be done on his property by another. A negative servitude is one which does not bind the servient proprietor to permit something to be done upon his property by another, but merely restrains him from making a certain use of his property which would impair the easement enjoyed by the dominant tenement. Rowe v. Nally, 81 Md. 367, 32 A. 198.

Involuntary servitude. See that title.

Servitus /sərvɪtəs/ˌ. Lat. In the civil law, slavery; bondage; the state of service. An institution of the conventional law of nations, by which one person is subjected to the dominion of another, contrary to natural right.

Also a service or servitude; an easement.

Servitus actus /sərvɪtəs ˈæktsəs/ˌ. The servitude or right of walking, riding, or driving over another’s ground. A species of right of way.
Servitus altius non tollendi /sárvatas ákshȳȳs nón tolénday/. The servitude of not building higher. A right attached to a house, by which its proprietor can prevent his neighbor from building his own house higher.

Servitus aquæ dúcende /sárvatas ákwi diȳuwséndiy/. The servitude of leading water; the right of leading water to one's own premises through another's land.

Servitus aquæ educendæ /sárvatas ákwi iȳd(ȳ)uwséndiy/. The servitude of leading off the water from one's own onto another's ground.

Servitus hauriendæ /sárvatas ákwȳ hohriyéndiy/. The servitude or right of draining water from another's spring or well.

Servitus fumi immittendi /sárvatas fyúumȳ imatenday/. The servitude or right of driving one's cattle on another's ground. A species of right of way.

Servitus ítineris /sárvatas ayt̄ínaras/. The servitude or privilege of walking, riding, and being carried over another's ground. A species of right of way.

Servitus luminum /sárvatas l̄ȳul̄um̄aman̄/. The servitude of lights; the right of making or having windows or other openings in a wall belonging to another, or in a common wall, in order to obtain light for one's building.

Servitus ne luminibus officiatur /sárvatas ni̊ ȳ lȳum̄ínabas afiʃiȳeȳt̄ar/. A servitude not to hinder lights; the right of having one's lights or windows unobstructed or darkened by a neighbor's building, etc.

Servitus ne prospectus offendatur /sárvatas ni̊ ȳ praspektas ̄ ofend̄eȳt̄ar/. A servitude not to obstruct one's prospect, i.e., not to intercept the view from one's house.

Servitus oneris ferendi /sárvatas ȫn̄ar̄as farénday/. The servitude of bearing weight; the right to let one's building rest upon the building, wall, or pillars of one's neighbor.

Servitus pascendi /sárvatas pase̊nday/. The servitude of pasturing; the right of pasturing one's cattle on another's ground; otherwise called "jus pascendi."

Servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam /sárvatas pé̊kar̄as ad ēk̄wam adp̄al̄s̄am/. A right of driving one's cattle on a neighbor's land to water.

Servitus prædii rustici /sárvatas priȳdiȳay r̄óst̄os̄ay/. The servitude of a rural or country estate; a rural servitude.

Servitus prædii urbani /sárvatas priȳdiȳay ar̄b̄é̊ýn̄ay/. The servitude of an urban or city estate; an urban servitude.

Servitus prediorum /sárvatas priȳdiȳȳörü̊̄m̄/. A prædial servitude; a service, burden, or charge upon one estate for the benefit of another.

Servitus projiciendi /sárvatas pråj̄shiȳénday/. The servitude of projecting; the right of building a projection from one's house in the open space belonging to one's neighbor.

Servitus prospectus /sárvatas prɔsp̄ek̄ts̄ay/. A right of prospect. This may be either to give one a free prospect over his neighbor's land or to prevent a neighbor from having a prospect over one's own land.

Servitus stillicidii /sárvatas stilåsidiȳay/. The right of drip; the right of having the water drip from the eaves of one's house upon the house or ground of one's neighbor.

Servitus tigni immittendi /sárvatas tignay imatenday/. The servitude of letting in a beam; the right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall.

Servitus viæ /sárvatas vái̊ȳ/. The servitude or right of way; the right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land.

Servus /sárvus/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a slave; a bondman.

Sess /sēs/. In English law, a tax, rate, or assessment.

Sessio /sesh(i)ȳow/. In old English law, a sitting; a session. Sessio parlamenti, the sitting of parliament.

Session. The sitting of a court, legislature, council, commission, etc., for the transaction of its proper business. Hence, the period of time, within any one day, during which such body is assembled in form, and engaged in the transaction of business, or, in a more extended sense, the whole space of time from its first assembling to its prorogation or adjournment sine die. Either a day or a period of days in which a court, legislature, etc. carries on its business.

Strictly speaking, the word “session,” as applied to a court of justice, is not synonymous with the word “term.” The “session” of a court is the time during which it actually sits for the transaction of judicial business, and hence terminates each day with the rising of the court. A “term”, or “sitting” in current English practice, of court, is the period fixed by law, usually embracing many days or weeks, during which it shall be open for the transaction of judicial business and during which it may hold sessions from day to day. But this distinction is not always observed, many authorities using the two words interchangeably.

See also Extra session; Extraordinary session; Lame duck session; Term.

Biennial session. See that title.

Joint session. Meeting together and commingling of the two houses of a legislative body, sitting and acting together as one body, instead of separately in their respective houses.

Quarter sessions. See Quarter session courts.

Regular session. An ordinary, general, or stated session (as of a legislative body), as distinguished from a special or extra session.

Session laws. The name commonly given to the body of laws enacted by a state legislature at one of its annual or biennial sessions. So called to distinguish them from the "compiled laws" or "revised statutes" of the state. Published laws of a state enacted by each assembly and separately bound for the session and for extra sessions. The session laws are normally published on a periodic basis, in a pamphlet format, throughout the legislative session and then at the end of the session are bound, in the order of their enactment, into a more permanent form. Such session laws in addition are incorporated into state and federal annotated or unannotated statute publications.

Set aside. To reverse, vacate, cancel, annul, or revoke a judgment, order, etc.

Setback. A distance from a curb, property line, or structure, within which building is prohibited. Setback requirements are normally provided for by ordinances or building codes. Provision in zoning ordinance regulating the distance from the lot line to the point where improvements may be constructed.

Set down. To "set down" a cause for trial or hearing at a given term is to enter its title in the calendar, list, or docket of causes which are to be brought on at that term.

Seti. As used in mining laws, a lease.

Set of exchange. In commercial law, foreign bills are usually drawn in duplicate or triplicate, the several parts being called respectively "first of exchange," "second of exchange," etc., and these parts together constitute a "set of exchange." Any one of them being paid, the others become void.

Set-off. A counter-claim demand which defendant holds against plaintiff, arising out of a transaction extrinsic of plaintiff's cause of action. Remedy employed by defendant to discharge or reduce plaintiff's demand by an opposite one arising from transaction which is extrinsic to plaintiff's cause of action. Edmonds v. Stratton, Mo.App., 457 S.W.2d 228, 232.

A claim filed by a defendant against the plaintiff when sued and in which he seeks to cancel the amount due from him or to recover an amount in excess of the plaintiff's claim against him. In equity practice it is commenced by a declaration in set-off, though under rules practice (which merged law and equity) it has been displaced by the counterclaim. Fed.R.Civ. P. 13.

The equitable right to cancel or offset mutual debts or cross demands, commonly used by a bank in reducing a customer's checking or other deposit account in satisfaction of a debt the customer owes the bank.

For the distinction between set-off and recoupment, see Recoupment. See also Counterclaim; Offset.

Set out. To recite or narrate facts or circumstances; to allege or aver; to describe or to incorporate; as, to set out a deed or contract.

Settle. A word of equivocal meaning; meaning different things in different connections, and the particular sense in which it is used may be explained by the context or the circumstances. Accordingly, the term may be employed as meaning to agree, to approve, to arrange, to ascertain, to liquidate, to come to or reach an agreement, to determine, to establish, to fix, to free from uncertainty, to place, or to regulate.

Parties are said to settle an account when they go over its items and ascertain and agree upon the balance due from one to the other. And, when the party indebted pays such balance, he is also said to settle it.

Under U.C.C. § 4-104(j), "settle" means to pay in cash, by clearing house settlement, in a charge or credit or by remittance, or otherwise as instructed. A settlement may be either provisional or final.

See also Adjust; Liquidate; Settlement.

Settled estate. See Estate.

Settle up. A term, colloquial rather than legal, which is applied to the final collection, adjustment, and distribution of the estate of a decedent, a bankrupt, or an insolvent corporation. It includes the processes of collecting the property, paying debts and charges, and turning over the balance to those entitled to receive it.

Settlement. Act or process of adjusting or determining; an adjusting; an adjustment between persons concerning their dealings or difficulties; an agreement by which parties having disputed matters between them reach or ascertain what is coming from one to the other; arrangement of difficulties; composure of doubts or differences; determination by agreement; and liquidation. Sowers v. Robertson, 144 Kan. 273, 58 P.2d 1105, 1107. Payment or satisfaction. Ledbetter v. Hall, 191 Ark. 791, 87 S.W.2d 996, 999. In legal parlance, implies meeting of minds of parties to transaction or controversy; an adjustment of differences or accounts; a coming to an agreement. Ezmirlian v. Otto, 139 Cal.App. 486, 34 P.2d 774, 778. To fix or resolve conclusively; to make or arrange for final disposition. Wager v. Burlington Elevators, Inc., 116 N.J. Super. 390, 282 A.2d 437, 441. Agreement to terminate or forestall all or part of a lawsuit. Gorman v. Holte, 2 Dist., 164 C.A.3d 984, 211 Cal.Rptr. 34, 37.

Closing: the culmination of a particular transaction involving real property, such as the purchase and sale of the property, the execution of a lease or the making of a mortgage loan. See also Closing.

See also Adjust; Closing; Liquidate; Mary Carter agreement; Out-of-court settlement; Settle.

Contracts. Adjustment or liquidation of mutual accounts; the act by which parties who have been dealing together arrange their accounts and strike a balance. Also full and final payment or discharge of an account.

Equity of settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right now recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also called the "wife's equity."

Estate. The settlement of an estate consists in its administration by the executor or administrator carried so far that all debts and legacies have been paid and the individual shares of distributees in the corpus of the estate, or the residuary portion, as the case may be, definitely ascertained and determined, and accounts filed and passed, so that nothing remains but to make final distribution. "Settlement," in reference to a decedent's estate, includes the full process of administration, distribution and closing. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201. See also Final settlement, below.

Family settlement. See Family settlement.

Final settlement. This term, as applied to the administration of an estate, is usually understood to have reference to the order of court approving the account which closes the business of the estate, and which finally discharges the executor or administrator from the duties of his trust.

Structured settlement. Type of damages settlement whereby Defendant agrees to make periodic payments to injured Plaintiff over his or her life. Commonly such settlement consists of an initial lump-sum payment with future periodic payments funded with an annuity.

Voluntary settlement. A settlement of property upon a wife or other beneficiary, made gratuitously or without valuable consideration.

Settlement date. In stock transactions, the date upon which an executed order must be settled by the buyer paying for the securities with cash and by the seller delivering the securities sold.

Settlement option. In life insurance, a provision for payment made by the insurer with the beneficiary or insured such as for lump sum, periodic payments, and the like.

Settlement statement. A statement prepared by an escrow agent or lender, giving a complete breakdown of costs involved in a real estate sale. A separate statement is prepared for the seller and buyer. Such statements are regulated by the federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act. See also Closing Statement; RESPA.

Settlor. A person who, for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right, has gone upon the land in question, and is actually resident there.

Settlor. The grantor or donor in a deed of settlement. Also, one who creates trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 3(1).

One who furnishes the consideration for the creation of a trust, though in form the trust is created by another. Lehman v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.2, 109 F.2d 99, 100.

See also Donor; Grantor.

Set up. To bring forward or allege, as something relied upon or deemed sufficient. To propose or interpose, by way of defense, explanation, or justification; as, to set up the statute of limitations, i.e., offer and rely upon it as a defense to a claim.

Seventeenth Amendment. An Amendment of 1913 to the U.S. Constitution which transferred the election of U.S. Senators from the State legislature to the voters of the State, but provided that the legislature may empower the governor to make a temporary appointment to fill a vacancy until an election can be held.

Seventh Amendment. In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law. This constitutional right of trial by jury is preserved by Fed.R.Civ.P. 38. See also Trial (Trial by jury).

Seven years' absence. When a person has been missing and his whereabouts unknown for seven or more years, he is presumed by law in most states to be dead.

Sever. To separate, as one from another; to cut off from something; to divide. To part in any way, especially by violence, as by cutting, rending, etc.; as, to sever the head from the body. To cut or break open or apart; to divide into parts. To cut through; to disjoin. In practice, to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other codefendants. To separate the cases of multiple defendants in such a way as to allow separate trials for each or for fewer than all.

Relief from prejudicial joinder. If it appears that a defendant or the government is prejudiced by a joinder of offenses or of defendants in an indictment or information or by such joinder for trial together, the court may order an election or separate trials of counts, grant a severance of defendants or provide whatever other relief justice requires. In ruling on a motion by a defendant for severance the court may order the attorney for the government to deliver to the court for inspection in camera any statements or confessions made by the defendants which the government intends to introduce in evidence at the trial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.

Severability clause. See Saving clause; Severable statute.

Severability doctrine. If promise sued on is related to an illegal transaction, but is not illegal in and of itself, "severability doctrine" applies, and recovery should not be denied, if aid of illegal transaction is not relied on or required, or if promise sued on is remote from or collateral to illegal transaction, or is supported by independent consideration. Sherwood & Roberts-Yakima, Inc. v. Cohan, 2 Wash.App. 703, 469 P.2d 574, 578, 582.

Severable. Admitting of severance or separation; capable of being divided; separable; capable of being severed from other things to which it was joined, and yet maintaining a complete and independent existence. Capable of carrying on an independent existence; for example, a severable statute is one that can still be valid even if one part of it is struck down as invalid by a court. It is common for statutes to have a severability or savings clause (q.v.).

Severable contract. A contract which includes two or more promises which can be acted on separately such that the failure to perform one promise does not neces-
Severalty. Owning real or personal property without anyone else sharing in the ownership. A state of separation. An estate in severalty is one that is held by a person in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him, in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 179.

Severance. Act of severing, or state of being severed; partition; separation; e.g. a claim against a party may be severed and proceeded with separately. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. Separation of cases so that they can be tried separately. Severance divides lawsuit into two or more independent causes, each of which terminates in separate, final and enforceable judgment. Kansas University Endowment Ass'n v. King, 162 Tex. 599, 350 S.W.2d 11, 19. See also Severance of actions or claims.

The conversion of a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed. Term may also refer to cutting of the crops, such as corn, wheat, etc., or the separating of anything from the reality.

Severance damages. Essence of severance damages is the loss in value to the remainder tract by reason of a partial taking of land and this is predicated on the enhanced value of the remainder tract because of its relationship to whole prior to the taking. U. S. v. 105.40 Acres of Land, More or Less in Porter County, State of Indiana, C.A.Ind., 471 F.2d 207, 211. If only part of single tract is taken, owner's compensation for taking includes any and all elements of value arising out of relation of part taken to entire tract and such damages are often called severance damages. U. S. v. 26.81 Acres of Land, More or Less, in Benton County, Ark., D.C.Ark., 244 F.Supp. 831, 839.

Severance of actions or claims. An action of a court in separating the claims of multiple parties and permitting separate actions on each claim or on fewer than all claims at one time. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. "Severance" divides lawsuit into two or more independent causes, each of which terminates in separate, final and enforceable judgment. Kansas University Endowment Ass'n v. King, 162 Tex. 599, 350 S.W.2d 11, 19. See also Severance. Compare Bifurcated trial; Separate trial.

Severance pay. Payment by an employer to employee beyond his wages on termination of his employment. Such pay represents a form of compensation for the termination of the employment relation, for reasons other than the displaced employee's misconduct, primarily to alleviate the consequent need for economic readjustment but also to recompense the employee for certain losses attributable to the dismissal. Mace v. Condé Nast Publications, Inc., 155 Conn. 680, 237 A.2d 360, 361. Generally, it is paid when the termination is not due to employee's fault and many union contracts provide for it. See also Golden parachute.

Severance tax. A tax on mineral or forest products at the time they are removed or severed from the soil and usually regarded as a form of property taxation. Excise taxes upon privilege or right to sever natural resources from soil and are paid by owner of resource at time it is
SHARE OF CORPORATE STOCK

SHARE OF CORPORATE STOCK

Seward, or seaward /syúward/siyword/. One who guards the sea-coast; custos maris.

Sex. The sum of the peculiarities of structure and function that distinguish a male from a female organism; the character of being male or female.

Sexual abuse. Illegal sex acts performed against a minor by a parent, guardian, relative, or acquaintance.

Sexual harassment. As type of employment discrimination, includes sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature prohibited by Federal law (Title VII of 1964 Civil Rights Act) and commonly by state statutes; e.g., Mass. G.L. c. 151B, § 1(18).

S.F.S. An abbreviation in the civil law for "sine fraude sua" (without fraud on his part).

Shack. In old English law, the straying and escaping of cattle out of the lands of their owners into other uninclosed land; an intercommingling of cattle.

Shakedown. Extortion of money with threats of physical harm or, in case of police officer, threat of arrest. See also Blackmail; Extortion.

Shall. As used in statutes, contracts, or the like, this word is generally imperative or mandatory. In common or ordinary parlance, and in its ordinary significancy, the term "shall" is a word of command, and one which has always or which must be given a compulsory meaning; as denoting obligation. The word in ordinary usage means "must" and is inconsistent with a concept of discretion. People v. Municipal Court for Los Angeles Judicial Dist., 149 C.A.3d 951, 197 Cal.Rptr. 204, 206. It has the invariable significance of excluding the idea of discretion, and has the significance of operating to impose a duty which may be enforced, particularly if public policy is in favor of this meaning, or when addressed to public officials, or where a public interest is involved, or where the public or persons have rights which ought to be exercised or enforced, unless a contrary intent appears. People v. O'Rourke, 124 Cal.App. 752, 13 P.2d 989, 992.

But it may be construed as merely permissive or directory (as equivalent to "may"), to carry out the legislative intention and in cases where no right or benefit to any one depends on its being taken in the imperative sense, and where no public or private right is impaired by its interpretation in the other sense. Wisdom v. Board of Sup'rs of Polk County, 236 Iowa 669, 19 N.W.2d 602, 607, 608.

Sham. False. In taxation, a transaction without substance that will be disregarded for tax purposes. See also Dummy.

Sham pleading. Those which are inherently false and must have been known by interposing party to be untrue. Pentecostal Holiness Church, Inc. v. Mauney, Fla.App., 270 So.2d 762, 769. "A sham pleading", subject to motion to strike (Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f)), is one that is good in form, but false in fact, and not pleaded in good faith. Scott v. Meek, 228 S.C. 29, 88 S.E.2d 768, 769. A pleading is "sham" only when it is so clearly false that it does not raise any bona fide issue. Fontana v. Town of Hempstead, 219 N.Y.S.2d 383, 384. Pleading may be stricken as "sham" when its allegations appear false on the face of the pleading. Kashmir Corp. v. Nelson, 37 Or.App. 887, 588 P.2d 133, 136.

Shanghaiing sailors. /shaeghay/. Practice of drugging, tricking, intoxicating or otherwise forcing persons to become sailors—usually to secure advance money or a premium.

Under federal law, the offense of procuring or inducing, or attempting to do so, by force, or threats, or by representations which one knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any vessel, or agree to do so, to perform service or labor thereon, such vessel being engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, on the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, or knowingly to detain on board such vessel such person, so procured or induced, or knowingly aiding or abetting such things. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2194.

Share, v. To partake; enjoy with others; have a portion of.

Share, n. A part or definite portion of a thing owned by a number of persons in common and contemplates something owned in common by two or more persons and has reference to that part of the undivided interest which belongs to some one of them. A unit of stock representing ownership in a corporation. "Share" means the unit into which the proprietary interests in a corporation are divided. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act, § 1.40. See also Distributive share; Share of corporate stock; Stock.

Share and share alike. In equal shares or proportions. The words commonly indicate per capita division; and they may be applied to a division between classes as well as to a division among individuals. See Per capita.

Share certificate. An instrument of a corporation certifying that the person therein named is entitled to a certain number of shares; it is prima facie evidence of his title thereto. Document which evidences participation in a voting trust of shares of a corporation.

Sharecropper. Type of tenant farmer who lives on and works the land of another, his compensation being a portion of the crops minus any advances for seed, food, tools, etc.

Sharecropping. Type of agricultural arrangement in which the landowner leases land and equipment to tenant or sharecropper who, in turn, gives to the landlord a percentage of the crops as rent.

Shareholder. See Stockholder (Shareholder).

Share of corporate stock. The unit into which the proprietary interests in a corporation are divided. Rev.
SHARE OF CORPORATE STOCK

Model Bus. Corp. Act. § 1.40. A proportional part of certain rights in a corporation during its existence, and in the assets upon dissolution, and evidence of the stockholder’s ratable share in the distribution of the assets on the winding up of the corporation’s business. Department of Treasury of Indiana v. Crowder, 214 Ind. 252, 15 N.E.2d 89, 91. See Share certificate; Stock.

Share split. See Stock (Stock split).

Share-warrant to bearer. A warrant or certificate of a corporation, stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to a certain number or amount of fully paid up shares or stock. Coupons for payment of dividends may be annexed to it. Delivery of the share-warrant operates as a transfer of the shares or stock.

Shave. Sometimes used to denote the act of obtaining the property of another by oppression and extortion. Also used in an innocent sense to denote the buying of existing notes and other securities for money, at a discount. Hence to charge a man with using money for shaving is not libelous per se.

Shelf registration. A procedure whereby a company is permitted to register (with SEC) all the debt and equity securities it plans to sell over the next several years. The company can then sell these securities whenever it chooses (e.g., in the most favorable market) without a registration delay. See SEC Rule 415.

Shelley’s Case, Rule in. “When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, ‘the heirs’ are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase.” 1 Co.Rep. 93b (1581). This rule has also been expressed as follows: “Where a person takes an estate of freehold, legally, or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of any interest of the same legal or equitable quality to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate.” In re Thorne’s Estate, 944 Pa. 505, 25 A.2d 811, 819.

Intimately connected with the quantity of estate which a tenant may hold in reality is the antique feudal doctrine generally known as the “Rule in Shelley’s Case,” which is reported by Lord Coke in 1 Coke, 93b (23 Eliz. in C.B.). This rule was not first laid down or established in that case, but was then simply admitted in argument as a well-founded and settled rule of law, and has always since been quoted as the “Rule in Shelley’s Case.” The rule was adopted as a part of the common law of this country, though it has long since been abolished by most states.

Shelter. In statutes relating to the provision of food, clothing, and shelter for one’s children, term generally refers to a home with proper environments, as well as protection from the weather.

Sheriff. Constitutionally elected officer having responsibilities of law enforcement and administration of sheriff’s department. Durrell v. Franklin County Com’rs, Me., 532 A.2d 146, 147. The chief executive and administrative officer of a county, being chosen by popular election. His principal duties are in aid of the criminal courts and civil courts of record; such as serving process, summoning juries, executing judgments, holding judicial sales and the like. He is also the chief conservator of the peace within his territorial jurisdiction. When used in statutes, the term may include a deputy sheriff. He is in general charge of the county jail in most states. See also Constable; Marshal.

Deputy sheriff. See Deputy; Under-sheriff.

Sheriff’s deed. A document giving ownership rights in property to a buyer at a sheriff’s sale (i.e. a sale held by a sheriff to pay a court judgment against the owner of the property). Deed given at sheriff’s sale in foreclosure of a mortgage. The giving of said deed begins a statutory redemption period.

Sheriff’s sale. A sale, commonly by auction, conducted by a sheriff or other court officer to carry out a decree of execution or foreclosure issued by a court. Examples include sales pursuant to attachments, liens and mortgage defaults. See also Judicial sale.

Sherman Antitrust Act. Such Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1–7) prohibits any unreasonable interference, by contract, or combination, or conspiracy, with the ordinary, usual and freely-competitive pricing or distribution system of the open market in interstate trade. See also Clayton Act; Monopoly; Price-fixing; Restraint of trade; Robinson-Patman Act; Rule (Rule of reason).

Shield laws. Statutes affording a privilege to journalists not to disclose in legal proceedings confidential information or sources of information obtained by them in their professional capacities. Most states have such laws. Cf. N.Y. McKinney’s Civil Rights Law § 79-h.

Statutes which restrict or prohibit the use of evidence respecting the chastity of the victim of a rape or other sexual offense. Cf. Fed.R.Evid. 412.

Shifting. Changing; varying; passing from one person to another by substitution.

Shifting clause. In a settlement at common law, a clause by which some other mode of devolution is substituted for that primarily prescribed. Examples of shifting clauses are: The ordinary name and arms clause, and the clause of less frequent occurrence by which a settled estate is destined as the foundation of a second family, in the event of the elder branch becoming otherwise enriched. These shifting clauses take effect under the statute of uses.

Shifting income. Device used by taxpayers in high tax brackets to move income from themselves to their children and others who are in a lower bracket. Short term or Clifford trusts, as well as gifts to minors, were among the devices used to accomplish this purpose. However, since the Tax Reform Act of 1986 the process of shifting income has become more restrictive. For example, unearned income in excess of a minimal amount of children under the age of 14 is taxed at their parents' highest rate. The Clifford Trust rules have also changed and earnings on assets put into a trust subsequent to March, 1986 is taxed at the grantor's rate.

Shifting risk. In insurance, a risk created by a contract of insurance on a stock of merchandise, or other similar property, which is kept for sale, or is subject to change in items by purchase and sale; the policy being conditioned to cover the goods in the stock at any and all times and not to be affected by changes in its composition.

Shifting severalty. See Severalty.

Shifting stock of merchandise. A stock of merchandise subject to change from time to time, in the course of trade by purchases, sales, or other transactions.

Shifting the burden of proof. Transferring it from one party to the other, or from one side of the case to the other, when he upon whom it rested originally has made out a prima facie case or defense by evidence, of such a character that it then becomes incumbent upon the other to rebut it by contradictory or defensive evidence. See Burden of proof.

Shifting use. See Use.

Shilling. Slang term for the act of posing as an innocent bystander at a confidence game but giving aid and assistance to the perpetrators of the scheme as a decoy.

Shinney /shiniy/. A local name for a homemade whiskey. Moonshine.

Shin-plaster. Formerly, a jocose term for a bank-note greatly depreciated in value; also for paper money of a denomination less than a dollar.

Ship, v. To put on board a ship; to send by ship. Harrison v. Fortlage, 161 U.S. 57, 16 S.Ct. 488, 490, 40 L.Ed. 616. To place (goods) on board a vessel for the purchaser or consignee, to be transported at his risk. In a broader sense, to transport; to deliver to a carrier (public or private) for transportation. To send away, to get rid of. To send by established mode of transportation, as to "carry," "convey," or "transport," which are synonymous and defined, respectively, as "to bear or cause to be borne as from one place to another," and "to carry or convey from one place to another." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Petroleum Refining Co., D.C.Ky., 39 F.2d 629, 630. See also Send; Shipment; Shipping.

Ship, n. A vessel of any kind employed in navigation.
SHIP MORTGAGE ACT

furnish supplies or maintenance to such vessels. 46 U.S.C.A. § 911 et seq.

Shipper. One who ships goods to another. One who engages the services of a carrier of goods. One who tenders goods to a carrier for transportation; a consignor. The owner or person for whose account the carriage of goods is undertaken. See also Consignor.

Shipping. Ships in general; ships or vessels of any kind intended for navigation. Relating to ships; as, shipping interests, shipping affairs, shipping business, shipping concerns. Putting on board a ship or vessel, or receiving on board a ship or vessel.

Law of shipping. A comprehensive term for all that part of the maritime law which relates to ships and the persons employed in or about them. It embraces such subjects as the building and equipment of vessels, their registration and nationality, their ownership and inspection, their employment (including charter-parties, freight, demurrage, towage, and salvage), and their sale, transfer, and mortgage; also, the employment, rights, powers, and duties of masters and mariners; and the law relating to ship-brokers, ship-agents, pilots, etc. See Jones Act; Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act; Maritime.

Shipping articles. A written agreement between the master of a vessel and the mariners, specifying the voyage or term for which the latter are shipped, and the rate of wages. 46 U.S.C.A. § 564.

Shipping document. Generic term to describe all papers which cover a shipment in foreign or inland trade such as bill of lading, letter of credit, certificate of insurance and the like. See also Ship (Ship's papers).

Shipping order. Copy of bill of lading which carries shipper's instructions to carrier as to the disposition of the goods.

Shipping papers. See Shipping document.

Shipwreck. The demolition or shattering of a vessel, caused by her driving ashore or on rocks and shoals in the midseas, or by the violence of winds and waves in tempests.

Shire /ˈʃaɪər/. A Saxon word which signified a division; it was made up of an indefinite number of hundreds—later called a county (Comitatus).

In England, a county. So called because every county or shire is divided and parted by certain metes and bounds from another.

Knights of the shire. See that title.

Shire-clerk. He that keeps the county court.

Shire-gemot, scire-gemote, scire-gemot. (From the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly.) Variants of scyre-gemote (q.v.). See also, Shire-mote, below.

Shire-man, or scyre-man. Before the Conquest, the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined.
ances conceives and perfects an invention for which he obtains a patent, he must accord his employer a nonexclusive right to practice the invention. The employer, however, is not entitled to a conveyance of the invention, this remains the right of the employee-inventor. U. S. v. Dubilier Condenser Corp., 289 U.S. 178, 189, 53 S.Ct. 554, 558, 77 L.Ed. 1114.

Shop steward. A union official elected to represent members in a plant or particular department. His duties include collection of dues, recruitment of new members and initial negotiations for settlement of grievances.

Shore. Strictly and technically, lands adjacent to the sea or other tidal waters. The lands adjoining navigable waters, where the tide flows and reflows, which at high tides are submerged, and at low tides are bare. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548, 38 L.Ed. 331. The term is synonymous with the term "beach." Littleton v. State, 66 Haw. 55, 656 P.2d 1336, 1343.

Under the civil law the "shore line" boundary of lands adjoining navigable waters is the line marked by the highest tide.

In connection with salvage, "shore" means the land on which the waters have deposited things which are the subject of salvage, whether below or above ordinary high-water mark.

Shore lands. Those lands lying between the lines of high and low water mark. Lands bordering on the shores of navigable lakes and rivers below the line of ordinary high water.

Short. Not long; of brief length or duration; not coming up to a measure, standard, requirement, or the like.

A term of common use in the stock and commodity markets. To say that one is "short," in the vernacular of the exchanges, implies only that one has less of a commodity than may be necessary to meet demands and obligations. It does not imply that commodity cannot or will not be supplied upon demand.

In finance and commodity futures, a person is short when he has sold securities or commodities which he does not own at the time of the sale, though he expects to buy them back at a lower price than that at which he sold them. See also Short sale.

Short covering. Buying stock to return stock previously borrowed to make delivery on a short sale.

Short form merger. See Merger.

Short interest. A short sale is the sale of borrowed stock. The seller expects a price decline that would enable him to purchase an equal number of shares later at a lower price for return to the lender. The "short interest" is the number of shares that haven't been purchased for return to lenders. See also Short sale.

Short lease. A term applied colloquially, but without much precision, to a lease for a short term (as a month or a year), as distinguished from one running for a long period.

Shortly after. In point of time, a relative term, meaning in a short or brief time or manner; soon; presently; quickly.

Short position. A short position maybe created when an investor borrows a stock in order to sell it, figuring the price of the stock will decline. The investor is in a "short position" until he purchases stock to repay the lender. See Short sale.

Short sale. A contract for sale of shares of stock which the seller does not own, or certificates for which are not within his control, so as to be available for delivery at the time when, under rules of the exchange, delivery must be made. Provost v. U. S., 269 U.S. 443, 46 S.Ct. 152, 153, 70 L.Ed. 352. A short sale occurs where a taxpayer sells borrowed property (usually stock) and repays the lender with substantially identical property either held on the date of the short sale or purchased after the sale (expecting to be able to buy the stocks later at a lower price). See also Short interest; Short position.

Short sale against the box. A short sale where the investor owns enough shares of the security involved to cover the borrowed securities, if necessary. The "box" referred to is the hypothetical safe deposit box in which the certificates are kept. A short sale against the box is not as risky as a regular short sale.

Short summons. A process, authorized in some of the states, to be issued against an absconding, fraudulent, or nonresident debtor, which is returnable within a less number of days than an ordinary writ of summons.

Short swing profits. Profits made by an "insider" on the purchase and sale of stock of a corporation within a six-month period. See Insider.

Short-term. Current; ordinarily, due within one year. Capital gains or losses. See Capital (Capital gain); Capital (Capital loss).

Short-term debt. Debt obligations which are due and payable on demand or within a year of issuance. Bonds with short maturity dates (e.g. one or two years).

Should. The past tense of shall; ordinarily implying duty or obligation; although usually no more than an obligation of propriety or expediency, or a moral obligation, thereby distinguishing it from "ought." It is not normally synonymous with "may," and although often interchangeable with the word "would," it does not ordinarily express certainty as "will" sometimes does.

Show, n. Something that one views or at which one looks and at the same time hears.

Show, v. To make apparent or clear by evidence, to prove.

Show cause order. Court order, decree, execution, etc., to appear as directed, and present to the court such An order to a person or corporation, on motion of opposing party, to appear in court and explain why the court should not take a proposed action. If the person or corporation fails to appear or to give sufficient reasons why the court should take no action, the court will take the action.

Show-up. One-to-one confrontation between suspect and witness to crime. A type of pre-trial identification procedure in which a suspect is confronted by or exposed to the victim of or witness to a crime. It is less formal than a lineup but its purpose is the same. Commonly, it occurs within a short time after the crime or under circumstances which would make a lineup impracticable or impossible. Due process standards must be met if evidence of such identification is to be admissible in court. Stovall v. Denno, 388 U.S. 293, 87 S.Ct. 1967, 18 L.Ed.2d 1199; Neil v. Biggers, 409 U.S. 188, 93 S.Ct. 375, 34 L.Ed.2d 401. Compare Lineup.

Shyster. A trickish knave; one who carries on any business or profession in a deceitful, tricky or dishonest way.

Si actio /say akshiyow/. Lat. The conclusion of a plea to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

Si a tutela removendus est /say ey tyuwtiylay riymowvendas est/. If a guardian do fraud to his ward, he shall be removed from his guardianship.

Si a tutela removendus est /say ey tyuwtiylay riymowvendas est/. If a guardian do fraud to his ward, he shall be removed from his guardianship.

Shutter royalty. In oil and gas leases, a royalty payment made to keep the lease in force though there is no production.

Sick leave. Period allowed by an employer to an employee for the employee's sickness either with or without pay but with no loss of seniority or other benefits.

Sick. Affected with disease, ill, indisposed.

Sickness. Illness; disease. An ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and health; not a mere temporary indisposition, which does not tend to undermine and weaken the constitution.

Si constet de persona /say konstat diy parsowna/. Lat. If it be certain who is the person meant.

Si contingat /say kantigat/. Lat. If it happen. Words of condition in old conveyances.

Si cutia /say eklyyayas/. Lat. As at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

Si cutia /say eklyyayas/. Lat. As at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

Si cutia /say eklyyayas/. Lat. As at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu /sik antarpresatdum est at verbo aksipiyanter kam afekt(y)uw/. [A statute] is to be so interpreted that the words may be taken with effect.

Sic /sik/. Lat. Thus; so; in such manner.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris, et erunt omnia omni¬

Si aliquid sapit /say ilakwad seypat/. Lat. If he knows anything; if he is not altogether devoid of reason.
an "equity side" and a "law side"; though with the procedural merger of law and equity in most states such side distinctions have been abolished.

Side-bar. Refers to position at side of the judge’s bench where trial counsel and judge discuss matters out of hearing of jury. It is important that such conferences be recorded if they are to be considered on appeal. New Jersey v. Green and Guida, 129 N.J.Super. 157, 322 A.2d 495, 499.

Side-bar rules. In English practice, there are some rules which the courts authorize their officers to grant as a matter of course without formal application being made to them in open court, and these are technically termed “side-bar rules,” because formerly they were moved for by the attorneys at the side bar in court; such, for instance, was the rule to plead, which was an order or command of the court requiring a defendant to plead within a specified number of days. Such also were the rules to reply, to rejoin, and many others, the granting of which depended upon settled rules of practice rather than upon the discretion of the courts, all of which have been rendered unnecessary by statutory changes.

Side lines. In commercial usage, lines of goods sold or businesses followed in addition to one’s principal articles or occupation.

In mining law, the side lines of a mining claim are those which measure the extent of the claim on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface. They are not necessarily the side lines as laid down on the ground or on a map or plat; for if the claim, in its longer dimension, crosses the vein, instead of following it, the platted side lines will be treated in law as the end lines, and vice versa. Argentine Min. Co. v. Terrible Min. Co., 122 U.S. 478, 7 S.Ct. 1356, 30 L.Ed. 1140; Del Monte Min. Co. v. Last Chance Min. Co., 171 U.S. 55, 18 S.Ct. 895, 43 L.Ed. 72.

Side reports. A term sometimes applied to unofficial volumes or series of reports, as contrasted with those prepared by the official reporter of the court, or to collections of cases omitted from the official reports.

Sidesmen. In ecclesiastical law, these were originally persons whom, in the ancient episcopal synods, the bishops were wont to summon out of each parish to give information of the disorders of the clergy and people, and to report heretics. In process of time they became standing officers, under the title of “synodsmen,” “sidesmen,” or “questmen.” The whole of their duties devolved by custom upon the church-wardens of a parish.

Sidewalk. That part of a public street or highway designed for the use of pedestrians, being exclusively reserved for them, and constructed somewhat differently than other portions of the street.

Si duo in testamento pugnauntia reperientur, ultimum est ratum /sáy d(y)úwow in téstaméntow págúntiá te réyam/. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the last is observed.

Si fecerit te securum /sáy fésarot tiy sókyúrm/. Lat. If he makes you secure. In practice. The initial and emphatic words of that description of original writ which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. 3 Bl.Comm. 274.

Sight. The power of seeing; the faculty of vision or of perceiving objects; or the act of seeing, and perception of objects through the eyes.

Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight or certain number of days or months after sight. U.C.C. § 3-109(1)(b).

A demand for payment drawn by a person to whom money is owed. The draft is presented to the borrower’s (the debtor’s) bank in expectation that the borrower will authorize its bank to disburse the funds.

See also Demand (Demand note).

Sigil /sijal/. In old English law, a seal, or a contracted or abbreviated signature used as a seal.

Sigillum /sajilm/. Lat. In old English law, a seal; originally and properly a seal impressed upon wax.

Sigla /síglas/. Lat. In Roman law, marks or signs of abbreviation used in writing.

Sign. To affix one’s name to a writing or instrument, for the purpose of authenticating or executing it, or to give it effect as one’s act. To attach a name or cause it to be attached to a writing by any of the known methods of impressing a name on paper. To affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one’s own handwriting. To make any mark, as upon a document, in token of knowledge, approval acceptance, or obligation.

See also Cross; Execution; Mark; Signature.

All pleadings must be signed by attorney of record. Fed.R.Civil P. 11.

Signa /signas/. The plural of signum (q.v.).

Signal. A means of communication, as between vessels at sea or between a vessel and the shore. The international code of signals for the use of all nations assigns arbitrary meanings to different arrangements of flags or displays of lights.

Signatorius annulus /sígnatóriyas ányelas/. Lat. In the civil law, a signet-ring; a seal-ring.

Signatory /sígnatóriy/ or. A term used in diplomacy to indicate a nation which is a party to a treaty. In general, a person who signs a document personally or through his agent and who becomes a party thereto.

Signature. The act of putting one’s name at the end of an instrument to attest its validity; the name thus written. A signature may be written by hand, printed, stamped, typewritten, engraved, photographed, or cut from one instrument and attached to another, and a signature lithographed on an instrument by a party is sufficient for the purpose of signing it; it being immaterial with what kind of instrument a signature is made. Maricopa County v. Osborn, 60 Ariz. 290, 136 P.2d 270, 274. And whatever mark, symbol, or device one may choose to employ as representative of himself is sufficient. The name or mark of a person, written by that person at his or her direction. In commercial law, any name, word, or mark used with the intention to authenticate a writing constitutes a signature. U.C.C. §§ 1-201(39), 3-401(2). See also Cross; Sign; Signed.

A signature is made by use of any name, including any trade or assumed name, upon an instrument, or by any word or mark used in lieu of a written signature. U.C.C. § 3-401. The signature to a deed may be made either by the grantor affixing his own signature, or by adopting one written for him, or by making his mark, or impressing some other sign or symbol on the paper by which the signature, though written by another for him, may be identified.

Public Officials. Many states have adopted the Uniform Facsimile Signatures of Public Officials Act.

Unauthorized signature. One made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 1-201(40).

Signature card. A card which a bank or other financial institution requires of its customers and on which the customer puts his signature and other information. It becomes a permanent file and permits the bank to identify the person of one accused of murder, indications of the cognizance of the senses; such as stains of blood on which come more immediately under species of evidence. Public Officials. Many states have adopted the Uniform Facsimile Signatures of Public Officials Act.

Unauthorized signature. One made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery. U.C.C. § 1-201(40).

Signature card. A card which a bank or other financial institution requires of its customers and on which the customer puts his signature and other information. It becomes a permanent file and permits the bank to compare the signature on the card with a signature on checks, withdrawal slips and other documents.

Signed. Includes any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing. U.C.C. § 1-201(39). See also Signature.

Signify. To make known by signs or words; express; communicate; announce; declare.

Signing judgment. See Sign.

Signum /signum/. Lat. Roman and civil law. A sign; a mark; a seal. The seal of an instrument.

A species of proof. By "signa" were meant those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses; such as stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offense, and the like.

Saxon law. The sign of a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed.

Si ingratum dixeris, omnia dixeris /sáy ingréytaam díksaars, ömn(í)yo díksaars/. If you affirm that one is ungrateful, in that you include every charge. A Roman maxim.

Si ita est /sáy áyta ést/. Lat. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions.

Si judicas, cognosce /sáy júwdokas kognósiy/. If you judge, understand.

Silence, estoppel by. Such estoppel arises where person is under duty to another to speak or failure to speak is inconsistent with honest dealings.

Silence of accused. A person under arrest may maintain silence as to all matters connected with the arrest and crime except that he must furnish his correct name, permit fingerprinting, as well as voice and writing exemplars. His silence may not be commented upon at trial nor may any inference be drawn from the fact of his silence. If a defendant refuses to plead, the court will enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a).

Silentiarius /sáylianjiyrryjyys/. In English law, one of the privy council; also an usher who keeps good order in court.

Silent leges inter arma /sáyli plant liyjiyz intar ármá/. The power of law is suspended during war.

Silent partner. An investor in a firm who takes no active part in its management but who shares in its profits and losses. A dormant, limited, or silent partner; one whose name does not appear in the firm, and who takes no active part in the business, but who has an interest in the concern, and shares the profits, and thereby becomes a partner, either absolutely, or as respects third persons. See Limited partner.

Silent witness theory. This theory permits admission of photographic evidence at trial as substantive, rather than merely demonstrative, evidence, where there is proof that photographs have not been altered, and no witness is required to testify that photographs accurately
Silver platter doctrine. Evidence obtained illegally by state officials was formerly admissible in federal prosecutions because no federal official had participated in the violation of the defendant's rights. However, this rule no longer obtains. Elkins v. U. S., 364 U. S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437, 4 L.Ed.2d 1669.

Silver certificates. Species of paper money formerly in circulation in this country and which was redeemable in silver. Silver certificates have been replaced by federal reserve notes.

Silver platter doctrine. Evidence obtained illegally by state officials was formerly admissible in federal prosecutions because no federal official had participated in the violation of the defendant's rights. However, this rule no longer obtains. Elkins v. U. S., 364 U. S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437, 4 L.Ed.2d 1669.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor /sày miylîyôriyô sînt kwôw d(y)ûwes twîmôr/. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number who are corrected by fear.

Similar. Nearly corresponding; resembling in many respects; somewhat like; having a general likeness, although allowing for some degree of difference. Gangi v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 33 Conn.Sup. 81, 360 A.2d 907, 908. Word "similar" is generally interpreted to mean that one thing has a resemblance in many respects, nearly corresponds, is somewhat like, or has a general likeness to some other thing but is not identical in form and substance, although in some cases "similar" may mean identical or exactly alike. It is a word with different meanings depending on context in which it is used. Guarantee Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Harrison, Tex.Civ. App., 358 S.W.2d 404, 406.

Similar happenings. In law of evidence, generally things that happened at a time different from the time in dispute in the suit are not admissible because they are not material or relevant to what occurred at the disputed time. Where such happenings are admissible, the proof is limited to such issues as control of premises, or conditions which may have persisted.

Similar sales. In law of evidence, when market value is in issue, sales of similar property is admissible to prove value. There is no specific rule to determine the degree of similarity necessary for evidence of a sale of other property to be admissible in a condemnation action. "Similar" does not mean "identical," and other sales need be only sufficiently similar in character and locality to provide the jury some reasonable basis for comparison. Lake County Forest Preserve Dist. v. Reliance Standard Life Ins. Co., 29 Ill.App.3d 145, 329 N.E.2d 344, 349. "Similarity" necessary to permit evidence of sale of one property to establish market value of another does not mean identical, but does require reasonable resemblance taking into consideration such factors as location, size and sale price; conditions surrounding sale, such as date and character of sale; business and residential advantages or disadvantages; and unimproved, improved or developed nature of land. Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Witkowski, 236 Ark. 66, 364 S.W.2d 309, 311.

SIMPLE NEGLIGENCE

Simple /simpâl/. Lat. In the civil law, the single value of a thing.

Simple. Pure; unmixed; not compounded; not aggravated; not evidenced by sealed writing or record.

As to simple Assault; Average; Battery; Blockade; Bond; Confession; Contract; Deposit; Imprisonment; Interest; Larceny; Obligation; and Trust, see those titles.

Simple kidnapping. A statutory form of unlawful imprisonment of a person which is not aggravated as in the case of child stealing or kidnapping for ransom. See also Kidnapping.

Simple negligence. Such consists of failure to exercise for protection of others that degree of care and caution that would, under prevailing circumstances, be exercised by ordinarily prudent person. Pettingell v. Moede, 129 Colo. 484, 271 P.2d 1038, 1042, 1043. Inadvertence or Simplex robbery. Gist of crime is the putting in fear and taking of property of another by force or intimidation. People v. Small, 177 Colo. 118, 493 P.2d 15, 19. See also Robbery.

Simplex /simplëks/. Lat. Simple; single; pure; unqualified.

Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus /simplëks èt pyûra danyësh(iy)ow dâyay pótarat, yûwbay nûla êst æjëktæ kândishtiyow nêk mòwds/. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed.

Simplicita est legibus amica; et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur /simplistsa êst liybas amäyka, êt nîmiya sîbïtîstas in jûrîy rëpribéytar/. Simplicity is favorable to the laws; and too much subtlety in law is to be reprobated.

Simpliciter /simplîstêr/. Lat. Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

Directly; immediately; as distinguished from inferentially or indirectly.

By itself; by its own force; per se.

Simplified Employee Pension Plan (SEP). An individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity which an employer establishes for his or her employees. See I.R.C. § 408(k). See also Individual Retirement Account (I.R.A.).

Simulate. To assume the mere appearance of, without the reality; to assume the signs or indications of, falsely; to counterfeit; feign; imitate; pretend. To engage, usually with the co-operation or connivance of another person, in an act or series of acts, which are apparently transacted in good faith, and intended to be followed by their ordinary legal consequences, but which in reality conceal a fraudulent purpose of the party to gain thereby some advantage to which he is not entitled, or to injure, delay, or defraud others.

Simulated contract. One which, though clothed in concrete form, has no existence in fact. It may at any time and at the demand of any person in interest be declared a sham and may be ignored by creditors of the apparent vendor.

Simulated fact. In the law of evidence, a fabricated fact; an appearance given to things by human device, with a view to deceive and mislead.

Simulated judgment. One which is apparently rendered in good faith, upon an actual debt, and intended to be collected by the usual process of law, but which in reality is entered by the fraudulent contrivance of the parties, for the purpose of giving to one of them an advantage to which he is not entitled, or of defrauding or delaying third persons.

Simulated sale. One which has all the appearance of an actual sale in good faith, intended to transfer the ownership of property for a consideration, but which in reality covers a collusive design of the parties to put the property beyond the reach of creditors, or proceeds from some other fraudulent purpose. It results when parties execute a formal act of sale of a thing for which no price is paid or is intended to be paid, and such sale has no legal effect and no title is transferred thereby. If there exists an actual consideration for transfer evidenced by alleged act of sale, no matter how inadequate it be, the transaction is not a "simulated sale", and, even though it be charged to be in fraud of vendor's creditors, such transfer cannot be set aside as a simulation although it may be subject to annulment on the ground of fraud or the giving of undue preference.

Simulatio latens /sim(y)alëysh(iy)ow léytenz/. Lat. A species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists.

Simulation. Assumption of appearance which was feigned, false, deceptive, or counterfeit. United States v. Peppa, D.C.Cal., 13 F.Supp. 669, 670. See also Personate; Impersonation; Simulate.

In the civil law, misrepresentation or concealment of the truth; as where parties pretend to perform a transaction different from that in which they really are engaged. A feigned, pretended act; one which assumes the appearance without the reality and, being entirely without effect, is held not to have existed, and, for that reason, it may be disregarded or attacked collateraly by any interested person. Freeman v. Woods, La.App., 1 So.2d 134, 136.

Simul cum /sáymal kâm/. Lat. Together with. In actions of tort and in prosecutions, where several persons united in committing the act complained of, some of whom were known and others not, it was usual to allege in the declaration or indictment that the persons therein named did the injury in question, "together with (simul cum) other persons unknown." In cases of riots, it was usual to charge that A B, together with others unknown, did the act complained of.

Simul et semel /sáymal èt sîymal/. Lat. Together and at one time.

Simultaneous. A word of comparison meaning that two or more occurrences or happenings are identical in time.

Simultaneous Death Act. A Uniform State Law (adopted by most states) which provides that where passage of title to property depends upon the time of one's death, if there is insufficient evidence that persons have died otherwise than simultaneously, the property of each person shall be disposed of as if he had survived unless the Act provides otherwise. See also Uniform Probate Code, § 2-104.

Simultaneous death clause. A clause in a will which provides for the disposition of property in the event that there is no evidence as to the priority of time of death of the testator and another, commonly the testator’s spouse. See Uniform Probate Code, § 2-104.

Since. This word’s proper signification is “after,” and in its apparent sense it includes the whole period between the event and the present time. “Since” a day named, does not necessarily include that day.

Sine /sáiny/. Lat. Without.

Sine animo revertendi /sáinyi anánomow ríywarténday/. Without the intention of returning.

Sine assensu capituli /sáinyi äsëns(y)uw kspityalay/. Without the consent of the chapter. In old English practice, a writ which lay where a dean, bishop, prebendary, abbot, prior, or master of a hospital aliened the lands helden in the right of his house, abbey, or priory, without the consent of the chapter; in which cases his successor might have this writ.

Sine consideratione curiae /sáinyi kansidareyshiyowniy kyúrïiyi/. Without the judgment of the court.

Sine decreto /sáinyi dskrytow/. Without authority of a judge.

Sine die /sáinyi dây(i)y/. Without day; without assigning a day for a further meeting or hearing. Hence, a legislative body adjourns sine die when it adjourns without appointing a day on which to appear or assemble again. State ex rel. Jones v. Atterbury, Mo., 300 S.W.2d 806, 811.

A final adjournment; final dismissal of a cause. Quod eat sine die, that he go without day; the old form of a judgment for the defendant, a judgment discharging the defendant from any further appearance in court.

Sine hoc quod /sáinyi hôk kwód/. Without this, that. A technical phrase in old pleading, of the same import with the phrase “absque hoc quod.”

Sine numero /sáinyi n(y)uwmarow/. Without stint or limit. A term applied to common.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest /sáinyi pázeshiyówni yüßwywékyp(i)low pázlydariy nôn pówtast/. There can be no prescription without possession.

Sine prole /sáinyi prówlîy/. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables, and often abbreviated into “s.p.”

Sine qua non /sáinyi kwëy nôn/. Without which not. That without which the thing cannot be. An indispensable requisite or condition.

Single. One only, being an individual unit; alone; one which is abstracted from others. State ex rel. Nelson v. Board of Com’rs of Yellowstone County, 111 Mont. 395, 109 P.2d 1106, 1107. Unitary; detached; individual; affecting only one person; containing only one part, article, condition, or covenant. Unmarried; the term being also applicable to a widow, and occasionally even to a married woman living apart from her husband. Sometimes, principal; dominating.

As to single Adultery; Bill; Bond; Combat; Demise; Entry; Escheat; Obligation; Original; and Tract of land, see those titles.

Single creditor. One having a lien only on a single fund;—distinguished from double creditor, who is one having a lien on two funds.

Single-entry bookkeeping. In accounting, a simple system of recordkeeping in which each transaction is recorded in a single record, such as a checkbook or a list of accounts receivable.

Single juror charge. The charge that, if there is any juror who is not reasonably satisfied from the evidence that plaintiff should recover a verdict against the defendant, jury cannot find against defendant.

Single publication rule. Under the “single publication rule,” where an issue of a newspaper or magazine, or an edition of a book, contains a libelous statement, plaintiff has a single cause of action and the number of copies distributed is considered as relevant for damages but not as a basis for a new cause of action. Barres v. Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., 131 N.J.Super. 371, 380 A.2d 38. General theory of this rule is that a defendant should be subject to suit only once for each mass publication of libel, but that in that one action plaintiff may introduce evidence of all sales in all jurisdictions to show extent of his injury. Novel v. Garrison, D.C.I11., 294 F.Supp. 825, 830.

Singular. Each; as in the expression “all and singular.” Also, individual. In grammar, the singular is used to express only one. In law, the singular frequently includes the plural. As to singular Successor; and Title, see those titles.

Singular in solidum tenetur /siggyalay in solsdsm tanéntar/. Each is bound for the whole.

Sinking fund. Assets and their earnings earmarked for the retirement of bonds or other long-term obligations. An obligation sometimes imposed pursuant to the issuance of debt securities or preferred shares by which the issuer is required each year to set aside a certain amount to enable the issuer to retire the securities when they mature. A sinking fund may be allowed to accumulate or may be used each year to redeem a portion of the outstanding securities.

A fund (usually invested), which will be used to replace improvements as needed. Most commonly set aside from the income of income producing property.

A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts or duties, which is appropriated toward the payment of the interest due on a public loan, and for the payment of the principal. Talbott v. City of Lyons, 171 Neb. 186, 105 N.W.2d 918, 925.

In general accounting, segregated assets that are being accumulated for a specific purpose. In governmental accounting, a fund established to accumulate resources for the retirement of bonds but not for the payment of interest, which is handled through the general fund or a special revenue fund.

Sinking fund debenture. A type of debenture which is backed by a provision for sinking fund (q.v.).

Sinking fund method of depreciation. The periodic charge is an amount so that when the charges are considered to be an annuity, the value of the annuity at the end of depreciable life is equal to the acquisition cost of the asset. In theory, the charge for a period ought also to include interest on the accumulated depreciation at the start of the period as well. A fund of cash is not necessarily, or even usually, accumulated.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequenat tur /sáy nón spériyat kwód áktam ét, éhrat konslykwanz át id sakwéymar kwód in riyiýwniy in kwy áktam ét firykwantéyta/. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made.

Si non omnes /sáy nón ́ómiyiz/. Lat. In English practice, a writ of association of justices whereby, if all in commission cannot meet at the day appointed, it is allowed that two or more may proceed with the business.

Si nulla sit conjectura quac ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu /sáy nási sít könkjet(y)úra kwy diy(y)úwkat éyl(y)íyuw, várba intéljéýnda sánt ék sprápréytiy, nón grámataka séd popyaléry ák spúwyuwyu/.. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense.

Si paret /sáy párst/. Lat. If it appears. In Roman law, words used in the formula by which the pretor appointed a judge, and instructed him how to decide the cause.

SIPC. See Securities Investor Protection Act.

Sipessoca. In old English law, a franchise, liberty, or hundred.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenetur /sáy pl(y)úriyiz sánt fáddajásoríyiz kwókwet éhrant n(y)úwmarow, síggyalay in sóldám tenéntar/. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole.

Si prius /sáy prian/. Lat. In old practice, if before. Formal words in the old writs for summoning juries.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prénomine legata- rii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum /sáy kwódám in nómoni, kognónaniy, priýnomaniy legatóriy testatóy ehrévrat, kám diy porsówma kónstat, say(h)ólomáynos válat lágytám/. Although a testator may have mistaken the nomen, cognomen, or prénomener of a legatee, yet, if it be certain who is the person meant, the legacy is valid.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas debent /sáy kwid yúwnavarstétyat dabytár, síggyalas nón dabytár, nék kwód débat yúwnavarstésat síggyalay débat/. If anything be owing to an entire body [or to a corporation], it is not owing to the individual members; nor do the individuals owe that which is owing by the entire body. 1 Bl.Comm. 484.

Si quis /sáy kwis/. Lat. In the civil law, if any one. Formal words in the pretorian edicts. The word “quis,” though masculine in form was held to include women.

Si quis cum totum petisset partem petat, exceptio rei judicatae vocet /sáy kwis kám towtam petiýsát pártam petat, aksepsh(iy)ow riyay juwdakeytay vowsat/. If a party, when he should have sued for an entire claim, sues only for a part, the judgment is res judicata against another suit.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est /sáy kwis kástas fródómy pywphlw fysarat, ê tywtyñylóy rómovendus ést/. If any guardian should perform a fraudulent act against a ward, he must be removed from his charge.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse /sáy kwis prægnántém úxórom rélyít, nón vaidytár sayniy lýbrós dályiszir/. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered to have died without children. A rule of the civil law.

Si quis, unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vel let, in fenelion tenetur /sáy kwis, úymnom parkéseorit, kám éylíyam parkúywtaráy vélst, in falón(y)lóy tanýtáy/. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony.

Si recognoscat /sáy rékñgnóskat/. Lat. If he acknowledge. In old practice. A writ which lay for a creditor against his debtor for money numbered (pecunia numerata) or counted; that is, a specific sum of money, which the debtor had acknowledged in the county court, to owe him, as received in pecunii numeratis.
Sister. A woman who has the same father and mother with another, or has one of them only. In the first case, she is called sister, simply; in the second, half-sister. The word is the correlative of "brother."

Sister-in-law. Sister of one’s spouse; wife of one’s brother; wife of one’s spouse’s brother.

Si suggestio non sit vera, litterae patentee vacus sunt. If the suggestion be not true, the letters patent are void.

Sit. To hold court; to do any act of a judicial nature. To hold a session, as of a court, grand jury, legislative body, etc. To be formally organized and proceeding with the transaction of business.

Sit-down strike. A strike in which the workers stay in the plant but refuse to work.

Site /sayt/. A plot of ground suitable or set apart for some specific use. A seat or ground plot. The term does not of itself necessarily mean a place or tract of land fixed by definite boundaries. See also Place; Sit or situs; Site.

Si te fecerit securum /sáy tí fèserst sokyúram/. If he make you secure. See Si fecerit te securum.

Sithcundman. In Saxon law, the high constable of a hundred.

Sitting. The part of the year in which judicial business is transacted. A session or term of court; usually plural. See Session.

Sitting in bank or en banc. A session of the court in which all judges or at least a quorum of judges sit and hear cases. Under current practice, the term is reserved almost exclusively for appellate courts and in this connection it is contrasted with single justice sitting. See En banc.

Sittings in camera. See Chamber.

Situate. To give a specific position to; fix a site for; to place in certain position.

Situation of danger. Within the meaning of the last clear chance rule as applicable to a plaintiff operating a moving vehicle, is reached only when plaintiff, in moving toward path of an on-coming train or vehicle has reached a position from which he cannot escape by ordinary care, and it is not enough that plaintiff was merely approaching a position of danger. See Last clear chance doctrine.

Situs /sáýtəs/. Lat. Situation; location; e.g. location or place of crime or business. Site; position; the place where a thing is considered, for example, with reference to jurisdiction over it, or the right or power to tax it. It imports fixedness of location. Situs of property, for tax purposes, is determined by whether the taxing state has sufficient contact with the personal property sought to be taxed to justify in fairness the particular tax. Town of Cady v. Alexander Const. Co., 12 Wis.2d 236, 107 N.W.2d 267, 270.

Generally, personal property has its taxable "situs" in that state where owner of it is domiciled. Smith v. Lummus, 149 Fla. 660, 6 So.2d 625, 627, 628. Situs of a trust means place of performance of active duties of trustee. Campbell v. Albers, 313 Ill.App. 152, 39 N.E.2d 672, 676.

For business situs, see Business. See also Place.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum emptor in venditorem /sáývi tówts ríyz ívyíyékýtar, sáývi péár, hýybut régrésom ém(p)kár in véndastóram/. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor.

Sixteenth Amendment. An amendment of 1913 to the U.S. Constitution, which permits Congress to tax incomes, "from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration." The amendment was adopted in response to the Supreme Court's decision in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., which held that the 1894 federal income tax was unconstitutional as applied to rental income from land. The thrust of the amendment was to remove the apportionment requirement for taxes on income. Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236, 60 L.Ed. 493.

Sixth Amendment. The Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution includes such rights as the right to speedy and public trial by an impartial jury, right to be informed of the nature of the accusation, the right to confront witnesses, the right to assistance of counsel and compulsory process.

Sixty-day notice. Under Taft-Hartley Act, notice which must be given by either party to a collective bargaining agreement for reopening or terminating the contract. During such period, strikes and lockouts are prohibited. See 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(d).

Skeleton bill. One drawn, indorsed, or accepted in blank.

Skill. Practical and familiar knowledge of the principles and processes of an art, science, or trade, combined with the ability to apply them in practice in a proper and approved manner and with readiness and dexterity.

Skilled witnesses. One possessing knowledge and experience as to particular subject which are not acquired by ordinary persons. Such witness is allowed to give evidence on matters of opinion and abstract fact. See also Expert witness.

Skinpop. An intramuscular injection of narcotic drug.

Skiptracing. Service which assists creditors in locating delinquent debtors or persons who have fled to avoid prosecution. Also, such services may include location of missing heirs, witnesses, stockholders, bondholders, spouses, assets, bank accounts, or the like.

S.L. Abbreviation for "session [or statute] laws."

Slain. See Letters of slains or slanes.

Slander. The speaking of base and defamatory words tending to prejudice another in his reputation, community standing, office, trade, business, or means of livelihood. Little Stores v. Isenberg, 26 Tenn.App. 357, 172 S.W.2d 13, 16. Oral defamation; the speaking of false and malicious words concerning another, whereby injury results to his reputation. Lloyd v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.7, 55 F.2d 842, 844. The essential elements of slander are: (a) a false and defamatory statement concerning another; (b) an unprivileged communication to a third party; (c) fault amounting at least to negligence on the part of the publisher; and (d) either actionability of the statement irrespective of harm or the existence of special harm caused by the publication. Restatement, Second, Torts § 558.

"Libel" and "slander" are both methods of defamation; the former being expressed by print, writing, pictures, or signs; the latter by oral expressions or transitory gestures. See Restatement, Second, Torts, § 568.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Per quod; Per se; Slanderous per se. Compare Libel.

Slanderer. One who commits slander. See Slander.

Slander of title. A false and malicious statement, oral or written, made in disparagement of a person's title to real or personal property, or of some right of his causing him special damage. Higgins v. Higgins, 103 Nev. 443, 744 P.2d 530, 531. See also Jactitation.

Slanderous per quod. See Per quod.

Slanderous per se. Slanderer in itself; such words as are deemed slanderer without proof of special damages. Words which intrinsically, without innuendo, import injury, and are words from which damage, by consent of men generally, flows as a natural consequence. Koerner v. Lawler, 180 Kan. 318, 304 P.2d 926, 929. Generally an utterance is deemed "slanderous per se" when publication (a) charges the commission of a crime; (b) imputes some offensive or loathsome disease which would tend to deprive a person of society; (c) charges a woman is not chaste; or (d) tends to injure a party in his trade, business, office or occupation. Munaf v. Helfand, D.C.N.Y., 140 F.Supp. 234, 258. See Restatement, Second, Torts, § 570.

Slate. List of candidates for public office or for positions on board of directors.

Slave. A person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no freedom of action, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another. One who is under the power of a master, and who belongs to him; so that the master may sell and dispose of his person, of his industry, and of his labor, without his being able to do anything, have anything, or acquire anything, but what must belong to his master. The 13th Amendment abolished slavery.

Slavery. The condition of a slave; that civil relation in which one man has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another. The 13th Amendment abolished slavery.

Slave-trade. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit.

Slay. This word, in an indictment, adds nothing to the force and effect of the word "kill," when used with reference to the taking of human life. It is particularly applicable to the taking of human life in battle; and, when it is not used in this sense, it is synonymous with "kill."

Slayer's rule. Under this doctrine, person who kills another and persons claiming through or under that person may not share in distribution of decedent's estate as heirs, devisees, or legatees and may not collect proceeds as beneficiaries under decedent's life policy when homicide was felonious and intentional, but may share in distribution and collect proceeds when homicide was unintentional, even if it was result of gross negligence. Ford v. Ford, 307 Md. 105, 512 A.2d 389, 393. See also Son of Sam law.

Sleeping or silent partner. See Silent partner.

Slight. A word of indeterminate meaning, variously defined as inconsiderable; unimportant; trifile; remote; insignificant. Moxley v. Hertz, 216 U.S. 344, 356, 30 S.Ct. 305, 308, 54 L.Ed. 510.

As to slight Care; Evidence; Fault and Negligence, see those titles.

Slip law. A legislative enactment which is separately and promptly published in pamphlet or in single sheet format after its passage.

Slip law print. An annotated pamphlet print (called a slip law print) of each public and private law enacted by Congress as issued shortly after being signed by the President. Slip laws are cumulated into the U.S. Statutes at Large. See Statute (Statutes at large).

Slip opinion. An individual court decision published separately soon after it is rendered.

Slot machine. Within statute prohibiting operation of slot machines or similar gambling device, an apparatus by which a person depositing money therein may, by chance, get directly or indirectly money or articles of value worth either more or less than the money deposited. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622, 624.

Slough. An arm of a river, flowing between islands and the main-land, and separating the islands from one another. Sloughs have not the breadth of the main river, nor does the main body of water of the stream flow through them.

Slowdown. An organized effort by workers in a plant by which production is slowed from normal pace to bring pressure on the employer for better terms and conditions of working.
Sluiceway. An artificial channel into which water is let by a sluice. Specifically, a trench constructed over the bed of a stream, so that logs or lumber can be floated down to a convenient place of delivery.

Slum. A squalid, run-down section of a city, town or village, ordinarily inhabited by the very poor and destitute classes; overcrowding is usually a prevailing characteristic.

Slush fund. Money collected or spent for corrupt purposes such as illegal lobbying or the like. Boehm v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 791, 812.

Small Business Administration. The fundamental purposes of the federal Small Business Administration (SBA) are to: aid, counsel, assist, and protect the interests of small business; insure that small business concerns receive a fair proportion of Government purchases, contracts, and subcontracts, as well as of the sales of Government property; make loans to small business concerns, State and local development companies, and the victims of floods or other catastrophes, or of certain types of economic injury; license, regulate, and make loans to small business investment companies; improve the management skills of small business owners, potential owners, and managers; conduct studies of the economic environment; and guarantee leases entered into by small business concerns as well as surety bonds issued to them.

Small business corporation. A corporation which satisfies the definition of I.R.C. § 1361(b), § 1244(c)(2), or both. Satisfaction of I.R.C. § 1361(b) permits an S corporation election, and satisfaction of § 1244 enables the shareholders of the corporation to claim an ordinary loss on the worthlessness of the stock.

Small Business Investment Act. Federal legislation enacted in 1958 under which investment companies may be organized for supplying long term equity capital to small businesses. Such Act is implemented by the Small Business Administration.

Small claims court. A special court (sometimes also called "Conciliation Court") which provides expeditious, informal, and inexpensive adjudication of small claims. Jurisdiction of such courts is usually limited to collection of small debts and accounts. Proceedings are very informal with parties normally representing themselves. These courts of limited jurisdiction are often divisions or departments of courts of general jurisdiction.

Small estate probate. See Estate.

Small loan acts. Statutes in effect in nearly all the States fixing the maximum legal rate of interest and other terms on short-term loans by banks and finance companies.

Smart-money. Vindictive, punitive or exemplary damages given by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. See Damages.

Smuggling. The offense of importing or exporting prohibited articles without paying the duties chargeable upon them. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. Quoted and approved by Brewer, J., in Dunbar v. U.S., 156 U.S. 185, 15 S.Ct. 325, 39 L.Ed. 390.

"Smuggle" has well-understood meaning at common law, signifying bringing on shore, or carrying from shore, of goods, wares, and merchandise for which duty has not been paid, or goods the importation or exportation whereof is prohibited. Williamson v. U.S., C.A. Cal., 310 F.2d 192, 195. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 545, 546. See also Contraband.

Smut. See Obscene.

So. In the same manner as has been stated; under this circumstance; in this way, referring to something which is asserted. Sometimes the equivalent of "hence," or "therefore," and it is thus understood whenever what follows is an illustration of, or conclusion from, what has gone before.

In connection with time, it suggests a period of indefinite duration. Thus, an agreement to pay rent "within a week or so".

Soakage /soʊkæd/. As used in the laws and regulations relating to withdrawal of liquors from bonded warehouses, the spirits which in course of time in the warehouse had been absorbed by the staves of the barrel containing it.

Sober. Moderate in, or abstinent from, the use of intoxicating liquors.

Sobriety checkpoint. A public place at which police maintain a roadblock to detain motorists briefly to determine whether they have been operating a motor vehicle under the influence of liquor. Such roadblocks do not violate Fourth Amendment search and seizure protections. Michigan Dept. of State Police v. Sitz, 110 S.Ct. 2481 (1990).

Sobriety tests. See Blood alcohol count; Breathalyzer test; Field sobriety tests; Intoximeter; Intoxilyzer; Sobriety checkpoint.

Sobrini and sobrine /səbrəˈnɛɪn/ /səbrəˈnʌɪn/. Lat. In the civil law, the children of cousins, german in general.

Soc, sok, or soka. In Saxon law, jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory.

Soca /səˈkəʊə/. A seigniory or lordship, enfranchised by the king, with liberty of holding a court of his socmen or socagers; i.e., his tenants.

Socage /soʊkæj/. A species of tenure, in England, whereby the tenant held certain lands in consideration of certain inferior services of husbandry to be performed by him to the lord of the fee. In its most general and extensive signification, a tenure by any certain and determinate service. And in this sense it is by the ancient writers constantly put in opposition to tenure by chivalry or knight-service, where the render was precarious and uncertain. Socage is of two sorts,—free socage, where the services are not only certain, but honorable; and villein socage, where the services, though certain, are of baser nature. Such as hold by the former tenure are also called in Glanvil and other authors by the name of "liberi sokemanni," or tenants in free socage. By the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, all the tenures by knight-service were, with one or two immaterial exceptions, converted into free and common socage.

Socager /só(w)kəˈjər/. A tenant by socage.

Socage isom est quod servitum socae; et soca, idem est quod caruca /sakéyij(ə)tom əˈdæm est servish(ə)tom sowsi, ət sowka, əˈdæm est kwôd kahrˈwiuka/. Socage is the same as service of the soc; and soc is the same thing as a plow.

Socer /ˈsowər/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife's father; a father-in-law.

Social contract, or compact. In political philosophy, a term applied to the theory of the origin of society associated chiefly with the names of Hobbes, Locke and Rousseau, though it can be traced back to the Greek Sophists. Rousseau (Contract Social) held that in the pre-social state man was unwarlike and timid. Laws resulted from the combination of men who agreed, for mutual protection, to surrender individual freedom of action. Government must therefore rest on the consent of the governed.

Social guest. For purpose of determining landowner's duty of care, "social guest" is person who goes onto property of another for companionship, diversion and enjoyment of hospitality and is treated as licensee. Gregor v. Kleiser, 111 Ill.App.3d 333, 67 Ill.Dec. 38, 40 443 N.E.2d 1162, 1164. See also Guest.

Social Security Administration. An agency of the Department of Health and Human Services under the direction of the Commissioner of Social Security which administers a national program of contributory social insurance whereby employees, employers, and the self-employed pay contributions which are pooled in special trust funds. When earnings stop or are reduced because the worker retires, dies, or becomes disabled, monthly cash benefits are paid to replace part of the earnings the person or family has lost. In addition to administering the various retirement, survivors, disability, and supplemental security income (SSI) benefit programs, the SSA oversees the administrative hearing and appeals process involving benefit claims.

Socida /sasˈɔdyə/. In civil law, the name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense or for a part of the profits, certain animals on condition that if any of them perish they shall be replaced by the bailee or he shall pay their value. A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired.

Sociedad /sowsɿˈiyeθdád/. In Spanish law, partnership.

Socieda anónima /sowsɿˈiyeθdád anónima/. In Spanish and Mexican law, a business corporation.

Societas /sasˈaːstəs/. Lat. In the civil law, partnership; a partnership: the contract of partnership. A contract by which the goods or labor of two or more are united in a common stock, for the sake of sharing in the gain.

Societas leonina /sasˈaːstəs lɪˈoʊnənə/. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits belong to some of the partners, in exclusion of the rest. So called in allusion to the fable of the lion, who, having entered into partnership with other animals for the purpose of hunting, appropriated all the prey to himself.

Societas navalis /sasˈaːstəs nəˈvæləs/. A naval partnership; an association of vessels; a number of ships pursuing their voyage in company, for purposes of mutual protection.

Société /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ/. Fr. In French law, partnership.

Société anonyme /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ ɑ̃nɔnˈni/em/. In French law originally a partnership conducted in the name of one of the members; the others were strictly secret partners. To creditors of the firm they came into no relation and under no liability. An association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had in England until lately no other name than that of "chartered company," meaning thereby a joint-stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions.

Société d’acquêts. A written contract between husband and wife to regard as community property only those things which are acquired during the marriage.

Société en commandite /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ ɔ̃ kɔməndidɛt/. In Louisiana, a partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more.

Société en nom collectif /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ ɔ̃ nɔm kəltɛkˈtif/. A partnership in which all the members are jointly and severally liable.

Société en participation /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ ɔ̃ pərtisəˈpiːʃən/. A joint adventure.

Société par actions /sowsɿˈiyeθtɛ pər əkˈsɛnəs/. A joint stock company.

Society. An association or company of persons (generally unincorporated) united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose. In a wider sense, the community or public; the people in general. Gilmer v. Stone, 120 U.S. 586, 7 S.Ct. 689, 30 L.Ed. 734.

Term "society," loss of which is recoverable element in death action under general maritime law, embraces broad range of mutual benefits each family member receives from other's continued existence, including love, affection, care, attention, companionship, comfort and protection; thus, widow, parent, brother, sister, or child may be compensated for loss of society. Consolidated Machines, Inc. v. Protein Products Corp., D.C. Fla., 428 F.Supp. 209, 228.

Within rule that husband is entitled to damages for loss of wife's "society" through wrongful injury, means such capacities for usefulness, aid, and comfort as a wife as she possessed at the time of the injuries. Homan v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 335 Mo. 30, 70 S.W.2d 869. See also Consortium.

Civil society—usually, a state, nation, or body politic.

Socii mei socius meus non est /só̃wiˈʃiViˈas miˈas miˈas só̃wiˈʃiViˈas nɔ̃ ˈɛst/. The partner of my partner is not my partner.

Socius /só̃wiˈʃiViˈas/. Lat. In the civil law, a partner.

Socman /só̃wˈkman/. A socager.

Free socemen. In old English law, tenants in free socage.

Socmanry /só̃wˈkmanriˈe/. Free tenure by socage.

Socna /só̃wuˈnə/. A privilege, liberty, or franchise.

Sodomite /só̃ˈdəmiːt/. One who has been guilty of sodomy.

Sodomy. While variously defined in state criminal statutes, is generally oral or anal copulation between humans, or between humans and animals. State v. Young, 140 Or. 228, 13 P.2d 604, 607.

Soft dollars. Securities industry term for credits that brokers give big investors, such as pension funds and their money managers, in return for their stock trading business.

So help you God. The words commonly at the end of a common oath.

Soil bank. A federal agricultural program under which farmers are paid for not growing crops, or for growing noncommercial vegetation, in order to preserve the quality of the soil and stabilize commodity prices by avoiding surpluses.

Soin /sw̃ˈsw̃ẽ/. Fr. Let it be; be it so. A term used in several laws; French phrases employed in English law, particularly as expressive of the will or assent of the sovereign in formal communications with parliament or with private suitors.

Soin baillé aux communs /sw̃ˈbɛ̃ lɔ̃ kɔ̃ˈmɔ̃/. Let it be delivered to the commons. The form of indorsement on a bill when sent to the house of commons.

Soin baillé aux seigneurs /sw̃ˈbɛ̃ lɔ̃ sekneˈyɾũ/. Let it be delivered to the lords. The form of indorsement on a bill in parliament when sent to the house of lords.
opposite of aggregate; as a corporation sole. Without another or others.

Unmarried; as a feme sole.

Sole actor doctrine. Under this doctrine a principal is charged with the knowledge of his agent. It contemplates that agent must have ostensibly endeavored to benefit his principal, and even though he did not do so and his acts were for his personal benefit, possibly through defalcation, the third party who obligated himself must have been under the impression that he was dealing with the principal. General American Life Ins. Co. v. Anderson, D.C.Ky., 46 F.Supp. 189, 195, 196, 198.

It is based on the presumption that by reason of the relationship between an agent and his principal the principal is presumed to have been told everything the agent has done and presumed to have known of his actions and promises. Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Pendleton, D.C.Ky., 29 F.Supp. 779, 782, 783.

Sole and unconditional owner. See Owner.

Sole cause. As respects negligence of plaintiff or third party as the sole cause of injury so as to relieve defendant from liability, means the act or negligence of plaintiff or a third party directly causing the injury without any concurring or contributory negligence of defendant. Dixon v. Wabash R. Co., Mo.App., 198 S.W.2d 395, 398. Term means the act or negligence of the plaintiff or a third party directly causing the injury without any concurring or contributory negligence of defendant. Jurgens v. Thompson, 350 Mo. 914, 169 S.W.2d 353, 357. See also Proximate cause.

Solemn /sólm/. Formal; in regular form; with all the forms of a proceeding. As to solemn oath, see Corporal oath; as to solemn war, see War.

Solemnnes legum formulæ /sólmniyz liygam fórmalyiy/. Lat. In the civil law, solemn forms of laws; forms of forensic proceedings and of transacting legal acts. One of the sources of the unwritten law of Rome.

Solemnitas attachiamentorum /sólémnédtäx atäch(iy)-amentörm/. In old English practice, solemnity or formality of attachments. The issuing of attachments in a certain formal and regular order.

Solemnitates juris sunt observanda /sólémntstétyiyz júras sánt óbservéndiy/. The solemnities of law are to be observed.

Solemnity /sólémntiy/. A rite or ceremony; the formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

Solemnization. To enter marriage publicly before witnesses in contrast to a clandestine or common law marriage.

Solemnize /sólémniyz/. To enter marriage publicly before witnesses in contrast to a clandestine or common law marriage.

Solemn occasion. Within constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to require the opinion of the Justices on important questions of law means occasion when such questions of law are necessary to be determined by the body making the inquiry in the exercise of the power intrusted to it by the Constitution or laws.

Sole proprietorship. A form of business in which one person owns all the assets of the business in contrast to a partnership, trust or corporation. The sole proprietor is solely liable for all the debts of the business.

Sole source rule. In suits for false advertising at common law, the plaintiff may not recover unless it can demonstrate that it has a monopoly in the sale of goods possessing the advertised trait, because only in that situation were the common law courts confident that the plaintiff would be harmed by the defendant’s false advertising. This restrictive doctrine is known as the sole source rule.

Solicit. To appeal for something; to apply to for obtaining something; to ask earnestly; to ask for the purpose of receiving; to endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to entreat, implore, or importune; to make petition to; to plead for; to try to obtain; and though the word implies a serious request, it requires no particular degree of importunity, entreaty, imploration, or supplication. People v. Phillips, 70 Cal.App.2d 449, 160 P.2d 872, 874. To awake or incite to action by acts or conduct intended to and calculated to incite the act of giving. People ex rel. Friedman v. Framer, 208 Misc. 236, 139 N.Y.S.2d 331, 337. The term implies personal petition and importunity addressed to a particular individual to do some particular thing.

As used in context of solicitation to commit a crime, term means to command, authorize, urge, incite, request, or advise another to commit a crime. See also Solicitation.

Solicitation. Asking; enticing; urgent request. The inchoate offense of requesting or encouraging someone to engage in illegal conduct. Any action which the relation of the parties justifies in construing into a serious request. Thus “solicitation of prostitution” is the asking or urging a person to engage in prostitution. The word is also used in such phrases as “solicitation to larceny,” to bribery, etc.

For the crime of solicitation to be completed, it is only necessary that the actor, with intent that another person commit a crime, have enticed, advised, incited, ordered or otherwise encouraged that person to commit a crime. The crime solicited need not be committed.

A person is guilty of solicitation to commit a crime if with the purpose of promoting or facilitating its commission he commands, encourages or requests another person to engage in specific conduct which would constitute such crime or an attempt to commit such crime or which would establish his complicity in its commission or attempted commission. Model Penal Code, § 5.02. See also e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 373 (solicitation to commit a violent crime).

Under Model Penal Code, § 5.05, solicitation of a crime is of the same grade and degree as the most serious offense solicited.

Soliciting agent. In insurance law, is a special agent and generally has authority only to solicit insurance, submit applications to company and perform such acts as are incident to that power. Dixie Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Hamm, 233 Ark. 320, 344 S.W.2d 601, 603.

Solicitor. Chief law officer of city, town, or other governmental body or department; see e.g. Solicitor General.

In England, to become a solicitor a person must be articled to a practicing solicitor, pass the necessary examinations conducted by the Law Society, and be admitted by the Master of the Rolls. A solicitor may practice in the Bankruptcy Court, county courts, petty sessions, certain proceedings in the Crown Court, most inferior courts, and also in chambers of the Supreme Court. Such are controlled by the Solicitors Act of 1974. See also Barrister.

Solicitor General. The Solicitor General of the United States is in charge of representing the Government in suits and appeals in the Supreme Court and as well in lower federal trial and appellate courts in cases involving the interests of the United States. He decides what cases the Government should ask the Supreme Court to review and what position the Government should take in cases before the Court. He supervises the preparation of the Government’s Supreme Court briefs and other legal documents and the conduct of the oral arguments in the Court and argues most of the important cases himself. The Solicitor General’s duties also include deciding whether the United States should appeal in all cases it loses before the lower federal courts. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 505, 517, 518.

Solidarity. In the civil law, when several persons bind themselves towards another for the same sum, at the same time, and in the same contract; and so obligate themselves that each may be compelled to pay the whole debt, and that payment made by one of them exonerates the others towards the creditor; and the obligation thus contracted is one, in solido, although one of the debtors be obliged differently from the others to the payment of one and the same thing; as if the one be but conditionally bound, while the engagement of the others is pure and simple, or if the one is allowed a term which is not granted to the others.

Solidary. A term of civil-law origin, signifying that the right or interest spoken of is joint or common. A “solidary obligation” corresponds to a “joint and several” obligation in the common law; that is, one for which several debtors are bound in such wise that each is liable for the entire amount, and not merely for his proportionate share. But in the civil law the term also includes the case where there are several creditors, as against a common debtor, each of whom is entitled to receive the entire debt and give an acquittance for it.

Solidum /sóladum/. Lat. In the civil law, a whole; an entire or undivided thing.

Solutio indebiti /sal(y)úwshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, payment, satisfaction, or release; any species of discharge of an obligation accepted as satisfactory by the creditor. The term refers not so much to the counting out of money as to the substance of the obligation.

Solutio indebiti /sal(y)úwshiyow indébatóy/. In the civil law, payment of what was not due. From the payment of what was not due arises an obligation quasi ex contractu. When one has erroneously given or performed something to or for another, for which he was in no wise bound, he may demand it, as if he had only lent it. The term “solutio indebiti” is here used in a very wide sense, and includes also the case where one performed labor for another, or assumed to pay a debt for which he was not bound, or relinquished a right or released a debt, under the impression that he was legally bound to do so.

Solutio indebiti /sal(y)úwshiyow indébatóy/. Old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages or allowance if it had been refused.
Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur /sol(y)uviow preshiyay em(p)shlyownas lowkw habiyr/). The payment of the price [of a thing] is held to be in place of a purchase [operates as a purchase].

Solutus /sol(y)uwtas/). In the civil law, loosed; freed from confinement; set at liberty.

Solvabilité /solvabiliyté/). Fr. In French law, ability to pay; solvency.

Solvency. Ability to pay debts as they mature and become due. Ability to pay debts in the usual and ordinary course of business. See Notes: See solvability.

Solvendo esse /solvendow esiy/). Lat. To be in a state of solvency; i.e., able to pay.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solvendum potest solvere /solvendow esiy nymow intalijatar naysay kwá soládam powtast sólvariy/). No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes.

Solvendum in futuro /solvendow in fyuwtyurow/). Lat. To be paid in the future. Used of an indebtedness which is said to be debitum in presenti (due now) and solvendum in futuro (payable in the future). An interest in an estate may be rested though it be in place of a purchase [operates as a purchase].

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii /sólvariy ådhak sásyáytášás éshiyiyam mórtiy sówshiyyay/). A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur /sólvariy lyow lágéyamany kwów lágéytáš/). In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed.

Somersett's Case. A celebrated decision of the English king's bench, in 1771 (20 How.St.Tr. 1), that slavery no longer existed in England in any form, and could not for the future exist on English soil, and that any person brought into England as a slave could not be thence removed except by the legal means applicable in the case of any free-born person.

Somnambulism /só(m)ámbyálizom/). Sleep-walking. Whether this condition is anything more than a co-operation of the voluntary muscles with the thoughts which occupy the mind during sleep is not settled by physiologists. Such condition may be a defense to a crime committed while in such state. See also Somnolentia.

Somnolentia /só(m)nésh(i)yá/). A condition of incomplete sleep resembling in its effects drunkenness and in which part of the faculties are abnormally excited while the others are in repose. It destroys moral agency and is therefore a defense to a crime. See also Somnolentia.

Son /sówn/). Fr. His.

Son assault demene. His own assault. A plea which occurs in the actions of trespass and trespass on the case, by which the defendant alleges that it was the plaintiff's own original assault that occasioned the trespass for which he has brought the action, and that what the defendant did was merely in his own defense.

Son-in-law. The husband of one's daughter. See Notes: See solvit ad diem.

Son of Sam law. Colloquial name, referring to well-known serial killer, for state statutes providing that any share a criminal might otherwise have in proceeds from a book or other presentation about his crime must be placed into an escrow account for the benefit of any victims of the crime. Cf. N.Y. McKinney's Executive Law § 632-a. See also Slayer's rule.

Sonticus /sóntikas/). Lat. In the civil law, hurtful; injurious; hindering; excusing or justifying delay. Morbus sonticus is any illness of so serious a nature as to prevent a defendant from appearing in court and to give him a valid excuse.

Soror /soror/. Lat. Sister.

Sororicide /sororsayd/. The killing or murder of a sister; one who murders his sister. This is not a technical term of the law.

Sors /sors/. Lat. In old English law, a principal lent on money borrowed, or put out at interest. A principal sum or fund, such as the capital of a partnership.

Sortitio /sortish(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a drawing of lots. Sortitio judicum was the process of selecting a number of judges, for a criminal trial, by drawing lots.

Sound, v. To have reference or relation to; to aim at. An action is technically said to sound in tort or damages where it is brought not for the specific recovery of a thing, but for damages only. See Sounding in damages.

Sound, adj. Whole; in good condition; marketable. See Warranty.

Free from disease; healthy; physically and mentally fit. The term may also mean free from danger to the life, safety, and welfare.

Sound and disposing mind and memory. Testamentary capacity. Such mind and memory as enables testator to know and understand business in which he is engaged at time of making will. Farmers' Union Bank of Henning v. Johnson, 27 Tenn.App. 342, 181 S.W.2d 369, 374. See also Capacity, and Sound mind, below.

Sound health. In insurance law, means that the applicant has no grave impairment or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system. A state of health unimpaired by any serious malady of which the person himself is conscious. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Ware, 169 Okl. 618, 37 P.2d 905.

Sound judicial discretion. Discretion exercised on full and fair consideration of the facts presented to the judge by the well-known and established mode of procedure. Caldwell v. State, 164 Tenn. 325, 48 S.W.2d 1087, 1089. Discretion exercised not arbitrarily or willfully but with regard to what is right and equitable under the circumstances. Cornwell v. Cornwell, 73 App.D.C. 233, 118 F.2d 396, 398.

Sound mind. The normal condition of the human mind, —that state in which its faculties of perception and judgment are ordinarily well developed, and not impaired by mania, insanity, or other mental disorder. In the law of wills means that testator must have been able to understand and carry in mind, in a general way, nature and situation of his property, his relations to those having claim to his remembrance, and nature of his act. The "sound mind" necessary to execute a will means ability of testator to mentally understand in a general way nature and extent of property to be disposed of, and testator's relation to those who would naturally claim a substantial benefit from will, as well as general understanding of practical effect of will as executed. Skelton v. Davis, Fla.App., 133 So.2d 432, 435. See also Capacity.

Sound value. As used with reference to value of property within fire policy is the cash value of property, making an allowance for depreciation due to use at and immediately preceding the time of the fire. Reliance Ins. Co. v. Bowen, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 597, 598.

Sounding in damages. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be "sounding in damages."

Soundness. General good health; freedom from any permanent disease or illness. See Sound.

Source. That from which any act, movement, information, or effect proceeds. A person or thing that originates, sets in motion, or is a primary agency in producing any course of action or result. An originator; creator; origin. A place where something is found or whence it is taken or derived. Jackling v. State Tax Comm., 40 N.M. 241, 118 F.2d 396, 398.

The source of income. Place where, or circumstances from which, income at issue is produced. Union Electric Co. v. Coale, 347 Mo. 175, 146 S.W.2d 631, 635.

Sources of the law. The origins from which particular positive laws derive their authority and coercive force; such are constitutions, treaties, statutes, usages, and customs.

In another sense, the authoritative or reliable works, records, documents, edicts, etc., to which we are to look for an understanding of what constitutes the law. Such, for example, with reference to the Roman law, are the compilations of Justinian and the treatise of Gaius; and such, with reference to the common law, are especially the ancient reports and the works of such writers as Bracton, Littleton, Coke, Fleta, Blackstone, and others.

Sous /súw/. Fr. Under.

Sous seing privé /súw séeง privée/. Fr. In French law, under private signature; under the private signature of the parties. A contract or instrument thus signed is distinguished from an "authentic act," which is formally concluded before a notary or judge.

Sovereign. A person, body, or state in which independent and supreme authority is vested; a chief ruler with supreme power; a king or other ruler in a monarchy. See also Clipped sovereignty; Sovereignty.
SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

Sovereign immunity. A judicial doctrine which precludes bringing suit against the government without its consent. Founded on the ancient principle that "the King can do no wrong," it bars holding the government or its political subdivisions liable for the torts of its officers or agents unless such immunity is expressly waived by statute or by necessary inference from legislative enactment. Maryland Port Admin. v. I.T.O. Corp. of Baltimore, 40 Md.App. 697, 395 A.2d 145, 149. The federal government has generally waived its non-tort action immunity in the Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1346(a)(2), 1491, and its tort immunity in the Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1346(b), 2674. Most states have also waived immunity in various degrees at both the state and local government levels.

The immunity from certain suits in federal court granted to states by the Eleventh Amendment to the United States Constitution.

See also Foreign immunity; Federal Tort Claims Act; Suits in Admiralty Act; Tucker Act.

Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act. Subject to existing international agreements to which the U.S. is a party, and to certain statutorily prescribed exceptions, a foreign nation is immune from the jurisdiction of federal and state courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1601-1611.

Sovereign people. The political body, consisting of the entire number of citizens and qualified electors, who, in their collective capacity, possess the powers of sovereignty and exercise them through their chosen representatives. See Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 404, 15 L.Ed. 691.

Sovereign power or sovereign prerogative. That power in a state to which none other is superior or equal, and which includes all the specific powers necessary to accomplish the legitimate ends and purposes of government. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Bramwell, D.C. Or., 12 F.2d 307, 309.

Sovereign right. A right which the state alone, or some of its governmental agencies, can possess, and which it possesses in the character of a sovereign, for the common benefit, and to enable it to carry out its proper functions; distinguished from such "proprietary" rights as a state, like any private person, may have in property or demands which it owns.

Sovereign states. States whose subjects or citizens are in the habit of obedience to them, and which are not themselves subject to any other (or paramount) state in any respect. The state is said to be semi-sovereign only, and not sovereign, when in any respect or respects it is liable to be controlled by a paramount government. In the intercourse of nations, certain states have a position of entire independence of others, and can perform all those acts which it is possible for any state to perform in this particular sphere. These same states have also entire power of self-government; that is, of independence upon all other states as far as their own territory and citizens not living abroad are concerned. No foreign power or law can have control except by convention. This power of independent action in external and internal relations constitutes complete sovereignty.

Sovereignty. The supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power by which any independent state is governed; supreme political authority; the supreme will; paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and its administration; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all specific political powers are derived; the international independence of a state, combined with the right and power of regulating its internal affairs without foreign dictation; also a political society, or state, which is sovereign and independent.

The power to do everything in a state without accountability, to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like.

Sovereignty in government is that public authority which directs or orders what is to be done by each member associated in relation to the end of the association. It is the supreme power by which any citizen is governed and is the person or body of persons in the state to whom there is politically no superior. The necessary existence of the state and that right and power which necessarily follow is "sovereignty." By "sovereignty" in its largest sense is meant supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power, the absolute right to govern. The word which by itself comes nearest to being the definition of "sovereignty" is will or volition as applied to political affairs. City of Bisbee v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d 982, 986.

Sowe. In old English law, to be leviable. An old exchequer term applied to sheriff's returns.

S.P. Abbreviation of "sine prole," without issue. Also an abbreviation of "same principle," or "same point," indicating, when inserted between two citations, that the second involves the same doctrine as the first.

Spadones /spádóñez/. Lat. In the civil law, impotent persons. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate.

Sprams /spársám/. Lat. Here and there; scattered; at intervals. For instance, trespass to realty by cutting timber sprams (here and there) through a tract.

Space placitum /spéytyi pléstatum/. In old English law, a court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents.

Speaker. The official designation of the president or chairman of certain legislative bodies, particularly of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States, and of one or both branches of several of the state legislatures, i.e. Speaker of the House.

Speaking demurrer. A demurrer which introduces a new fact that does not appear from face of bill or complaint is a "speaking demurrer," and cannot be sustained. Allpress v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp., 218 Tenn. 673, 406 S.W.2d 572, 573. A speaking demurrer is a special exception which, instead of limiting itself to the allegations of the petition and pointing out defects therein, states factual propositions not appearing in the petition and, in reliance upon such facts, seeks to challenge the plaintiff’s right to recovery. Ragsdale v. Ragsdale, Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 839, 842. See also Demurrer.

Speaking motion. A motion which requires consideration of matters outside the pleadings. Formerly, such motions were prohibited but under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b) such motions are now entertained.

Special. Relating to or designating a species, kind, individual, thing, or sort; designed for a particular purpose; confined to a particular purpose, object, person, or class. Unusual, extraordinary.

As to special Acceptance; Administration; Agent; Allocatur; Allowance; Appearance; Assessment; Assumpsit; Bail; Bailiff; Benefit; Calendar; Charge; Constable; Contract; Count; Covenant; Customs; Damage; Demurrer; Deposit; Deputy; Election; Finding; Guaranty; Guardian; Imparlane; Indorsement; Injunction; Insurance; Issue; Jury; Legacy; Letter of credit; License; Limitation; Malice; Master; Meeting; Mortgage; Motion; Non est factum; Occupant; Owner; Partner; Partnership; Plea; Pleader; Pleadings; Power; Power of appointment; Privilege; Proceeding; Property; Replication; Request; Restraint of trade; Retainer; Rule; Service; Session; Statute; Stock; Tall; Term; Traverse; Trust; Verdict, and Warranty, see those titles.

Special act. A private statute; an act which operates only upon particular persons or private concerns. Unity v. Burrage, 103 U.S. 447, 454, 26 L.Ed. 405. See Special law.

Special attorney or counsel. An attorney employed by the Attorney General of the United States or of a state to assist in a particular case where the public interest so requires. 28 U.S.C.A. § 543. See Special counsel.

Special district. A limited governmental structure created to bypass normal borrowing limitations, to insulate certain activities from traditional political influence, to allocate functions to entities reflecting particular expertise, to provide services in otherwise unincorporated areas, or to accomplish a primarily local benefit or improvement, e.g. parks and planning, mosquito control, sewage removal.

Special errors. In common law pleading, special pleas in error are such as, instead of joining in error, alleging some extraneous matter as a ground of defeating the writ of error, e.g., a release of errors, expiration of the time within which error might be brought, or the like. To these, the plaintiff in error may either reply or demur.

Special exception. An objection to the form in which a cause of action is stated. See Demurrer.

Special exception to municipal zoning ordinance refers to special uses which are permissive in particular zone under ordinance and are neither nonconforming uses nor akin to a variance and refers to special use which is considered by local legislative body to be essential or desirable for welfare of community and its citizenry and which is entirely appropriate and not essentially incompatible with basic uses in zone involved, but not at every or any location therein or without restriction or conditions being imposed on such use. Piscitelli v. Township Committee of Scotch Plains Tp., 103 N.J. 589, 248 A.2d 274, 277. A special exception allows property owner to put his property to use which regulations expressly permit under conditions specified in zoning regulations themselves. W A T R, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Bethany, 158 Conn. 196, 257 A.2d 818, 821.

Such use is also known as a conditional use, special permit, or special use. See Special use permit. Compare Variance.

Special execution. A copy of a judgment with a direction to the sheriff indorsed thereon to execute it. One that directs a levy upon some special property. See Execution.

Special executor. One whose power and office are limited, either in respect to the time or place of their exercise, or restricted to a particular portion of the decedent’s estate. One only empowered by will to take charge of a limited portion of the estate, or such part as may lie in one place, or to carry on the administration only to a prescribed point. See Executor.

Special facts rule. In corporation law, as respects director’s duty of disclosure when dealing with stockholders, is that where special circumstances or facts are present which make it inequitable for the director to withhold information the stockholder, the duty to disclose arises, and concealment is fraud. Taylor v. Wright, 69 Cal.App.2d 371, 159 P.2d 980, 985.

Special grand jury. A grand jury convened to hear a particular case or series of cases involving similar crimes. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3331 et seq.

Special interest groups. Groups in society that have a special interest in common. Special interest groups generally attempt to influence government legislation to benefit their own particular group interests. See Lobbying.

Special interrogatories. Written questions on one or more issues of fact submitted to a jury. The answers to these are necessary to a verdict. Fed.R.Civ.P. 49(b).

Specialist. Stock broker who remains at one post of exchange where particular stocks are dealt in and executes orders of other brokers, for which he receives commission; one who specializes in limited group of stocks.

Special jurisdiction. A court authorized to take cognizance of only some few kinds of causes or proceedings expressly designated by statute is called a court of special or limited jurisdiction. Power of a court over only a limited type of case (e.g. Probate court) or over only property and not the person or the defendant.

Special law. One relating to particular persons or things; one made for individual cases or for particular places or districts; one operating upon a selected class, rather than upon the public generally. A private law. A law is "special" when it is different from others of the same general kind or designed for a particular purpose, or limited in range or confined to a prescribed field of action or operation. A "special law" relates to either particular persons, places, or things to persons, places, or things which, though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but not such legislation, be applied. Utah Farm Bureau Ins. Co. v. Utah Ins. Guar¬ anty Ass'n, Utah, 564 P.2d 751, 754. A special law applies only to an individual or a number of individuals out of a single class similarly situated and affected, or to a special locality. Board of County Com'rs of Lemhi County v. Swensen, Idaho, 80 Idaho 198, 327 P.2d 361, 362. See also Private bill; Private law. Compare General law; Public law.

Special lien. A special lien is in the nature of a particular lien, being a lien upon particular property. A lien which the holder can enforce only as security for the performance of a particular act or obligation and of obligations incidental thereto. See also Lien.

Special matter. In common law pleading, under a plea of the general issue, the defendant is allowed to give special matter in evidence, usually after notice to the plaintiff of the nature of such matter, thus sparing him the necessity of pleading it specially. 3 Bl.Comm. 306.

Special permit. See Special use permit.

Special registration. In election laws, registration for particular election only which does not entitle elector to vote at any succeeding election.

Special session. An extraordinary session. See Ses¬ tract. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified. See Contract (Special contract).

For assessment purposes, a "specialty" is a building or buildings, constructed or peculiarly adapted to conduct of owner's business, which cannot be converted to general industrial use without the loss or expenditure of very substantial amounts of money. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co., Inc. v. Kiernan, 49 A.D.2d 99, 371 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175.

Specialty debt. A debt due or acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal. 2 Bl.Comm. 465.

Special use permit. Permitted exception to zoning ordi¬ nance; e.g. church, hospital, etc. A special use permit allows property owner to use his property in a way which the zoning regulations expressly permit under the conditions specified in the regulations themselves. Shell Oil Co. v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Bloomfield, 156 Conn. 66, 238 A.2d 426, 428. "Special permit" and "special exception" have the same meaning and can be used interchangeably. Beckish v. Planning and Zoning Comm. of Town of Columbia, 162 Conn. 11, 291 A.2d 208, 210. See also Special exception; Compare Variance.

Special use valuation. An option which permits the executor of an estate to value, for death tax purposes, real estate used in a farming activity or in connection with a closely-held business at its current use value rather than at its most suitable or highest and best use value. Under this option, a farm would be valued at its value for farming purposes even though, for example, the property might have a higher value as a potential shopping center. In order for the executor of an estate to elect special use valuation, the conditions of I.R.C. § 2032A must be satisfied.

Special warranty. A covenant of "special warranty" is one the operation of which is limited to certain persons or claims. Central Life Assur. Soc. v. Impelmans, 13 Wash.2d 632, 126 P.2d 757, 763. A "covenant to warranty" in the habendum clause is not a general but at most a "special warranty". New Or¬ elands & N. E. R. v. Morrison, 203 Miss. 791, 35 So.2d 68, 70. See also Warranty.

Special warranty deed. A deed in which the grantor only covenants to warrant and defend the title against claims and demands of the grantor and all persons claiming by, through and under him. In some jurisdictions, such deed is called a quitclaim deed (q.v.).

Specie /spiyshiy(iy)/. Coin of the precious metals, of a certain weight and fineness, and bearing the stamp of the government, denoting its value as currency. Metal¬lic money; e.g. gold or silver coins.

When spoken of a contract, the expression "performance in specie" means strictly, or according to the exact terms. As applied to things, it signifies individuality or identity. Thus, on a bequest of a specific picture, the legatee would be said to be entitled to the delivery of the picture in specie; i.e., of the very thing. Whether a thing is due in genere or in specie depends, in each case, on the will of the transacting parties.

Species /spiyshiy(iy)z/. Lat. In the civil law, form; figure; fashion or shape. A form or shape given to materials.

Specific. Precisely formulated or restricted; definite; explicit; of an exact or particular nature. People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 17. Having a certain form or designation; observing a certain form; particular; precise; tending to specify, or to make particular, definite, limited or precise.

As to specific Denial; Devise; Legacy, and Performance, see those titles.

Specifically. In a specific manner; explicitly, particularly, definitely.

Specificatio /spéssafskéysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, literally, a making of form; a giving of form to materi¬ als. That mode of acquiring property through which a person, by transforming a thing belonging to another, especially by working up his materials into a new spe¬ cies, becomes proprietor of the same.

Specification. As used in the law relating to patents, manufacturing, and construction contracts, a particular or detailed statement, account, or listing of the various elements, materials, dimensions, etc. involved.

Law of personal property. The acquisition of title to a thing by working it into new forms or species from the raw material; corresponding to the specificatio of the Roman law. Right by "specification" can only be acquired when, without the accession of any other material that of another person, which has been used by the operator innocently, has been converted by him into something specifically different in the inherent and characteristic qualities, which identify it. Such is the conversion of corn into meal, of grapes into wine, etc. Bozeman Mortuary Ass'n v. Fairchild, 253 Ky. 74, 68 S.W.2d 756.

Practice. A detailed and particular enumeration of several points or matters urged or relied on by a party to a suit or proceeding; as, a "specification of errors," or a "specification of grounds of opposition to a bankrupt's discharge."

Specific bequest (or devise). A testamentary gift of specific personal property (e.g. "my old rocking chair") or of a specific amount of cash. A specific bequest (or devise) is a gift by will of a specific article or part of testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all things of same kind and which may be satisfied by delivery of particular things. In re Soles' Estate, 451 Pa. 568, 304 A.2d 97, 100. See also Devise; Legacy (Specific legacy).

Specific devise. See Devise; Specific bequest.

Specific intent. The mental purpose to accomplish a specific act prohibited by law. The most common usage of "specific intent" is to designate a special mental element which is required above and beyond any mental state required with respect to the actus reus of the crime. Common law larceny, for example, requires the taking and carrying away of the property of another, and the defendant's mental state as to this act must be established, but in addition it must be shown that there was an "intend to steal" the property. Similarly, common law burglary requires a breaking and entry into the dwelling of another, but in addition to the mental state connected with these acts it must also be established that the defendant acted "with intent to commit a felony therein." The subjective desire or knowledge that the prohibited result will occur. People v. Owens, 131 Mich.App. 76, 345 N.W.2d 904, 907. See also Criminal (Criminal intent); Mens rea.

Specific intent crime. Crime in which defendant must not only intend the act charged, but also intend to violate law. U.S. v. Birkenstock, C.A.Wis., 823 F.2d 1026, 1028. One in which a particular intent is a necessary element of the crime itself. Russell v. State, Fla.App., 373 So.2d 97, 98. See also Mens rea; Specific intent.

Specific legatee. The recipient of designated property under a will and transferred by the death of the owner.

Specific performance. See Performance.

Specify. To mention specifically; to state in full and explicit terms; to point out; to tell or state precisely or in detail; to particularize, or to distinguish by words one thing from another. Aleksich v. Industrial Accident Fund, 116 Mont. 127, 151 P.2d 1016, 1021.

Specimen. A sample; a part of something intended to exhibit the kind and quality of the whole.

Spectrograph. Voice print analysis is a method of identification based on the comparison of graphic representations or "spectrograms" made of human voices. Such method utilizes a machine known as a "spectrograph" which separates the sound of human voices into the three component elements of time, frequency and intensity. Using a series of lines or bars, the machine plots the variables across electronically sensitive paper and the result is a "spectrogram" of the acoustical signal of the speaker, with the horizontal axis representing the time lapse, the vertical axis indicating frequency, and the thickness of the lines disclosing the intensity of the voice. People v. Kelly, 17 Cal.3d 24, 130 Cal.Rptr. 144, 147, 549 P.2d 1240. An increasing number of courts are permitting the admissibility of spectrograph results into evidence to identify voices. United States v. Bailor, C.A.W.Va., 519 F.2d 463. See also Voice exemplars; Voicerecognition.

Speculation. Buying or selling with expectation of profiting by a rise or fall in price. Also, engaging in hazardous business transactions, or investing in risky securities or commodities, with the hope of an unusually large profit.

Speculation, upon which neither court in nonjury case nor jurors in jury case may base verdict, is the art of theorizing about a matter as to which evidence is not sufficient for certain knowledge. Jaramillo v. U.S., D.C.N.Y., 357 F.Supp. 172, 175.

Speculative damages. See Damages.

Speculum /spėkysləm/. Lat. Mirror or lookingglass. The title of several of the most ancient lawbooks or compilations. One of the ancient Icelandic books is styled "Speculum Regale."

Speech. Freedom of speech is right guaranteed by First Amendment, U.S.Const. See also Commercial speech doctrine; Freedom of speech; Liberty; Symbolic speech.

Speech or debate clause. Art. 1, § 6, cl. 1 of U.S. Constitution grants congressmen immunity "for any speech or debate in either House." The courts have extended this privilege to matters beyond pure speech and debate in either House, but only when necessary to prevent indirect impairment of such deliberations. Gravel v. U. S., 408 U.S. 606, 92 S.Ct. 2614, 33 L.Ed.2d 583. See also Legislative immunity.

Speed. See Amphetamine; Methamphetamine.
Spendthrift trust. A trust created to provide a fund for spend. To consume by using in any manner; to use up, its usual incidents. Estate of Sowers, 1 Kan. App. 2d 675, 574 P.2d 224, 228. One which provides a fund for Spendthrift trust. A trust created to provide a fund for spend. To consume by using in any manner; to use up, its usual incidents. Estate of Sowers, 1 Kan. App. 2d 675, 574 P.2d 224, 228. One which provides a fund for benefit of another than settlor, secures it against beneficiary's own improvidence, and places it beyond his creditors' reach. A trust set up to protect a beneficiary from spending all of the money that he is entitled to. Only a certain portion of the total amount is given to him at any one time. Most states permit spendthrift trust provisions that prohibit creditors from attaching a spendthrift trust.

Sperate. That of which there is hope. Thus a debt which one may hope to recover may be called "sperate," in opposition to "desperate."

Spes accrescendi /spiyz əkresəndi/. Lat. Hope of surviving.

Spes est vigilantis somnium /spiyz est vijiləntəs səmn(-metadata)əm/. Hope is the dream of the vigilant.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi /spiyz impyəwnstəytəs kəntəniυəwəm əfəktəm tribywust ədələkgənəndi/. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime.

Spes recuperandi /spiyz rok(ə)yəpərəndəndi/. Lat. The hope of recovery or recapture; the chance of retaking property captured at sea, which prevents the captors from acquiring complete ownership of the property until they have definitely precluded it by effectual measures.

Spigurnel /spigərnəl/. The sealer of the royal writs.

Split-off; Split-up. A form of corporate divestiture that results in a subsidiary or division of a corporation becoming an independent company. Spin-off occurs where part of assets of corporation is transferred to a new corporation and stock of transferee is distributed to shareholders of transferor without surrender by them of stock in transferor. C. I. R. v. Baan, C.A.Cal., 382 P.2d 485, 491. A type of reorganization wherein, for example, A Corporation transfers some assets to B Corporation in exchange for enough B stock to represent control. A Corporation then distributes the B stock to its shareholders. See also Split-off; Split-up.

Spinster. A woman who never has been married.

Spiritual. Relating to religious or ecclesiastical persons or affairs, as distinguished from "secular" or lay, worldly, or business matters.

As to spiritual Corporation; Court, and Lord, see those titles.

Spittal, or spittle /spitol/. A charitable foundation; a hospital for diseased people; a hospital.

Spite fence. A fence of no beneficial use to person adjoining landowner by obstructing his air, light or view.

Split gift. See Gift.

Split income. Congress, in 1948, enacted new joint tax return legislation and a new set of rates to remove the considerable disparity between tax treatment of married couples in community property and common-law states, and thereby to remove the considerable pressure on the common-law states to adopt community-property systems. By law enacted that year, married couples in all states were given the privilege to split their income, that is to have it taxed on a joint return at a rate equal to that which would apply if each had earned one-half the amount and were taxed on a separate return. In 1969, however, Congress retained but reduced the disparity between rates imposed on single persons and married couples with the same incomes. This reduction took the form of a new and lower rate schedule for single persons, which took effect beginning in 1971. See I.R.C. § 1(c). See also Gift splitting.

Split-off. When a corporation sets up and funds a new corporation and gives the shares of this new corporation to the old corporation’s stockholders in exchange for some of their shares in the old company, this new company is a “split-off” and the process is a split-off. A type of reorganization whereby, for example, A Corporation transfers assets to B Corporation in exchange for enough B stock to represent control. A Corporation then distributes the B stock to its shareholders in exchange for some of their A stock. See also Spin-off; Split-up.

Split order. An order to a broker directing him to buy or sell some stock at one price and some at another.

Split sentence. One where penalty of fine and imprisonment part is suspended and fine part enforced. It is also exemplified in a sentence by which the defendant serves bringing several actions thereon. Van Brode Mill. Co. v. Kellogg Co., D.C.Del., 113 F.Supp. 845, 852. Commencement of action for only part of the cause of action. Wood v. Baker, 217 Or. 279, 341 P.2d 134, 136. Rule against “splitting cause of action” applies only when several actions are brought as result of dividing single or indivisible cause of action. Beizer v. Dictograph Products, Inc., 6 Conn.Cir. 28, 263 A.2d 93, 97.

There is no “splitting of causes” where demand which is subject of second action was not due at time of the first action. Glaivich v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 44 Cal.App.2d 517, 112 P.2d 774, 778. The rule against “splitting causes of action” applies only when several actions are brought as result of dividing single or indivisible cause of action. See also Joinder; Misjoinder; Multiplicity of actions or suits.

Split-up. When a corporation divides into two or more separate new corporations, gives its shareholders the shares of these new corporations, and goes out of business, this process is termed a “split-up.” A type of reorganization whereby, for example, A Corporation transfers some assets to B Corporation and the remainder to Z Corporation in return for which it receives enough B and Z stock to represent control of each corporation. The B and Z stock is then distributed by A Corporation to its shareholders in return for all of their A stock. The result of the split-up is that A Corporation is liquidated and its shareholders now have control of B and Z Corporations.

Spoliation /spōˈlēēəˈshən/. The intentional destruction of evidence and when it is established, fact finder may draw inference that evidence destroyed was unfavorable to party responsible for its spoliation. State v. Langlet, Iowa, 283 N.W.2d 330, 333. Such act constitutes an obstruction of justice. The destruction, or the significant and meaningful alteration of a document or instrument. Application of Bodkin, D.C.N.Y., 165 F.Supp. 25, 30.

Any change made on a written instrument by a person not a party to the instrument. Such a change will have no effect, provided that the original tenor of the instrument can still be ascertained.

Spoliator /spōˈliˈēətər/. Lat. A spoiler or destroyer. It is a maxim of law, bearing chiefly on evidence, but also upon the value generally of the thing destroyed, that everything most to his disadvantage is to be presumed against the destroyer (spoliator), contra spoliatorum omnia presumuntur.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui /spōˈliˈēətəs dēˈbət ōnˈmēnə restiˈtuyˌwā/ /spōˈliˈēətəs dēˈbət ōnˈmēnə restiˈtuyˌwā/. A party despoiled [forcibly deprived of possession] ought first of all to be restored.

Spoliatus episcopus ante omnia debet restitui /spōˈliˈēətəs épˈsɪskəpus āntə ˈomnə diˈbət rēˈstɪtuyˌwā/ /spōˈliˈēətəs épˈsɪskəpus āntə ˈomnə diˈbət rēˈstɪtuyˌwā/. A bishop despoiled of his see ought, above all, to be restored.

Spoliatio /spōˈliˈēətēəˈshən/. Lat. In the civil and common law, a thing violently or unlawfully taken from another.

Spondes? spondeo /spōˈdiˌəzə sponˈdiˌəw/. Lat. Do you undertake? I do undertake. The most common form of verbal stipulation in the Roman law.

Spondet peritiam artis /spōˈdiˌət pəˈrətɪəm ˈɑrˈtəs/. He promises the skill of his art; he engages to do the work in a skillful or workmanlike manner. Applied to the engagements of workman for hire.

Sponsalia per verba de futuro /spōˈnələˈlía ˈpər ˈvərboʊ də ˈfərtʊroʊ/ /spōˈnələˈlía ˈpər ˈvərboʊ də ˈfərtʊroʊ/. An engagement or betrothal through words concerning the future.

Sponsalia, or stipulatio sponsalitiae /spōˈnələˈlɪə ˈstɪpəˈləʃiəˈlɪə ˈspɒnsəˌlɪəˈlɪə/ /spōˈnələˈlɪə ˈstɪpəˈləʃiəˈlɪə ˈspɒnsəˌlɪəˈlɪə/. Lat. In the civil law, espousal; betrothal; a reciprocal promise of future marriage.

Sponsio /spōˈnəʃiəˈlɪə/ /spōˈnəʃiəˈlɪə/. Lat. In the civil law, an engagement or undertaking; particularly such as was made in the form of an answer to a formal interrogatory by the other party.
Spontaneous exclamation. Within res gestae rule, a statement or exclamation made immediately after some exciting occasion by a participant or spectator and asserting the circumstances of that occasion as it is observed by him, is admissible as a spontaneous and unreflecting statement, if there was an absence of time to fabricate, and if the statement related to the circumstances of the occurrence. People v. Was, 22 Ill.App.3d 859, 318 N.E.2d 309, 313. See Spontaneous exclamation.

Spot. In commodity trading and in foreign exchange, immediate delivery in contrast to a future delivery.

Spot exchange rate. Exchange rate at which one currency can be converted into another currency for immediate delivery.

Spot market. See Spot trading.

Spot price. The selling price of commodities or goods in spot market. See Spot trading.

Spot trading. In commodities market, cash sales for immediate delivery in contrast to trading in futures.

Spot zoning. Granting of a zoning classification to a piece of land that differs from that of the other land in the immediate area. Term refers to zoning which singles out an area for treatment different from that of similar surrounding land and which cannot be justified on the bases of health, safety, morals or general welfare of the community and which is not in accordance with a comprehensive plan. Save Our Rural Environment v. Snohomish County, 99 Wash.2d 363, 662 P.2d 816, 819.

Spousal disqualification. See Marital communications privilege.

Spousals /spáwzslz/. In old English law, mutual promises to marry.

Spouse. One's husband or wife, and "surviving spouse" is one of a married pair who outlive the other.

Spouse-breach. In old English law, adultery.

Sprinkling trust. See Trust.

Spring. In general, a difference between two amounts. In stock and commodity trading, the difference between the bid and asked price. In arbitrage (q.v.), the difference between two markets in the price or value of a currency. In futures trading, the difference between delivery months in the same or different markets. In fixed-income securities, is the difference between yields on securities of the same quality but different maturities or the difference between yields on securities of the same maturity but different quality. In banking, is difference between bank's cost of obtaining funds and rate it charges on loaning out funds.

Spring branch. A branch of a stream, flowing from a spring.

Springing use. See Use.

Sprinkling trust. See Trust.

Spurious. False, counterfeit, not genuine.

Spurious bank-bill. A bill which may be a legitimate impression from the genuine plate, but it must have the signatures of persons not the officers of the bank whence it purports to have issued, or else the names of fictitious persons. It may also be an illegitimate impression from a genuine plate, or an impression from a counterfeit plate, but it must have such signatures or names as indicated. A bill, therefore, may be both counterfeit and forged, or both counterfeit and spurious, but it cannot be both forged and spurious.

Spurious class action. One of the former categories of class action in which interests of members of class were several and not interdependent, and where joinder was a matter of efficiency to avoid multiplicity of suits. Slack v. Stiner, C.A. Tex., 358 F.2d 65, 69. This category of class action no longer exists under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 as revised. See also Class or representative action.

Spurious /sp(y)ûr(i)yas/spûr*. Lat. In the civil law, a Spurius, a person sent into an enemy's camp to inspect intelligence to the proper officer. By the laws of war among all civilized nations, a spy is punished with death. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2, 44, 18 L.Ed. 281 (argument of counsel).

Spy. A person sent into an enemy's camp to inspect their works, ascertain their strength and their intentions, watch their movements, and secretly communicate intelligence to the proper officer. By the laws of war among all civilized nations, a spy is punished with death. Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2, 44, 18 L.Ed. 281 (argument of counsel).

Spying. To watch or listen to secretly. See Eavesdropping; Spy; Wiretapping.

Square. As used to designate a certain portion of land within the limits of a city or town, this term may be synonymous with "block," that is, the smallest subdivision which is bounded on all sides by principal streets, or it may denote a space (more or less rectangular) not built upon, and set apart for public passage, use, recreation, or ornamentation, in the nature of a "park" but smaller.

Under government survey system, an area measuring 24 × 24 miles.

Just; settled; fair.

Public square. In its popular import, the phrase refers to ground occupied by a courthouse and other public buildings, normally at a point where two streets meet, but it may be used as synonymous with park.

squatter. One who settles on another's land, without legal title or authority. A person entering upon lands, not claiming in good faith the right to do so by virtue of any title of his own or by virtue of some agreement with another whom he believes to hold the title. Under former laws, one who settled on public land in order to acquire title to the land.

Squatter's right. See Adverse possession.

Squeeze-out. Techniques by which a minority interest in a corporation is eliminated or reduced. Squeeze-outs may occur in a variety of contexts, e.g., in a "going private" transaction in which minority shareholders are compelled to accept cash for their shares, or the issuance of new shares to existing shareholders in which minority shareholders are given the unpleasant choice of having their proportionate interest in the corporation reduced significantly or of investing a large amount of additional or new capital over which they have no control and for which they receive little or no return. Gabhart v. Gabhart, 267 Ind. 370, 370 N.E.2d 345, 353. Many squeeze-outs involve the use of cash mergers. "Squeeze-out" is often used synonymously with "freeze-out" (q.v.).

Squire. A contraction of "esquire."

SS. An abbreviation used in that part of a record, pleading, or affidavit, called the "statement of the venue." Commonly translated or read, "to-wit," and supposed to be a contraction of "scilicet."

S.S.A. Social Security Administration.

S.S.I. Supplemental Security Income.

S.S.S. Selective Service System.

Stabilia /stabil(i)yas/. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ.

Stabilize. To keep steady, fixed, as distinguished from fluctuating, shifting. McCanless v. Klein, 182 Tenn. 631, 188 S.W.2d 745, 748.

Stabilized prices. Prices held steady against any and all increases. Philadelphia Coke Co. v. Bowles, Em. App., 139 F.2d 349, 353.

Stabit presumptio donec probetur in contrarium /steybat prazam(p)sh(iy)ow downak prabiytar in kantrér(iy)am/. A presumption will stand good till the contrary is proved.

Stable-stand. In forest law, one of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man was convicted of an intent to steal the king's deer in the forest. This was when a man was found at his standing in the forest with a cross-bow or long-bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip.

Stacking. In insurance, refers to ability of insured, when covered by more than one insurance policy, to obtain benefits from second policy on same claim when recovery from first policy alone would be inadequate. Nationwide Ins. Co. v. Gode, 187 Conn. 386, 446 A.2d 1059, 1060.

Stagiarus /stéyj(i)ér(i)yas/. A resident.

Stake. A deposit made to answer an event, as on a wager. Something deposited by two persons with the third on condition that it is to be delivered to the one who shall become entitled to it by the happening of a specified contingency. See also Stakeholder.

A boundary marker used for land survey purposes.
Stakeholder. Generally, a stakeholder is a third party chosen by two or more persons to keep on deposit property or money the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to one who shall establish its right to it; and it is one who is entitled to interplead rival or contesting claimants to property or funds in his hands. Cochran v. Bank of Hancock County, 118 Ga.App. 100, 162 S.E.2d 765, 770. A person who is or may be exposed to multiple liability as the result of adverse claims. A stakeholder may commence an action of interpleader against two or more claimants. New York C.P.L.R. § 1006. See also Interpleader.

A person with whom money is deposited pending the decision of a bet or wager (q.v.). His function is to receive the sums wagered and hold them against the determining event, whether that event be a horse race or otherwise, and then pay them over to the winner.

Staking. Identification of boundaries of parcel of land by placing stakes in ground at boundary points.

Stale, n. In Saxon law, larceny.

Stale check. A check which bears a date of issue very much earlier than the date of its presentation or negotiation. A check which has been outstanding too long.

A check, other than a certified check, that is presented for payment more than six months after its date. U.C.C. § 4-404.

Stale demand or claim. A demand or claim that has long remained unasserted; one that is first asserted after an unexplained delay which is so long as to render it difficult or impossible for the court to ascertain the truth of the matters in controversy and do justice between the parties, or as to create a presumption against the existence or validity of the claim, or a presumption that the claim has been abandoned or satisfied. Lushen v. Stanton, 192 Okl. 454, 137 P.2d 567, 572. It implies a greater lapse of time than is necessary to "laches." Bell v. Mackey, 191 S.C. 105, 3 S.E.2d 816, 824, 830. The doctrine is purely an equitable one, and arises only when, from lapse of time and laches of plaintiff, it would be inequitable to allow a party to enforce his legal rights. Wood v. City Board of Plumbing Examiners, 192 Ga. 415, 15 S.E.2d 486, 488. See also Limitation (Statute of limitations).

Stallage /stöləj/. In old English law, the liberty of right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same.

Stallarius /stólər(ii)əs/. In Saxon law, the prefrectus stabuli, now master of the horse. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market.

Stamp. Stamped or printed paper affixed to official or legal documents, stock certificates, etc. as evidence that tax has been paid as required by law. A small label or strip of paper, printed and sold by the government, and required to be attached to mail-matter, and to certain other documents and articles (e.g. liquor, cigarettes) subject to duty or excise. See Documentary stamp; Revenue stamps; Stamp tax.

A mark, design, seal, etc., which indicates ownership, approval, etc. An identifying or characterizing mark or impression.

Stamp acts. In English law, acts regulating the stamps upon deeds, contracts, agreements, papers in law proceedings, bills and notes, letters, receipts, and other papers. English Act of 1765 requiring that revenue stamps be affixed to all official documents in American colonies.

Stamp duties. In old English law, duties imposed upon and raised from stamps upon parchment and paper, and forming a branch of the perpetual revenue of the kingdom. 1 Bl.Comm. 323. See also Documentary stamp; Revenue stamps; Stamp.

Stamp tax. The cost of stamps which are required to be affixed to legal documents such as deeds, certificates, and the like. See Documentary stamp; Revenue stamps; Stamp.

Stand. To cease from movement or progress; to pause, remain stationary or inactive. Jaggars v. Southeastern Greyhound Lines, D.C.Tenn., 34 F.Supp. 667, 668.

To abide; to submit to; as "to stand a trial." To appear in court.

To remain as a thing is; to remain in force. Pleadings objected to and held good are allowed to stand.

Standard. Stability, general recognition, and conformity to established practice. Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Standard Surety & Casualty Co., D.C.N.Y., 55 F.2d 119, 120. A type, model, or combination of elements accepted as correct or perfect. A measure or rule applicable in legal cases such as the "standard of care" in tort actions. See Double standard; Reasonable man doctrine or standard; Standard of care.

An ensign or flag used in war.

Standard deduction. In taxation, a minimum amount allowed to individual taxpayers as a deduction from adjusted gross income in arriving at taxable income. An individual may choose to itemize deductions; however, this should be done only if itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction. An additional standard deduction is allowed to taxpayers who are either blind or age 65 or older. A limited standard deduction is allowed to a taxpayer who is claimed as a dependent on another's tax return. I.R.C. §§ 62, 63.

Standard mortgage clause. In fire policy, clause providing that in case of loss policy shall be payable to mortgagee, and that his interest as payee shall not be invalidated by act of mortgagee. Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Wurtman, 265 Ky. 835, 98 S.W.2d 29, 31.

Standard of care. In law of negligence, that degree of care which a reasonably prudent person should exercise in same or similar circumstances. If a person's conduct falls below such standard, he may be liable in damages... for injuries or damages resulting from his conduct. See Negligence; Reasonable man doctrine or standard.

In medical, legal, etc., malpractice cases a standard of care is applied to measure the competence of the professional. The traditional standard for doctors is that he exercise the "average degree of skill, care, and diligence exercised by members of the same profession, practicing in the same or a similar locality in light of the present state of medical and surgical science." Gillette v. Tucker, 67 Ohio St. 106, 65 N.E. 865. With increased specialization, however, certain courts have disregarded geographical considerations holding that in the practice of a board-certified medical or surgical specialty, the standard should be that of a reasonable specialist practicing medicine or surgery in the same special field. Bruni v. Tatsumi, 46 Ohio St.2d 127, 129, 346 N.E.2d 673, 676, 75 O.O.2d 184. See also Malpractice.

Standard of need. In public assistance law, total needs of an individual or family stipulated by the state, which, when unsatisfied by relevant resources makes the individual or family in need for public assistance purposes.

Standard of proof. The burden of proof required in a particular type of case, as in a criminal case where the prosecution has the standard (i.e. burden) of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and in most civil cases where proof by a fair preponderance of the evidence is required. See Burden of proof.

Standard of weight, or measure. A weight or measure fixed and prescribed by law, to which all other weights and measures are required to correspond.

Standard opinion. See Unqualified opinion.

Standing. One's place in the community in the estimation of others; his relative position in social, commercial, or moral relations; his repute, grade, or rank. See Reputation; Standing to sue doctrine; Status.

Standing aside jurors. A practice by which, on the drawing of a jury for a criminal trial, the prosecuting officer puts aside a juror, provisionally, until the panel is exhausted, without disclosing his reasons, instead of being required to challenge him and show cause. The English statute 33 Edw. I deprived the crown of the power to challenge jurors without showing cause, and the practice of standing aside jurors was adopted, in England, as a method of evading its provisions. A similar practice was in use in Pennsylvania.

Standing by. Used in law as implying knowledge, under such circumstances as rendered it the duty of the possessor to communicate it; and it is such knowledge, and not the mere fact of "standing by," that lays the foundation of responsibility. The phrase does not import an actual presence, "but implies knowledge under such circumstances as to render it the duty of the possessor to communicate it." See also Estoppel.

Standing master. An officer of the court appointed on a regular basis to hear and determine matters within his jurisdiction for which a master may be appointed, as a master in chancery. See also Master.

Standing mute. Such exists in criminal case when defendant refuses to plead to the charge against him. If a defendant refuses to plead, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a).

Standing orders. Rules adopted by particular courts for governing practice before them. In some states, the presiding judge has authority to adopt standing orders for his court alone. They may include rules as to the time at which court commences each day, a procedure for requesting continuances of cases and a method by which cases are placed on the trial list of the particular court. They may be system wide or affect only a particular court in the system.

Standing seised to uses. A covenant to stand seised to uses is one by which the owner of an estate covenants to hold the same to the use of another person, usually a relative, and usually in consideration of blood or marriage. It is a species of conveyance depending for its effect on the statute of uses.

Standing to be sued. Capacity of a person or sovereign to be a party defendant in an action. A state as sovereign has no capacity to be sued except in cases in which it has consented to suit. See Sovereign immunity.

Standing to sue doctrine. "Standing to sue" means that party has sufficient stake in an otherwise justiciable controversy to obtain judicial resolution of that controversy. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 1364, 31 L.Ed.2d 636. Standing is a concept utilized to determine if a party is sufficiently affected so as to insure that a justiciable controversy is presented to the court; it is the right to take the initial step that frames legal issues for ultimate adjudication by court or jury. State ex rel. Cartwright v. Oklahoma Tax Com'n, Okl., 655 P.2d 1230, 1232. The requirement of "standing" is satisfied if it can be said that the plaintiff has a legally protectible and tangible interest at stake in the litigation. Guidry v. Roberts, La.App., 331 So.2d 44, 50. Standing is a jurisdictional issue which concerns power of federal courts to hear and decide cases and does not concern ultimate merits of substantive claims involved in the action. Weiner v. Bank of King of Prussia, D.C.Pa., 358 F.Supp. 684, 695. The doctrine emanates from the case or controversy requirement of the Constitution and from general principles of judicial administration, and seeks to insure that the plaintiff has alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure concrete adverseness. Campaign Clean Water, Inc. v. Ruckelshaus, D.C.Va., 361 F.Supp. 689, 692.

Standing is a requirement that the plaintiffs have been injured or been threatened with injury by governmental action complained of, and focuses on the question of whether the litigant is the proper party to fight the lawsuit, not whether the issue itself is justiciable. Carolina Environmental Study Group, Inc. v. U. S. Atomic Energy Comm., D.C.N.C., 431 F.Supp. 203, 218. Essence of standing is that no person is entitled to assail the constitutionality of an ordinance or statute except as he himself is adversely affected by it. Sandoval v. Ryan,
STANDING TO SUE DOCTRINE

Colo.App., 535 P.2d 244, 247. See also Case (Cases and controversies); Justiciable controversy; Ripeness doctrine.

Administrative Procedure Act. Such Act authorizes actions against federal officers by "any person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute." 5 U.S.C.A. § 702.

Stare decisis. A major commodity grown, traded and demanded; e.g. grain, salt, flour. Such commodity is usually very important to the local economy where it is grown or produced. Raw material.

In English law, a mart or market. A place where the buying and selling of wool, lead, leather, and other articles were put under certain terms.

In International law, the right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandise and wares to sale but in a certain place. This practice is not in use in the United States.

Law of the staple. In England, law administered in the court of the mayor of the staple; the law-merchant.

Staple inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery.

Statute staple. The English statute of the staple, 27 Ed. III, stat. 2, confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called estaple or staple, where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called statute staple, to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce; the mayor of the place was entitled to take recognition of a debt in proper form, which had the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he should be satisfied. A security for a debt acknowledged to be due, so called from its being entered into before the mayor of the staple, that is to say, the grand mart for the principal commodities or manufactures of the kingdom, formerly held by act of parliament in certain trading towns. In other respects it resembled the statute-merchant (q.v.), but like that has now fallen into disuse.

Starboard. In maritime law, the right-hand side of a vessel when the observer faces forward. "Starboard tack," refers to the course of vessel when she has the wind on her starboard bow.

Star-chamber. A court which originally had jurisdiction in cases where the ordinary course of justice was so much obstructed by one party, through writs, combination of maintenance, or overawing influence that no inferior court would find its process obeyed. The court consisted of the privy council, the common-law judges, and (it seems) all peers of parliament. In the reign of Henry VIII and his successors, the jurisdiction of the court was illegally extended to such a degree (especially in punishing disobedience to the king's arbitrary proclamations) that it became odious to the nation, and was abolished.

Stare decisis /stərə diˈsɪs/. Lat. To abide by, or adhere to, decided cases.
Stash. To secrete away; to hide or conceal money or property, commonly used in reference to ill-gotten gain or property. See Conceal.

State, n. A people permanently occupying a fixed territory bound together by common-law habits and custom into one body politic exercising, through the medium of an organized government, independent sovereignty and control over all persons and things within its boundaries, capable of making war and peace and of entering into international relations with other communities of the globe. United States v. Kusche, D.C.Cal., 56 F.Supp. 201, 207, 208. The organization of social life which exercises sovereign power in behalf of the people. Delany v. Moraitis, C.C.A.Md., 136 F.2d 129, 130. In its largest sense, a "state" is a body politic or a society of men. Beagle v. Motor Vehicle Acc. Indemnification Corp., 44 Misc.2d 636, 254 N.Y.S.2d 783, 785. A body of people occupying a definite territory and politically organized under one government. State ex rel. Maisano v. Mitchell, 155 Conn. 256, 231 A.2d 539, 542. A territorial unit with a distinct general body of law. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 3. Term may refer either to body politic of a nation (e.g. United States) or to an individual governmental unit of such nation (e.g. California).

The section of territory occupied by one of the United States. One of the component commonwealths or states of the United States of America. The term is sometimes applied also to governmental agencies authorized by state, such as municipal corporations. Any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession subject to the legislative authority of the United States. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(40).

The people of a state, in their collective capacity, considered as the party wronged by a criminal deed; the public; as in the title of a cause, "The State vs. A. B."

Term "state" as used in rules providing when a state may appeal in a criminal case is all inclusive and intended to include not only the state but its political subdivisions, counties and cities. Spokane County v. Gifford, 9 Wash.App. 541, 513 P.2d 301, 302. Federal Government is a "state" bound by all provisions of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers. Enright v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 437 F.Supp. 580, 581.

The circumstances or condition of a being or thing at a given time.

Foreign state. A foreign country or nation. The several United States are considered "foreign" to each other except as regards their relations as common members of the Union.

State officers. Those whose duties concern the state at large or the general public, or who are authorized to exercise their official functions throughout the entire state, without limitation to any political subdivision of the state. In another sense, officers belonging to or exercising authority under one of the states of the Union, as distinguished from the officers of the United States.

State offices. See Office.

State paper. A document prepared by, or relating to, the political department of the government of a state or nation, and concerning or affecting the administration of its government or its political or international relations. Also, a newspaper, designated by public authority, as the organ for the publication of public statutes, resolutions, notices, and advertisements.

State revenue. Current income of state from whatever source derived that is subject to appropriation for public uses.

State's evidence. See that title.

State tax. A tax the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the expenses of the state, as distinguished from taxation for federal, local or municipal purposes; e.g. state income or sales tax.

State, v. To express the particulars of a thing in writing or in words; to set down or set forth in detail; to aver, allege, or declare. To set down in gross; to mention in general terms, or by way of reference; to refer.

State action. In general, term used in connection with claims under due process clause and Civil Rights Act for which a private citizen is seeking damages or redress because of improper governmental intrusion into his life. In determining whether an action complained of constitutes "state action" within purview of Fourteenth Amendment, court must examine whether sufficiently close nexus exists between state and challenged action so that the action may fairly be treated as that of the state itself. Denver Welfare Rights Organization v. Public Utilities Comm., Colo., 547 P.2d 239, 243. There is no practical distinction between what constitutes "state action" for purposes of Fourteenth Amendment and what is required to fulfill "under color of state law" provision of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Ouzts v. Maryland Nat. Ins. Co., C.A.Nev., 505 F.2d 547, 549. See Color of law.

State auditor. The elected or appointed official in a state who is responsible for auditing the accounts of state agencies.

State banks. Those banks chartered by a state in contrast to federally chartered banks. Banks under the supervision and jurisdiction of state agencies. See also Bank.

State courts. Those courts which constitute the state judicial system in contrast to federal courts. City and county courts may or may not be part of the state system of courts, depending upon the jurisdiction.

Stated. Determined, fixed, or settled.

Stated meeting. A meeting of a board of directors, board of officers, etc., held at the time appointed therefor by law, ordinance, by-law, or other regulation; as distinguished from "special" meetings, which are held on call.
as the occasion may arise, rather than at a regularly appointed time, and from adjourned meetings.

Stated term. A regular or ordinary term or session of a court for the dispatch of its general business, held at the time fixed by law or rule; as distinguished from a special term, held out of the due order or for the transaction of particular business.

Stated times. Occurring at regular intervals or given regularly; fixed, regular in operation or occurrence, not occasional or fluctuating.

Stated account. Term signifies an agreed balance between the parties to a settlement; that is, that they have agreed after an investigation of their accounts that a certain balance is due from one to the other. Holt v. Western Farm Services, Inc., 19 Ariz.App. 335, 507 P.2d 674, 677.

Stated capital. Amount of capital contributed by stockholders. Sometimes used to mean legal capital.

The capital or equity of a corporation as it appears in the balance sheet. The sum of the par value of all par value shares issued, the entire amount received for no-par shares, and any amounts transferred by a stock dividend or other corporate action from surplus to stated capital. In some jurisdictions, only a portion of the amount received for no-par shares need be included in stated capital and the remainder may be credited to paid-in surplus and be distributed as a dividend.

State Department. That department in the executive branch of the federal government, headed by the Secretary of State, which is principally responsible for foreign affairs and foreign trade. The Department determines and analyzes the facts relating to our overseas interests, makes recommendations on policy and future action, and takes the necessary steps to carry out established policy. In so doing, the Department engages in continuous consultations with other states; negotiates treaties and agreements with foreign nations; speaks for the United States in the United Nations and in numerous major international organizations in which the United States participates; and represents the United States at numerous international conferences annually.

Stated value. A term used in accounting in reference to the value assigned to a corporation's stock, similar to par value. There is no relation between the stated value and the market value of stock. Stated value is the legal capital of the company. See also Par value.

State law. Refers to laws of a state or ordinances of city or town, all as distinguished from Federal law which is the supreme law of the land under Art. VI of the U.S. Constitution. However, in matters which are not necessarily governed by Federal law, the Federal courts will look to state law and be governed by it. See Erie v. Tompkins. Compare Federal Acts.

Statement. In a general sense, an allegation; a declaration of matters of fact. The term has come to be used of a variety of formal narratives of facts, required by law in various jurisdictions as the foundation of judicial or official proceedings and in a limited sense is a formal, exact, detailed presentation.

An oral or written assertion, or nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by him as an assertion. Fed.R.Evid. 801(a). Oral or written verbal expression, or nonverbal conduct of a person intended by him as a substitute for oral or written verbal expression. Calif. Evid.Code § 225.

A hearsay declarant's nonverbal conduct may qualify as a "statement" for purpose of exclusion under the hearsay rule if the conduct was intended by the declarant as a substitute for oral or written verbal expression. Matter of Cheryl H., 2 Dist., 153 C.A.3d 1098, 200 Cal.Rptr. 789, 807.

See also Closing statement; False statement; Financial statement; Opening statement of counsel; Prior inconsistent statements; Registration statement; Voluntary statement.

Bank statement. See Statement of account.

Financial statement. See Balance (Balance sheet); Financial statement; Income statement; Profit and loss statement; Statement of affairs.

Statement of account. A report issued monthly or periodically by a bank or creditor to a customer setting forth the amounts billed, credits given and balance due. A bank statement includes the checks drawn and cleared, the deposits made, the charges debited, and account balance. See also Financial statement.

Statement of affairs. Document which must be filed in bankruptcy proceedings, setting forth answers to questions about the past and present financial situation of the debtor. A balance sheet showing immediate liquidation amounts, rather than historical costs, usually prepared when insolvency or bankruptcy is imminent. See also Financial statement; Income statement; Statement of condition.

Statement of claim. See Claim; Complaint.

Statement of condition. A balance sheet which shows the assets, liabilities, reserves and capital of a person, business, or a financial institution, as of a given date. See also Balance (Balance sheet); Financial statement; Statement of affairs.

Statement of confession. Oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney", "cognovit note", or "confession of judgment," is written authority of debtor and his direction to enter judgment against debtor as stated therein. See Cognovit judgment; Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Statement of defense. See Answer; Reply.

Statement of income. See Financial statement; Income statement; Profit and loss statement.

Statement of particulars. See Bill (Bill of particulars).

State of art. See State of the art.

State of facts. Formerly, when a master in chancery was directed by the court of chancery to make an inquiry or investigation into any matter arising out of a suit, and which could not conveniently be brought before the court itself, each party in the suit carried in before the master a statement showing how the party bringing it in represented the matter in question to be; and this statement was technically termed a "state of facts," and formed the ground upon which the evidence was received, the evidence being, in fact, brought by one party or the other, to prove his own or disprove his opponent's state of facts. And so now, a state of facts means the statement made by any one of his version of the facts.

State officer. One who holds elective or appointive position in state government, e.g. state attorney general.

State of mind. A person's reasons and motives for acting as he did. Term used in connection with evidence. See Mens rea; Mental state; State of mind exception.

State of mind exception. Under the "state of mind exception" to the hearsay rule, an out of court declaration of a present existing motive or reason for acting is admissible even though the declarant is available to testify. Oberman v. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., C.A.I11., 507 F.2d 349, 351. See Fed.Evid.R. 803(3).

State of the case. In general, the posture of litigation at a given point in time. It may be ready for trial, in the process of trial, or pending appeal.

State paper office. An office established in London in 1578 for the custody of state papers. The head of it was the "Clerk of the Papers."

State police. A department or agency of a state government empowered with authority of police throughout a state and commonly trained and governed in a quasi-military fashion.

State police power. Every state has power to enact laws for the protection of its citizens' health, welfare, morals and safety and such power is derived from the 10th Amendment, U.S.Const. This power is upheld if exercised in a manner consistent with its ends and if the means used are reasonably calculated to protect one of these legitimate ends. See also Police power.

State's attorney. An officer who represents the State in securing indictments and in prosecuting criminal cases. Also called District or County Attorney or Prosecuting Attorney. Commonly he is elected in a county election and his authority is county wide.

State seal. The official die or signet having a raised emblem and used by state officials on documents of importance. Every state has its own such seal.

State secret. A governmental secret relating to national defense or international relations of United States and, once established, government has a privilege to refuse to disclose the secret in civil litigation and to prevent any litigant from disclosing the secret. Sigler v. LeVan, D.C.Md., 485 F.Supp. 185, 193.

State secrets privilege. This is a long-standing evidentiary privilege that permits government to resist discovery of evidence if disclosure reasonably could be seen as threat to military or diplomatic interest of nation; when properly invoked, privilege is absolute, and no showing of need can overcome it. Halkin v. Helms, C.A.D.C., 690 F.2d 977, 990.

State's evidence. A popular term for testimony given by an accomplice or joint participant in the commission of a crime tending to criminate or convict the others, and given under an actual or implied promise of immunity or lesser sentence for himself.

State sovereignty. The right of a state to self-government. The role of supreme authority or rule exercised by every state within the Union. See also Sovereign states.

State's rights. Rights not conferred on the federal government or forbidden to the States according to the 10th Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

Statim /stétyam/. Lat. Forthwith; immediately. In old English law, this term meant either "at once," or "within a legal time," i.e., such time as permitted the legal and regular performance of the act in question.

Stating an account. Exhibiting, or listing in their order, the items which make up an account.

Stating part of a bill. That part of a bill in chancery in which the plaintiff states the facts of his case; it is distinguished from the charging part of the bill and from the prayer.

Station. Social position or status. See Standing; Status. A place where military duty is performed or stores are kept or something connected with war is done.

Station house. Police station or precinct.

Statist /stéytast/. A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.
Stat pro ratione voluntas /stä't pro rō'shi'yō'nī valɒntəs/. The will stands in place of a reason.

Stat pro ratione voluntas populi /stä't pro rō'shi'yō'nī valɒntəs pó'pōli/. The will of the people stands in place of a reason.

Statu liber /stä'tyuw lē'ybar/. Lat. In Roman law, one who is made free by will under a condition; one who has his liberty fixed and appointed at a certain time or on a certain condition.

Statu liberis /stä'tyuw lē'baris/. Lat. In Louisiana, slaves for a time, who had acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which was not fulfilled, or in a certain event which had not happened, but who in the meantime remained in a state of slavery.
Civil Code La.1838.

Status. Standing; state or condition; social position.
The legal relation of individual to rest of the community.
The rights, duties, capacities and incapacities which determine a person to a given class. A legal personal relationship, not temporary in its nature nor terminable at the mere will of the parties, with which third persons and the state are concerned. Holzer v. Deutsche Rei-chesbahn Gesellschaft, 159 Misc. 830, 290 N.Y.S. 181, 191.
While term implies relation it is not a mere relation.

Status crime. A class of crime which consists not in proscribed action or inaction, but in the accused's havning a certain personal condition or being a person of a specified character. An example of a status crime is vagrancy. Status crimes are constitutionally suspect.
For example, being a drug addict is no longer a punishable offense. See Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 82
S.Ct. 1417, 8 L.Ed.2d 758.

Status de manerio /stä'tyuw dī man'riyow/. In old English law, the assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

Status of irremovability. In old English law, the right acquired by a pauper, after one year's residence in any parish, not to be removed therefrom.

Status quo /stä'tyuw kwō/. The existing state of things at any given date. Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war. "Status quo" to be preserved by a preliminary injunction is the last actual, peaceable, uncontested status which preceded the pending contro-Mortg. & Finance Corp., 2 Ill.Dec. 864, 357 N.E.2d 1307, 1314.

Statutable, or statutory /stä'tyatabl/stä'tyato'riy/. That which is introduced or governed by statutory law, as opposed to the common law or equity. Thus, a court is said to have statutory jurisdiction when jurisdiction is given to it in certain matters by act of the legislature.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur /stä'tyuwta prōw pōblōkow kōmədō lē'ty intərprtəntər/. Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed.

Statuta suo clauduntur territorio nec ultra territoriun disponunt /stä'tyuwta s'yūdwow klō'dəntər tēθrətə-yow nēk əl'tra tēθrətəriyam dəspəwnənt/. Statutes are confined to their own territory, and have no extra-territorial effect.

Statute, n. A formal written enactment of a legislative body, whether federal, state, city, or county. An act of the legislature declaring, commanding, or prohibiting something; a particular law enacted and established by the will of the legislative department of government; the written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state. Such may be public or private, declaratory, mandatory, directory, or enabling, in nature. For mandatory and directory statutes, see Directory; Mandatory statutes.

Depending upon its context in usage, a statute may mean a single act of a legislature or a body of acts which are collected and arranged according to a scheme or for a session of a legislature or parliament.

This word is used to designate the legislatively created laws in contradistinction to court decided or unwritten laws. See Common law.

See also Codification; Mandatory statutes; Revised statutes; Slip law; Slip law print; Special law.

Affirmative statute. See that title.

Criminal statute. An act of the Legislature as an organized body relating to crime or its punishment. See Crime; Criminal law; Penal code; Penal laws.

Declaratory statute. See that title.

Enabling statute. See that title.

Expository statute. See that title.

General statute. A statute relating to the whole community, or concerning all persons generally, as distinguished from a private or special statute.

Local statute. See Local law.

Negative statute. A statute expressed in negative terms; statute which prohibits a thing from being done, or declares what shall not be done.

Penal statute. See Crime; Criminal law; Penal code;
Penal laws; Punitive statute.

Perpetual statute. One which is to remain in force without limitation as to time; one which contains no provision for its repeal, abrogation, or expiration at any future time.

Personal statutory. In foreign and modern civil law, those statutes which have principally for their object the person, and treat of property only incidentally. A personal statute, in this sense of the term, is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity, which he does not change with every change of abode, but which, upon principles of justice and policy, he is assumed to carry with him wherever he goes.
The term is also applied to statutes which, instead of being general, are confined in their operation to one person or group of persons. See Private law; Special law.
Private statute. A statute which operates only upon particular persons, and private concerns. An act which relates to certain individuals, or to particular classes of men. See Private law; Special law.

Public statute. A statute enacting a universal rule which regards the whole community, as distinguished from one which concerns only particular individuals and affects only their private rights. See Public law. See also General statute, above.

Punitive statute. See that title.

Real statutes. In the civil law, statutes which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons, except in relation to property.

Reference statutes. See that title.

Remedial statute. See Remedial laws or statutes.

Revised statutes. See that title.

Special statute. One which operates only upon particular persons and private concerns. A private statute. Distinguished from a general or public statute. See Special law.

Statute fair. In old English law, a fair at which laborers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called also "Mop."

Statute merchant. In old English law, a security for a debt acknowledged to be due, entered into before the chief magistrate of some trading town, pursuant to the statute 13 Edw. I, De Mercatoribus, by which not only the body of the debtor might be imprisoned, and his goods seized in satisfaction of the debt, but also his lands might be delivered to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them the debt be satisfied. Now fallen into disuse.

Statute of accumulations. In old English law, the statute 39 & 40 Geo. III, c. 98, forbidding the accumulation, beyond a certain period, of property settled by deed or will.

Statute of allegiance de facto. An act of 11 Hen. VII, c. 1, requiring subjects to give their allegiance to the actual king for the time being, and protecting them in so doing.

Statute of distributions. See Distribution.

Statute of Elizabeth. In old English law, the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, against conveyances made in fraud of creditors.

Statute of frauds. See Frauds, Statute of.

Statute of Gloucester. In old English law, the statute 6 Edw. I, c. 1, A.D. 1278. It takes its name from the place of its enactment, and was the first statute giving costs in actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 399.

Statute of laborers. See Laborer.

Statute of limitations. See Limitation (Statute of limitation).

Statute of uses. See Use.

Statute of wills. In old English law, the statute 32 Hen. VIII, c. 1, which enacted that all persons being seised in fee-simple (except femmes covert, infants, idiots, and persons of non-sane memory) might, by will and testament in writing, devise to any other person, except to bodies corporate, two-thirds of their lands, tenements, and hereditaments, held in chivalry, and the whole of those held in socage. 2 Bl.Comm. 375.

Statute roll. A roll upon which an English statute, after receiving the royal assent, was formerly entered.

Statutes at large. An official compilation of the acts and resolutions of each session of Congress published by the Office of the Federal Register in the National Archives and Records Service. It consists of two parts, the first comprising public acts and joint resolutions, the second, private acts and joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, treaties, proposed and ratified amendments to Constitution, and Presidential proclamations. The arrangement is currently by Public Law number, and by chapter number in pre-1951 volumes. This is the official print of the law for citation purposes where titles of the United States Code have not been enacted into positive law.

Statutes of amendments and jeofailes. Formerly, statutes whereby a pleader who perceived any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledged the error (jeofaile), was permitted to amend.

Statute staple. See Staple.

Temporary statute. One which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment. It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature has only a single and temporary operation—e.g. an appropriation bill—is also called a temporary statute.

Validating statute. See that title.

Statutes at large. See Statute.

Statuti /stətjuːtɪ/. Lat. In Roman law, licensed or registered advocates; members of the college of advocates. The number of these was limited, and they enjoyed special privileges from the time of Constantine to that of Justinian.

Statutory. Relating to a statute; created or defined by a statute; required by a statute; conforming to a statute.

Statutory bond. One that either literally or substantially meets requirements of statute. Southern Surety Statutory construction. That branch of the law dealing with the interpretation of laws enacted by a legislature. A judicial function required when a statute is invoked and different interpretations are in contention. Where legislature attempts to do several things one of which is invalid, it may be discarded if remainder of the act is workable and in no way depends upon invalid portion, but if that portion is an integral part of the act, and its excision changes the manifest intent of the act by broadening its scope to include subject matter or territory which was not included therein as enacted, such excision is "judicial legislation" and not "statutory construction". Ettinger v. Studevent, 219 Ind. 406, 38 N.E.2d 1000, 1007. See Construction; Strict construction.

Statutory crime. See Crime; Penal code; Penal laws.

Statutory dedication. See Dedication code; Penal laws.

Statutory exception. A provision in a statute exempting certain conduct or persons from the thrust of the law enacted.

Statutory exposition. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former act.

Statutory extortion. The unlawful extraction of money or other value by means of a threat not sufficient for robbery, or a communication for the purpose of such extraction. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 871 et seq. See also Extortion.

Statutory foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Statutory instruments. English administrative regulations and orders. The term applies especially to the administrative rules published since 1939, supplementing the English administrative code, Statutory Rules and Orders.

Statutory law. That body of law created by acts of the legislature in contrast to constitutional law and law generated by decisions of courts and administrative bodies. See Statute.

Statutory lien. A lien arising solely by force of statute upon specified circumstances or conditions, but does not include any lien provided by or dependent upon an agreement to give security, whether or not such lien is also provided by or is also dependent upon statute and whether or not the agreement or lien is made fully effective by statute. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Statutory merger. See Merger (Corporations).

Statutory obligation. An obligation—whether to pay money, perform certain acts, or discharge certain duties—which is created by or arises out of a statute, as distinguished from one founded upon acts between parties or jural relationships.

Statutory offense. See Crime; Penal code; Penal laws.

Statutory partnership association. See Partnership.

Statutory penalty. One imposed against the offender for some statutory violation by him. People v. Corcillo, 195 Misc. 198, 88 N.Y.S.2d 534, 536. One which an individual is allowed to recover against a wrongdoer as satisfaction for wrong or injury suffered, without reference to actual damage sustained. Nording v. Johnston, 206 Or. 515, 283 P.2d 594, 598. In a civil sense, a "statutory penalty" is a pecuniary punishment, imposed for doing some act which is prohibited or for omitting to do some act which is required to be done; e.g. Copyright Act provides statutory damages for copyright infringement. 17 U.S.C.A. § 504(c); 18 U.S.C.A. § 2319. See also Penalty.

Statutory rape. The unlawful sexual intercourse with a female under the age of consent which may be 16, 17 or 18 years of age, depending upon the state statute. The government is not required to prove that intercourse was without the consent of the female because she is conclusively presumed to be incapable of consent by reason of her tender age. See also Rape.

Statutory release. In England, a conveyance which superseded the old compound assurance by lease and release. It was created by St. 4 & 5 Vict., c. 21, which abolished the lease for a year.

Statutory staple. An ancient writ that lay to take the body of a person and seize the lands and goods of one who had forfeited a bond called statute staple. See Staple.

Statutory successor. A statutory successor is the person to whom all assets of a corporation pass upon its dissolution under the provisions of a statute of the state of incorporation which is in force at the time of the dissolution. See Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 388.

Statutum /stat(y)uwtam/. Lat. Established; determined.

In the civil law, a term applied to judicial action.

In old English law, a statute; an act of parliament.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi /stat(y)uwtam sfarmatayvam non deragat kamyuwnay liyjay/. An affirmative statute does not derogate from the common law.

Statutum ex gratia regis dicitur, quando rex dignatur cedere de jure suo regio, pro commodo et quiete populi sui /stat(y)uwtam eks grêysh(y)ow rijs diasar, kwândow reks dignêytor sfjaryy diy jûriy s(y)ûwow riyij(y)ow, prów kómôddow ét kwaiytyty póp(y)olay s(y)uway/. A statute is said to be by the grace of the king, when the king deigns to yield some portion of his royal rights for the good and quiet of his people.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis /stat(y)uwtam jênérêyîstâr est intêlaljêydam kwôndow varbo stat(y)uwtay sînt spêsâyiyyêly(y)wo réysh(y)ow ôtam jênérélâs/. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, the statute is to be understood generally.

Statutum sessionum /stat(y)uwtam sêsh(y)iyyîwnam/. In old English law, the statute session; a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc.

Statutum speciale statute speciali non derogat /stat(y)úwtam speshiýeyilyi stat(y)úwtow speshiýey-lay nón déhragat/. One special statute does not take from another special statute.

Stay, v. To stop, arrest, or forbear. To "stay" an order or decree means to hold it in abeyance, or refrain from enforcing it.

Stay, n. A stopping; the act of arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court. Also that which holds, restrains, or supports.

A stay is a suspension of the case or some designated proceedings within it. It is a kind of injunction with which a court freezes its proceedings at a particular point. It can be used to stop the prosecution of the action altogether, or to hold up only some phase of it, such as an execution about to be levied on a judgment.

Automatic stay in bankruptcy. See Automatic stay.

Stay laws. Acts of the legislature prescribing a stay of execution in certain cases, or a stay of foreclosure of mortgages, or closing the courts for a limited period, or providing that suits shall not be instituted until a certain time after the cause of action arose, or otherwise suspending legal remedies; designed for the relief of debtors, in times of general distress or financial trouble.

Stay of execution. The stopping or arresting of execution on a judgment, that is, of the judgment-creditor’s right to issue execution, for a limited period. This is given by statute in many jurisdictions, as a privilege to the debtor, usually on his furnishing bail for the debt, costs, and interest. Or it may take place by agreement of the parties. See e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 62. Term may also refer to the stopping of the execution of capital punishment, commonly to permit further appeals by defendant. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 38(a).

Stay of proceedings. The temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause, by direction or order of the court, usually to await the action of one of the parties in regard to some omitted step or some act which the court has required him to perform as incidental to the suit; as where a nonresident plaintiff has been ruled to give security for costs. It is similar to an injunction with which a court freezes its proceedings at a particular point. It can be used to stop the prosecution of the action altogether, or to hold up only some phase of it, such as an execution about to be levied on a judgment. See also Automatic stay.

A "stay" does not reverse, annul, undo or suspend what already had been done or what is not specifically stayed nor pass on the merits of orders of the trial court, but merely suspends the time required for performance of the particular mandates stayed, to preserve a status quo pending appeal. Reed v. Rhodes, D.C. Ohio, 472 F.Supp. 603, 605.

See Fed.R.Civil P. 62, "Stay of Proceedings to Enforce Judgment". See also injunction; Restraining order.

Steady course. A ship is on a "steady course," not only when her heading does not change, but whenever her future positions are certainly ascertainable from her present position and movements. Commonwealth & Dominion Line v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 20 F.2d 729, 731.

Steal. This term is commonly used in indictments for larceny ("take, steal, and carry away"), and denotes the commission of theft, that is, the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, and without right and without leave or consent of owner, and with intent to keep or make use wrongfully. U. S. v. Hill, C.A.Kan., 835 F.2d 759, 763. Or, it may denote the criminal taking of personal property either by larceny, embezzlement, or false pretenses. But, in popular usage "stealing" may include the unlawful appropriation of things which are not technically the subject of larceny, e.g., immovables. See also Larceny; Robbery; Shoplifting; Theft.

Stealing children. See Kidnapping.

Steal /stél/. The quality or condition of being secret or furtive. The act of stealing when the victim is unaware of the theft is stealing by stealth. Any secret, sly or clandestine act to avoid detection and to gain entrance into or to remain within residence of another without permission. State v. Lane, 50 Ohio App.2d 41, 361 N.E.2d 535, 540, 4 O.O.3d 24.

Steerer. One who gains the confidence of the person intended to be fleeced and who may be said to steer or lead the victim to the place where the latter is to be robbed or swindled.

Stellionaire. Fr. In French law, a party who fraudulently mortgages property to which he has no title.

Stellionate /stélysnéy/. In civil law, a name given generally to all species of frauds committed in making contracts but particularly to the crime of alienating the same subject to different persons.

Stellionatus /stélysnéytyas/. Lat. In the civil law, a general name for any kind of fraud not falling under any specific class. But the term is chiefly applied to fraud practised in the sale or pledging of property; as, selling the same property to two different persons, selling another’s property as one’s own, placing a second mortgage on property without disclosing the existence of the first, etc.

Step. When used as prefix in conjunction with a degree of kinship, is repugnant to blood relationship, and is indicative of a relationship by affinity.

Step-child. The child of one of the spouses by a former marriage. A child who has a parent by his natural parent’s second marriage and has not been adopted by that parent.

Step-down in basis. A reduction in the income tax basis of property. See also Step-up in basis.

Step-father. The husband of one’s mother by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.
STEP-IN-THE-DARK RULE

Step-in-the-dark rule. Such rule of contributory negligence is that one who enters a totally unfamiliar area in the darkness is not justified, in the absence of any special stress, in proceeding without first ascertaining whether there are any obstacles to his safe progress. Yoder v. Greenwald, Fla.App., 246 So.2d 148, 150.

Step-mother. The wife of one’s father by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

Step-parent. The mother or father of a child born during a previous marriage of the other parent and hence, not the natural parent of such child.

Step-son. The son of one’s wife by a former husband, or of one’s husband by a former wife.

Step-transaction approach. Method used by the Internal Revenue Service to determine tax liability by disregarding one or more transactions of a taxpayer to arrive at the final result. The objective of the step-transaction approach is to review the substance and not just the form of a transaction in determining the tax liability of the individual or entity.

Step-up in basis. An increase in the income tax basis of property. The classic step-up in basis occurs when a decedent dies owning appreciated property. The property is valued on the date of death or the alternate valuation date. The estate tax is based on the property values on the date elected; therefore the heirs receive property with a step-up in basis.

Sterbreche, or strebrich. The breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way.

Stère /stêr/. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. It is a cubic meter.

Sterility /stêriliti/. Barrenness; unfruitfulness; incapacity to germinate or reproduce.

Sterilization. The act or process by which one is rendered incapable of procreation as, for example, the act of tying the female Fallopian tubes or a vasectomy. Also, the act or process by which an article or instrument is rendered free of germs.

Sterling. In English law, current or standard coin, especially silver coin; a standard of coinage.

Stet processus /stêt präsëssè/. An entry on the roll in the nature of a judgment of a direction that all further proceedings shall be stayed (i.e., that the process may stand), and it is one of the ways by which a suit may be terminated by an act of the party, as distinguished from a termination of it by judgment, which is the act of the court. It was used by the plaintiff when he wished to suspend the action without suffering a nonsuit.

Steward. A man appointed in the place or stead of another. A union official who represents other union employees in grievances with management and who oversees the carrying out of the union contract.

Steward of all England. In old English law, an officer who was invested with various powers; among others, to preside on the trial of peers.

Steward of a Manor. In old English law, an important officer who had the general management of all forensic matters connected with the manor of which he was steward. He stood in much the same relation to the lord of the manor as an under-sheriff did to the sheriff.

Stew. Certain brothels anciently permitted in England, suppressed by Henry VIII. Also, breeding places for tame pheasants.

Stickler. An arbitrator. An obstinate contender about anything.

Stick up. To rob at the point of a gun; armed robbery.

Stifling a prosecution. Agreeing, in consideration of receiving a pecuniary or other advantage, to abstain from prosecuting a person for an offense not giving rise to a civil remedy.

Still. Any device used for separating alcoholic spirits from fermented substances. The word is sometimes applied to the whole apparatus for evaporation and condensation used in the manufacture of ardent spirits, but in the description of the parts of the apparatus it is applied merely to the vessel or retort used for boiling and evaporation of the liquid.

Stillborn child. A child born dead or in such an early stage of pregnancy as to be incapable of living, though not actually dead at the time of birth.

Stilllicidium /stillicid(i)yom/. Lat. In the civil law, the drip of water from the eaves of a house. The servitude stillicidii consists in the right to have the water drip from one’s eaves upon the house or ground of another. The term “flumen” designated the rain-water collected from the roof, and carried off by the gutters, and there is a similar easement of having it discharged upon the adjoining estate.

Sting. An undercover police operation in which police pose as criminals to trap law violators. Compare Entrapment.

Stint. In English law, limit; a limited number. Used as descriptive of a species of common.

Stipend /stêypond/. A salary; settled pay; fixed or regular payment. Offering made to clergyman.

Stipendiary estates /stôpënd(i)yêhriy/. Estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind.

Stipendiary magistrates. In English law, full time, paid magistrates; appointed in London and some other cities and boroughs, and having in general the powers and jurisdiction of justices of the peace. Appointed from barristers and solicitors of 7 years standing. See Justices of the Peace Act, 1979, §§ 13–16.

Stipendium /stôpënd(i)yom/. Lat. In the civil law, the pay of a soldier; wages; stipend.
Stipulatio juris /stipyalésh(y)ow juros/. A stipulation is a material condition, requirement, or article in an agreement.

Stipital /stipsdal/. Relating to stipes, roots, or stocks. See Stirpital.

Stipulate. Arrange or settle definitely, as an agreement or covenant. See Stipulation.

Stipulated damage. Liquidated damage (q.v.).

Stipulatio /stipyalésh(y)ow/. Lat. In the Roman law, stipulatio was the verbal contract (verbis obligatio), and was the most solemn and formal of all the contracts in that system of jurisprudence. It was entered into by question and corresponding answer thereto, by the parties, both being present at the same time, and usually by such words as "spondeis? spondeo," "promittis? promitto," and the like.

Stipulatio aquiliana /stipyalésh(y)ow skwiliyéyna/. A particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the liabilities of every kind and quality of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract.

Stipulatio juris /stipyalésh(y)ow juros/. A stipulation or agreement beforehand of a question of law or its applicability, though a court is not bound by a stipulation of erroneous law. However, the parties to a contract may stipulate as to the applicability of the law of a particular state or jurisdiction.

Stipulation. A material condition, requirement, or article in an agreement.

The name given to any agreement made by the attorneys engaged on opposite sides of a cause (especially if in writing), regulating any matter incidental to the proceedings or trial, which falls within their jurisdiction. Voluntary agreement between opposing counsel concerning disposition of some relevant point so as to obviate need for proof or to narrow range of litigable issues. Arrington v. State, Fla., 233 So.2d 634, 636. An agreement, admission or confession made in a judicial proceeding by the parties thereto or their attorneys. Bourne v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 209 Kan. 511, 497 P.2d 110, 114. Such are evidentiary devices used to simplify and expedite trials by dispensing with the need to prove formally uncontested factual issues. Paschen v. Ratliff City Trucking Co., Okl.App., 637 P.2d 591, 593.

Stipulations made during the course of trial may involve jury of less than twelve (Fed.R.Civil P. 48), master's findings (Rule 53(e)(4)), dismissal of action (Rule 41(a)), or discovery, see below.

A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law "fide jussors") in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl.Comm. 108. See also Admission; Pre-trial conference; Proviso.

Discovery. Unless the court orders otherwise, the parties may by written stipulation (1) provide that depositions may be taken before any person, at any time or place, upon any notice, and in any manner and when so taken may be used like other depositions, and (2) modify the procedures provided by these rules for other methods of discovery, except that stipulations extending the time provided in Rules 33, 34, and 36 for responses to discovery may be made only with the approval of the court. Fed.R.Civil P. 29.

Stipula. In the civil law, the party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation; the other party, or he who answered, being called the "promissor." But, in a more general sense, the term was applied to both the parties.

Stirpes /stóripyz/. Lat. Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family. Taking property by right of representation is called "succession per stirpes," in opposition to taking in one's own right, or as a principal, which is termed "taking per capita." See also Per stirpes and Representation.

Stirpital /stipsdal/. Relating to stirpes, roots, or stocks. "Stirpital distribution" of property is distribution per stirpes; that is, by right of representation.

Stock. The goods and wares of a merchant or tradesman, kept for sale and traffic. In a larger sense, the capital of a merchant or other person, including his merchandise, money, and credits, or, in other words, the entire property employed in business. See Inventory.

Corporation Law

The term is used in various senses. It may mean the capital or principal fund of a corporation or joint-stock company, formed by the contributions of subscribers or the sale of shares; the aggregate of a certain number of shares severally owned by the members or stockholders of the corporation or the proportional share of an individual stockholder; also the incorporeal property which is represented by the holding of a certificate of stock; and in a wider and more remote sense, the right of a shareholder to participate in the general management of the company and to share proportionally in its net profits or earnings or in the distribution of assets on dissolution. The term "stock" has also been held to embrace not only capital stock of a corporation but all corporate wealth and resources, subject to all corporate liabilities and obligations.

"Stock" is distinguished from "bonds" and, ordinarily, from "debentures," in that it gives right of ownership in part of assets of corporation and right to interest in any surplus after payment of debt. "Stock" in a corporation is an equity, and it represents an ownership interest, and it is to be distinguished from obligations such as notes or bonds which are not equities and represent no ownership interest. U. S. v. Evans, C.A.Or., 375 F.2d 730, 731. See also Certificate of stock; Discount shares; Equity security; Par value; Registration of securities; Securities; Security; Share of corporate stock.
Classes and Types of Corporate Stock

Preferred stock is a separate portion or class of the stock of a corporation, which is accorded, by the charter or by-laws, a preference or priority in respect to dividends, over the remainder of the stock of the corporation, which in that case is called common stock. That is, holders of the preferred stock are entitled to receive dividends at a fixed annual rate, out of the net earnings or profits of the corporation, before any distribution of earnings is made to the common stock. If the earnings applicable to the payment of dividends are not more than sufficient for such fixed annual dividend, they will be entirely absorbed by the preferred stock. If they are more than sufficient for the purpose, the remainder may be given entirely to the common stock (which is the more usual custom) or such remainder may be distributed pro rata to both classes of the stock, in which case the preferred stock is said to "participate" with the common. The fixed dividend on preferred stock may be "cumulative" or "non-cumulative." In the former case, if the stipulated dividend on preferred stock is not earned or paid in any one year, it becomes a charge upon the surplus earnings of the next and succeeding years, and all such accumulated and unpaid dividends on the preferred stock must be paid off before the common stock is entitled to receive dividends. In the case of "non-cumulative" preferred stock, its preference for any given year is extinguished by the failure to earn or pay its dividend in that year. If a corporation has no class of preferred stock, all its stock is common stock. The word "common" in this connection signifies that all the holders of such stock are entitled to an equal pro rata division of profits or net earnings, if any there be, without any preference or priority among themselves.

Deferred stock is rarely issued by American corporations, though it is not uncommon in England. This kind of stock is distinguished by the fact that the payment of dividends upon it is expressly postponed until some other class of stock has received a dividend, or until some certain liability or obligation of the corporation is discharged. If there is a class of "preferred" stock, the common stock may in this sense be said to be "deferred," and the term is sometimes used as equivalent to "common" stock. But it is not impossible that a corporation should have three classes of stock: (1) Preferred, (2) common, and (3) deferred; the latter class being postponed, in respect to participation in profits, until both the preferred and the common stock had received dividends at a fixed rate.

Assented stock. Stock which an owner deposits with a third person in accordance with an agreement by which the owner voluntarily accepts a change in the securities of the corporation.

Assessable stock. Stock which requires the owner to pay more than its cost if the needs of the corporation require.

Authorized stock. That amount of stock which the corporate charter permits the corporation to issue. The shares described in the articles of incorporation which a corporation may issue. Modern corporate practice recommends authorization of more shares than it is currently planned to issue. See also Authorized stock issue.

Blue-chip stock. Stock of a listed company which has a high grade financial record. See Listed stock, below.

Bonus stock. Stock given to an underwriter as compensation for services. Stock given to purchasers as an inducement. See also Bonus stock.

Callable preferred stock. Preferred stock which may be called by the issuing corporation at a prestated price.

Capital stock. See Capital (Capital stock).

Common stock. Securities which represent an ownership interest in a corporation. If the company has also issued preferred stock, both common and preferred have ownership rights. The preferred normally is limited to a fixed dividend but has prior claim on dividends and, in the event of liquidation, assets. Claims of both common and preferred stockholders are junior to claims of bondholders or other creditors of the company. Common stockholders assume the greater risk, but generally exercise the greater control and may gain the greater reward in the form of dividends and capital appreciation. The terms common stock and capital stock are often used interchangeably when the company has no preferred stock. See also Common stock.

Control stock. That amount of capital stock which permits the owner to control the corporation. It is not necessarily a majority of the shares.

Convertible stock. Stock which may be changed or converted into common stock.

Cumulative preferred. A stock having a provision that if one or more dividends are omitted, the omitted dividends must be paid before dividends may be paid on the company's common stock.

Cumulative stock. A type of stock on which unpaid dividends accumulate until paid. They must be paid totally before the common stockholders receive their dividends. See Cumulative preferred, above.

Donated stock. Stock transferred to the corporation by the stockholders for resale.

Floating stock. That part of a corporation's stock which is on the open market for speculation. Stock not yet bought by public holders.

Growth stock. Stock purchased with a view towards appreciation in value rather than dividend income.

Guaranteed stock. Usually preferred stock on which dividends are guaranteed by another company, under much the same circumstances as a bond is guaranteed.

Guaranty stock. Stock in a savings and loan association in some states which yields all dividends to the holders after dividends to depositors or savers.

Issued stock. Stock which has been authorized and actually sold to subscribers. It may include treasury stock.

Letter stock. Stock received by a buyer who gives the seller a letter stating that he will hold such stock and not reoffer it to others. Such stock need not be registered under the Securities Act of 1933. See also Letter stock.

Listed stock. The stock of a company which is traded on a securities exchange, and for which a listing application and a registration statement, giving detailed information about the company and its operations, have been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, unless otherwise exempted, and with the exchange itself. The various stock exchanges have different standards for listing.

Nonassessable stock. Stock which cannot be assessed (i.e., holder cannot be assessed) in the event of failure or insolvency of the corporation. Most all stock is nonassessable.

Noncumulative preferred stock. Type of preferred stock which yields no dividend once the dividend is passed. Contrast Cumulative preferred, above.

Noncumulative stock. A preferred stock on which unpaid dividends do not accrue. Omitted dividends are, as a rule, gone forever.

Nonvoting stock. Stock to which no rights to vote attach. Such shares may be created in most states; in some states, however, nonvoting shares may be entitled to vote as a class on certain proposed changes adversely affecting that class as such.

No par stock. Stock without par value but which represents a proportionate share of the ownership of a corporation based on the number of shares. Such shares are issued for the consideration designated by the board of directors; such consideration is allocated to stated capital unless the directors or shareholders determine to allocate a portion to capital surplus. A corporation may have both par and no par value stock.

Outstanding stock. Stock issued and in the hands of stockholders and such does not include treasury stock.

Paid up stock. Stock for which full payment has been made to the corporation.

Participation preferred stock. A preferred stock which is entitled to its stated dividend and, also, to additional dividends on a specified basis upon payment of dividends on the common stock.

Participation stock. In general, stock which permits the holder to participate in the profits and surplus.

Par value stock. Stock which originally had a fixed value arrived at by dividing the total value of capital stock by the number of shares to be issued. The par value does not bear a necessary relation to the actual value of the stock because of the part which surplus plays in valuation. See also Par value.

Penny stock. Generally, highly speculative stock which can be purchased for under a dollar a share.

Preferred stock. A class of stock with a claim on the company's earnings before payment may be made on the common stock and usually entitled to priority over common stock if company liquidates. Usually entitled to dividends at a specified rate—when declared by the Board of Directors and before payment of a dividend on the common stock—depending upon the terms of the issue.

Premium stock. Stock which carries a premium for trading as in the case of short selling.

Redeemable stock. Generally preferred stock which can be called in and retired. It is redeemable at par. See also Redeemable stock.

Registered stock. Stock registered under federal Securities Act. See also Listed stock, above.

Restricted stock. Stock to which is attached restrictions as to transferability.

Stock options. See Stock option, below.

Stock redemption. See Stock redemption, below.

Stock rights. See Stock rights, below.

Stock split. See Stock split, below.

Subscribed stock. See that title.

Treasury stock. Stock issued by a company but later re-acquired. It may be held in the company's treasury indefinitely, reissued to the public, or retired. Treasury stock receives no dividends and has no vote while held by the company. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act and the statutes of several states have eliminated the concept of treasury shares.

Unissued stock. Stock authorized by the corporate charter but not yet distributed to stockholders and subscribers.

Unlisted stock. Stock not listed on one of the stock exchanges but traded over the counter or privately.

Voting stock. Stock which carries the right to vote for directors, etc. See also Voting stock.

Watered stock. Stock issued for inadequate consideration. See also Watered stock.

Law of Descent

The term is used, metaphorically, to denote the original progenitor of a family, or the ancestor from whom the persons in question are all descended; such descendants being called "branches." Matter of Samson's Estate, 139 Misc. 490, 249 N.Y.S. 79, 83.

Generally

Capital stock. See Capital (Capital stock).

Certificate of stock. See Certificate; Share certificate.

Exchange of stock. See Exchange.

Public stocks. The funded or bonded debt of a government or state.

Stock association. A joint-stock company (q.v.).

Stock attribution. See Attribution.
Stock bailout. A species of stock redemption in the form of a preferred stock dividend formerly tax free, but now governed by I.R.C. § 306.

Stockbroker. One who buys or sells stock as agent of another. Allen v. Todd, 12 Cal.App.2d 654, 90 Cal.Rptr. 807, 810. See also Broker.

Stock certificate. See Certificate of stock; Share certificate.

Stock control. Type of inventory management by which a business maintains perpetual records of its inventory.

Stock corporation. A corporation having a capital stock divided into shares, and which is authorized by law to distribute to the holders thereof dividends or shares of the surplus profits of the corporation.

Stock dividend. Distributing stock as a dividend. It is a proportional distribution of shares without payment of consideration to existing shareholders. If the dividend is common stock declared on common stock, the only result other than to reduce the value of each share of common and to maintain the proportionate interest of each stockholder is to transfer part of surplus to the stock account. To be distinguished from a cash dividend or a stock split (see below). See also Dividend.

Stock exchange. The place at which shares of stock are bought and sold. Any organization, association, or group of persons, whether incorporated or unincorporated, which constitutes, maintains, or provides a marketplace or facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities. See Stock market, below.

Stock insurance company. An insurance company whose shares are held by the public and which pays dividends in contrast to a mutual insurance company whose assets are owned by the policyholders who receive dividends when available.

Stock in trade. The inventory carried by a retail business for sale in the ordinary course of business. Also, the tools and equipment owned and used by a tradesman.

Stock jobber. A dealer in stock; one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation.

Stock law district. A district in which stock is by law prohibited from running at large.

Stock life insurance company. One in which capital stock investment is made by subscribers to stock, and business is thereafter conducted by board of directors elected by its stockholders, and, subject to statutes, distribution of earnings or profits, as between stockholders and policyholders, is determined by board of directors. Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Moncure, D.C.Va., 35 F.2d 360, 362.

Stock market. The organized trading of securities through the various stock exchanges and over-the-counter markets. The largest stock market in the United States is the New York Stock Exchange. See also Over-the-counter market.

Stock note. The term has no technical meaning, and may as well apply to a note given on the sale of stock which the bank had purchased or taken in the payment of doubtful debts as to a note given on account of an original subscription to stock.

Stock option. The right to buy a designated stock, if holder of option chooses, at any time within specified period, at determinable price, or to sell designated stock within an agreed period at determinable price. Richardson v. Richardson, 280 Ark. 498, 659 S.W.2d 510, 514. In addition to its use for investment purposes, such options are often granted to management and key employees as a form of incentive compensation. The term "stock option" is used when the right is issued other than pro rata to all existing shareholders. When so issued to all existing stockholders, the option is called a "stock right." For "restricted," "qualified," and "non-qualified" stock options, see Option. See also Call; Incentive stock option; Put; Put option; Warrant.

Stock option contract. A negotiable instrument which gives the holder the right to buy or sell a certain number of shares of the corporation's stock within a fixed period of time for a certain price. See also Option.

Stock power. A power of attorney permitting a person other than the owner of the stock to transfer legally the title of ownership to a third party.

Stock purchase plan. A plan by which employees of a corporation are allowed to purchase shares of corporate stock.

Stock redemption. A partial or complete liquidation of corporate stock by the corporation with varying tax consequences depending upon the type of redemption. It generally consists in the buy back by the corporation of its own stock. The redemption of the stock of a shareholder by the issuing corporation is generally treated as a sale or exchange of the stock unless the redemption is a dividend. I.R.C. §§ 301 and 302. A public corporation might redeem its stock for the purpose of "going private", or as a defense to a hostile takeover attempt. See also Stock bailout, above.

Stock repurchase plan. A program by which a corporation buys back its own shares in the open market. It is usually done when the corporation believes its shares are undervalued by the market.

Stock rights. The privilege to subscribe to new stock issues or to purchase stock. Usually, rights are contained in securities called warrants and the warrants can be sold to others. A right to purchase stock issued pro rata to existing shareholders. Sometimes issued on a "when, as, and if" basis, that is, the holder can buy the stock when it is issued, on such basis or of such kind as is issued, and if it is issued.

A document (i.e. negotiable certificate) which gives an existing stockholder the privilege of buying additional stock of a corporation. The right has a value of its own because generally the holder may buy such additional stock at a price less than the market quotation. Rights are traded in the market. A stock right differs from a warrant to the extent that a right gives a privilege of buying additional stock of the same kind whereas a warrant may permit a preferred stockholder to buy common stock.

See also Preemptive right; Warrant (Stock warrants).

Stock split. The issuance of a number of new shares in exchange for each old share held by a stockholder resulting in a proportional change in the number of shares owned by each stockholder. Share splits, or stock splits, may be (a) split-ups, where one share is split into a larger number of shares, or (b) reverse splits, or split-downs, where a number of shares are combined to form a smaller number of shares. Share splits involve no transfer from surplus to stated capital or any changes except adjustments in par value or stated value per share, when applicable, so that the same stated capital which represented the issued shares before the split properly represents the changed number of shares after the split. A split-up requires not only board of directors action, but often requires advance shareholder approval as well when the articles of incorporation must be amended to change the par value or stated value of shares and also, when necessary, to authorize additional shares. The usual accounting treatment for a share split is to do nothing except to reflect the different (usually increased) number of issued shares and any changes in par or stated value.

A common purpose of a stock split is to reduce the per share market price in order to make for wider trading and a resulting higher per share value (i.e. price).

See also Reverse stock split.

Stock subscription. An agreement (by a subscriber) with the corporation to purchase its stock. See Stock rights, above. See also Subscribed stock; Subscriber; Subscription.

Stock swap. In corporate reorganization, an exchange of stock in one corporation for the stock of another corporation.

Stock transfer agent. See Transfer agent.

Stock transfer tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of stock and based on the market value of the stock.

Stock warrant. A certificate evidencing the right to buy shares of stock and commonly attached to preferred stock and bonds. It generally has an expiration date before which the warrant must be exercised. See also Warrant.

Tainted stock. Stock owned by a person who is disqualified for some reason from serving as a plaintiff in a derivative action. The shares are "tainted" because for policy reasons a good faith transferee of such shares will also be disqualified from serving as a plaintiff.

Stockholder (Shareholder). A person who owns shares of stock in a corporation or joint-stock company. Referred to as "Shareholder" under Rev. Model Bus.Corp. Act and a number of state statutes, and defined in Model Act (§ 1.40) as "the person in whose name shares are registered in the records of a corporation or the beneficial owner of shares to the extent of the rights granted by a nominee certificate on file with a corporation." See also Beneficial holders of securities; Majority stockholder; Minority stockholder.

Watered stock. See that title.

Stockholder's derivative action. An action by a stockholder for purpose of sustaining in his own name a right of action existing in corporation itself, where corporation would be an appropriate plaintiff. It is based upon two distinct wrongs: The act whereby corporation was caused to suffer damage, and act of corporation itself in refusing to redress such act. Procedure in such actions is governed by Fed.R.Civ. P. 23.1.

Stockholder's equity. The total of a firm's stock at par, contributed capital in excess of par, and retained earnings accounts summarized on the balance sheet. It is sometimes called the book value of the firm, owners' equity, or net worth.

Stockholder's liability. Phrase is frequently employed to denote stockholder's statutory, added or double liability for corporation's debts, notwithstanding full payment for stock, but is often employed where stockholder, agreeing to pay full par value of stock, obtained stock certificate before complete payment or where stock, only partly paid for, is intentionally issued by corporation as fully paid up and all or part of purported consideration therefor is entirely fictitious.

Stockholders' representative action. An action brought or maintained by a stockholder in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated. See also Stockholder's derivative action.

Stock insurance company. Also known as a "joint stock insurance company," it is an insurance company that has issued capital stock and which is controlled by stockholders who take the profits. It may be distinguished from a "mutual insurance company" which is owned by policy holders. National Chiropractic Insurance Company v. United States, D.C.Iowa, 365 F.Supp. 971, 972. See also Mutual insurance company.

Stocks. A machine consisting of two pieces of timber, arranged to be fastened together, and holding fast the legs and/or arms of a person placed in it. This was an ancient method of punishment. See also Stock.

Stolen. Acquired, or possessed, as a result of some wrongful or dishonest act or taking, whereby a person willfully obtains or retains possession of property which belongs to another, without or beyond any permission given, and with the intent to deprive the owner of the benefit of ownership (or possession) permanently.

The word "stolen" as used in the crime of interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles includes all wrongful and dishonest takings of motor vehicles with the intent to deprive the owner of the rights and benefits of ownership, regardless of whether theft constitutes common-law larceny; and felonious taking may be effected by diverse means known to both common and statutory law, such as larceny, embezzlement, false pretenses, larceny by trick and other types of wrongful acquisition. Lake v. U.S., C.A.Colo., 338 F.2d 787, 788. It is not necessary that the taking of the vehicle be unlawful. Even if possession of the vehicle is lawfully acquired, the vehicle will be deemed "stolen" if the defendant thereafter forms the intent to deprive the owner of the rights and benefits of ownership, and converts the vehicle to his own use. United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 417, 77 S.Ct. 397, 402, 1 L.Ed.2d 430.

See also Larceny; Receiving stolen goods or property; Robbery; Theft.

Stop. Within statutes requiring a motorist striking a person with automobile to stop, requires a definite cessation of movement for a sufficient length of time for a person of ordinary powers of observation to fully understand the surroundings of the accident. Moore v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 482, 145 S.W.2d 887, 888.

"Stop" occurs when police officer restrains person's liberty by physical force or show of authority. State v. Butkovich, 87 Or.App. 587, 743 P.2d 752, 753. "Stop," within term stop and frisk, is temporary restraint of person's freedom to walk away and is a permissible seizure within Fourth Amendment dimensions when such person is suspected of being involved in past, present or pending criminal activity. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889; State v. Anonymous (1971-20), 6 Conn.Cir. 583, 280 A.2d 816, 818. See also Stop and frisk.

Stop and frisk. The situation where police officers who are suspicious of an individual run their hands lightly over the suspect's outer garments to determine if the person is carrying a concealed weapon. Also called a "patdown" or "threshold inquiry," a stop and frisk is intended to stop short of any activity that could be considered a violation of Fourth Amendment rights.

A police officer has the right to stop and pat down a person suspected of contemplating the commission of a crime. Reasonable suspicion which is sufficient for stop and frisk is more than a mere hunch but less than probable cause. U.S. v. Sokolow, 109 S.Ct. 1581, 104 L.Ed.2d 1. The scope of the search must be strictly tied to and justified by the circumstances which rendered the initiation of the stop justified. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889. See Frisk; Investigatory stop; Stop.

Stop-limit order. In securities trading, a stop order in which a specific price is set below which the stock may not be sold and above which it may not be purchased.

Stop-loss order. An order given to a stockbroker to buy or sell certain securities when the market reaches a particular price.

Stop notice statute. An alternative to the mechanics' lien remedy that allows contractors, suppliers and workers to make and enforce a claim against the construction lender, and in some instances, the owner, for a portion of the undisbursed construction loan proceeds. See also Mechanics' lien.

Stop order. An order to buy securities at a price above or sell at a price below the current market. Stop buy orders are generally used to limit loss or protect unrealized profits on a short sale. Stop sell orders are generally used to protect unrealized profits or limit loss on a holding. A stop order becomes a market order when the stock sells at or beyond the specified price and, thus, may not necessarily be executed at that price. See also Stop payment order.

Stoppage. In the civil law, compensation or set-off.

Stoppage in transit /stópoj in trzenzst(y). The act by which the unpaid vendor of goods stops their progress and resumes possession of them, while they are in course of transit from him to the purchaser, and not yet actually delivered to the latter. The right of stoppage in transit is that which the vendor has, when he sells goods on credit to another, of resuming the possession of the goods while they are in the possession of a carrier or middle-man, in the transit to the consignee or vendee, and before they arrive into their actual possession, or the destination he has appointed for them on their becoming bankrupt and insolvent. The right which arises to an unpaid vendor to resume the possession, with which he has parted, of goods sold upon credit, before they come into the possession of a buyer who has become insolvent, bankrupt, or pecuniarily embarrassed. See U.C.C. § 2-708(1).

Stop payment order. A customer's demand to a payor bank that the bank dishonor a check payable for the customer's account. See U.C.C. § 4-403.

Stop sign. A legally erected and maintained traffic signal requiring all traffic to stop before entering into or crossing an intersection. Sweet v. Awtrey, 70 Ga.App. 334, 28 S.E.2d 154, 161.

Storage. Safekeeping of goods in a warehouse or other depository. Lincoln Sav. Bank of Brooklyn v. Brown, Em.App., 137 F.2d 228, 230, 231. See also Bailment; Warehouse; Warehouseman; Warehouse system.

Store, v. To keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received, where the safe-keeping is the principal object of deposit, and not the consumption or sale.

Store, n. Any place where goods are deposited and sold by one engaged in buying and selling them.

Public store. A government warehouse, maintained for certain administrative purposes, such as the keeping of military supplies, the storing of imported goods under bonds to pay duty, etc.

Stores. The supplies of different articles provided for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship's crew and passengers.

Storehouse. A structure in which things are stored; e.g. a building for the storing of grain, foodstuffs, or goods of any kind. A magazine; a repository; a warehouse; a store.

Stowage. In maritime law, the storing, packing, or arranging of the cargo in a ship, in such a manner as to Stowaway. One who conceals himself aboard an outgoing vessel or aircraft for the purpose of obtaining free passage. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 2199.

Stowe. In old English law, a valley.

Straddle. A strategy consisting of the combination of an equal number of put options and call options on the same underlying share, index, or commodity future. A straddle is a type of hedge. In stockbrokers' parlance the term means the double option position of a "put" and a "call" in the same underlying stock, and secures to the holder the right to demand of the seller at a certain price within a certain time a certain number of shares of specified stock, or to require him to take, at the same price within the same time, the same shares of stock. See Call; Option; Put option. Compare Hedging.

Straight-line depreciation. See Depreciation.

Stramineus homo /straminitys hówmow/. L. Lat. A man of straw, one of no substance, put forward as bail or surety.

Strand. A shore or bank of the sea or a river.

Stranding. In maritime law, the drifting, driving, or running aground of a ship on a shore or strand. Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves. Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate or for some fraudulent purpose.

Stranger. As used with reference to the subject of subrogation, one who, in no event resulting from the existing state of affairs, can become liable for the debt, and whose property is not charged with the payment thereof and cannot be sold thereof. See also Strangers.

Stranger in blood. Any person not within the consideration of natural love and affection arising from relationship.

Strangers. By this term is intended third persons generally. In its general legal signification the term is opposed to the word "privy." Those who are in no way parties to a covenant or transaction, nor bound by it, are said to be strangers to the covenant or transaction. See also Stranger.

Stratagem /strätajm/. A deception either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratocracy /stratokrásiy/. A military government; government by military chiefs of an army.

Strator /strétar/. In old English law, a surveyor of the highways.

Straw bail. See Bail.

Straw man or party. A "front"; a third party who is put up in name only to take part in a transaction. Nominal party to a transaction; one who acts as an agent for another for the purpose of taking title to real property and executing whatever documents and instruments the principal may direct respecting the property. Person who purchases property for another to conceal identity of real purchaser, or to accomplish some purpose otherwise not allowed.

Stray. See Estray.

Stream. A watercourse having a source and terminus, banks, and channel, through which waters flow at least periodically, and it usually empties into other streams, lakes, or the ocean, but it does not lose its character as a watercourse even though it may break up and disappear. Southern Pac. Co. v. Proebstel, 61 Ariz. 412, 150 P.2d 81, 83. A river, brook, or rivulet; anything in fact that is liquid and flows in a line or course. A current of water. A body of water having a continuous flow in one direction. It consists of a bed, banks, and watercourse. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Carroll, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 757, 758. See also Water course.

Private stream. A non-navigable creek or water-course, the bed or channel of which is exclusively owned by a private individual.

Stream of commerce. Term used to describe goods which remain in interstate commerce though held within a state for a short period of time. If such goods remain in the stream of commerce, they are not subject to local taxation.

In Commerce Clause analysis, local activities which are part of the current or stream of interstate commerce are considered part of the interstate movement. Congress can regulate such local incidents directly under its commerce power.

Street. An urban way or thoroughfare; a road or public way in a city, town, or village, generally paved, and lined or intended to be lined by houses on each side. It includes all urban ways which can be and are generally used for travel, but does not normally include service entrances or driveways leading off from the street onto adjoining premises. Hill & Combs v. First Nat. Bank of San Angelo, Tex., C.C.A.Tex., 139 F.2d 740, 743.

Any street, avenue, boulevard, road, parkway, drive or other way (1) which is an existing state, county or municipal roadway, or (2) which is shown upon a plat heretofore approved pursuant to law, or (3) which is approved by official action or (4) which is shown on a plat duly filed and recorded in the office of the county recording officer prior to the appointment of a planning board and the grant to such board of the power to review plats; and includes the land between the street lines, whether improved or unimproved, and may comprise pavement, shoulders, gutters, curbs, sidewalks, parking areas and other areas within the street lines. See also Ancient street.

Street name. Securities held in the name of a broker instead of his customer's name are said to be carried in a "street name." This occurs when the securities have been bought on margin or when the customer wishes the security to be held by the broker. The name of a broker or bank appearing on a corporate security with blank endorsement by the broker or bank. The security can then be transferred merely by delivery since the endorsement is well known. Street name is used for convenience or to shield identity of the true owner.

Streptus judicialis /strēptəs juw′dishēyələs/. Turbulent conduct in a court of justice.

Stria /strāə/. Curved, crooked and intermittent gouges, of irregular depth and width and rough definition, of certain rock surface, sometimes due to abrasions by icebergs. A furrow, channel or hollow; depression, rut, wrinkle, concave, cup, pocket, dimple.

Strict. Exact; accurate; precise; undeviating; governed by exact rules.

As to strict Settlement, see that title.

Strict construction. A close or rigid reading and interpretation of a law. It is said that criminal statutes must be strictly construed. Rule of "strict construction" has no definite or precise meaning, has only relative application, is not opposite of liberal construction, and does not require such strained or narrow interpretation of language as to defeat object of statute. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Newingham, Mo.App., 386 S.W.2d 663, 665.

Rule of "strict construction" means that criminal statute will not be enlarged by implication or intendment beyond fair meaning of language used, or what their terms reasonably justify, and will not be held to include offenses and persons other than those which are clearly described and provided for, although court in interpreting and employing particular statutes may think legislature should have made them more comprehensive. Matthews v. Powers, Okl.Cr., 425 P.2d 479, 482. "Strict construction of a statute" is that which refuses to expand the law by implications or equitable considerations, but confines its operation to cases which are clearly within the letter of the statute as well as within its spirit or reason, resolving all reasonable doubts against applicability of statute to particular case. Kyritis v. Fenny, 66 Misc.2d 329, 320 N.Y.S.2d 702, 704.

See also Construction; Strictly construed.

Strict foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Stricti juris /striktə jūrəs/. Lat. Of strict right or law; according to strict law. A license is a thing stricti juris; a privilege which a man does not possess by his own right, but it is conceded to him as an indulgence, and therefore it is to be strictly observed.

Strictissimi juris /strīktɪsəmə jūrəs/. Lat. Of the strictest right or law. Licenses being matter of special indulgence, the application of them was formerly strictissimi juris.

Strict liability. Liability without fault. Goodwin v. Reiley, 1 Dist., 176 Cal.App.3d 86, 221 Cal.Rptr. 374, 376. A concept applied by the courts in product liability cases in which seller is liable for any and all defective or hazardous products which unduly threaten a consumer’s personal safety. This doctrine poses strict liability on one who sells product in defective condition unreasonably dangerous to user or consumer for harm caused to ultimate user or consumer if seller is engaged in business of selling such product, and product is expected to and does reach user or consumer without substantial change in condition in which it is sold. Davis v. Gibson Products Co., Tex.Civ.App., 505 S.W.2d 682, 688.

Concept of strict liability in tort is founded on the premise that when manufacturer presents his goods to the public for sale, he represents they are suitable for their intended use, and to invoke such doctrine it is essential to prove that the product was defective when placed in the stream of commerce. Herbstman v. Eastman Kodak Co., 68 N.J. 1, 342 A.2d 181, 184.

(1) One who sells any product in a defective condition unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer or to his property is subject to liability for physical harm thereby caused to the ultimate user or consumer, or to his property, if (a) the seller is engaged in the business of selling such a product, and (b) it is expected to and does reach the user or consumer without substantial change in the condition in which it is sold. (2) The rule stated in Subsection (1) applies although (a) the seller has exercised all possible care in the preparation and sale of his product, and (b) the user or consumer has not bought the product from or entered into any contractual relation with the seller. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 402A.

See also Product liability; Warranty.

Strict liability crimes. Unlawful acts whose elements do not contain the need for criminal intent or mens rea. These crimes are usually acts that endanger the public welfare, such as illegal dumping of toxic wastes. State v. Lucero, 87 N.M. 242, 531 P.2d 1215, 1218.

Strictly /striktlɪ/. A strict manner; closely, precisely, rigorously; stringently; positively.

Strictly construed. Requirement that a penal statute be strictly construed means that the court will not extend punishment to cases not plainly within the language used, but at the same time such statutes are to be fairly and reasonably construed, and will not be given such a narrow and strained construction as to exclude from their operation cases plainly within their scope and meaning. See also Strict construction.

Strictly ministerial duty. One that is absolute and imperative, requiring neither the exercise of official discretion nor judgment.

Stricto jure /strɪktəko jʊrə/. Lat. In strict law.

Strict scrutiny test. Under this test for determining if there has been a denial of equal protection, burden is on government to establish necessity of the statutory classification. Poulos v. McMahan, 250 Ga. 354, 297 S.E.2d 451, 454. Measure which is found to affect adversely a fundamental right will be subject to "strict scrutiny" test which requires state to establish that it has compelling interest justifying the law and that distinctions created by law are necessary to further some governmental purpose. In re Valenti, 2 Dist., 178 C.A.3d 470, 224 Cal.Rptr. 10, 12.
Strike /strik/ The act of quitting work by a body of workers for the purpose of coercing their employer to accede to some demand they have made upon him, and which he has refused. Jeffery-De Witt Insulator Co. v. N. L. R. B., C.C.A.4, 91 F.2d 134, 138. A combination to obtain higher wages, shorter hours of employment, better working conditions or some other concession from employer by the employees stopping work at a preconcerted time, and it involves a combination of persons and not a single individual. A cessation of work by employees as a means of enforcing compliance with some demand upon the employer. People v. Tepel, Mag.Ct., 3 N.Y.S.2d 779, 781. A combined effort among workers to compel their employer to the concession of a certain demand, by preventing the conduct of his business until compliance with the demand.

The term "strike" includes any strike or other concerted stoppage of work by employees (including a stoppage by reason of the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement) and any concerted slow-down or other concerted interruption of operations by employees. Labor Management Relations Act, § 501(2). See also No-strike clause; Rent strike; Slowdown; Wildcat strike. Compare Lockout.

Economic strike. A cessation of work by employees to enforce economic demands upon the employer in contrast to a strike caused by an unfair labor charge.

General strike. Cessation of work by employees effective throughout an entire industry or country.

Jurisdictional strike. Cessation of work as result of dispute by members of one union or craft against members of another union or craft as to assignment of work.

Secondary strike. Cessation of work by union members of one employer who has business dealings with another employer whose employees are on strike.

Sit-down strike. Cessation of work by employees who do not leave employer's premises but who refuse to work.

Sympathy strike. A strike in which a union strikes not to gain concessions for itself, but to aid another union's objectives. A sympathy strike involves two unions; one is striking to force some concession from the employer; the other strikes in sympathy with the first's objectives. Sympathy strikes are a common manifestation of traditional union solidarity.

Wildcat strike. Cessation of work by group of employees without authorization of union officials.

Strikebreaker. One who takes the place of workman who has left his work in an effort to force the striking employee to agree to demands of employer. See also Scab.

Strike off. In common parlance, and in the language of the auction-room, property is understood to be "struck off" or "knocked down," when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale.

A court is said to "strike off" a case when it directs the removal of the case from the record or docket, as being one over which it has no jurisdiction and no power to hear and determine it.

Strike suits. Shareholder derivative action begun with hope of winning large attorney fees or private settlements, and with no intention of benefiting corporation on behalf of which suit is theoretically brought.

Striking a jury. The selecting or nominating a jury out of the whole number returned as jurors on the panel. It is especially used of the selection of a special jury, where a panel is prepared by the proper officer, and the parties, in turn, strike off a certain number of names, until the list is reduced to twelve. A jury thus chosen is called a "struck jury."

Striking off the roll. The disbarring of an attorney.

Striking price. Price at which an option (e.g., to purchase stock) is exercised. The price at which named stock can be put or called is ordinarily the market price when option is written and is termed the "striking price". Reinach v. C. I. R., C.A.N.Y., 373 F.2d 900, 901.

Strip. The act of spoiling or unlawfully taking away anything from the land, by the tenant for life or years, or by one holding an estate in the land less than the entire fee.

Separating coupons from corpus of bonds, which, in turn, are sold separately.

Strong. Cogent, powerful, forcible, forceful. Wright v. Austin, Tex.Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 281, 283. See also Sound.

Strong hand. The words "with strong hand" imply a degree of criminal force, whereas the words vi et armis ("with force and arms") are mere formal words in the action of trespass, and the plaintiff is not bound to prove any force. The statutes relating to forcible entries use the words "with a strong hand" as describing that degree of force which makes an entry or detainer of lands criminal.

Strongly corroborated. A degree of corroboration amounting to corroborations from independent facts and circumstances which is clear and satisfactory to the court and jury. Wright v. Austin, Tex.Civ.App., 175 S.W.2d 281, 283. See also Corroborating evidence.

Struck. In common law pleading, a word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arose from any wounding, beating, or bruising.

Subpoenas in federal criminal cases are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 17, and in civil cases by Fed.R.Civil P. 45. See also Alias subpoena.

Subpoena ad testificandum /səbˈpiːnə əd tɛsˈtɪfɪkəndəm/. Lat. Subpoena to testify. A technical and descriptive term for the ordinary subpoena. See Subpoena.

Sub potestate /səb pəˈstedʒtɪtɪˈli/. Under, or subject to, the power of another; used of a wife, child, slave, or other person not sui juris.

Subreptio /səbˈrɛptɪˈjoʊə/. Lat. In the civil law, obtaining gifts of escheat, etc., from the king by concealing the truth.

Subreption /səbrɛˈpɜːʃən/. In French law, the fraud committed to obtain a pardon, title, or grant, by alleging facts contrary to truth.
Subrogation. The substitution of one person in the place of another with reference to a lawful claim, demand or right, so that he who is substituted succeeds to the rights of the other in relation to the debt or claim, and its rights, remedies, or securities. Gerken v. Davidson Grocery Co., 57 Idaho 670, 69 P.2d 122, 126. Subrogation denotes the exchange of a third person who has paid a debt in the place of the creditor to whom he has paid it, so that he may exercise against the debtor all the rights which the creditor, if unpaid, might have done. Subrogation appears commonly in construction contracts, insurance contracts, suretyship, and negotiable instrument law. Insurance companies, guarantors and bonding companies generally have the right to step into the shoes of the party whom they compensate and sue any party whom the compensated party could have sued.

The right of one who has paid an obligation which another should have paid to be indemnified by the other. Olin Corp. (Plastics Division) v. Workmen’s Compensation Appeal Bd., 14 Pa.Cmwlth. 603, 324 A.2d 813, 816. A device adopted by equity to compel ultimate discharge of an obligation by him who in good conscience ought to pay it. Jenks Hatchery, Inc. v. Elliott, 252 Or. 25, 448 P.2d 370, 373.

Subrogation is of two kinds, either conventional or legal; the former being where the subrogation is express, by the acts of the creditor and the third person; the latter being (as in the case of sureties) where the subrogation is effected or implied by the operation of the law. See also Equitable subrogation; Legal subrogation.

Subrogee /səbrɔˈriːj/ˌgli/. A person who is subrogated; one who succeeds to the rights of another by subrogation.

Subrogor. The person who substitutes another for himself; one who performs the subrogation.

Subscribe. Literally to write underneath, as one’s name. To sign at the end of a document. Also, to agree in writing to furnish money or its equivalent, or to agree to purchase some initial stock in a corporation. See also Attest; Subscriber; Subscription.

Subscribed capital. The total amount of stock or capital for which there are contracts of purchase or subscriptions.

Subscribed stock. A stockholders’ equity account showing the capital that will be contributed as the subscription price is collected. A subscription is a legal contract so that an entry is made debiting a receivable and crediting subscribed stock as soon as the stock is subscribed. See also Subscriber; Subscription.

Subscriber. One who writes his name under a written instrument; one who affixes his signature to any document, whether for the purpose of authenticating or attesting it, of adopting its terms as his own expressions, or of binding himself by an engagement which it contains.

One who becomes bound by a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation. One who has agreed to purchase stock from the corporation on the original issue of such stock, whether before or after incorporation. Rev.Model Bus.Corp. Act, § 1.40. One who agrees to buy securities of a corporation, either bonds or stocks.

Subscribing witness. He who witnesses or attests the signature of a party to an instrument, and in testimony thereof subscribes his own name to the document. One who sees a writing executed, or hears it acknowledged, and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name as a witness. See Attestation.

Subscription /səbˈskripʃ(ə)ˈwɔːr/. Lat. In the civil law, a writing under, or under-writing; a writing of the name under or at the bottom of an instrument by way of attestation or ratification; subscription.

Subscription. The act of writing one’s name under a written instrument; the affixing one’s signature to any document, whether for the purpose of authenticating or attesting it, of adopting its terms as one’s own expressions, or of binding one’s self by an engagement which it contains.

A written contract by which one engages to take and pay for capital stock of a corporation, or to contribute a sum of money for a designated purpose, either gratuitously, as in the case of subscribing to a charity, or in consideration of an equivalent to be rendered, as a subscription to a periodical, a forthcoming book, a series of entertainments, or the like. See also Subscribed stock; Subscriber, and compound terms below.

Subscription rights. Rights of existing stockholders to purchase additional stock, generally at a price under market and in an amount proportionate to their existing holdings. Also, the certificates evidencing such rights. See also Stock (Stock rights).

Subsellia /səbˈsɛliə/ˌ. Lat. In Roman law, lower seats or benches, occupied by the judices and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor.

Subsequens matrimonium tollit peccatum precedens /səbˈsɪlkwɔn mətrəˈmʌnən(ə)ılm tɔl ˈpɛktətəm priˈsɪliˌdɑnt/. A subsequent marriage [of the parties] removes a previous fault, i.e., previous illicit intercourse, and legitimates the offspring. A rule of Roman law.

Subsequent. Following in time; coming or being later than something else; succeeding.
Subsequent condition. See Condition.

Subservant. In law of agency, the servant or agent of another servant or agent. Generally, such agent or servant is principal as to the subservant. See also Subagent.

Subsidiary. Under another's control. Term is often short for "subsidiary corporation"; i.e. one that is run and owned by another company which is called the "parent." See Subsidiary corporation.

Of secondary importance.

Subsidiary corporation. One in which another corporation (i.e. parent corporation) owns at least a majority of the shares, and thus has control. Said of a company more than 50 percent of whose voting stock is owned by another.

Subsidy. A grant of money made by government in aid of the promoters of any enterprise, work, or improvement in which the government desires to participate, or which is considered a proper subject for government aid, because such purpose is likely to be of benefit to the public.

Sub silentio /sub silensh(y)ow/. Under silence; without any notice being taken. Passing a thing sub silentio may be evidence of consent.

Subsistence. Support. Means of support, provisions or livelihood. See Necessaries; Support.

Sub spe reconciliationis /sub spiy rekansiliyēshiyōwns/. Under the hope of reconciliation.

Substance. Essence; the material or essential part of a thing, as distinguished from "form." That which is essential.

Substance vs. form concept. A standard used, commonly in taxation, to ascertain the true reality of what has occurred.

Substantial capacity test. Term used in the definition of legal insanity proposed by the Model Penal Code (§ 4.01) to the effect that a person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law. See also Insanity.

Substantial compliance rule. Compliance with the essential requirements, whether of a contract or of a statute. Wentworth v. Medellin, Tex.Civ.App., 529 S.W.2d 126, 128. In life insurance law is that where insured has done substantially all he is required to do under policy to effect change in beneficiary and mere ministerial acts of insurer's officers and agents only remain to be done, change will take effect. Inter-Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Cochran, 259 Ky. 677, 83 S.W.2d 11, 14. See Substantial performance doctrine.

Substantial damages. See Damages.

Substantial equivalent of patented device. Same as thing itself, so that if two devices do same work in substantially same way, and accomplish substantially same results, they are equivalent, even though differing in name, form, or shape. Bedell v. Dictograph Products Co., 251 App.Div. 243, 296 N.Y.S. 25, 32; Freeman v. Altvater, C.C.A.Mo., 66 F.2d 506, 511.

Substantial evidence rule. Such evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. It is that quality of evidence necessary for a court to affirm a decision of an administrative board. Under the "substantial evidence rule," reviewing courts will defer to an agency determination so long as, upon an examination of the whole record, there is substantial evidence upon which the agency could reasonably base its decision. Marshall v. Consumers Power Co., 65 Mich. App. 237, 237 N.W.2d 266, 280.

Substantial evidence is evidence possessing something of substance and relevant consequence and which furnishes substantial basis of fact from which issues tendered can be reasonably resolved. State v. Green, 218 Kan. 438, 544 P.2d 356, 362. Evidence which a reasoning mind would accept as sufficient to support a particular conclusion and consists of more than a mere scintilla of evidence but may be somewhat less than a preponderance. Marker v. Finch, D.C.Del., 322 F.Supp. 905, 910. For purposes of considering sufficiency of evidence in criminal case, "substantial evidence" means evidence from which trier of fact reasonably could find issue in harmony therewith. Kansas City v. Stamper, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 767, 768.

Under the substantial evidence rule, as applied in administrative proceedings, all evidence is competent and may be considered, regardless of its source and nature, if it is the kind of evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. In other words, the competency of evidence for purposes of administrative agency adjudicatory proceedings is made to rest upon the logical persuasiveness of such evidence to the reasonable mind in using it to support a conclusion. It is more than a mere scintilla and means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. Chrysler Corp. v. U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, C.A., 631 F.2d 865, 890, 203 U.S.App.D.C. 283.

See also Whole record test.

Substantially. Essentially; without material qualification; in the main; in substance; materially; in a sub-Substantially justified. Test for whether government's litigation position is "substantially justified" within meaning of Equal Access to Justice Act provision governing award of attorney fees (28 U.S.C.A. § 2412(d)(1)(A)) is one of reasonableness, under which government is required to establish that its position has reasonable basis both in law and in fact. Russell v. National Mediation Bd., C.A.Tex., 775 F.2d 1284, 1289. Following 1985 amendments to Equal Access to Justice Act, in order to show that its position was "substantially justified" and thus be relieved from liability for fees of a prevailing opponent, Government must show not merely that its position was marginally reasonable, but that its position was clearly reasonable, well founded in law and fact, and solid though not necessarily correct. U.S. v. 1,378.65 Acres of Land, More or Less, Situate in Vernon County, State of Mo., C.A.Mo., 794 F.2d 1313, 1317. See Equal Access to Justice Act.

Substantial performance doctrine. A doctrine in commercial reasonableness which recognizes that the rendering of a performance which does not exactly meet the terms of the agreement (slight deviation) will be looked upon as fulfillment of the obligation, less the damages which result from any deviation from the promised performance. This doctrine, which is widely applied in building contracts and which is intended to prevent unjust enrichment, provides that where contract is made for agreed exchange of two performances, one of which is to be rendered first, substantial performance, rather than strict, exact or literal performance, by first party of terms of contract is sufficient to entitle such party to recover on such performance. Della Ratta, Inc. v. American Better Community Developers, Inc., 38 Md. App. 119, 380 A.2d 627, 637.

Substantial performance of a contract is shown when party alleging substantial performance has made an honest endeavor in good faith to perform his part of the contract, when results of his endeavor are beneficial to other party, and when such benefits are retained by the other party; if any one of these circumstances is not established the performance is not substantial, and the party has no right of recovery. Alliance Tractor & Implement Co. v. Lukens Tool & Die Co., 194 Neb. 473, 233 N.W.2d 299, 301.

Substantiate /səbstənʃənət/. To establish the existence or truth of, by true or competent evidence, or to verify. Graves v. School Committee of Wellesley, 299 Mass. 80, 12 N.E.2d 176, 179.

Substantive due process. Doctrine that due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution require legislation to be fair and reasonable in content as well as application. Such may be broadly defined as the constitutional guarantee that no person shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life, liberty or property. The essence of substantive due process is protection from arbitrary and unreasonable action. Jeffries v. Turkey Run Consolidated School Dist., C.A.Ind., 492 F.2d 1, 3. See Due process of law.

Substantive evidence. That adduced for the purpose of proving a fact in issue, as opposed to evidence given for the purpose of discrediting a witness (i.e., showing that he is unworthy of belief), or of corroborating his testimony. See also Substantial evidence rule.

Substantive felony. An independent felony; one not dependent upon the conviction of another person for another crime.

Substantive law. That part of law which creates, defines, and regulates rights and duties of parties, as opposed to "adjective, procedural, or remedial law," which prescribes method of enforcing the rights or obtaining redress for their invasion. Allen v. Fisher, 574 P.2d 1314, 1315. The basic law of rights and duties (contract law, criminal law, tort law, law of wills, etc.) as opposed to procedural law (law of pleading, law of evidence, law of jurisdiction, etc.). Compare Adjective law; Procedural law.

Substantive offense. One which is complete of itself and not dependent upon another. U.S. v. Martinez-Gonzales, D.C.Cal., 89 F.Supp. 62, 64.

Substantive rights. A right to the equal enjoyment of fundamental rights, privileges and immunities; distinguished from procedural right.

Substitute, n. /səbstət(ə)yət/. One who or that which stands in the place of another; that which stands in lieu of something else. A person hired by one who has been drafted into the military service of the country, to go to the front and serve in the army in his stead.

Substitute, v. To put in the place of another person or thing; to exchange. Toledo Edison Co. v. McMaken, C.C.A.Ohio, 103 F.2d 72, 75.

Substituted basis. In taxation, the basis of an asset determined by reference to the basis in the hands of a transferor, donor or grantor or by reference to other property held at any time by the person for whom the basis is to be determined. I.R.C. § 1016(b).

Substitute defendant. One who takes the place of another in the same suit or controversy and not one who is sued upon an entirely different cause of action. McCann v. Bentley Stores Corp., D.C.Mo., 34 F.Supp. 231, 233. See Substitution of parties.

Substituted executor. One appointed to act in the place of another executor upon the happening of a certain event; e.g., if the latter should refuse the office.

Substituted service. Service of process upon a defendant in any manner, authorized by statute or rule, other than personal service within the jurisdiction; as by publication, by mailing a copy to his last known address, or by personal service in another state. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 4. See also Service.

Substitutio heredis /səbstət(y)əwəsh(ə)yəw hərfyədas/. Lat. In Roman law, it was competent for a testator after instituting a heres (called the "heres institutus") to substitute another (called the "heres substitutus") in his place in a certain event. If the event upon which the substitution was to take effect was the refusal of the instituted heir to accept the inheritance at all, then the substitution was called "vulgaris" (or common); but if the event was the death of the infant (pupillus) after acceptance, and before attaining his majority (of fourteen years if a male, and of twelve years if a female), then the substitution was called "pupillaris" (or for minors).

Substitution. Putting in place of another thing; change of one thing for another; serving in lieu of another; having some of its parts replaced. See also Subrogation.

In the civil law, putting one person in place of another; particularly, the act of a testator in naming a second devisee or legatee who is to take the bequest either on failure of the original devisee or legatee or after him.

Substitutional or substitutionary. Where a will contains a gift of property to a class of persons, with a clause providing that on the death of a member of the class before the period of distribution his share is to go to his issue (if any), so as to substitute them for him, the gift to the issue is said to be substitutional or substitutionary. A bequest to such of the children of A. as shall be living at the testator's death, with a direction that if one or more should die before attaining the age of four years (or for a male, of sixteen years if a male, and of twelve years if a female), then the substitution was called "pupillaris" (or for minors).

Substitutionary evidence. Such as is admitted as a substitute for what would be the original or primary instrument of evidence; as where a witness is permitted to testify to the contents of a lost document. See also Secondary evidence.

Substitutionary executor /səbstət(y)əwəshəniərɪ əɡərˈkɛɪkədər/. See Executor-(tri).

Substitution of parties. In pleading, the replacement of one party to an action by another party because of death, incompetency, transfer of interest, or in case of a public official who is a party to an action, his death or separation from office. Fed.R.Civ.P. 17(a), 25. See also Real party in interest; Revival of action.

Substraction /səˈstræktʃərən/. In French law, the fraudulent appropriation of any property, but particularly of the goods of a decedent's estate.

Sub suo periculo /səb səˈpiːkwəlɔrə piːrɪˈkeɪlə/ow/. At his own risk.

Subtenant /səˈtæntən/. An under-tenant; one who leases all or a part of the premises from the original lessee for a term less than that held by the latter. Peak v. Gaddy, 152 Okl. 138, 3 P.2d 1042, 1043. See Sublease.

Subterfuge /səˈtəfjuːj/. That to which one resorts for escape or concealment. Los Angeles Fisheries v. Crook, C.C.A.Cal., 47 F.2d 1031, 1035. See also Artifice.

Subterranean waters /səˌtərəˈniən wəˈtərəz/. See Water.

Subtraction. The offense of withholding or withdrawing from another man what by law he is entitled to. There are various descriptions of this offense, of which the principal are as follows: (1) Subtraction of suit and services, which is a species of injury affecting a man's real property, and consists of a withdrawal of (or a neglect to perform or pay) the fealty, suit of court, rent, or services reserved by the lessor of the land. (2) Subtraction of tithes is the withholding from the parson or vicar the tithes to which he is entitled, and this is cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts. (3) Subtraction of conjugal rights is the withdrawing or withholding by a husband or wife of those rights and privileges which the law allows to either party. (4) Subtraction of legacies is the withholding or detaining of legacies by an executor. (5) Subtraction of church rates, in English law, consists in the refusal to pay the amount of rate at which any individual parishioner has been assessed for the necessary repairs of the parish church.

Subtraction of conjugal rights. The act of a husband or wife living separately from the other without a lawful cause. 3 Bl.Comm. 94. See also Subtraction.

Suburbani /səˈɜrbənəni/. Lat. In old English law, husbandmen.

Subversion. The act or process of overthrowing, destroying, or corrupting. Used in connection with activities designed to undermine and overthrow the government, state and federal. See Subversive activities.

Successful party. For purposes of rule allowing "successful party" to recover costs, "successful party" is one who obtains judgment of competent court vindicating civil claim of right. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Lubbock v. Graham & Associates, Inc., Tex.App. Dist. 6, 664 S.W.2d 430, 437. See also Prevailing party.

Successio /səˈsɛʃ(ə)yəw/ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a coming in place of another, on his decease; a coming into the estate which a deceased person had at the time of his death. This was either by virtue of an express appointment of the deceased person by his will (ex testamento), or by the general appointment of law in case of intestacy (ab intestato).
Succession. The devolution of title to property under the law of descent and distribution. The act or right of legal or official investment with a predecessor's office, dignity, possession, or functions; also the legal or actual order of so succeeding from that which is or is to be vested or taken. The word when applied to reality denotes persons who take by will or inheritance and excludes those who take by deed, grant, gift, or any form of purchase or contract. Olsan Bros. v. Miller, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 856, 857.

Although "succession" is defined in statute as the acquisition of title to the property of one who dies without disposing of it by will, the word frequently possesses the somewhat broader meaning of the acquisition of rights upon the death of another. In re Russell's Estate, 17 C.A.3d 758, 95 Cal.Rptr. 88, 95.

The right by which one group of persons may, by succeeding another group, acquire a property in all the goods, moveables, and other chattels of a corporation. The power of perpetual succession is one of the peculiar properties of a corporation. See Perpetual.

Civil Law and Louisiana

The fact of the transmission of the rights, estate, obligations, and charges of a deceased person to his heir or heirs. The right by which the heir can take possession of the decedent's estate. The right of the heir to step into the place of the deceased, with respect to the possession, control, enjoyment, administration, and settlement of all the latter's property, rights, obligations, charges, etc.

The estate of a deceased person, comprising all kinds of property owned or claimed by him, as well as his debts and obligations, and considered as a legal entity (according to the notion of the Roman law) for certain purposes, such as collecting assets and paying debts.

The transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to the heirs, also the estates, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceeds the charges or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has only left charges without any property. The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also the new charges to which it becomes subject. The coming in of another to take the property of one who dies without disposing of it by will.

General

Artificial succession. That attribute of a corporation by which, in contemplation of law, the company itself remains always the same though its constituent members or stockholders may change from time to time.

Hereditary succession. Descent or title, by descent at common law; the title whereby a man on the death of his ancestor acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law.

Intestate succession. The succession of an heir at law to the property and estate of his ancestor when the latter has died intestate, or leaving a will which has been annulled or set aside. See also Descent; Devise; Inheritance; Intestate.

Irregular succession. That which is established by law in favor of certain persons, or of the state, in default of heirs, either legal or instituted by testament.

Legal succession. That which the law establishes in favor of the nearest relation of a deceased person. See Descent.

Natural succession. Succession taking place between natural persons, for example, in descent on the death of an ancestor.

Testamentary succession. In the civil law, that which results from the institution of an heir in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See Testamentary.

Testate succession. Passing of property to another by will.

Vacant succession. Such exists when no one claims it, or when all the heirs are unknown, or when all the known heirs to it have renounced it. Civ.Code La. art. 1095. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U.S. 439, 11 S.Ct. 369, 34 L.Ed. 1054.

Succession duty or tax. A tax placed on the gratuitous acquisition of property passing on the death of any person by transfer from one person to another. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Maxwell, 221 N.C. 528, 20 S.E.2d 840, 842. A tax imposed upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent by devise or inheritance. See Inheritance tax.

Successive. Following one after another in a line or series. In re Buchholtz, Cust. & Pat.App., 54 F.2d 965, 966.

Successor. One that succeeds or follows; one who takes the place that another has left, and sustains the like part or character; one who takes the place of another by succession. Wawak Co. v. Kaiser, C.C.A.I11., 90 F.2d 694, 697. One who has been appointed or elected to hold an office after the term of the present incumbent.

Term with reference to corporations, generally means another corporation which, through amalgamation, consolidation, or other legal succession, becomes invested with rights and assumes burdens of first corporation.

Singular successor. A term borrowed from the civil law, denoting a person who succeeds to the rights of a former owner in a single article of property (as by purchase), as distinguished from a universal successor, who succeeds to all the rights and powers of a former owner, as in the case of a bankrupt or intestate estate.

Successor in interest. One who follows another in ownership or control of property. In order to be a "successor in interest", a party must continue to retain the same rights as original owner without change in ownership and there must be change in form only and not in substance, and transferee is not a "successor in interest." In case of corporations, the term ordinarily indicates statutory succession as, for instance, when corporation changes its name but retains same property. City of New York v. Turnpike Development Corp., 36 Misc.2d 704, 233 N.Y.S.2d 887, 890.

Successors. Those persons, other than creditors, who are entitled to property of a decedent under his will or succession statute. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(42).

Successor trustee. A trustee who follows or succeeds an earlier trustee and who generally has all the powers of the earlier trustee. Trusts generally make provisions for appointment of successor trustees.

Succinct /səskɪŋkt/. Brief, precise, exact.

Succurririt minori; facilis est lapsus juvenitatis /səkəˈhʌrɪrat ˈməʊnərəɪ, fəˈsələs əst ləpsəz ˈjuːvəntətɪs/. A minor is [to be] aided; a mistake of youth is easy [youth is liable to err].

Such. Of that kind, having particular quality or characteristic. Identical with, being the same as what has been mentioned. Alike, similar, of the like kind. "Such" represents the object as already particularized in terms which are not mentioned, and is a descriptive and relative word, referring to the last antecedent.

Sudden. Happening without previous notice or with very brief notice; coming or occurring unexpectedly; unforeseen; unprepared for. Hagaman v. Manley, 141 Kan. 647, 42 P.2d 946, 949.

Sudden emergency doctrine. When a person finds himself confronted with a sudden emergency, which was not brought about by his own negligence or want of care, such person has the legal right to do what appears to him at the time he should do, so long as he acts in a reasonably prudent manner as any other person would have done under like or similar circumstances, to avoid any injury, and if he does so act, he will not be deemed to have been negligent even though it might afterwards be apparent that some other course of action would have been safer. Swann v. Huttig Sash & Door Co., C.A.Tex., 436 F.2d 60, 62. Under sudden emergency doctrine, one placed in position of sudden emergency or peril other than by his own negligence, is not held to same degree of care and prudence as one who has time for thought and reflection. Dadds v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Del., 251 A.2d 559, 560. See also Emergency doctrine; Sudden peril rule.

Sudden heat of passion. In the common-law definition of manslaughter, this phrase means an excess of rage or anger, suddenly arising from a contemporary provocation. It means that the provocation must arise at the time of the killing, and that the passion is not the result of a former provocation, and the act must be directly caused by the passion arising out of the provocation at the time of the homicide. See also Heat of passion.

Sudden or violent injury. Injury occurring unexpectedly and not naturally or in the ordinary course of events.

Sudden peril rule. Under this rule, a defendant who is guilty of primary negligence is not liable in case of sudden peril where the peril or alarm was caused by the negligence of the opposite party, apprehension of peril from the standpoint of defendant seeking to excuse his primary negligence was reasonable, and appearance of danger was so imminent as to leave no time for deliberation. White v. Munson, Tex.Civ.App., 162 S.W.2d 429, 432. But rule cannot be invoked by one bringing emergency on or not using due care, to avoid it. McClelland v. Interstate Transit Lines, 142 Neb. 439, 8 N.W.2d 384, 391. See also Sudden emergency doctrine.

Sudder /sʊdər/. In Hindu law, the best; the forecourt of a house; the chief seat of government, contradistinguished from "mofussil," or interior of the country; the presidency.

Sue. To commence or to continue legal proceedings for recovery of a right; to proceed with as an action, and follow it up to its proper termination; to gain by legal process. Lervold v. Republic Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 142 Kan. 43, 45 P.2d 839, 843. To commence and carry out legal action against another. Word includes a proceeding instituted by confession of judgment. Commonwealth ex rel. Bradford County v. Lynch, 146 Pa.Super. 469, 23 A.2d 77, 78. See also Suit.

Sue out. To obtain by application; to petition for and take out. Properly the term is applied only to the obtaining and issuing of such process as is only accorded upon an application first made; but conventionally it is also used of the taking out of process which issues of course. The term is occasionally used of instruments other than writes.

Suerte /suəˈwɛrteɪ/. In Spanish law, a small lot of ground. Particularly, such a lot within the limits of a city or town used for cultivation or planting as a garden, vineyard or orchard. Building lots in towns and cities are called "solares."

Suffer. To allow, to admit, or to permit. Osborne v. Winter, 133 Cal.App. 664, 24 P.2d 892. It includes knowledge of what is to be done under sufferance. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Port Chester v. New York Title Ins. Co., 171 Misc. 854, 12 N.Y.S.2d 703, 709. To suffer an act to be done or a condition to exist is to permit or consent to it; to approve of it, and not to hinder it. It implies knowledge, a willingness of the mind and responsible control or ability to prevent. Wilson v. Nelson, 183 U.S. 191, 22 S.Ct. 74, 46 L.Ed. 147.

Also to have the feeling or sensation that arises from the action of something painful, distressing or the like; to feel or endure pain; to endure or undergo without sinking; to support; to bear up under; to be affected by; to sustain; to experience; to feel pain, physical or mental. The customary use of the word indicates some experience of conscious pain. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Calhoun, C.C.A.Mo., 97 F.2d 896, 898.

Suffrage /səˈfræɡ/ (s). Toleration; negative permission by not forbidding; passive consent; license implied from the omission or neglect to enforce an adverse right.
Sufferance wharves. In old English law, wharves in which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the commissioners of the customs.

Sufficiency of evidence. Term refers to test prescribed by rule providing that grand jury ought to find an indictment when all the evidence taken together, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would warrant a conviction by the trier of the offense. State v. Parks, Alaska, 437 P.2d 642, 644.

Suffrage. A vote; the act of voting; the right or privilege of casting a vote at public elections. The last is the meaning of the term in such phrases as "the extension of the suffrage," "universal suffrage," etc. Right of "suffrage" is right of a man to vote for whom he pleases. Waterbury Homeowners Ass’n v. City of Waterbury, 28 Conn.Sup. 295, 259 A.2d 650, 654. See Nineteenth Amendment.

Suffragan /sô(fr)âgan/. Bishops who in former times were appointed to supply the place of others during their absence on embassies or other business were so termed. They were consecrated as other bishops were, and were anciently called "chorepiscopi," or "bishops of the county," in contradistinction to the regular bishops of the city or see. The practice of creating suffragan bishops, after having long been discontinued, was recently revived; and such bishops are now permanently "assistant" to the bishops.

A suffragan is a titular bishop ordained to aid and assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual function; or one who supplieth the place instead of the bishop, by whose suffrage ecclesiastical causes or matters committed to him are to be adjudged, acted on, or determined.

Suffocate. To kill by stopping respiration, as by strangling or asphyxiation.

Suffragist /sô(f)râjist/. A suggesting; presentation of an idea especially indirectly, as through association of ideas, bringing before the mind for consideration, action, solution, or the like. It is in the nature of a hint or insinuation, and lacks the element of probability. Facts which merely suggest do not raise an inference of the existence of the fact suggested, and therefore a suggestion is much less than an inference or presumption. See Leading question.

In practice, a statement, formally entered on the record, of some fact or circumstance which will materially affect the further proceedings in the cause, or which is necessary to be brought to the knowledge of the court in order to its right disposition of the action, but which, for some reason, cannot be pleaded. Thus, if one of the parties dies after issue and before trial, his death may be suggested on the record.
Suggestion of error. Request for rehearing. See also Objection.

Suggestive interrogation. A phrase used by some writers to signify "leading question." It is so used in the French law. See Leading question.

Suicide. Self-destruction; the deliberate termination of one's own life.

Attempted suicide is a crime in some jurisdictions, but not in others. Some jurisdictions hold an attempted suicide which kills an innocent bystander or would-be rescuer to be murder, others manslaughter, others no crime. Some jurisdictions hold it to be murder for one person to persuade or aid another to commit suicide; some (by statute) make it manslaughter or a separate crime.

Sui generis /s(y)uway jensrss/. Lat. Of its own kind or class; i.e., the only one of its own kind; peculiar.

Sui hseredes /s(y)uway hsriydiyz/. Lat. In the civil law, one's own heirs; proper heirs.

Sui juris /s(y)uway jurss/. Lat. In the civil law, the condition or quality of one's own right; possessing full social and civil rights; not under any legal disability, or the power of another, or guardianship.

Having capacity to manage one's own affairs; not under legal disability to act for one's self.

See Emancipation; Majority. Compare Non sui juris.

Suit. A generic term, of comprehensive signification, referring to any proceeding by one person or persons against another or others in a court of law in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury or the enforcement of a right, whether at law or in equity. Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, 375, 23 L.Ed. 449; Weston v. Charleston, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 449, 464, 7 L.Ed. 481; Syracuse Plaster Co. v. Agostini Bros. Bldg. Corporation, 169 Misc. 564, 7 N.Y.S.2d 897. It is, however, seldom applied to a criminal prosecution. And it was formerly sometimes restricted to the designation of a proceeding in equity, to distinguish such proceeding from an action at law. Term "suit" has generally been replaced by term "action"; which includes both actions at law and in equity. Fed.R.Civil P. 2. For Ancillary suit and suit in rem see those titles. See also Action; Cause of action; Litigation; Proceeding.

Old English law. The witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. 3 Bl.Comm. 295. See Secta.

Old books mention the word in many connections which are now disused,—at least, in the United States. Thus, "suit" was used of following any one, or in the sense of pursuit; as in the phrase "making fresh suit." It was also used of a petition to the king or lord. "Suit of court" was the attendance which a tenant owed at the court of his lord. "Suit covenant" and "suit custom" seem to have signified a right to one's attendance, or one's obligation to attend, at the lord's court, founded upon a known covenant, or an immemorial usage or practice of ancestors. "Suit regal" was attendance at the sheriff's tourn or leet (his court). "Suit of the king's peace" was pursuing an offender,—one charged with breach of the peace, while "suithold" was a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

Class suits. See Class or representative action.

Derivative suit. See Stockholder's derivative action.

Suit against state. Suit in which relief against the state is sought. See Sovereign immunity; Tort claims acts.

Suit money. Counsel fees allowed or awarded by court to party. An allowance, in the nature of temporary alimony, authorized by statute in some states to be made to a wife on the institution of her suit for divorce, intended to cover the reasonable expenses of the suit and to provide her with means for the efficient preparation and trial of her case. Many federal statutes provide for allowance of attorney fees for actions brought under respective statutes; e.g., actions to recover social security disability benefits. See also American rule; Equal Access to Justice Act.

Suit of a civil nature. A suit for the remedy of a private wrong, called a "civil action". Fed.R.Civil P. 2. See Action.

Suits or proceedings at law or in chancery. Suits instituted and carried or in substantial conformity with the forms and modes prescribed by the common law or by the rules in chancery excluding cases instituted and carried on solely in accordance with statutory provisions. Under current rules practice in the federal and most state courts, there is now only one form of action called a "civil action", which embraces both actions at law and in equity. Fed.R.Civil P. 2.

Suitable. Fit and appropriate for the end in view.

Suitas. Lat. In the civil law, the condition or quality of a suus hseres, or proper heir.

Suite. Those persons who by his authority follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

Suitor. A party who brings an action; a petitioner; a plaintiff. In its ancient sense, "suitor" meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also one who formed part of the secta.

Suitors' deposit account. Formerly suitors in the English court of chancery derived no income from their cash paid into court, unless it was invested at their request and risk. Now, however, it is provided by the court of chancery (funds) act, 1872, that all money paid into court, unless it was invested at their request and risk, shall be placed on deposit and shall bear interest at two per cent. per annum for the benefit of the suitor entitled to it.

Suitors' fee fund. A fund in the English court of chancery into which the fees of suitors in that court were paid, and out of which the salaries of various officers of the court were defrayed.

Sulcus /sulks/. In old English law, a small brook or stream of water.

Sullery /sloiru/. In old English law, a plowland.

Sum. In English law, a summary or abstract; a compendium; a collection. Several of the old law treatises are called "sums." Lord Hale applies the term to summaries of statute law.

The sense in which the term is most commonly used is "money"; a quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely, a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum. U. S. v. Van Auken, 96 U.S. 366, 368, 24 L.Ed. 852.

Sumage /samo/. Toll for carriage on horseback.

Sum certain. A requisite of a negotiable instrument is that it contains an unconditional promise to pay a "sum certain." U.C.C. § 3-104(1)(b). In law of negotiable instruments, the sum payable is a sum certain even though it is to be paid (a) with stated interest or by stated installments; or (b) with stated different rates of interest before and after default or a specified date; or (c) with a stated discount or addition if paid before or after the date fixed for payment; or (d) with exchange or less exchange, whether at a fixed rate or at the current rate; or (e) with costs of collection or an attorney's fee or both upon default. U.C.C. § 3-106(1).

Amount in contract or negotiable instrument, or measure of damages in litigation, that is fixed, settled, exact, or stated. Default judgment may be entered only for a "sum certain," which is a sum susceptible to reliable computation or determined by the court after an accounting. Insurance Co. of North America v. S/S "Hellenic Challenger", D.C.N.Y., 88 F.R.D. 545, 548.

Sum in gross. See in gross.

Summa caritas est facere justitiam singulis, et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit /sama keroset est fisarii jastish(iy)om singyagalas, et ômny têmpory kwôndow naséali fiywarat/. The greatest charity is to do justice to everyone, and at any time whenever it may be necessary.

Summa est lex qua pro religione facit /sama est léks kwô prôw ralîjîyoniy féyset/. That is the highest law which favors religion.

Summa ratio est qua pro religione facit /sama réshy(i)yow est kwô prôw ralîjîyoniy féyset/. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion.

Summarily. Without ceremony or delay, short or concise.

Summary, n. An abridgment; brief; compendium; digest; also a short application to a court or judge, without the formality of a full proceeding.

Summary, adj. Short; concise; immediate; peremptory; off-hand; without a jury; provisional; statutory. The term as used in connection with legal proceedings means a short, concise, and immediate proceeding.

Summary conviction. See Conviction.

SUMMONITIO

Summary courts martial. See Court-Martial.

Summary ejection. See Process (Summary process).

Summary eviction. See Process (Summary process).

Summary judgment. See that title.

Summary jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith; e.g., to commit to prison for contempt. In the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of committing him for trial by a jury.

Summary proceeding. See Proceeding (Summary).

Summary trial. See Proceeding (Summary).

Summary process. See Process.

Summary judgment. Procedural device available for prompt and expeditious disposition of controversy without trial when there is no dispute as to either material fact or inferences to be drawn from undisputed facts, or if only question of law is involved. American State Bank of Killdeer v. Hewson, N.D., 411 N.W.2d 57, 60. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 permits any party to a civil action to move for a summary judgment on a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim when he believes that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that he is entitled to prevail as a matter of law. The motion may be directed toward all or part of a claim or defense and may be made on the basis of the pleadings or other portions of the record in the case or it may be supported by affidavits and a variety of outside material. See also Genuine issue; Material fact.

Summation. See Summing up.

Summing up. On the trial of an action to a jury, a recapitulation by attorneys and, sometimes, judge of the evidence adduced, in order to draw the attention of the jury to the salient points at issue. The counsel for each party has the right of summing up his evidence, if he has adduced any, and the judge sometimes sums up the whole in his charge to the jury. See Closing argument.

Summon. To serve a summons; to cite a defendant to appear in court, of which there was instituted against him, and that he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. See Summons.

Summoneas /samówniyeys/. L. Lat. In old practice, a summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summed to appear in court to answer a suit which has been begun against him; to notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and that he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. See Summons.

Summoners /sámansrz/. Petty officers, who cite and warn persons to appear in any court.

Summonitio /samánísh(i)yow/. L. Lat. In old English practice, a summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court, of which there were various kinds.

Summonitones aut citationes nullse liceant fieri intra palatium regis /sámáníshyôwiyiz ot saytêshyôwiyiz nàliy lísiyent faýrayr intra paléshy(i)yom rîjys/. Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace.
SUMMONITORES SCACCARII

Summunitores scaccarii /səˈmʌnətɔrɪəz skəˈkɛrɪə/.

Officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the court of exchequer.

Summons. Instrument used to commence a civil action or special proceeding and is a means of acquiring jurisdiction over a party. In re Dell, 56 Misc.2d 1017, 290 N.Y.S.2d 287, 289. Writ or process directed to the sheriff or other proper officer, requiring him to notify the person named that an action has been commenced against him in the court from where the process issues, and that he is required to appear, on a day named, and answer the complaint in such action. Upon the filing of the complaint the clerk is required to issue a summons and deliver it for service to the marshal or to a person specially appointed to serve it. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(a). See also Alias summons; Process; Service.

In criminal law, an alternative to arrest generally used for petty or traffic offenses; a written order notifying an individual that he or she has been charged with an offense. A summons directs the person to appear in court to answer the charge. It is used primarily in instances of low risk, where the person will not be required to appear at a later date. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4, 9.

Summons ad respondendum /səˈmʌnz əd rɪˈspɔndəndəm/. Process issuing in a civil case at law notifying defendant therein named that he must appear on day designated and thereupon make answer to plaintiff's statement of his cause of action.

Summons and order. In English practice, the summons is the application to a common-law judge at chambers in reference to a pending action, and upon it the judge or master makes the order.

Summum jus /səˈmʌm jəs/. Lat. Strict right; extreme right. The extremity or rigor of the law. See Apex juris.

Summum jus, summum injuria; summum lex, summum crux /səˈmʌm jəs, səˈmʌm ɪnˈdʒɪriə; səˈmʌm lɛks, səˈmʌm kɾəks/. Extreme law (rigor of law) is the greatest injury; strict law is great punishment. That is, insistence upon the full measure of a man's strict legal rights may work the greatest injury to others, unless equity can aid.

Sunshine law. Laws which require that meetings of governmental agencies and departments be open to public with reasonable access to the records of such proceedings. 5 U.S.C.A. § 552b. See also Freedom of Information Act.

Suo nomine /sɔʊ oʊˈnɪmə/. Lat. In his own name.

Suo periculo /sɔʊ oʊ ˈpɜrɪkwələʊ/. Lat. At his own peril or risk.

Super /səˈpɜrə/. Lat. Upon; above; over; higher, as in quantity, quality and degree; more than; as in super-essential, super-natural or super-standard.

Super altum mare /səˈpɜrə ɔltəm mərə/. On the high sea.

Supercargo /səˈpɜrə ˈkɔrdə/. In maritime law, a person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Superficiarius /səˈpɜrə fɪʃəˈriərəs/. Lat. In the civil law, he who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. In other words, a tenant on ground-rent.

Superficies /səˈpɜrə fɪʃəˈsiərəs/. Lat. In the civil law, the alienation by the owner of the surface of the soil of all rights necessary for building on the surface, a yearly rent being generally reserved; also a building or erection.
Superficies solo cedit /s(y)úwpɔrʃiʃiːjyz sówlow sỳydst/. Whatever is attached to the land forms part of it.

Super fidem chartarum, mortuis testibus, erit ad patriam de necessitate recurrencium /s(y)úwpɔr fáydom kárteːɾam, mórtýwɔs tèsˈtəbaː, èɾrat að pǽtriyam diy násɛsˈtɛtyːɾə rɛkʃrɛndam/. The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury, when the witnesses are dead.

Superfund. Popular name for the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, 42 U.S.C.A. § 9601 et seq., which holds responsible parties liable for the cost of cleaning up hazardous waste sites. The name derives from a trust fund initially created by the Act for meeting clean up costs pending reimbursement from responsible parties. Many states have passed similar laws. Cf. McKinney’s Environmental Conservation Law §§ 71-2701 et seq. See also Toxic waste.

Superflua non nocent /s(y)úwpɔrʃiːjyəw wɔn nɔn ˈnɔːsənt/. Superfluities do not prejudice. Surplusage does not vitiate.

Superinductio /s(y)úwpɔrɪndʊˈkʃiːjow /. Lat. In the civil law, a species of obliteration.

Superinstitution. The institution of one in an office to which another has been previously instituted; as where A. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and B. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another.

A church being full by institution, if a second institution is granted to the same church this is a superinstitution.

Superintend. To have charge and direction of; to direct the course and oversee the details; to regulate with authority; to manage; to oversee with the power of direction; to take care of with authority.

Superintendent. One who superintends or has the oversight and charge of something with the power of direction; a manager.

Superior, n. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank.

In estates, some are superior to others. An estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the "superior" or "dominant," and the other, the "inferior" or "servient," estate.

In the feudal law, until the statute quia emptores precluded subinfeudations (q.v.), the tenant who granted part of his estate to be held of and from himself as lord was called a "superior."

Superior courts. Courts of general or extensive jurisdiction, as distinguished from the inferior courts. As the official style of a tribunal, the term "superior court" bears a different meaning in different states. In some it is a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the trial courts and the chief appellate court; elsewhere it is the designation of the trial courts. See also Court.

Superior fellow servant. A term introduced into the law of negligence, and meaning one higher in authority than another, and whose commands and directions his inferiors are bound to respect and obey, though engaged at the same line of work.

Superior force. In the law of bailments and of negligence, an uncontrollable and irresistible force, of human agency, producing results which the person in question could not avoid; equivalent to the Latin phrase "vis major." See Vis.

Superjurare /s(y)úwpɔrjʊrɛrɪˈlriː/. Over-swearing. A term anciently used when a criminal endeavored to excuse himself by his own oath or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses.

Supernumeraril /s(y)úwpɔrnʌməˈrɛriːjəɪj/. Lat. In Roman law, advocates who were not registered or enrolled and did not belong to the college of advocates. They were not attached to any local jurisdiction. See Statutl.

Superoneratio /s(y)úwpɔrənəˈrɛʃiːjow/. Lat. Surcharging a common; i.e., putting in beasts of a number or kind other than the right of common allows.

Superoneratione pasture /s(y)úwpɔrənəˈrɛʃiːjɔnɪˈpəsətʃuː/. A judicial writ that lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts.

Superplusagium /s(y)úwpɔrpəˈlʌsəjɪˈjəjum/. In old English law, overplus; surplus; residue or balance.

Super prarogativa regis /s(y)úwpɔr prɔrɔˈɡɔtstɛˈvə riˈjɪs/. A writ which formerly lay against the king’s tenant’s widow for marrying without the royal license.

Supersede /s(y)úwpɔrˈsiːdəl. Obliterate, set aside, annul, replace, make void, ineffectacious or useless, repeal. To set aside, render unnecessary, suspend, or stay.

Supersedes /s(y)úwpɔrˈsiːdiːəs/. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law. A suspension of the power of a trial court to issue an execution on judgment appealed from, or, if writ of execution has issued, it is a prohibition emanating from court of appeal against execution of writ. Stewart v. Hurt, 9 Cal.2d 39, 68 P.2d 726, 727. An auxiliary process designed to supersede enforcement of trial court’s judgment brought up for review, and its application is limited to the judgment from which an appeal is taken. Mascot Pictures Corp. v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, 3 Cal.App.2d 559, 40 P.2d 272.

Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come in his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings," and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment.

Superseding cause. An act of a third person or other force which by its intervention prevents the actor from being liable for harm to another which his antecedent negligence is a substantial factor in bringing about. Donegan v. Denney, 457 S.W.2d 953, 958. An intervening act or acts of negligence which operate to insulate an antecedent tort-feasor from liability for negligently causing a dangerous condition which results in injury. Hargrove v. Frommeyer & Co., 229 Pa.Super. 298, 323 A.2d 300, 304. See also intervening cause; Supervening negligence.

Super statuto. A writ, upon the statute 1 Edw. III, c. 12, that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

Super statuto de articulis cleri. A writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands ancienly belonging to the church.

Super statuto facto pour seneschal et marshal de roy, etc. A writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

Super statuto versus servantes et laboratores. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

Superstitious use. In English law, when lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and towards the maintenance of a priest or chaplain to say mass, for the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such a church or elsewhere, to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory,—in such cases the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses to such purposes as are truly charitable. The doctrine has no recognition in this country; and a bequest to support a Catholic priest, and perhaps other uses void in England, would not be considered as superstitious uses.

Supervening cause. A new effective cause which, operating independently of anything else, becomes proximate cause of accident. See also intervening cause; Superseding cause.

Supervening negligence. To come within the doctrine of last clear chance or supervening negligence, four conditions must coexist, to wit: (1) the injured party has already come into a position of peril; (2) the injuring party then or thereafter becomes, or in the exercise of ordinary prudence ought to have become, aware, not only of that fact, but also that the party in peril either reasonably cannot escape from it or apparently will not avail himself of opportunities open to him for doing so; (3) the injuring party subsequently has the opportunity by the exercise of reasonable care to save the other from harm; and (4) he fails to exercise such care. See also intervening cause; Last clear chance doctrine; Superseding cause.

Supervise. To have general oversight over, to superintend or to inspect. See Supervisor.

Supervision. An act of occupation of supervising; inspection.

Supervisor. A surveyor or overseer. Also, in some states, the chief officer of a town; one of a board of county officers.

In a broad sense, one having authority over others, to superintend and direct.

The term "supervisor" means any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to have their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(11).

Supervisory control. Control exercised by courts to compel inferior tribunals to act within their jurisdiction, to prohibit them from acting outside their jurisdiction, and to reverse their extrajurisdictional acts. See Mandamus.

Supplemental. That which is added to a thing or act to complete it. See also Amendment.

Supplemental act. That which supplies a deficiency, adds to or completes, or extends that which is already in existence without changing or modifying the original. Act designed to improve an existing statute by adding something thereto without changing the original text.

Supplemental affidavit. An affidavit made in addition to a previous one, in order to supply some deficiency in it.

Supplemental answer. One which was filed for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed. See Supplemental pleading.

Supplemental bill. In equity pleading, a bill filed in addition to an original bill, in order to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment; or, for purpose of bringing into controversy matter occurring after original bill was filed.
Supplemental bill in nature of bill of review. A type of bill employed to invoke jurisdiction of court of chancery to recall one of its adjudications made while some fact existed which, if before court, would have prevented rendition of final decree, and which, without negligence of party presenting it, was not earlier presented to chancellor.

Supplemental claim. A further claim which is filed when further relief is sought after the bringing of a claim. See Supplemental complaint.

Supplemental complaint. Under the Rules of Civil Procedure in the federal and most state courts, is a claim filed in an action to bring to the notice of the court and the opposite party matters occurring after the commencement of action and which may affect the rights asserted. Fed.R.Civil P. 15(d).

It is distinguished from an "amended complaint," in that an "amended complaint" is one which corrects merely faults and errors of a pleading.

Supplemental pleading. One consisting of facts arising since filing of the original. Supplemental pleadings relate to occurrences, transactions and events which may have happened since the date of the pleadings sought to be supplemented. Fed.R.Civil P. 15(d).

McKnight v. McKnight, 25 N.C.App. 246, 212 S.E.2d 902, 904. Compare Amendment (Practice and pleading).

Supplementary. Added as a supplement; additional; being, or serving as, a supplement.

Supplementary proceedings. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the discovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. Post-judgment remedies provided by statute or procedural rules that allow discovery against persons who might have information on the whereabouts of nonexempt assets of the debtor (supplemental discovery) and that facilitate application of these assets in satisfaction of the judgment (supplemental relief). See also Execution.

After an execution on a judgment has issued, the judgment creditor may commence new proceedings to collect the debt. This process includes a summons to the judgment debtor to appear and to submit to an examination as to his property and the court is empowered under statutes to enter an order for payment, for violation of which the debtor may be cited for contempt and imprisoned; e.g. M.G.L.A. (Mass.) c. 246, § 6; Mass. R.Civil P. 43(b). See also Fed.R. Civil P. 69(a).

Supplementary oath. See Oath.

Suppliant /səˈplɪnt/ . The actor in, or party preferring, a petition of right.

Supplicatio /səˈplɪkəˈʃən/ . Lat. In the civil law, a petition for pardon of a first offense; also a petition for reversal of judgment; also equivalent to "duplicatio," which corresponds to the common law rejoinder.

Supplicavit /səˈplɪkəˈvət/ . In English law, a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace. It is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting in the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bl.Comm. 253.

Supplicium /ˈsʌplɪkʃəm/ . Lat. In the civil law, punishment; corporal punishment for crime. Death was called "ultimum supplicium," the last or extreme penalty.

Supplier. Any person engaged in the business of making a consumer product directly or indirectly available to consumers; includes all persons in the chain of production and distribution of a consumer product including the producer or manufacturer, component supplier, wholesaler, distributor, and retailer. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301.

Supplies. Means of provision or relief; stores; available aggregate of things needed or demanded in amount sufficient for a given use or purpose; accumulated stores reserved for distribution; sufficiency for use or need; a quantity of something supplied or on hand.

In English law, in parliamentary proceedings the sums of money which are annually voted by the house of commons for the maintenance of the crown and the various public services.

Supply. To furnish with what is wanted; available aggregate of things needed or demanded; anything yielded or afforded to meet a want; and the act of furnishing with what is wanted. Clayton v. Bridgeport Mach. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 787, 789.

Support, v. Furnishing funds or means for maintenance; to maintain; to provide for; to enable to continue; to carry on. To provide a means of livelihood. To vindicate, to maintain, to defend, to uphold with aid or countenance.

Support, n. That which furnishes a livelihood; a source or means of living; subsistence, sustenance, maintenance, or living. In a broad sense the term includes all such means of living as would enable one to live in the degree of comfort suitable and becoming to his station of life. It is said to include anything requisite to housing, feeding, clothing, health, proper recreation, vacation, traveling expense, or other proper cognate purposes; also, proper care, nursing, and medical attendance in sickness, and suitable burial at death. See also Maintenance.

Support also signifies the right to have one's ground supported so that it will not cave in, when an adjoining owner makes an excavation. This support is of two kinds, lateral and subjacent. Lateral support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies next to it. Subjacent support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies under it.

See also Family expense statutes; Legal duty; Legal obligation; Maintenance; Necessaries; Nonsupport; Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act; Separate maintenance.

Crime of non-support. A person commits a misdemeanor or if he persistently fails to provide support which he can provide and which he knows he is legally obliged to provide to a spouse, child or other dependent. Model Penal Code, § 230.5.

Ground for divorce. Non-support of spouse, if able to so provide, is a ground for divorce under many state statutes.

Legal duty. Most all states have statutes which impose obligation to support spouse and children; e.g., "Every individual shall support his or her spouse and child, and shall support his or her parent when in need." Calif. Civil Code, § 242.

Intestate enforcement. The majority of states have adopted the "Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act" as a means of intestate enforcement of support obligations.

Supposition. A conjecture based upon possibility or probability that a thing could or may have occurred, without proof that it did occur.

Suppress. To put a stop to a thing actually existing; to prohibit, put down; to prevent, subdue, or end by force. To "suppress evidence" is to keep it from being used in a trial by showing that it was either gathered illegally or that it is irrelevant. See Suppression hearing; Suppression of evidence.

Suppression. Conscious effort to control and conceal unacceptable impulses, thoughts, feelings or acts.

Suppression hearing. A pretrial proceeding in criminal cases in which a defendant seeks to prevent the introduction of evidence alleged to have been seized illegally. The ruling of the court then prevails at the trial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1(a), 12, and 41. See also Exclusionary Rule.

Suppression of evidence. The ruling of a trial judge to the effect that evidence sought to be admitted should be excluded because it was illegally acquired. Motions to suppress illegally obtained evidence are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1(a), 12, and 41. See also Exclusionary Rule; Motion to suppress.

The crime of compounding a felony by refusing to give evidence or to testify in a criminal proceeding.

Concept of "suppression" as that term is used in rule suppressio veri is to prohibit, put down; to prevent, subdue, or end by force. To "suppress evidence" is to keep it from being used in a trial by showing that it was either gathered illegally or that it is irrelevant. See Suppression hearing; Suppression of evidence.

Suppression veri /suprés(i)yiow viray, sagjsiestyow folsay/. Lat. Suppression of the truth is [equivalent to] the expression of what is false.

Suppression veri, suggestio falsi /saprés(i)yiow viray, sugjsiestyow folsay/. Suppression of the truth is [equivalent to] the suggestion of what is false.

Supra /s(y)uwpra/. Lat. Above; upon. This word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like "ante;" it is also the initial word of several Latin phrases.

Supra protest /s(y)uwpra prówtést/. See Protest.

Supra-riparian /s(y)uwpra-reápəriyən/. Upper riparian; higher up the stream. This term is applied to the estate, rights, or duties of a riparian proprietor whose land is situated at a point nearer the source of the stream than the estate with which it is compared.

Supremacy. The state of being supreme, or in the highest station of power; paramount authority; sovereignty; sovereign power.

Act of supremacy. The English statute 1 Eliz., c. 1, whereby the supremacy and autonomy of the crown in spiritual or ecclesiastical matters was declared and established.

Oath of supremacy. An oath to uphold the supreme power of the kingdom of England in the person of the reigning sovereign.

Supremacy clause. The clause of Art. VI of the U.S. Constitution which declares that all laws made in pursuance of the Constitution and all treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the "supreme law of the land" and shall enjoy legal superiority over any conflicting provision of a State constitution or law. See also Preemption.

Suprema potestas seipsam dissolvere potest /saprīyəma paťěstəs siy ipsam dazölvari pówtəst/. Supreme power can dissolve itself.

Supreme. Superior to all other things.

Supreme court. An appellate court existing in most of the states. In the federal court system, and in most states, it is the highest appellate court or court of last resort. In others (such as New York) the supreme court is a court of general original jurisdiction, possessing also (in New York) some appellate jurisdiction, but not the court of last resort. See also Court of Appeals.

Supreme court of errors. Formerly, the court of last resort in Connecticut, now called "Supreme Court".

Supreme Court of the United States. The U.S. Supreme Court comprises the Chief Justice of the United States and such number of Associate Justices as may be fixed by Congress. Under that authority, and by virtue of the act of June 25, 1948 (62 Stat. 869; 28 U.S.C.A. 1), the number of Associate Justices is eight. Power to nominate the Justices is vested in the President of the United States, and appointments are made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Article III, section 1, of the Constitution further provides that "The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office." See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq.

Supreme Judicial Court. Highest appellate court in Maine and Massachusetts.

Supreme law of the land. See Supremacy clause.

Supreme power. The highest authority in a state, all other powers in it being inferior thereto.

Supremus /suprimas/. Lat. Last; the last.

Supremus est quem nemo sequitur /suprimas est kwem niymow sekwatsr/. He is last whom no one follows.

Sur /suer/. Fr. On; upon; over. In the titles of real actions "sur" was used to point out what the writ was founded upon. Thus, a real action brought by the owner of a reversion or seigniory, in certain cases where his tenant repudiated his tenure, was called "a writ of right sur disseisin"; So, a writ of entry sur disseisin was a real action to recover the possession of land from a disseisor.

Surcharge, n. An overcharge; an exaction, impost, or encumbrance beyond what is just and right, or beyond one's authority or power. Term may also refer to a second or further mortgage.

The amount with which a court may charge a fiduciary who has breached his trust through intentional or negligent conduct. The imposition of personal liability on a fiduciary for such conduct.

Overprint on a stamp that changes the denomination.

An additional tax or cost onto an existing tax, cost, or charge. See Surtax.

Surcharge, v. The imposition of personal liability on a fiduciary for willful or negligent misconduct in the administration of his fiduciary duties.

In equity practice, to show that a particular item, in favor of the party surcharging, ought to have been included, but was not, in an account which is alleged to be settled or complete. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging. Perkins v. Hart, 24 U.S. 237, 6 L.Ed. 463.

The imposition of an additional tax, impost, or cost. See Surtax.

In old English law, to put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain or than the party has a right to do. 3 Bl.Comm. 237.

Second surcharge. In old English law, the surcharge of a common a second time, by the same defendant against whom the common was before admeasured, and for which the writ of second surcharge was given by the statute of Westminster, 2. 3 Bl.Comm. 239.

Surcharge and falsify. This phrase, as used in the courts of chancery, denotes the liberty which these courts will occasionally grant to a plaintiff, who disputes an account which the defendant alleges to be settled, to scrutinize particular items therein without opening the entire account. The showing an item for which credit ought to have been given, but was not, is to surcharge the account; the proving an item to have been inserted wrongly is to falsify the account.

Sur cui ante divorium /suer kyuuway ântiy davor-sh(iy)am/. See Cui ante divorium.

Sur cui in vita /suer kyuuway in vayta/. A writ that lay for the heir of a woman whose husband had aliened her land in fee, and she had omitted to bring the writ of cui in vita for the recovery thereof; in which case her heir might have this writ against the tenant after her decease. See Cui in vita.

Sur disclaimer /suer desklâymar/. A writ in the nature of a writ of right brought by the lord against a tenant who had disclaimed his tenure, to recover the land.

Surdus /sûrdas/. Lat. In the civil law, deaf; a deaf person. Surdus et mutus, a deaf and dumb person.

Surenchère /syuronshehr/. In French law, a party desirous of repurchasing property at auction before the court, can, by offering one-tenth or one-sixth, according to the case, in addition to the price realized at the sale, oblige the property to be put up once more at auction. This bid upon a bid is called a "Surenchère."

Surety. One who at the request of another, and for the purpose of securing to him a benefit, becomes responsible for the performance by the latter of some act in favor of a third person, or hypothecates property as security therefor. One who undertakes to pay money or to do any other act in event that his principal fails therein. A person who is primarily liable for payment of debt or performance of obligation of another. Branch Banking and Trust Co. v. Creasy, 301 N.C. 44, 269 S.E.2d 117, 122. One bound with his principal for the payment of a sum of money or for the performance of some duty or promise and who is entitled to be indemnified by some one who ought to have paid or performed if payment or performance be enforced against him. Term includes a guarantor. U.C.C. § 1–201(40). See also Suretyship; Suretyship, contract of.

Guarantor and surety compared. A surety and guarantor have this in common, that they are both bound for another person; yet there are points of difference between them. A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held ordinarily to every known default of his principal. On the other hand, the contract of guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often founded on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal. The original contract of the principal is not the guarantor's contract, and the guarantor is not bound to take notice of its nonperformance. The surety joins in the same promise as his principal and is primarily liable; the guarantor makes a separate and individual promise and is only secondarily liable. His liability is contingent on the default of his principal, and he only becomes abso-
SURETY

Suretyship. The relationship among three parties whereby one person engages to be answerable for debt, default, or miscarriage of another; a guarantor is an insurer of the solvency of the principal debtor or of his ability to pay. Under U.C.C., term "surety" includes a guarantor. § 1-201(40). See also Guarantor.

Surety bond. See Bond.

Surety company. A company, usually incorporated, whose business is to assume the responsibility of a surety on the bonds of officers, trustees, executors, guardians, etc., in consideration of a fee proportioned to the amount of the security required.

Surety insurance. This phrase is generally used as synonymous with "guaranty insurance."

Surety of the peace. A species of preventive justice, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or that such offense as is apprehended shall not take place, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior.

Suretyship. The relationship among three parties whereby one person (the surety) guarantees payment of a debtor's debt owed to a creditor or acts as a co-debtor. Generally speaking, "the relation which exists where one person has undertaken an obligation and another person is also under an obligation or other duty to the obligee, who is entitled to but one performance, and as between the two who are bound, one rather than the other should perform." Restatement of Security, § 82 (1941). See also Surety; Suretyship, contract of.

Suretyship, contract of. Contract whereby one party engages to be answerable for debt, default, or miscarriage of another and arises when one is liable to pay debt or discharge obligation, and party is entitled to indemnity from person who should have made the payment. In the first instance before surety was so compelled. A contract whereby one person engages to be answerable for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. An accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation, if the debtor does not. A lending of credit to aid a principal having insufficient credit of his own; the one expected to pay, having the primary obligation, being the "principal," and the one bound to pay, if the principal does not, being the "surety." See also Surety.

Suretyship defenses. Defenses of a surety against the creditor that are dependent on the surety's status as such and that are tied to the conduct of the creditor that alters or modifies the principal debtor's obligation or impairs collateral for the obligation.

Surface. This term, when used in law, is seldom, if ever, limited to mere geometrical superfi cies, although when used without any qualifying phrase in a deed, it ordinarily signifies only the superficial part of land. And when employed in connection with mining, it usually means that part of the earth or geologic section lying over the minerals in question, unless the contract or conveyance otherwise defines it. Thus, where the surface is granted to one and the underlying coal to another, the "surface" includes the soil and waters which lie above and are superincumbent on the coal. Nevertheless, a conveyance of the "surface," except the oil and gas rights in the land, may be deemed, under certain circumstances, to constitute a conveyance of all the land (including coal deposits), except only the oil and gas rights specifically reserved.

The term "surface," when used as the subject of a conveyance, is not a definite one capable of a definition of universal application, but is susceptible of limitation according to the intention of the parties using it; and in determining its meaning, regard may be had, not only to the language of the deed in which it occurs, but also to the situation of the parties, the business in which they were engaged, and to the substance of the transaction.

Surface rights. A right or easement granted with mineral rights, enabling the possessor of the mineral rights to drill or mine through the surface.

Surface waters. See Water.

Surgeon. One whose profession or occupation is to cure diseases, defects, or injuries of the body by manual operation; one who practices surgery.

Surgery. Greek words signifying the hand and work. Originally, it was part of the profession of barbers, but later was taken up by physicians and now is recognized as that branch of medical science which treats of mechanical or operative measures for healing diseases, deformities, disorders, or injuries. State ex rel. Beck v. Gleason, 148 Kan. 1, 79 P.2d 911.

The practice of medicine, in contradistinction to the practice of surgery, denotes the treatment of disease by the administration of drugs or other sanative substances. There cannot however be a complete separation between the practice of medicine and surgery; the principles of both are the same throughout, and no one is qualified to practice either who does not properly understand the fundamental principles of both.

Surmise. Idea based on weak evidence, conjecture.

Formerly where a defendant pleaded a local custom, for instance, a custom of the city of London, it was necessary for him to "surmise," that is, to suggest that such custom should be certified to the court by the mouth of the recorder, and without such a surmise the issue was to be tried by the country as other issues of fact are.

Something offered to a court to move it to grant a prohibition, audita querela, or other writ grantable thereon.

In ecclesiastical law, an allegation in a libel. A collateral surmise is a surmise of some fact not appearing in the libel.

Sur mortgage /sərˈmɔrgət/. Upon a mortgage. In some states the method of enforcing the security of a mortgage, upon default, is by a writ of "scire facias sur mortgage," which requires the defendant (mortgagor) to show cause why it should not be foreclosed.

Surname. The family name; the name over and above the Christian name. The part of a name which is not given in baptism. The name of a person which is derived from the common name of his parents. In re Faith's Application, 22 N.J.Misc. 412, 39 A.2d 638, 640. The last name; the name common to all members of a family.

Surplusage. Extraneous, impertinent, superfluous, or unnecessary matter. Matter in any instrument which is unnecessary to its meaning and does not affect its validity; whatever is extraneous, impertinent, superfluous or unnecessary, and in procedure means matter which is not necessary or relevant to the case. Morrow v. Morrow, Tex.Civ.App., 382 S.W.2d 785, 786.

The remainder or surplus of money left. See also Surplus.

Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action. Any allegation without which the pleading would yet be adequate. On motion, the court may order stricken from the pleadings any insufficient defense, redundant, immaterial, or scandalous matter. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).

Surplusage does no harm.

Surprise. Act of taking unawares; sudden confusion or perplexity. In its legal acceptance, denotes an unforeseen disappointment against which ordinary prudence would not have afforded protection.

On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or his legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding because of surprise. Fed.R.Civil P. 60(b).

Equitable relief. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. The situation in which a party is placed without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests.
Anything which happens without the agency or fault of the party affected by it, tending to disturb and confuse the judgment, or to mislead him, of which the opposite party takes an undue advantage, is in equity a surprise, and one species of fraud for which relief is granted. There does not seem anything technical or peculiar in the word "surprise". Where a court relieves on the ground of surprise, it does so upon the ground that the party has been taken unawares, and that he has acted without due deliberation, and under confused and sudden impressions.

Ground for new trial. As a ground for a new trial, that situation in which a party is unexpectedly placed without fault on his part, which will work injury to his interests. He must show himself to have been diligent at every stage of the proceedings, and that the event was one which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. A situation or result produced, having a substantive basis of fact and reason, from which the court may justly deduce, as a legal conclusion, that the party will suffer a judicial wrong if not relieved from his mistake. The general rule is that when a party or his counsel is "taken by surprise," in a material point or circumstance which could not have been anticipated, and when want of skill, care, or attention cannot be justly imputed, and injustice has been done, a new trial should be granted.

Surrender. To give back; yield; render up; restore; and in law, the giving up of an estate to the person who has it in reversion or remainder, so as to merge it in the larger estate. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, wherein the estate for life or years may be merged in the remainder. The act, by bail or sureties in a recognizance, of giving up their principal again into custody, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.

Surrender by bail. The act, by bail or sureties in a recognizance, of giving up their principal again into custody, in their own discharge.

Surrender by operation of law. This phrase is properly applied to cases where the tenant for life or years has been a party to some act the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate continued to exist. An implied surrender occurs when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands.

Any acts which are equivalent to an agreement on the part of the tenant to abandon, and on the part of the landlord to resume the possession of the demised premises, amount to a "surrender by operation of law." The rule may be said to be that a surrender is created by operation of law, when the parties to a lease do some act so inconsistent with the subsisting relation of landlord and tenant as to imply that they have both agreed to consider the surrender as made.

Surrender. The person to whom a surrender is made.

Surrender of a preference. In bankruptcy practice, the surrender to the assignee in bankruptcy, by a preferred creditor, of anything he may have received under his preference and any advantage it gives him, which he must do before he can share in the dividend. The word as generally defined may denote either compelled or voluntary action. Keppel v. Bank, 197 U.S. 356, 25 S.Ct. 443, 49 L.Ed. 790. See Bankruptcy Code, § 547.

Surrender of charter. A corporation created by charter may give up or "surrender" its charter to the people, unless the charter was granted under a statute, imposing indefeasible duties on the bodies to which it applies.

Surrender of copyhold. The mode of conveying or transferring copyhold property from one person to another by means of a surrender, which consisted in the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the lord for such purposes as were expressed in the surrender. The process in most manors was for the tenant to come to the steward, either in court or out of court, or else to two customary tenants of the same manor, provided there was a custom to warrant it, and there, by delivering up a rod, a glove, or other symbol, as the custom directs, to resign into the hands of the lord, by the hands and acceptance of his steward, or of the said two tenants, all his interest and title to the estate, in trust, to be again granted out by the lord to such persons and for such uses as were named in the surrender, and as the custom of the manor would warrant. See Admittance; Copyhold.
Surrender or criminals. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. See Extradition; Rendition.

Surrenderor. One who makes a surrender. One who yielded up a copyhold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

Surrender to uses of will. Formerly a copyhold interest would not pass by will unless it had been surrendered to the use of the will. By English St. 55 Geo. III., c. 192, this was no longer necessary.

Surrender value. In insurance, the current value of a policy which will be paid to the policyholder when he elects to surrender the policy.

Surreptitious /səhɑːptɪtʃəs/. Stealthily or fraudulently done, taken away, or introduced.

Surrogate /sɜːrɡrɑːt/. The name given in some of the states to the judge or judicial officer who has jurisdiction over the administration of probate matters, guardianships, etc. In other states he is called judge of probate, register, judge of the orphans’ court, etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county. See Surrogate court.

In English law, one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another, as by a bishop, chancellor, judge, etc.; especially an officer appointed to dispense licenses to marry without banns.

Surrogate court. Name of court in certain states with jurisdiction similar to that of probate court.

In New York the Surrogate’s Court has jurisdiction over all actions and proceedings relating to the affairs of decedents, probate of wills, administration of estates and actions and proceedings arising thereunder or pertaining thereto, guardianship of the property of minors, and such other actions and proceedings, not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the supreme court, as may be provided by law.

Surrogate mother. A woman who is artificially inseminated with the semen of another woman’s husband. She conceives a child, carries the child to term, and after the birth assigns her parental rights to the birth father and his wife. Matter of Baby M, 109 N.J. 396, 537 A.2d 1227, 1234. See Surrogate parenting agreement.

Surrogate parent. A person other than a parent who stands in loco parentis to the child by virtue of his or her voluntary assumption of parental rights and responsibilities. The person appointed by a juvenile court as a child’s advocate in the educational decision-making process in place of the child’s natural parents or guardian.

Surrogate parenting agreement. Agreement wherein a woman agrees to be artificially inseminated with the semen of another woman’s husband; she is to conceive a child, carry the child to term and after the birth, assign her parental rights to the birth father and his wife. The intent of the contract is that the child’s birth mother will thereafter be forever separated from her child. The wife is to adopt the child, and she and the birth father are to be regarded as the child’s parents for all purposes. Such contracts have been held illegal and invalid where a woman agrees to act as a surrogate for payment of money with a binding agreement to assign her parental rights to her child. Matter of Baby M, 109 N.J. 396, 537 A.2d 1227, 1234-35.

Surround. To inclose on all sides; to encompass.

Surrounding circumstances. Such as may permit inference of culpability on part of defendant under res ipsa loquitur rule, refers not to circumstances directly tending to show lack of care, but only to mere neutral circumstances of control and management by defendant, which may, when explained, appear to be entirely consistent with due care. Hepp v. Quickel Auto & Supply Co., 37 N.M. 525, 25 P.2d 197.

Surmise /sɜːrˈsaɪz/. L. Fr. In old English law, neglect; omission; default; cessation.

Sursum reddere /sɜːrˈsʌm rɪˈdɛrə/. Lat. In old conveyancing, to render up; to surrender.

Sursumredditto /sɜːrˈsʌm rɛdɪˈtʃioʊ/. Lat. A surrender.

Surtax. Any tax that is levied in addition to some “normal” tax rate. An additional tax on what has already been taxed. A tax on a tax; for example: if person must pay a hundred dollar tax on a one thousand dollar income (ten percent), a ten percent surtax would be an additional ten dollars, not an additional hundred dollars.

Surtax exemption. The portion of taxable income not subject to the surtax.

Surveillance /sərvən(ə)ls/. Oversight, superintendence, supervision. Police investigative technique involving visual or electronic observation or listening directed at a person or place (e.g., stakeout, tailing of suspects, wiretapping). Its objective is to gather evidence of a crime or merely to accumulate intelligence about suspected criminal activity. See also Eavesdropping; Pen register; Wiretapping.

Survey, v. To survey land is to ascertain corners, boundaries, and divisions, with distances and directions, and not necessarily to compute areas included within defined boundaries. To appraise as to value or condition.

Survey, n. The process by which a parcel of land is measured and its boundaries and contents ascertained; also a map, plat, or statement of the result of such survey, with the courses and distances and the quantity of the land. See also Corner (Lost corner); Government survey system; Meander lines.

An investigation or examination. In insurance law, the term has acquired a general meaning, inclusive of what is commonly called the "application," which contains the questions propounded on behalf of the company, and the answers of the assured.

Polling or questioning of public regarding their views on issues, candidates, etc.
Survive. To continue to live or exist beyond the life, or Survival actions. Term refers to actions for personal Survivor. One who survives another; one who outlives
Surviving spouse. The spouse who outlives (survives) Surveyor. One who makes surveys, determines area of Survival statutes. Statutory provision for the survival, Survivor of the port. Formerly, a revenue officer of Survey of a vessel. A statement of its present condition.
Chicago S. S. Lines v. U. S. Lloyds, C.C.A.II., 12 F.2d 733, 737. A public document, looked to both by underwriters and owners, as affording the means of ascertaining, at the time and place, the state and condition of the ship and other property at hazard.
Topographical survey. A survey of land to determine its elevation levels in relation to sea level.
Surveyor. One who makes surveys, determines area of portion of earth's surface, length and direction of boundary lines, and contour of surface.
Surveyor of the port. Formerly, a revenue officer of the United States appointed for each of the principal ports of entry, whose duties chiefly concerned the importations at his station and the determination of their amount and valuation. Such office was abolished in 1953. See Customs Service.
Survival actions. Term refers to actions for personal injuries which by statute survives death of injured person. Britt v. Sears, 150 Ind.App. 487, 277 N.E.2d 20, 23. An action or cause of action which does not become extinguished with the death of the party claiming the action. See Survival statutes; Wrongful death statutes.
Survival statutes. Statutory provision for the survival, after death of the injured person, of certain causes of action for injury to the person whether death results from the injury or from some other cause. The cause of action which survives is for the wrong to the injured person. A type of statute, that allows an action to continue, notwithstanding the death of the one who originally had a right to bring the action. Such a right usually may be enforced by or against the estate of the decedent. Some survival statutes cover death of both injured party (plaintiff) and death of defendant. See also Wrongful death statutes.
Survive. To continue to live or exist beyond the life, or existence of; to live through in spite of; live on after passing through; to remain alive; exist in force or operation beyond any period or event specified.
Surviving. Remaining alive. Living beyond the life of another or beyond the happening of some event so as to be entitled to a distribution of property or income. See Survival actions.
Surviving corporation. The corporation which, through a merger or takeover, acquires the assets and liabilities of another corporation.
Surviving spouse. The spouse who outlives (survives) the other spouse. Term commonly found in statutes dealing with probate, administration of estates and estate and inheritance taxes.
A taxpayer classification which, generally, describes an unmarried taxpayer whose spouse died within either of the past two taxable years and who provides a home for his dependent(s). I.R.C. § 2(a).
Survivor. One who survives another; one who outlives another; one who lives beyond some happening; one of two or more persons who lives after the death of the other or others. The word "survivor," however, in connection with the power of one of two trustees to act, is used not only with reference to a condition arising where one of such trustees dies, but also as indicating a trustee who continues to administer the trust after his cotrustee is disqualified, has been removed, renounces, or refuses to act.
Survivorship. The living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others. Survivorship is where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it. United States v. Jacobs, 306 U.S. 363, 59 S.Ct. 551, 555, 83 L.Ed. 768. A feature of joint tenancy and tenancy by the entirety, whereby the surviving co-owner takes the entire interest in preference to heirs or devisees of the deceased co-owner. See also Presumption of survivorship; Tenancy (Joint tenancy; Tenancy by the entirety).
Survivorship annuity. Type of annuity contract which provides for payments beyond the life of the annuitant, as for example, to a widow of the annuitant.
Susceptible. Capable.
Suspect. To have a slight or even vague idea concerning— not necessarily involving knowledge or belief or likelihood. "Suspect" with reference to probable cause as grounds for arrest without warrant is commonly used in place of the word believe. A person reputed or suspected to be involved in a crime. See also Probable cause; Suspicion.
Suspect classifications. The Court will employ the "strict scrutiny" standard under the Equal Protection Clause in determining the legitimacy of classifications that are based upon a trait which itself seems to contravene established constitutional principles so that any purposeful use of the classification may be deemed "suspect." Examples include race, sex, national origin and alienage (with exceptions). Matter of C.H., 210 Mont. 184, 683 P.2d 931, 938.
Suspend. To interrupt; to cause to cease for a time; to postpone; to stay, delay, or hinder; to discontinue temporarily, but with an expectation or purpose of resumption. As a form of censure or discipline, to forbid a public officer, attorney, employee, or ecclesiastical person from performing his duties or exercising his functions for a more or less definite interval of time.
To postpone, as a judicial sentence. To cause a temporary cessation, as of work by an employee; to lay off.
See also Suspension.
Suspended sentence. A conviction of a crime followed by a sentence that is given formally, but not actually served. A suspended sentence in criminal law means in effect that defendant is not required at the time sentence is imposed to serve the sentence. Richards v. Crump, 260 S.C. 133, 194 S.E.2d 575, 576. See also Sentence (Suspension of sentence).
Sus pense. When a rent, profit à prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormi-unt; but they may be revived or awakened.

Suspension. A temporary stop, a temporary delay, interruption, or cessation. Thus, we speak of a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, of a statute, of the power of alienating an estate, of a person in office, etc.

A temporary cutting off or debarring one, as from the privileges of one’s profession.

Temporary withdrawal or cessation from employment as distinguished from permanent severance accomplished by removal; “removal” being, however, the broader term, which may on occasion include suspension.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total, for a limited time, or forever, when it is called “deprivation” or “amotion.”

Suspension of a right. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time. A temporary stop of a right, a partial extinguishment for a time, as contrasted with a complete extinguishment, where the right is absolutely dead. Suspension of a right in an estate is a temporary or partial withholding of it from use or exercise. It differs from extinguishment, because a suspended right is susceptible of being revived, which is not the case where the right was extinguished.

Suspension of arms. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them. See also Armistice.

Suspension of a statute. A temporary termination of its power of law. The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time;
it but has not the effect of a repeal.

Suspension of business. These words in a statute contemplate an interruption of ordinary business operations, evidenced by some objective features. An interrupion of the ordinary course of business, other than a mere failure to meet maturing obligations.

Suspensive condition. See Condition.

Suspensory condition. See Condition.

Sus. per coll /sás páér kölí/. An abbreviation of “suspensdatur per collum”/sáspendéytar páér kölá/am/, let him be hanged by the neck. Words formerly used in England in signing judgment against a prisoner who was to be executed; being written by the judge in the margin of the sheriff’s calendar or list, opposite the prisoner’s name. 4 Bl.Comm. 403.

Suspicion. The act of suspecting, or the state of being suspected; imagination, generally of something ill; distrust; mistrust; doubt. The apprehension of something without proof or upon slight evidence. Suspicion implies a belief or opinion based upon facts or circumstances which do not amount to proof.

Suspicious character. In the criminal laws of some of the states, a person who is known or strongly suspected to be an habitual criminal, or against whom there is reasonable cause to believe that he has committed a crime or is planning or intending to commit one, or whose actions and behavior give good account of himself, and who may therefore be arrested or required to give security for good behavior.

Sustain. To carry on; to maintain. To affirm, uphold or approve, as when an appellate court sustains the decision of a lower court. To grant, as when a judge sustains an objection to testimony or evidence, he or she agrees with the objection and gives it effect.

To support; to warrant;—said of evidence in connection with a verdict, decision, etc.

To suffer; bear; undergo. To endure or undergo without failing or yielding; to bear up under.

Suthdure. The south door of a church, where canonical purification was performed, and plaints, etc., were heard and determined.

Sutler /sítlər/. A person who, as a business, follows an army and sells provisions and liquor to the troops. A small trader who follows an army and who is licensed to sell goods, especially edibles, to the soldiers.

Suum cuique tribuere /s(y)uwsm k(yuw)aykwiy tr-bÚywarï/. Lat. To render to everyone his own. One of the three fundamental maxims of the law laid down by Justinian.

Suus hæres /s(y)uwəs hiriyz/. See Hæres.

Suus judex /s(y)uwəs júdwex/. Lat. In old English law, a proper judge; a judge having cognizance of a cause. Literally, one’s own judge.

Suzerain /s(y)uwz(ə)ran/. In French and feudal law, the immediate vassal of the king; a crown vassal; a tenant in capite. A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. Also spelled “suzereign.”

A nation that exercises political control over another nation in relation to which it is sovereign.

Term is used as descriptive of relations, ill-defined and vague, which exist between powerful and dependent states; its very indefiniteness being its recommendation.
While protecting and protected states tend to draw nearer, the reverse is true of suzerain and vassal states;
a protectorate is generally the preliminary to incorporation; suzerainty, to separation.

It is said that suzerainty is title without corresponding power; protectorate is power without corresponding title.

Swain; swainmote /swÉyn(mowt)/. See Swein; Swein-mote.

Swamp. Wet, spongy land; soft, low ground saturated with water, but not usually covered by it; marshy ground away from seashore. Campbell v. Walker, 137
Or. 375, 2 P.2d 912, 914.

Swamp and overflowed lands. Lands unfit for cultivation by reason of their swampy character and requiring Sweepstakes. Term initially referring to a type of horse race in which the winner's prize was the sum of the stakes which subscribers agreed to pay for each horse nominated. Stone v. Clay, C.A.III., 61 Fed. 889. Currently refers generally to contests, often conducted for promotional purposes, which award prizes based on the random selection of entries. Federal law prohibits conducting a scheme for obtaining money or property through the mail by means of false representations. 39 U.S.C.A. § 3005. See also Lottery.

Swanmote. See Sweinmote.

Swaps. The exchange of one security for another. A swap may be executed to change the maturities of a bond portfolio or the quality of the issues in a share or bond portfolio, or because investment objectives have shifted. Swap agreements are used by corporations and financial institutions to hedge against changes in interest and foreign exchange rates.

Swarm-money. Warth-money; or guard-money paid in lieu of the service of castlemaker.

Swatch. Commercially, a small sample of cloth from which suits, etc., are to be ordered.

Swear. To put on oath; to administer an oath to a person. To take an oath; to become bound by an oath duly administered. To declare on oath the truth (of a pleading, etc.). See also Affirmation; False swearing; Oath.

To use obscene or profane language. Its use in public places is an offense in many states.

Swearing in. The administration of an oath as to a trial witness or to a public official or one about to become a public official, as in the case of a person who becomes a judge. See Oath.

Swearing the peace. Showing to a magistrate that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to have him bound over to keep the peace.

Sweat equity. Equity created in property through labor of owner in making improvements to property.

Sweating. The questioning of a person in custody charged with crime with intent to obtain information concerning his connection therewith or knowledge thereof of by plying him with questions, or by threats or other wrongful means, extorting information to be used against him. Such interrogation is unconstitutional. See Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Sweat shop. A business whose employees are overworked and paid low wages, or a place where employees are required to work to an extent hardly endurable, and in the public mind the term imputes unsavory and illegal business practices. Masters v. Sun Mfg. Co., 237 Mo.App. 240, 165 S.W.2d 701, 703. Sweat shops resulted in the enactment of wage and hour laws, child labor laws, minimum wage laws, etc.

Sweeping. Comprehensive; including in its scope many persons or objects; as, a sweeping objection.

Sweepstakes. Term initially referring to a type of horse race in which the winner's prize was the sum of the stakes which subscribers agreed to pay for each horse nominated. Stone v. Clay, C.A.III., 61 Fed. 889. Currently refers generally to contests, often conducted for promotional purposes, which award prizes based on the random selection of entries. Federal law prohibits conducting a scheme for obtaining money or property through the mail by means of false representations. 39 U.S.C.A. § 3005. See also Lottery.

Sweeteners. Inducement to a brokerage firm to enter into an underwriting arrangement with an issuer.

Sweetheart contract. Derogatory term used to describe a contract between a union and an employer in which concessions are granted to one or to the other for purpose of keeping a rival union out.

Swein /swýn/. In old English law, a freeman or freeholder within the forest.

Sweinmote /swýn’mwöyt/. In forest law, a court holden before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the sweinmote, thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. Its principal jurisdiction was—First, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest; and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments in offenses against vert and venison. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.

Swell. To enlarge or increase. In an action of tort, circumstances of aggravation may "swell" the damages.

Swift v. Tyson Case. An early case decided in 1842 by the U.S. Supreme Court, 41 (16 Pet.) U.S. 1, 10 L.Ed. 865, which held that federal courts in suits founded on diversity of citizenship were free to exercise an independent judgment in matters of "general" law; i.e. matters not at all dependent upon local statutes or usual usages of a fixed and permanent operation. Swift v. Tyson was overruled by Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188 which requires the application of state law in diversity actions under most circumstances. See Erie v. Tompkins; Federal common law.

Swift witness. A term colloquially applied to a witness who is unduly zealous or partial for the side which calls him, and who betrays his bias by his extreme readiness to answer questions or volunteer information.

Swindle. A scheme for cheating or defrauding.

Swindler. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons.

Swindling. Cheating and defrauding with deliberate artifice. Usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use. The acquisition of any personal or movable property, money, or instrument of writing conveying or securing a valuable right, by means of some false or deceitful pretense or device, or fraudulent representation, with intent to appropriate the same to the use of the party so acquiring, or of destroying or impairing the rights of the party justly entitled to the same.

To make out offense of "cheating" and "swindling" by false representations, government must prove that representations were made, that representations were knowingly and designedly false, that such were made with intent to defraud, that such did defraud, that representations related to existing fact or past event, and that party to whom representations were made, relying on their truth, was thereby induced to part with... his property. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1341, 1342 (mail swindles).

See False pretenses; Fraud.

Switch-yard doctrine. The doctrine that there can be no implied license to the public to use the track of a railroad company within the limits of its switch-yard.

Swoling of land. Term in old English law, meaning so much land as one's plow can till in a year; a hide of land.

Sworn. Frequently used interchangeably with "veri-died." See Affirmation; Oath; Swear; Verify.

Sworn brothers. In old English law, persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes.

Sworn clerks in chancery. Certain officers in the English court of chancery, whose duties were to keep the records, make copies of pleadings, etc. Their offices were abolished by St. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 103.

Sworn statement. Listing by contractor-builder of all of his suppliers and sub-contractors and their respective bids. Such is required by lending institution for interim construction financing.

Syb and som /sib and sówm/. A Saxon form of greeting, meaning peace and safety.

Syllabus. An abstract; a headnote; a note prefixed to the report or opinion of an adjudged case, containing an epithome or brief statement of the rulings of the court upon the point or points decided in the case. The syllabus (in Supreme Court decisions) constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but is prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader.
See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200
U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499. Ordinarily, where a headnote, even though prepared by the court, is given no special force by statute or rule of court, the opinion is to be looked to for the original and authentic statement of the grounds of decision. Bur-
See also Digest; Headnote.

Syllogism. In logic, the full logical form of a single argument. It consists of three propositions (two premises and the conclusion), and these contain three terms, of which the two occurring in the conclusion are brought together in the premises by being referred to a common class.

Sylva cedua /silvä siydyuwa/. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which, being cut, grew again from the stump or root.

Symbiotic relationship. When the action of government and private actors is so intertwined as to constitute a "symbiotic relationship", their combined activities will be viewed by the courts as constituting state involvement sufficient to invoke the "state action" doctrine and thereby subject the private actor, in such circumstances, to constitutional obligation. Burton v.
Wilmington Parking Authority, 38 Del.Ch. 266, 150 A.2d 197 (1961).

Symbolography /simbäljografy/. The art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extrajudicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, and testaments or last wills.

Symbolic delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject-matter of a sale or gift, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual delivery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or which is evidence of the purchaser's or donee's title to it.
Thus, a present gift of the contents of a box in a bank vault, accompanied by a transfer of the key thereto, is valid as a symbolical delivery.

Symbolic speech. A person's conduct which expresses opinions or thoughts about a subject and which may or may not be protected by the First Amendment. Actions which have as their primary purpose the expression of ideas as in the case of students who wore black arm bands to protest the war in Viet Nam. Such conduct is generally protected under the First Amendment as "pure speech" because very little conduct is involved.
733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731. However, not all such conduct is protected. The burning of a draft card was not proteced speech because of the government's substantial inter-L.Ed.2d 672. See Flag desecration.

Symbolum animae /simbslam ânami/. Lat. A mortuary, or soul scot.

Symmetry. Due proportion of several parts of a body to each other; adaptation of the form or dimensions of the several parts of a thing to each other; harmonious relation of parts; conformance; consistency; congruity; correspondence or similarity of form, dimensions, or parts on opposite sides of an axis, center, or a dividing plane.

Symond's inn. Formerly an inn of chancery.

Sympathy strike. A boycott. See Boycott; Strike.

Synallagmatic contract /sinälɡaméšt kontrakt/. In the civil law, a bilateral or reciprocal contract, in which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, each binding himself to the other. Such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc.

Syncopare. To cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood.

Syndic /sindik/. In the civil law, an advocate or patron; a burgess or recorder; an agent or attorney who acts for a corporation or university; an actor or procurator; an assignee. The term corresponds very nearly with that of assignee under the common law.

In English common law, an agent appointed by a corporation for the purpose of obtaining letters of guardianship and the like, to whom such letters were issued.
In French law, the person who is commissioned by the courts to administer a bankruptcy. He fulfills the same functions as the trustee or assignee. Also, one who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense the word corresponds to director or manager.

In Louisiana, the assignee of a bankrupt. Also, one of several persons to be elected by the creditors of a succession, for the purpose of administering thereon, whenever a succession has been renounced by the heirs, or has been accepted under the benefit of an inventory, and neither the beneficiary heirs, their attorney in fact, nor tutor will accept the administration and give the security required.

Syndicalism /sindkaliz/. The theory, plan, or practice of trade-union action which aims by the general strike and direct action to establish control by local organizations of workers over the means and processes of production.

A form or development of trade-unionism, originating in France, which aims at the possession of the means of production and distribution, and ultimately at the control of society and government, by the federated bodies of industrial workers, and which seeks to realize its purposes through the agency of general strikes and of terrorism, sabotage, violence, or other criminal means.

Criminal syndicalism. Any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (defined in the act as willful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property), or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism, as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership, or control, or effecting any political change. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 45 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1095. See also Criminal.

Syndicate /sindakt/. An association of individuals, formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. An organization formed for some temporary purpose, such as the organization of a real estate trust and the sale of shares to the public. Syndicates may exist as corporations or partnerships (either general or limited).

A group of investment bankers who together underwrite and distribute a new issue of securities or a large block of an outstanding issue. A syndicate is formed in such instances because the capital commitment or risk involved for any single investor, financial institution or broker is too great. An association of securities broker-dealers, usually in writing, who assist the principal underwriter in the controlled distribution of the securities of an issuer.

Syndicating. Gathering materials suitable for newspaper publication from writers and artists and distributing the same at regular intervals to newspapers throughout the country for publication on the same day.

Syndication. Act or process of forming a syndicate.

Syndicos, or syndicus /sindakos/sindakas/. One chosen by a college, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. See Syndic.

Syngraph /singraf/. The name given by the canonists to deeds or other written instruments of which both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters of the alphabet written between them, through which the parchment was cut in such a manner as to leave half the word on one part and half on the other. It thus corresponded to the chirograph or indenture of the common law. 2 Bl.Comm. 295, 296.

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together proved their authenticity.

A deed, bond, or other written instrument under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties wrote together.

Synod /sind/. A meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion; being the same thing, in Greek, as convocation in Latin. There are four kinds: (1) A general or universal synod or council, where bishops of all nations meet; (2) a national synod of the clergy of one nation only; (3) a provincial synod, where ecclesiastical persons of a province only assemble, being now what is called the "convocation;" (4) a diocesan synod, of those of one diocese. A synod in Scotland is composed of three or more presbytery.

A convention of bishops and elders within a district including at least three presbytery. Trustees of Pencader Presbyterian Church in Pencader Hundred v. Gibson, 26 Del.Ch. 375, 22 A.2d 782, 788. A meeting of the few adjoining presbyteries—not the same as an ecumenical council, which is a council of all, and not of a part.

Synodal /sanodal/. A tribute or payment in money paid to the bishop or archdeacon by the inferior clergy, at the Easter visitation.

Synodales testes /sinadaylyyz téstlyyz/. L. Lat. Synodsmen (corrupted into sidesmen) were the urban and rural deans, now the church-wardens. See Sidesmen.

Synonymous. Expressing the same or nearly the same idea.

Synopsis. A brief or partial statement, less than the whole; an epitome; synonymous with summary. See Abstract; Digest; Syllabus.

System. Orderly combination or arrangement, as of particulars, parts, or elements into a whole; especially such combination according to some rational principle. Any methodic arrangement of parts. Method; manner; mode.
T. As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for such terms as "term", "territory", "title", "table".

Every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27.

By a law of the Province of Pennsylvania, A.D. 1698, it was provided that a convicted thief should wear a badge in the form of the letter "T," upon his left sleeve, which badge should be at least four inches long and of a color different from that of his outer garment.

Tabard /tæbard/. A short gown; a herald's coat; a surcoat.

Tabarder /tæbardər/. One who wears a tabard or short gown. The name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford.

Tabella /tæbɛlə/. Lat. In Roman law, a tablet. Used in voting, and in giving the verdict of juries and decision of judges; and, when written upon, commonly translated "ballot." The laws which introduced and regulated the mode of voting by ballot were called "leges tabellariae."

Tabellio /tæb(ə)lɪəʊ/. Lat. In Roman law, an officer corresponding in some respects to a notary. His business was to draw legal instruments (contracts, wills, etc.), and witness their execution.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects: they had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aiders of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones.

Tabernaculum /tæbərnɛk(ʊ)ləm/. In old records, a public inn, or house of entertainment.

Tabernarius /tæbərnɛriəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a shopkeeper.

In old English law, a taverner or tavern keeper.

Tabes dorsalis /tæbiəz dɔrˈsiːələs/. In medical jurisprudence, another name for locomotor ataxia. It accompanies attacks of tabetic dementia. See Insanity.

Tabetic dementia /tæˈbetɪk dɛˈmɛnʃ(ə)l/. See Insanity.

Table, n. A synopsis, condensed statement or listing bringing together numerous items or details so as to be comprehended in a single view; as genealogical tables, exhibiting the names and relationships of all the persons composing a family; life and annuity tables, used by actuaries; interest tables, etc. Term may also refer to an alphabetical, numerical, etc. listing of cases, statutes, court rules, and the like, cited or referred to in a legal publication. See Table of cases.

Tableau de distribution /tæbləʊ də dɪstrəˈbraʃən/ in Louisiana, a list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to.

Table de marbre /tæbla ˈdə mɑrbʁ/ Fr. In Old French, table of Marble; a principal seat of the admiralty, so called. These Tables de Marbre are frequently mentioned in the Ordonnance of the Marine.

Table of cases. An alphabetical list of the adjudged cases cited, referred to, or digested in a legal text-book, volume of reports, or digest, with references to the sections, pages, or paragraphs where they are respectively cited, etc., which is commonly either prefixed or appended to the volume.

Table rents. In English law, payments which used to be made to bishops, etc., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

Tabula /tæb(y)ələ/. Lat. In the civil law, a table or tablet; a thin sheet of wood, which, when covered with wax, was used for writing.

Tabule /tæbʊlə/. Lat. In Roman law, tables. Writings of any kind used as evidences of a transaction. Contracts and written instruments of all kinds, especially wills. So called because originally written on tablets and with wax.

Tabule nuptiales /tæbʊlə nəˈpɛʃiːəliːz/. In the civil law, a written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.

Tabula in naufragio /tæbʊlə in noʊˈfrɛjəʊjɪəʊ/. Lat. A plank in a shipwreck. This phrase is used metaphorically to designate the power subsisting in a third mortgagee, who took without notice of the second mortgage, to acquire the first incumbrance, attach it to his own, and thus squeeze out and get satisfaction, before the second is admitted to the fund. It may be fairly said that the doctrine survives only in the unjust and much-criticised English rule of tacking. See Tacking. The use of the expression is attributed to Sir Matthew Hale.

Tabularius /tæbʊləriəs/. Lat. A notary, or tabellio.
Tacit mortgage. In the law of Louisiana, the law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the parties should stipulate it. This is called "legal mortgage." It is called also "tacit mortgage," because it is established by the law without the aid of any agreement.

Tacit relocation. A doctrine borrowed from the Roman law. It is a presumed renovation of the contract from the period at which the former expired, and is held to arise from implied consent of parties, in consequence of their not having signified their intention that agreement should terminate at the period stipulated. Though the original contract may have been for a longer period than one year, the renewed agreement can never be for more than one year, because verbal contract of location can extend longer. Srygley v. City of Nashville, 175 Tenn. 417, 135 S.W.2d 451.

Tack. To annex some junior lien to a first lien, thereby acquiring priority over an intermediate one. See Tacking.

Tacking. The term is applied especially to the process of establishing title to land by adverse possession, when the present occupant and claimant has not been in possession for the full statutory period, but adds or "tacks" to his own possession that of previous occupants under whom he claims. That doctrine which permits an adverse possessor to add his period of possession to that of a prior adverse possessor in order to establish a continuous possession for the statutory period. Deyrup v. Schmitt, 132 Vt. 423, 425, 321 A.2d 42, 44.

The term is also used in a number of other connections, as of possessions, disabilities, or items in accounts or other dealings. In these several cases the purpose of the proposed tacking is to avoid the bar of a statute of limitations. See Davis v. Coblens, 174 U.S. 719, 19 S.Ct. 832, 43 L.Ed. 1147.

The uniting of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser from claiming a title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien, which is prior, without redeeming or discharging the other liens also, which are subsequent to his own title. The term is particularly applied to the action of a third mortgagee who, by buying the first lien and unifying it to his own, gets priority over the second mortgagee.

Tactis sacrosanctis /tak'tis sæk'rəsanktis/. Lat. In old English law, touching the holy evangelists. A bishop may swear visis evangelis [looking at the Gospels], and not tactis, and it is good enough.

Tacto per se sancto evangelio /tak'tə tə sənt'sə kəlvən'jioʊ/. Lat. Having personally touched the holy Gospel. The description of a corporal oath.

Taft-Hartley Act. The Wagner Act was amended in 1947 by the Taft-Hartley Act to balance some of the advantages given to unions under the Wagner Act by imposing corresponding duties on unions. Principal changes imposed by the Act included the following: abolishment of the closed shop, but permitting the union shop under conditions specified in the Act; exempting supervisors from coverage of the Act; requiring the N.L.R.B. to accord equal treatment to both independent and affiliated unions; permitting the employer to file a representation petition even though only one union seeks to represent the employees; granting employees the right not only to organize and bargain collectively but also to refrain from such activities; permitting employees to file decertification petitions for elections to determine whether or not employees desire to revoke a union's designation as their bargaining agent; declaring certain activities engaged in by unions to be unfair labor practices; giving to employers, employees, and unions new guarantees of the right of free speech; providing for settlement by the N.L.R.B. of certain jurisdictional disputes; vested in the General Counsel, rather than in the Board the authority to investigate and prosecute unfair labor practices. 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

Tail. Limited; abridged; reduced; curtailed, as a fee or estate in. An estate of inheritance, which, instead of descending to heirs generally, goes to the heirs of the donee's body, which means his lawful issue, his children, and through them to his grandchildren in a direct line, so long as his posterity endures in a regular order and course of descent, and upon the death of the first owner without issue, the estate determines.

Several tail. An entail severally to two; as if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten; here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety.

Tail after possibility of issue extinct. A species of estate fail which arises where one is tenant in special tail, and a person from whose body the issue was to spring dies without issue, or, having left issue, that issue becomes extinct. In either of these cases the surviving tenant in special tail becomes "tenant in tail after possibility

Tail female. When lands are given to a person and the female heirs of his or her body. The male heirs are not capable of inheriting it.

Tail general. An estate in tail granted to one "and the heirs of his body begotten," which is called "tail gener¬ al" because, how often soever such donee in tail be married, his issue in general by all and every such marriage is, in successive order, capable of inheriting the estate tail per formam doni. 2 Bl.Comm. 113. This is where an estate is limited to a man and the heirs of his body, without any restriction at all; or, according to some authorities, with no other restriction than that in relation to sex. Thus, tail male general is the same thing as tail male; the word "general," in such case, implying that there is no other restriction upon the descent of the estate than that it must go in the male line. So an estate in tail female general is an estate in tail female. The word "general," in the phrase, express¬ es a purely negative idea, and may denote the absence of any restriction, or the absence of some given restriction which is tacitly understood.

Tail male. When certain lands are given to a person and the male heirs of his or her body. The female heirs are not capable of inheriting it.

Tail special. This denotes an estate in tail where the succession is restricted to certain heirs of the donee's body, and does not go to all of them in general, e.g., where lands and tenements are given to a man and "the heirs of his body on Mary, his now wife, to be begotten;"
here no issue can inherit but such special issue as is generated between those two, not such as the husband may have by another wife, and therefore it is called "special tail." 2 Bl.Comm. 113. It is defined as the limitation of lands and tenements to a man and his wife and the heirs of their two bodies. But the phrase need not be thus restricted. Tail special, in its largest sense, is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donor's body, and does not go to all of them in general.

Taille. Fr. In old English law, the fee which is opposed to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee,—in short, an estate-tail.

In old French law, a tax or assessment levied by the king, or by any great lord, upon his subjects, usually taking the form of an imposition upon the owners of real estate. The equivalent of the English tallage—the typical direct tax in France of the Middle Ages, as tonlieu was the generic term for an indirect tax. See Tallage.

Taint. A conviction of felony, or the person so convicted.

Take. The word "take" has many shades of meaning, with the precise meaning which it is to bear in any case depending on the subject with respect to which it is used; e.g. eminent domain; larceny; arrest.

To lay hold of; to gain or receive into possession; to seize; to deprive one of the use or possession of; to assume ownership. Thus, constitutions generally provide that a person's property shall not be taken for public uses without just compensation. Fifth Amend., U.S.Const. See De facto taking; Taking.

In the law of larceny, to obtain or assume possession of a chattel unlawfully, and without the owner's consent; to appropriate things to one's own use with felon¬ ious intent. Thus, an actual taking is essential to consti-ute larceny. The element of "taking" in robbery does not require robber's manual possession of property; it is sufficient if robber has acquired dominion and control over property. State v. Beatty, Mo.App., 617 S.W.2d 87, 90. A "taking" may occur when a person with a precondeived design to appropriate property to his own use obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery; and, such taking may be accomplished by the use of an innocent agent acting under the control and direction of the taker where the goods finally come into possession of the taker and are converted to his use. U.S. v. Posner,

To seize or apprehend a person; to arrest the body of a person by virtue of lawful process. Thus, a capias commands the officer to take the body of the defendant.
See Seize.

To acquire the title to an estate; to receive or be entitled to an estate in lands from another person by virtue of some species of title. Thus one is said to "take by purchase," "take by descent," "take a life-interest under the devise," etc.

Profit from a transaction, lottery, etc. Person open to taking bribes (i.e. "on the take").

See also Taking as regards eminent domain proceedings.

Take away. This term in a statute punishing every person who shall take away any female under 18 from her father for the purpose of prostitution requires only that such person procure or cause her to go away by some persuasion, enticement, or inducement offered, exercised, or held out to the girl, or by furnishing her the means or money with which to go away. See also Taking.

Take back. To revoke; to retract; as, to take back one's promise.

Take by stealth. To steal; feloniously to take and carry away the personal goods of another; to take without right, secretly, and without leave or consent of the owner.

Take care of. To support; maintain; look after (a person). To pay (a debt). To attend to.

Take effect. To become operative or executed. To be in force, or go into operation.

Take-home pay. The net amount of a paycheck; gross earned wages or salary reduced by deductions for income taxes, Social Security taxes, contributions to fringe benefit plans, union dues, and so on.

Takeover. To assume control or management of—not necessarily involving the transfer of absolute title. See Tender offer.

Takeover bid. An attempt by an outside corporation or group, usually called the aggressor or "insurgent," to wrest control away from incumbent management of target corporation. A takeover attempt may involve purchase of shares, a tender offer, a sale of assets or a proposal that the target merge voluntarily into the aggressor. See Leveraged buyout; Golden parachute; Greenmail; Poison pill; Tender offer; Target company; White knight.

Taker. One who takes or acquires; particularly, one who takes an estate by devise. When an estate is granted subject to a remainder or executory devise, the devisee of the immediate interest is called the "first taker."

Take up. To pay or discharge, as a note. Also, sometimes, to purchase a note. To retire a negotiable instrument; to discharge one's liability on it;—said particularly of an indorser or acceptor. A party to a negotiable instrument, particularly an indorser or acceptor, is said to "take up" the paper, or to "retire" it, when he pays its amount, or substitutes other security for it, and receives it again into his own hands.

Taking. In criminal law and torts, the act of laying hold upon an article, with or without removing the same. It implies a transfer of possession, dominion, or control.

Under various statutes relating to sexual offenses, such as the abduction of a girl under the age of 18 years for the purpose of carnal intercourse, to constitute a "taking" no force, actual or constructive, need be exercised. The "taking" may be effected by persuasion, enticement, or inducement. And it is not necessary that the girl be taken from the control or against the will of those having lawful authority over her. See also Take away.

There is a "taking" of property when government action directly interferes with or substantially disturbs the owner's use and enjoyment of the property. Brothers v. U.S., C.A.Cal., 594 F.2d 740, 741. To constitute a "taking, within constitutional limitation, it is not essential that there be physical seizure or appropriation, and any actual or material interference with private property rights constitutes a taking. Board of Com'rs of Lake County v. Mentor Lagoons Inc., Com.Pl., 6 Ohio Misc. 126, 216 N.E.2d 643, 646; Aris Gloves, Inc. v. U.S., Ct.Cl., 420 F.2d 1386. For example, the noise of jet aircraft in process of landing or taking off can amount to a "taking" or "damaging" of property for which the constitution requires that compensation be made. Martin v. Port of Seattle, 64 Wash.2d 309, 391 P.2d 540, 543. Also, "taking" of property is affected if application of zoning law denies property owner of economically viable use of his land, which can consist of preventing best use of land or extinguishing fundamental attribute of ownership. Vari-Build, Inc. v. City of Reno, D.C.Nev., 596 F.Supp. 673, 679. See also Condemnation; Constructive taking; Eminent domain; Take.

As element of crime of larceny, see Take.

Taking case from jury. Directing a verdict; a situation in which a court grants a motion to sustain a judgment. See Directed verdict.

Taking delivery. Receiving actual delivery of commodity under futures contract or spot market contract, or of securities recently purchased.

Taking the fifth. The practice of witnesses or suspects in refusing to answer a question because of the Fifth Amendment right in the U.S. Constitution to refuse to furnish information implicating one's self in a crime. See Fifth Amendment; Self-incrimination.

Tale. The count or counting of money. Said to be derived from the same root as "tally." Whence also the modern word "teller."

In old pleading, the plaintiff's count, declaration, or narrative of his case. 3 Bl.Comm. 293.

Tales /tél'eylz/. Lat. Such; such men. A number of jurors added to a deficient panel to supply the deficiency. When, by means of challenges or any other cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable jurors does not appear at the trial, either party may request a "tales," as it is termed; that is, a supply of such men as are summoned on the first panel in order to make up the deficiency.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

Tales de circumstantibus /téyiływ diy sárkomstántábas/. So many of the by-standers. The emphatic words of the old writ awarded to the sheriff to make up a deficiency of jurors out of the persons present in court. 3 Bl.Comm. 365.

The order of the judge for taking such by-standers as jurors.

Talesman. A person summoned to act as a juror from among the by-standers in the court. A person summoned as one of the tales added to a jury. Talio /téylíyow/. Lat. In the civil law, like for like; Talio.

Talesman.

Talit /téylas intárpréstéyshy(í)ow sémpar fayénda íst, íst évátýtar ábsárdám ét ínnkánly(i)yenz, ét niy juwdíshy(í)am sit íly(í)ywórtýam/. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient may be avoided, and the judgment be not illusory [or nugatory].

Taliesin /tálésh(i)ów/. A keeping account by tallies. Taliesin faesariy. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

Tallatio /tálésh(i)ów/. A keeping account by tallies. Tallagium facere /taléyj(i)yam fásarty/. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

Tally, or tally. A stick cut into two parts, on each of which is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is owed between debtor and creditor. It was the ancient mode of keeping accounts. One part was held by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. The use of tallies in the exchequer was abolished by St. 23 Geo. III, c. 82, and the old tallies were ordered to be destroyed by St. 4 & 5 Wm. IV, c. 15. By the custom of London, sealed tallies were effectual as a deed. They are admissible by the French and Italian Codes as evidence between traders.

Tallies of loan. A term originally used in England to describe exchequer bills, which were issued by the officers of the exchequer when a temporary loan was necessary to meet the exigencies of the government, and charged on the credit of the exchequer in general, and made assignable from one person to another.

Tally trade. A system of dealing by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly installments.

Tallia /tál(i)yá/. L Lat. A tax or tribute; tallage; a tax or toll. Tallia rerum /tál(i)yá rerum/. A tax upon cities, townships and boroughs of the kingdom granted to the king as a part of the royal revenue. Tallauser /tál(i)yó/. L. Lat. A term including all taxes.

Tallage, or tailage /tálaj/téylaj/. A piece cut out of the whole. Used metaphorically for a share of a man's substance paid by way of tribute, toll, or tax, being derived from the French "tailer," which signifies to cut a piece out of the whole. A term used to denote subsidies, taxes, customs, and, indeed, any imposition whatever by the government for the purpose of raising a revenue. A tax upon cities, townships and boroughs granted to the king as a part of the royal revenue.

Tallagium /taléyj(i)yam/. L. Lat. A term including all taxes.

Talweg /talveyk/. Germ. (Tal meaning valley, Weg meaning way.) Commonly used by writers on international law in definition of water boundaries between states, meaning the middle or deepest or most navigable channel, and while often styled "fairway" or "midway" or "main channel" the word has been taken over into various languages and the doctrine of Talweg is often applicable in respect of water boundaries to sounds, bays, straits, gulfs, estuaries and other arms of the sea.
and also applies to boundary lakes and landlocked seas whenever there is a deep water sailing channel therein. State of Louisiana v. State of Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 26 S.Ct. 408, 421, 50 L.Ed. 913.

Tane. Domesticated; accustomed to man; reclaimed from a natural state of wildness. In the Latin phrase, tame animals are described as domita naturae.

Tamen /téymon/. Lat. Notwithstanding; nevertheless; yet.

Tamper. To meddle so as to alter a thing, especially to make illegal, corrupting or perverting changes; as, to tamper with a document or a text; to interfere improperly; to meddle; to busy oneself rashly; to try trifling or foolish experiments. United States v. Tomicich, D.C.Pa., 41 F.Supp. 33, 35. To illegally change as to tamper with the mileage reading on an odometer of a motor vehicle, or a motor vehicle identification number (18 U.S.C.A. §§ 511, 512), or consumer products (18 U.S.C.A. § 1365), or a witness or victim (18 U.S.C.A. § 1512 et seq.).

Tampering with jury. Embracery. The act of attempting to influence a juror corruptly by promises, threats, persuasions, entreaties, money or any other means except the production of evidence in open court. Such act is a criminal offense. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1503, 1504.

Tampering with records. See Falsifying a record.

Tam quam /téj Kwám/. A phrase used as the name of a writ of error from inferior courts, when the error is supposed to be as well in giving the judgment as in awarding execution upon it. (Tam in redditione judicii, quam in adjudicacione executionis.)

Venire tam quam /vanáyriy tém kwám/. One by which a jury was summoned, as well to try an issue as to inquire of the damages on a default.

Tangible. Having or possessing physical form. Capable of being touched and seen; perceptible to the touch; tactile; palpable; capable of being possessed or realized; readily apprehensible by the mind; real; substantial.

Tangible assets. Assets with physical existence (e.g., cash, real estate, equipment) and which are not held for resale. Although accounts receivable do not appear to have a physical existence, they are considered to be tangible assets on the balance sheet.

Tangible cost. A term used in connection with the costs associated with oil and gas drilling. Tangible costs include the materials and land in contrast to such costs as drilling or testing costs which are considered intangible costs.

Tangible evidence. Evidence which consists of something which can be seen or touched, e.g. gun in homicide trial. In contrast to testimonial evidence, tangible evidence is real evidence. See Evidence.

Tangible property. Property that has physical form and substance and is not intangible. That which may be felt or touched, and is necessarily corporeal, although it may be either real or personal (e.g. ring or watch).

Tanistry /ténstrír/ôôm'/v. In old Irish law, a species of tenure, founded on ancient usage, which allotted the inheritance of lands, castles, etc., to the "oldest and worthiest man of the deceased's name and blood." It was abolished in the reign of James I.

Tanteo /tantéyow/. Span. In Spanish law, pre-emption.

Tanto, right of /ráýt av tántow/. In Mexican law, the right enjoyed by an usufructuary of property, of buying the property at the same price at which the owner offers it to any other person, or is willing to take from another.

Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt /tántam bōwna véland, kwóntam vénday pósant/. Goods are worth so much as they can be sold for.

Tantum habent de lege, quantum habent de justitia /tántam hēybtant di lyjiy, kwóntam hēybtant di jastish(iy)a/. (Precedents) have value in the law to the extent that they represent justice.

Tapping. The interception of a telephonic or telegraphic message by connecting a device to the lines, permitting a person to hear the message. It is regulated by federal and state statutes and normally requires prior judicial approval. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510 et seq. See also Eavesdropping; Pen register; Surveillance; Wiretapping.

Tarde venit /tardiyy viynt/. Lat. The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ, when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return-day.

Tare / tér/. A deficiency in the weight or quantity of merchandise by reason of the weight of the box, cask, bag, or other receptacle which contains it and is weighed with it. Also an allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity which the seller makes to the buyer, on account of the weight of such box, cask, etc. See Tret.

Target company. Company attempted to be taken over in tender offer, leveraged buyout, or other type of takeover or acquisition attempt. See Takeover bid; Tender offer.

Target offense. In crime of conspiracy, the crime contemplated by the illegal agreement.

Target witness. A person whose testimony the investigating body is principally seeking as in the case of a grand jury which has, as its objective, the information which such a person may give. A witness called before a grand jury against whom the government is seeking an indictment. United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 97 S.Ct. 1814, 52 L.Ed.2d 238.

Tariff /taerf/. The list or schedule of articles on which a duty is imposed upon their importation into the United States, with the rates at which they are severally taxed. Also the custom or duty payable on such articles. 19 U.S.C.A. And, derivatively, the system of imposing duties or taxes on the importation of foreign merchandise.

A series of schedules or rates of duties or taxes on imported goods. Tariffs are for revenue if their primary objects are fiscal; protective if designed to relieve domestic businesses from effective foreign competition; discriminatory if they apply unequally to products of different countries; and retaliatory if they are designed to compel a country to remove artificial trade barriers against the entry of another nation's products.

A public document setting forth services of common carrier being offered, rates and charges with respect to services and governing rules, regulations and practices relating to those services. International Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. United Tel. Co. of Florida, D.C.Fla., 433 F.Supp. 352, 357.

See also Customs duties; GATT; Most favored nation clause.

Antidumping tariff. A tariff calculated to prevent the dumping or unloading of imported goods below cost by fixing the tariff at the difference between the price at which the goods commonly sell in the country of origin and the price at which it is to be sold in the importing country. See also Dumping Act.

Autonomous tariff. Tariff set by legislation and not by commercial treaties.

Joint tariff. Schedule of rates established by two or more carriers covering shipments between places requiring the use of facilities owned by such carriers.

Preferential tariff. Tariff aimed at favoring the products of one country over those of another. See also Most favored nation clause; Preferential tariff.

Protective tariff. Tariff designed to protect or encourage domestic goods by imposing a high rate on imported goods of a similar nature. See also Protective tariff.

Revenue tariff. Tariff designed primarily to raise revenues and to support the customs service instead of encouraging production of imported goods.

Tath /tɔθ/tyθ/. In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the lords of manors anciently claimed the privilege of having their tenants’ flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground, which liberty was called by the name of the "tath."

Tauri liberi libertas /tɔhray libərə libərtəs/’libərtəs/. Lat. A common bull; because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc.

Tautology /tɔtələjə/. Describing the same thing twice in one sentence in equivalent terms; a fault in rhetoric. It differs from repetition or iteration, which is repeating the same sentence in the same or equivalent terms; the latter is sometimes either excusable or necessary in an argument or address; the former (tautology) never.

Taverner. In old English law, a seller of wine; one who kept a house or shop for the sale of wine.

Tavern keeper. One who owns and operates a tavern or an inn.

Tax. A charge by the government on the income of an individual, corporation, or trust, as well as the value of an estate or gift. The objective in assessing the tax is to generate revenue to be used for the needs of the public.

A pecuniary burden laid upon individuals or property to support the government, and is a payment exacted by legislative authority. In re Mytinger, D.C.Tex., 31 F.Supp. 977, 978, 979. Essential characteristics of a tax are that it is not a voluntary payment or donation, but an enforced contribution, exacted pursuant to legislative authority. Michigan Employment Sec. Commission v. Patt, 4 Mich.App. 228, 144 N.W.2d 663, 665. Annual compensation paid to government for annual protection and for current support of government. Alabama Power Co. v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A.5, 134 F.2d 602, 608. A ratable portion of the produce of the property and labor of the individual citizens, taken by the nation, in the exercise of its sovereign rights, for the support of government, for the administration of the laws, and as the means for continuing in operation the various legitimate functions of the state. An enforced contribution of money or other property, assessed in accordance with some reasonable rule or apportionment by authority of a sovereign state on persons or property within its jurisdiction for the purpose of defraying the public expenses.

In a general sense, any contribution imposed by government upon individuals, for the use and service of the state, whether under the name of toll, tribute, tallage, gabel, impost, duty, custom, excise, subsidy, aid, supply, or other name. And in its essential characteristics is not a debt. City of Newark v. Jos. Hollander, Inc., 136 N.J.Eq. 539, 42 A.2d 872, 875.

Synonyms

In a broad sense, taxes undoubtedly include assessments, and the right to impose assessments has its foundation in the taxing power of the government; and yet, in practice and as generally understood, there is a broad distinction between the two terms. "Taxes," as the term is generally used, are public burdens imposed generally upon the inhabitants of the whole state, or upon some civil division thereof, for governmental purposes, without reference to peculiar benefits to particular individuals or property. "Assessments" have reference to impositions for improvements which are specially beneficial to particular individuals or property, and which are imposed in proportion to the particular benefits supposed to be conferred. They are justified only because the improvements confer special benefits, and are just only when they are divided in proportion to such benefits. As distinguished from other kinds of taxation, "assessments" are those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of municipal improvements which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with reference to the special benefit which the property is supposed to have derived therefrom.

Taxes differ from subsidies, in being certain and orderly, and from forced contributions, etc., in that they are levied by authority of law, and by some rule of proportion which is intended to insure uniformity of contribution, and a just apportionment of the burdens of government.

Generally

Ad valorem tax. See that title.

Amusement tax. See that title.

Bracket creep. The process by which inflation pushes income earners into higher marginal tax brackets. The significance of the bracket creep changed with the Tax Reform Act of 1986 which substantially reduced the number of brackets.

Capital gains tax. Provision in tax laws by which sale or exchange of capital assets are taxed at a lower rate than ordinary income. Since the Tax Reform Act of 1986, capital gains are taxed at the same rate as ordinary income. See also *Capital.

Capital stock tax. Tax assessed as a percentage of par or assigned value of capital stock of a corporation.

Capitation tax. See that title.

Collateral inheritance tax. See that title.

Consumption tax. Tax imposed on sales of consumption goods and services.

Customs tax. See *Customs duties.

Estate tax. A tax imposed upon the right to transfer property at death, while an inheritance tax is a tax upon the right to receive. See also *Estate tax; Inheritance tax.

Excess profits tax. Tax imposed on all income beyond the normal amount calculated on either a normal return on invested capital or on the average of income of previous years. Such tax is commonly imposed in war time. See *Excess profits tax; also, Undistributed profits tax, below.

Excise tax. See that title.

Flat tax. Tax imposed at same rate to all levels of income.

Floor tax. A tax on all the distilled spirits "on the floor" of a warehouse, i.e., in the warehouse.

Franchise tax. See *Franchise.

Gift tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of assets without adequate consideration. The federal gift tax is levied on the donor; however, some states impose a gift tax on the donee. See also *Gift tax.

Graduated tax. A tax so structured that the rate increases as the amount of the income or value of the property increases.

Gross receipts tax. A tax based on total sales rather than on net profits.

Head tax. A flat tax imposed on a per person basis.

Income tax. See that title.

Inheritance tax. See that title and *Estate tax.

Land tax. See that title and *Ad valorem tax; Property tax.

License tax. See *License fee or tax.

Local taxes. Taxes imposed by municipalities such as local property taxes or city income or sales taxes.

Occupation tax. See that title.

Payroll tax. A type of tax which is collected by deduction from an employee's wages. Federal, state and half of the social security tax is paid by employees, with the social security tax matched by the employer.

Personal property tax. A tax assessed against personal property by cities and towns. The tax is commonly referred to as an excise tax and is levied against such items as automobiles, boats, etc.

Real estate tax. Tax levied by local taxing authority against the ownership of real estate for purposes of financing the operations of the local government. See also *Ad valorem tax; Property tax.

Poll-tax. See that title.

Progressive tax. See that title. Compare *Regressive tax, below.

Property tax. Generic term describing a tax levied on the basis of the value of either personal or real property owned by the taxpayer. See also *Ad valorem tax; Property tax; and *Real estate tax, below.

Proportional taxes. Taxes are "proportional" when the proportion paid by each taxpayer bears the same ratio to the amount to be raised that the value of his property bears to the total taxable value, and in the case of a special tax when that is apportioned according to the benefits received.

Regressive tax. A tax system in which higher-income groups pay a smaller percentage of their income to taxes than do lower-income groups; that is, the marginal rate is below the average rate. The average rate falls as income increases. Compare *Progressive tax.

Sales tax. Tax levied in most states on the sale of goods and based on their value. It may be a direct tax which is paid by the purchaser or a turnover tax paid by the seller on the gross sales of his business. See also *Sales tax.

Severance tax. Tax levied on the mining or extraction of some natural resource such as oil or coal. It may be assessed on the value of the product extracted or on the volume.

Sinking fund tax. See *Fund.

Specific tax. A tax imposed as a fixed sum on each article or item or property of a given class or kind, without regard to its value (e.g. sales tax); opposed to *ad valorem tax.
Stamp tax. Tax collected through the sale of stamps which must be affixed to certain documents such as deeds, stock certificates, etc. See Revenue stamps.

Stock transfer tax. Tax levied by the federal government and by certain states on the transfer or sale of shares of stock.

Succession tax. See Succession duty or tax.

Surtax. An additional tax imposed on incomes exceeding a specified amount. See also Surtax.

Tax abatement. See Abatement.

Tax assessment. See Assessment; Tax assessment.

Tax certificate. A certificate of the purchase of land at a tax sale thereof, given by the officer making the sale, and which is evidence of the holder's right to receive a deed of the land if it is not redeemed within the time limited by law.

Tax-deed. The deed given upon a sale of real property made for non-payment of taxes. The deed whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the property to the purchaser at the tax-sale. See also Tax certificate; Tax deed; and Tax-title, below.

Tax deficiency. See Deficiency assessment.

Taxing district. The district throughout which a particular tax or assessment is ratably apportioned and levied upon the inhabitants; it may comprise the whole state, one county, a city, a ward, or part of a street.

Tax lease. The instrument (or estate) given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale, where the law does not permit the sale of the estate in fee for non-payment of taxes, but instead thereof directs the sale of an estate for years.

Tax levy. The total sum to be raised by a tax. Also the bill, enactment, or measure of legislation by which an annual or general tax is imposed. See also Assessment; Levy.

Tax lien. A statutory lien, existing in favor of the state or municipality, upon the lands of a person charged with taxes, binding the same either for the taxes assessed upon the specific tract of land or (in some jurisdictions) for all the taxes due from the individual, and which may be foreclosed for non-payment, by judgment of a court or sale of the land. See also Tax lien.

Taxpayer. A person whose income is subject to taxation; one from whom government demands a pecuniary contribution towards its support.

Taxpayers' lists. Written exhibits required to be made out by the taxpayers resident in a district, enumerating all the property owned by them and subject to taxation, to be handed to the assessors, at a specified date or at regular periods, as a basis for assessment and valuation. See also Roll (Tax roll).

Tax roll. See Roll.

Tax sale. See Sale.

Tax-title. The title by which one holds land which he purchased at a tax sale. That species of title which is inaugurated by a successful bid for land at a collector's sale of the same for nonpayment of taxes, completed by the failure of those entitled to redeem within the specified time, and evidenced by the deed executed to the tax purchaser, or his assignee, by the proper officer.

Tonnage tax. See Tonnage-duty.

Transfer tax. See Stock transfer tax, above.

Undistributed profits tax. A tax imposed on the accumulated surplus of specific types of corporations when such surplus reaches a certain level. The objective of such a tax is to discourage the formation of a corporation for the purpose of preventing the imposition of an income tax on the shareholder through accumulated earnings instead of making distributions thur dividends. I.R.C. § 531. See Accumulated earnings tax.

Unemployment tax. Tax required by the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) to cover the cost of unemployment insurance. The federal statute provides for a tax based on a percentage of employee earnings but allows a credit for amounts paid in state unemployment taxes.

Unitary tax. A method of determining the locally taxable income of businesses that transact business with affiliated companies outside the state. Alcan Aluminum Ltd. v. Franchise Tax Bd. of State of Calif., 860 F.2d 688, 690. See also Unitary business; Unitary theory.

Use tax. Tax generally imposed by a state on the use of certain goods which are not subject to a sales tax. It is commonly designed to discourage people from going out of state and purchasing goods which are not subject to sales tax at the point of purchase. See also Use tax.

Value-added tax (VAT). A tax assessed on goods and services on the value added by each producing unit. The value added is generally the sum of all wages, interest, rent, and profits. Otherwise stated, it is the total sale price of output minus the cost of raw materials and intermediate goods purchased from other firms. The amount of the tax is a percentage of the value of the goods or services. Such a tax exists in many European countries, but not as yet in the U.S.

Withholding tax. A tax which is collected by deducting it from the wages of an employee, e.g. federal income taxes. See also Payroll tax.

Taxa /tāksə/. L. Lat. A tax. In old records, an allotted piece of work; a task.

Taxable. Subject to taxation; liable to be assessed, along with others, for a share in a tax. Something of value, subject to assessment, and to be levied upon and sold for taxes. Williams v. School Dist. No. 32 in County of Fremont, 56 Wyo. 1, 102 P.2d 48, 52.

As applied to costs in an action, the term means proper to be taxed or charged up; legally chargeable or assessable. See also Taxation (Taxation of costs).

Taxable estate. As defined in I.R.C. § 2051, the taxable estate is the gross estate of a decedent reduced by the deductions allowed by §§ 2053-2057 (e.g., administration expenses, marital, charitable and ESOP deductions). The taxable estate is the amount that is subject to the unified transfer tax at death. See also Adjusted gross estate; Gross estate.

Taxable gift. As defined in I.R.C. § 2503, a taxable gift is the gift that is subject to the unified transfer tax. Thus, a taxable gift has been adjusted by the annual exclusion and other appropriate deductions (e.g., marital and charitable deductions).

Taxable income. Under the federal tax law, taxable income is gross income reduced by adjustments and allowable deductions. It is the income against which tax rates are applied to compute an individual or entity's tax liability. Essence of "taxable income" is the accrual of some gain, profit or benefit to taxpayer. In re Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Corporate Income Tax 1966, 1967, 1968, 133 Vt. 132, 355 A.2d 310, 313. See Gross income; Net income.

Taxable year. The taxable period for computing the Federal or state income tax liability; generally it is either the calendar year or a fiscal year of 12 months ending on the last day of a month other than December. I.R.C. § 441(b). See also Accounting period; Fiscal year.

Tax accounting. The accounting (timing) rules and methods used in determining a taxpayer's tax liability.

Tax anticipation bill (TAB). Short term obligations issued by the federal government, the objective of which is to meet the cash flow needs of the government. TABs generally mature one week after corporate estimated taxes are due and are popular because they are accepted by the government at par value on the tax due date without forfeiting any interest income.

Tax anticipation note (TAN). Short-term obligations issued by state or local governments to finance current expenditures. TANs generally mature once individual and corporate taxes are received by the local government.

Tax anticipation warrants. A method of raising public money by the issuance of warrants payable out of tax receipts when collected.

Taxare /takséry/. Lat. To rate or value. To tax; to lay a tax or tribute.

In old English practice, to assess; to rate or estimate; to moderate or regulate an assessment or rate.

Tax assessment. The value given to the property which is being taxed. Multiplying the assessed valuation by the tax rate yields the tax paid. See also Assessment.

Tax assessor. The official responsible for tax valuation of property. See also Assessor.

Taxati /takséytay/. In old European law, soldiers of a garrison or fleet, assigned to a certain station.

Taxatio /takséysh(y)ow/. Lat. In Roman law, taxation or assessment of damages; the assessment, by the judge, of the amount of damages to be awarded to a plaintiff, and particularly in the way of reducing the amount claimed or sworn to by the latter.

Taxatio ecclesiastica /takséysh(y)ow skilyziyééstaks/. The value of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV granting to King Henry III the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III, and hence called "Taxatio Norwicensis." It is also called "Pope Innocent's Valor."

Taxatio expensarum /takséysh(y)ow ekspensérwam/. In old English practice, taxation of costs.

Taxation. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. See Assessment; Equalization; Tax; Withholding.

Double taxation. See Double taxation.

Progressive taxation. A taxing system in which the higher one's income, the higher the tax bracket one is put in.

Proportional taxation. A system of taxation in which the rate of taxation is uniform no matter what the size of income. Compare Regressive taxation, below.

Regressive taxation. A system in which, unlike progressive taxation, as more and more income is earned, the tax rate falls.

Taxation of costs. The process of ascertaining and charging up the amount of costs and fees in an action to which a party is legally entitled, or which are legally chargeable. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 54(d); 28 U.S.C.A. § 1920. See also Costs.

Taxatio norwicensis /takséysh(y)ow nörwchéénss/ /nôhráchënses/. A valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III.

Tax audit. See Audit.

Tax avoidance. The minimization of one's tax liability by taking advantage of legally available tax planning opportunities. Tax avoidance may be contrasted with tax evasion which entails the reduction of tax liability by using illegal means. Compare Tax evasion.

Tax base. The total assessed value of all the property in a given area which determines the rate at which an individual property is assessed.

Tax basis. See Basis.

Tax benefit rule. A rule which limits the recognition of income from the recovery of an expense or loss properly deducted in a prior tax year to the amount of the deduction that generated a tax savings. Under the "tax benefit rule" if an amount deducted from gross income in a prior taxable year is recovered in a later year, the recovery is income in the later year. Tennessee Carolina Transp., Inc. v. C.I.R., C.A.6, 582 F.2d 378, 379.

Tax bracket. A specified interval of income to which a specific tax rate is applied.

Marginal tax rate. The point where the highest level of income falls.
Tax certificate. Instrument issued to the buyer of property at a tax sale which entitles the holder to the property thus purchased if it is not redeemed within the period provided by law. See also Tax deed.

Tax court. The United States Tax Court is a court of record under Article I of the Constitution of the United States (see I.R.C. § 7441). The Tax Court tries and adjudicates controversies involving the existence of deficiencies or overpayments in income, estate, and gift taxes in cases where deficiencies have been determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

At the option of the individual taxpayer, simplified procedures may be utilized for the trials of small tax cases, provided that in a case conducted under these procedures the decision of the court would be final and not subject to review by any court. All decisions other than small tax cases are subject to review by the United States Courts of Appeals and thereafter by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the granting of a writ of certiorari.

State tax courts. Such courts exist in certain states, e.g. Maryland, Minnesota, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Oregon. Generally, court has jurisdiction to hear appeals in all tax cases and has power to modify or change any valuation, assessment, classification, tax or final order appealed from. Certain of these tax courts (e.g. Minnesota) have small claims sessions at which citizens can argue their own cases without attorneys.

Tax credit. An amount subtracted from an individual's or entity's tax liability to arrive at the total tax liability. A tax credit reduces the taxpayer's liability dollar for dollar, compared to a deduction which reduces taxable income—upon which the tax liability is calculated. A credit differs from a deduction to the extent that the former is subtracted from the tax while the latter is subtracted from income before the tax is computed.

Foreign tax credit. If a U.S. citizen or resident incurs or pays income taxes to a foreign country on income subject to U.S. tax, the taxpayer may be able to claim some of these taxes as a deduction or as a credit against the U.S. income.

Investment tax credit. A reduction in federal taxes for purchasing certain property—primarily equipment. The objective in providing the credit was to encourage companies to make acquisitions resulting in a stronger economy. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 repealed the investment tax credit for property acquired after January 1, 1986 with some exceptions for transition property.

Tax deduction. A subtraction from gross income in arriving at taxable income. A deduction differs from a tax credit in that a deduction reduces taxable income and a credit reduces tax liability. See also Deduction.

Tax deed. A proof of ownership of land given to the purchaser by the government after the land has been taken from another person by the government and sold for failure to pay taxes. See also Tax certificate.

Tax deficiency notice. See Ninety (90) day letter.

Taxers. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, England, to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

Tax evasion. Illegally paying less in taxes than the law permits; committing fraud in filing or paying taxes. An example includes reporting less income than actually received or deducting fictitious expenses. Such act is a crime and may result in an underpayment penalty. See I.R.C. § 7201. Compare Tax avoidance. See also Fraud (Tax fraud).

Tax exempt. Term pertains to property used for educational, religious, or charitable purposes which is ordinarily exempted by law from assessment for taxes; or to certain bonds issued by the federal government or a State or one of its subdivisions. Interest on State and local government bonds is exempt from federal income taxation, and interest on bonds of the United States or its instrumentalities is correspondingly exempt from State income taxation. See also Charitable organizations; Tax exempt securities.

Tax exemption. Immunity from the obligation of paying taxes in whole or in part.

Tax exempt securities. Investments that yield income that is tax exempt. Generally, tax exempts are municipal bonds with interest that is not taxed by the federal government. See also Tax exempt.

Tax ferrets. Persons engaged in the business of searching for property omitted from taxation. Their activities when permitted are usually regarded as private rather than as part of a state agency. Pickett v. United States, C.C.A.Mo., 100 F.2d 909, 913.

Tax foreclosure. Seizure and sale by public authority of property for non-payment of taxes.

Tax fraud. See Fraud.

Tax-free exchange. Transfers of property specifically exempted from income tax consequences by the tax law. Examples are a transfer of property to a controlled corporation under I.R.C. § 351(a) and a like-kind exchange under § 1031(a).

Tax haven. A country that imposes little or no tax on the profits from the transactions carried on from that country.

Tax home. Since travel expenses of an employee are deductible only if the taxpayer is away from home, the deductibility of such expenses rests upon the definition of "tax home". The IRS position is that "tax home" is the business location, post or station of the taxpayer.

Tax incentive. Government taxing policy intended to encourage a particular activity (e.g. mortgage financing of real estate sales).

Tax increment financing. Technique used by municipalities to finance commercial developments. Typically, the municipality issues bonds to finance land acquisition and other up-front costs and then uses the additional property taxes generated from the new development to service the debt.
TAXING MASTER

TAXING MASTER. See Master.

TAXING POWER. The governmental power to levy and collect taxes. U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 1. See also Sixteenth Amendment.

TAX INJUNCTION ACT. A statute that mandates that federal district courts not interfere with the assessment or collection of any state tax where a plain, speedy and efficient remedy is available in the state courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1341.

TAX LIABILITY. The amount which a taxpayer owes under the tax law after properly computing gross income and deductions, using the appropriate tax rate and subtracting any applicable tax credits.

TAX LOOPHOLE. A legal method of reducing tax liabilities, properly called tax avoidance. Tax avoidance should not be confused with tax evasion, which is illegal and punishable by penalties, fines, and imprisonment. See Tax avoidance.

TAX LAWS. See Internal Revenue Code; Letter ruling.

TAX LEVY. The order for payment of taxes. Also, the determination of the total receipts to be collected by the tax. See Assessment; Levy.

TAX LIEN. A lien on real estate in favor of a state or local government which may be foreclosed for nonpayment of taxes. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act. See also Tax (Tax lien).

Federal tax lien. A lien placed on property and all rights to property by the federal government for unpaid federal taxes. See I.R.C. § 6321.

TAX LOSS CARRYBACK, CARRYFORWARD. A provision in the Internal Revenue Code which allows an individual or corporation to apply current year losses against prior or subsequent year income to reduce their tax liability.

TAX-OPTION CORPORATION. See Corporation (S Corporation).

TAXPAYER. One who is subject to a tax on income, regardless of whether he or she pays the tax. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(14).

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS. Provisions of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 granting taxpayers specific legal rights when dealing with the IRS, including the right to: receive an explanation of the examination and collection processes; have representation; make audio recordings of interviews with IRS personnel; rely on the IRS’s written advice; file an application for relief with the IRS Ombudsman; and receive written notice of levy 30 days prior to enforcement. Pub.L. 100-647, § 6226 et seq.

TAX PREFERENCE ITEMS. Certain items which must be considered in calculating a taxpayer’s alternative minimum tax. Such items are deducted in arriving at taxable income for regular tax purposes, and added back in arriving at taxable income for alternative minimum tax purposes. I.R.C. § 55-58. See Alternative minimum tax.

TAX RATE. Amount of tax imposed on personal or corporate income, capital gains, gifts, estates, sales, etc. See also Tax rate schedules.

Marginal tax rate. The tax rate on the last dollar of taxable income earned by an individual or firm.

TAX RATE SCHEDULES. Schedules used to determine the tax on a given level of taxable income. Separate rate schedules are provided for married individuals filing jointly, unmarried individuals who maintain a household, single taxpayers, estates and trusts, and married taxpayers filing separate returns. See also Tax tables.

TAX REBATE. Amount of money remitted by taxing authority after payment of taxes. See Rebate.

TAX REDEMPTION. The act by which a taxpayer claims property which has been taken for nonpayment of taxes. He does so by paying the delinquent taxes in addition to interest, costs and penalties.

TAX RETURN. The form on which an individual, corporation or other entity reports income, deductions, and exemptions and calculates their tax liability. A tax return is generally for a one year period, however, in some cases, the period may be less than a year. A federal tax return is filed with the Internal Revenue Service, and a state return is filed with the revenue department of the state. See also Return.

Amended return. A tax return filed after the original return generally due to a correction of an error.

Declaration of estimated taxes. The amount of tax expected to be paid for the year. Self-employed individuals, and those whose withheld taxes are not adequate to cover their tax liability, as well as corporations, estates, and trusts, must make estimated payments quarterly.

Information return. A tax return filed by an entity listing the income, expenses, assets, and liabilities of the entity. A tax liability is generally not calculated on an information return, instead, it is a vehicle used to report the financial results of an entity for the tax period. An example of an information return is a partnership return (Form 1065). I.R.C. § 6031 et seq.

Joint return. Tax return filed jointly by both spouses; permitted even though only one had income. See Split-income.

Separate return. Tax return filed by only one spouse and covering only his or her income.

TAX ROLL. The official record maintained by cities and towns listing the names of taxpayers and the assessed property.

TAX SALE. Sale of property for nonpayment of taxes. See also Tax certificate.

TAX SHELTER. A device used by a taxpayer to reduce or defer payment of taxes. Common forms or tax shelters include: limited partnership interests, real estate investments which have deductions such as depreciation, interest, taxes, etc. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 limited the benefits of tax shelters significantly by classifying losses from such shelters as passive and ruling that passive losses can only offset passive income in arriving at taxable income (with a few exceptions). Any excess losses are suspended and may be deducted in the year the investment is sold or otherwise disposed of.

Tax "situs". A state or jurisdiction which has a substantial relationship to assets subject to taxation.

Tax straddle rule. The commodities straddle rule prevents a taxpayer from deferring income by requiring a loss on an identified straddle to be recognized when the offsetting position is closed. The straddle rules generally relate to intangibles such as rights to future events in contrast to more tangible assets such as stock. See I.R.C. §§ 165(c)(2), 1092.

Tax surcharge. Tax added to another tax. See also Surcharge; Surtax.

Tax tables. Tables established by taxing authorities from which taxes may be computed. The federal income tax system provides for separate rates for single taxpayers, married taxpayers filing a joint return, head of household, and married taxpayers filing separate returns. See also Tax rate schedules.

Tax title. Title held by one who purchases property at a tax sale. See also Tax certificate; Tax deed.

Tax warrant. Official process for collecting unpaid taxes and under which property may be seized and sold.

Tax year. The period covered by a tax return. Individuals generally file on a calendar year while corporations, trusts, and other entities may file on a fiscal year. See Accounting period; Fiscal year.

T.C. An abbreviation for the U.S. Tax Court. It is used to cite a Regular Decision of the U.S. Tax Court.

T.C. Memo. An abbreviation used to refer to a Memorandum Decision of the U.S. Tax Court.

Teach. To impart knowledge by means of lessons; to give instruction in; communicating knowledge; introducing into or impressing on the mind as truth or information, and may be done as well through written communications, personal direction, through the public press, or through any means by which information may be disseminated, or it may be done by the adoption of sentiment expressed or arguments made by others which are distributed to others for their adoption and guidance.

Teacher. One who teaches or instructs; especially one whose business or occupation is to teach others; an instructor; preceptor. Ortega v. Otero, 48 N.M. 588, 154 P.2d 252, 254, 255, 257.

Team or theme. In old English law, a royalty or privilege granted, by royal charter, to a lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, and chattels, etc.

Team work. Within the meaning of an exemption law, this term means work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business; as in farming, staging, express carrying, drawing of freight, peddling, or the transportation of material used or dealt in as a business.

Tearing of will. Under statute providing that will may be revoked by tearing, any act of tearing of paper on which will is written, however slight, constitutes an act of "tearing." if done with intent to revoke the will, but no act of tearing or cutting accomplishes such purpose unless done with intent to revoke. Fleming v. Fleming, 367 Ill. 97, 10 N.E.2d 641, 642.

Technical. Belonging or peculiar to an art or profession. Technical terms are frequently called in the books "words of art." Immaterial, not affecting substantial rights, without substance.

Technical errors. Errors committed in course of trial which have not prejudiced the party and hence are not grounds for reversal. Fed.R.Civ.P. 61; Fed.R.Crim.P. 52. See also Harmless error doctrine.

Technical mortgage. A true and formal mortgage, as distinguished from other instruments which, in some respects, have the character of equitable mortgages. See also Mortgage.

Teding-penny. In old English law, a small tax or allowance to the sheriff from each tithing of his county towards the charge of keeping courts, etc.

Teind masters /ˈtiːn mæstərz/ /ˈmaɪərz/. Those entitled to tithes.

Teinland /ˈteɪnlænd/ /ˈθiːnən/. Sax. In old English law, land of a thane or Saxon noble; land granted by the crown to a thane or lord.

Telegram. A telegraphic dispatch; a message sent by telegraph. Message transmitted by radio, teletype, cable, any mechanical method of transmission or the like. U.C.C. § 1-201(41).

Teligraphum /ˈtɛlɪɡrɑːfəm/. An Anglo-Saxon charter of land.

Teller. One who numbers or counts. An officer of a bank who receives or pays out money. Also one appointed to count the votes cast in a deliberative or legislative assembly or other meeting. The name was also given to certain officers formerly attached to the English exchequer.

Tellers in parliament. In the English parliament, the members of the house selected by the Speaker to count the members when a division takes place.

Tellwrec /ˈtelwərk/. That labor which a tenant was bound to do for his lord for a certain number of days.

Tementale, or temenental /ˈteɪnəməntəl/. /ˈteɪməntəl/. A tax of two shillings upon every plow-land, a decennary.

Temere /ˈteməri/. Lat. In the civil law, rashly; inconsiderately. A plaintiff was said temere litigare who demanded a thing out of malice, or sued without just cause, and who could show no ground or cause of action.

Temperance. Habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; as, temperance in eating and drinking, temperance in the indulgence of joy or mirth. Not synonymous with abstinence. Mayfield Tempest. A violent or furious storm; a current of wind rushing with extreme violence, and usually accompanied with rain or snow.

Templars /tɛmpɬərləz/. A religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because the members dwelt in a part of the temple of Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulcher of our Lord. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and their profession was at first to defend travelers from highwaymen and robbers. The order was suppressed A.D. 1307, and their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious orders.

Temple. Two English inns of court, thus called because anciently the dwelling place of the Knights Templar. On the suppression of the order, they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitia or inns of court. They are called the "Inner" and "Middle Temple," in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the "Outer Temple," because situated without Temple Bar.

Temporality. The laity; secular people.

Temporal lords. The peers of England; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of parliament.

Temporarily. Lasting for a time only, existing or continuing for a limited time, not of long duration, not permanent, transitory, changing, but a short time.

Temporary. That which is to last for a limited time only, as distinguished from that which is perpetual, or indefinite, in its duration. Opposite of permanent. Thus, temporary alimony is granted for the support of the wife pending the action for divorce; a temporary receiver is one appointed to take charge of property until a hearing is had and an adjudication made.

As to temporary Disability; Insanity; Injunction; and Statute, see those titles.

Temporary alimony. Interim order of payment to spouse pending final outcome of action for divorce. See also Alimony.

Temporary administration. Fiduciary appointed by court to administer the affairs of a decedent estate for a short period of time before an administrator or executor can be appointed and qualified.

Temporary detention. Temporary exercise of custody pending final determination on merits of criminal case.

Temporary disability. Healing period during which claimant is totally or partially unable to work due to injury, and continues as long as recovery or lasting improvement of injured person's condition can reasonably be expected. Corral v. McCrory Corp., Fla., 228 So.2d 900, 903. See also Disability; Temporary total disability.

Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals. The Economic Stabilization Act Amendments of 1971 (85 Stat. 743) created a special court known as the Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals of the United States. The court has exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals from the district courts of the United States in cases and controversies arising under the economic stabilization laws, and consists of eight district and circuit judges appointed by the Chief Justice.

Temporary injunction. See Injunction; Preliminary injunction; Temporary restraining order.

Temporary restraining order. An emergency remedy of brief duration which may issue only in exceptional circumstances and only until the trial court can hear arguments or evidence, as the circumstances require, on the subject matter of the controversy and otherwise determine what relief is appropriate. Paddington Corp. v. Foremost Sales Promotions, Inc., 13 Ill.App.3d 170, 300 N.E.2d 484, 487. Order which is issued to maintain status quo pending a hearing on an application for an injunction. Becker v. Becker, 66 Wis.2d 731, 225 N.W.2d 884, 886.

A temporary restraining order may be granted without written or oral notice to the adverse party or his attorney only if (1) it clearly appears from specific facts shown by affidavit or by the verified complaint that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the applicant before the adverse party or his attorney can be heard in opposition, and (2) the applicant's attorney certifies to the court in writing the efforts, if any, which have been made to give the notice and the reasons supporting his claim that notice should not be required. Fed.R.Civil P. 65(b).

See also Injunction; Injury (Irreparable injury); Preliminary injunction.

Temporary total disability. As used in workers' compensation law, means inability to return to substantial gainful employment requiring skills or activities comparable to those of one's previous gainful employment during healing or recovery period after injury. Total disability which is not permanent. Allen v. Workers' Compensation Com'r and Consolidation Coal Co., W.Va.,
TENANCY

Joint tenancy. An estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will, arising by purchase or grant to two or more persons. Joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. The primary incident of joint tenancy is survivorship, by which the entire tenancy on the demise of any joint tenant remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor.

Type of ownership of real or personal property by two or more persons in which each owns an undivided interest in the whole and attached to which is the right of survivorship. Single estate in property owned by two or more persons under one instrument or act. D'Ercole v. D'Ercole, D.C.Mass., 407 F.Supp. 1377, 1380. An estate held by two or more persons jointly, each having an individual interest in the whole and an equal right to its enjoyment during his or her life. In re Estelle's Estate, 593 P.2d 663, 665, 122 Ariz. 109.

See also Cotenancy.

Periodic tenancy. See that term.

Several tenancy. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

Tenancy at sufferance. See Tenant.

Tenancy at will. See Tenant.

Tenancy by the entirety. A tenancy which is created between a husband and wife and by which together they hold title to the whole with right of survivorship so that, upon death of either, other takes whole to exclusion of deceased heirs. Sams v. McDonald, 117 Ga.App. 336, 160 S.E.2d 594, 597. It is essentially a "joint tenancy," modified by the common-law theory that husband and wife are one person, and survivorship is the predominant and distinguishing feature of each. United States v. Jacobs, III. & N. Y., 306 U.S. 363, 59 S.Ct. 551, 83 L.Ed. 763. Neither party can alienate or encumber the property without the consent of the other. It is inherited by the survivor of the two, and dissolution of marriage transforms it to tenancy in common.

Tenancy for a period. A tenancy for years or for some fixed period.

Tenancy for years. See Tenant.

Tenancy from month to month. See Tenant (Tenant at will).

Tenancy from period to period. A periodic tenancy which runs from month to month or from year to year (though term usually refers to period of less than one year).

Tenancy from year to year. A periodic tenancy which runs from one year to the next. See Periodic tenancy.

Tenancy in common. A form of ownership whereby each tenant (i.e., owner) holds an undivided interest in property. Unlike a joint tenancy or a tenancy by the entirety, the interest of a tenant in common does not terminate upon his or her prior death (i.e., there is no right of survivorship). Assume, for example, B and C
Tenant. In the broadest sense, one who holds or possesses property is held by several distinct titles by unity of possession, and is not an estate but a relation between persons, the only essential being a possessor right, as to which all are entitled to equal use and possession. DeMik v. Cargill, Okl., 485 P.2d 229, 233.

See also Cotenancy; Partition.

Tenancy in coparcenary. Of historical value only today; formerly it was a form of concurrent ownership in which property was acquired by intestacy by the female line of heirs and arose only by descent. Today, it is governed by the rules of tenancy in common.

Tenancy in partnership. Real estate held by partnership. See Uniform Partnership Act, § 25.

Tenant. In the broadest sense, one who holds or possesses land or tenements by any kind of right or title, whether in fee, for life, for years, at will, or otherwise. In a more restricted sense, one who holds lands of another; one who has the temporary use and occupation of real property owned by another (called the "landlord"), the duration and terms of his tenancy being usually fixed by an instrument called a "lease." One who occupies another's land or premises in subordination to such other's title and with his assent, express or implied. One renting land and paying for it either in money or part of crop or equivalent.

See also Holdover tenant; Lessee; Tenancy.

Feudal law. One who holds of another (called "lord" or "superior") by some service; as fealty or rent.

Joint tenants. Two or more persons to whom are granted lands or tenements to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. Persons who own lands by a joint title created expressly by one and the same deed or will. Joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. See also Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Land tenant. See that title.

Prime tenant. Commercial or professional tenant with established reputation that leases substantial, and usually most preferred, space in office building, shopping center, etc. Such type tenant is important in securing construction financing and in attracting other quality tenants.

Quasi tenant at sufferance. An under-tenant, who is in possession at the determination of an original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over.

Sole tenant. He that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him.

Tenant at sufferance. Such tenancy arises when one comes into the possession of property by lawful title, but wrongfully holds over after the termination of his interest. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Prudential Storage & Van Corp., 208 Va. 784, 161 S.E.2d 86, 89. He has no estate nor title but only naked possession without right and wrongfully, and stands in no privity to landlord and is not entitled to notice to quit, and is a bare licensee to whom landlord owes merely duty not wantonly nor willfully to injure him. Welch v. Rice, 61 Wyo. 511, 159 P.2d 502, 506, 509.

Tenant at will. One who holds possession of premises by permission of owner or landlord, but without fixed term. Characteristics of a "tenancy at will," whether created by express contract or by implication of law, are uncertain duration and right of either party to terminate on proper notice. Myers v. East Ohio Gas Co., 51 Ohio St.2d 121, 5 O.O.3d 103, 364 N.E.2d 1369, 1372.

Tenant a volunteer. L. Fr. A tenant at will.

Tenant by copy of court roll (shortly, "tenant by copy") is the old-fashioned name for a copyholder.

Tenant by the curtesy. One who, on the death of his wife seised of an estate of inheritance, after having by her issue born alive and capable of inheriting her estate, holds the lands and tenements for the term of his life.

Tenant by the manner. One who has a less estate than a fee in land which remains in the reversioner. He is so called because in avowries and other pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant of the land, in contradistinction to the veray tenant, who is called simply "tenant."

Tenant for life. One who holds lands or tenements for the term of his own life, or for that of any other person (in which case he is called "pur auter vie"), or for more lives than one.

Tenant for years. One who has the temporary use and possession of lands or tenements not his own, by virtue of a lease or demise granted to him by the owner, for a determinate period of time, as for a year or a fixed number of years.

Tenant from year to year. One who holds lands or tenements under the demise of another, where no certain term has been mentioned, but an annual rent has been reserved. One who holds over, by consent given either expressly or constructively, after the determination of a lease for years. See also Tenancy.

Tenant in capite. In feudal and old English law, tenant in chief; one who held immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Tenant in common. Tenants who hold the same land together by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession, because none knows his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously. Where two or more hold the same land, with interests accruing under different titles, or accruing under the same title, but at different periods, or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. See also Tenancy (Tenancy in common).
Tenant in dower. This arises where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies; in this case the wife shall have the third part of all the lands and tenements whereof he was seised at any time during the coverture, to hold to herself for life, as her dower. 2 Bl.Comm. 129.

Tenant in fee-simple (or tenant in fee). He who has lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever, generally, absolutely, and simply; without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law.

Tenant in severalty. One who holds lands and tenements in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 179.

Tenant in tail. One who holds an estate in fee-tail, that is, an estate which, by the instrument creating it, is limited to some particular heirs, exclusive of others; as to the heirs of his body or to the heirs, male or female, of his body.

Tenant in tail ex provisione viri. Where an owner of lands, upon or previously to marrying a wife, settled lands upon himself and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and then died, the wife, as survivor, became tenant in tail of the husband's lands, in consequence of the husband's provision (ex provisione viri). Originally, she could bar the estate-tail like any other tenant in tail; but the husband's intention having been merely to provide for her during her widowhood, and not to enable her to bar his children of their inheritance, she was early restrained from so doing, by the statute 32 Hen. VII, c. 36.

Tenant of the demesne. One who is tenant of a meane lord; as, where A. is tenant of B., and C. of A., B. is the lord, A. the meane lord, and C. tenant of the demesne.

Tenant paravaile. The under-tenant of land; that is, the tenant of a tenant; one who held of a meane lord.

Tenants by the verge. The 'same nature as tenants by copy of court roll [i.e., copyholders]. But the reason why they are called 'tenants by the verge' is for that, when they will surrender their tenements into the hands of their lord to the use of another, they shall have a little rod (by the custome) in their hand, the which they shall deliver to the steward or to the bailife, * * * and the steward or bailife, according to the custome, shall deliver to him that taketh the land the same rod, or another rod, in the name of seisin; and for this cause they are called 'tenants by the verge,' but they have no other evidence [title-deed] but by copy of court roll.'

Tenant to the praecipe. When an owner of lands conveyed to a person for life and remainder to another in tail, the tenant in tail in remainder was unable to bar the entail without the concurrence of the tenant for life, because a common recovery could only be suffered by the person seised of the land. In such a case, if the tenant for life wished to concur in barring the entail, he usually conveyed his life-estate to some other person, in order that the praecipe in the recovery might be issued against the latter, who was therefore called the "tenant to the praecipe."

Tenantable repair. Such a repair as will render premises fit for present habitation. See Habitability (Warranty of habitability).

Tenant-right. In England, the right of tenant on termination of tenancy to payment for unexhausted improvements made on his holding. Such is governed by the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1986.

Tenant's fixtures. This phrase signifies things which are fixed to the freehold of the demised premises, but which the tenant may detach and take away, provided he does so in season.

Tencon. L. Fr. A dispute; a quarrel.

Tend. To have a leaning; serve, contribute, or conduce in some degree or way, or have a more or less direct bearing or effect; to be directed as to any end, object, or purpose; to have a tendency, conscious or unconscious, to any end, object or purpose. Rogers v. State, 122 Tex.Cr.R 331, 54 S.W.2d 1010, 1012.

In old English law, to tender or offer.

Tender. An offer of money. The act by which one produces and offers to a person holding a claim or demand against him the amount of money which he considers and admits to be due, in satisfaction of such claim or demand, without any stipulation or condition. As used in determining whether one party may place the other in breach of contract for failure to perform, means a readiness and willingness to perform in case of concurrent performance by other party, with present ability to do so, and notice to other party of such readiness. Monroe St. Properties, Inc. v. Carpenter, C.A.Ariz., 407 F.2d 379, 380. Essential characteristics of tender are unconditional offer to perform coupled with manifested ability to carry out the offer and production of subject matter of tender. Collins v. Kingsberry Homes Corp., D.C.Ala., 243 F.Supp. 741, 744.

At a settlement under an agreement of sale the seller tenders the executed deed to the purchaser, who tenders the remainder of the purchase price to the seller.

The actual proffer of money, as distinguished from mere proposal or proposition to proffer it. Hence mere written proposal to pay money, without offer of cash, is not "tender."

Tender, though usually used in connection with an offer to pay money, is properly used in connection with offer of property or performance of duty other than payment of money.

Tender, in common law pleading, is a plea by defendant that he has been always ready to pay the debt demanded, and before the commencement of the action tendered it to the plaintiff, and now brings it into court ready to be paid to him, etc.

Legal tender is that kind of coin, money, or circulating medium which the law compels a creditor to accept in payment of his debt, when tendered by the debtor in the right amount. See also Legal tender.
TENDER

See also Legally sufficient tender.

Tender of issue. A form of words in common law pleading, by which a party offers to refer the question raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision. The common tender of an issue of fact by a defendant is expressed by the words, "and of this he puts himself upon the country."

Tender of delivery. Tender of delivery requires that the seller put and hold conforming goods at the buyer's disposition and give the buyer any notification reasonably necessary to enable him to take delivery. The manner, time and place for tender are determined by the agreement and Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code. See U.C.C. § 2-503. Tender connotes such performance by the tendering party as puts the other party in default if he fails to proceed in some manner. U.C.C. § 2-503, Comment 1.

Tender offer. A public announcement by a company or individual indicating that it will pay a price above the current market price for the shares "tendered" of a company it wishes to acquire or take control of. An offer to purchase shares made by one company direct to the stockholders of another company, sometimes subject to a minimum and/or a maximum that the offeror will accept, communicated to the shareholders by means of newspaper advertisements and (if the offeror can obtain the shareholders list, which is not often unless it is a friendly tender) by a general mailing to the entire list of shareholders, with a view to acquiring control of the second company. Such purchase offer is used in an effort to go around the management of the second company, which is resisting acquisition.

Tender offers are one of several types of corporate takeover techniques, and are regulated by state and federal securities laws; e.g., Williams Act § 14(e), 15 U.S.C.A. § 78n(e). See also Leveraged buyout; Saturday night special; Takeover bid.

Tender of performance. Offer to perform which is commonly necessary to hold the defaulting party to a contract liable for breach. See also Tender.

Tender years doctrine. Under this doctrine courts generally award custody of children of tender years to mother unless she is found to be unfit. Sanderson v. Saunderson, Ala.Civ.App., 379 So.2d 91, 92. In many states this doctrine has been abolished by statute, e.g., N.Y.Dom.Rel.L. § 240, or by judicial decisions, e.g., Arnold v. Arnold, 95 Nev. 951, 604 P.2d 109.

Tenement /tēnəmənt/. This term, in its common acception, is only applied to houses and other buildings, but in its original, proper, and legal sense it signifies everything that may be held, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. Thus, liberum tenementum, frank tenement, or freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, etc. At common law, "tenements" included lands, other inheritances, capable of being held in freehold, and rents. Wood v. Galpert, Ohio Com.Pl., 199 N.E.2d 900, 901.

Dominant tenement. One for the benefit or advantage of which an easement exists or is enjoyed.

Servient tenement. One which is subject to the burden of an easement existing for or enjoyed by another tenement. See Easement.

Tenement house. Low rent apartment building, usually in poor condition, meeting only minimal, if even that, safety and sanitary conditions.

Tenemental land /tēnəməntəl līnd/. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants.

Tenentis legatis /tēnəntəs ləgətəs/. An ancient writ, lying to the city of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same.

Tenendum /tēnəndəm/. Lat. To be held. It was used to indicate the lord of whom the land was to be held and the tenure by which it was to be held, but, since all freehold tenures have been converted into socage, the tenendum is of no further use, and is therefore joined in the habendum,—"to have and to hold."

Tenens /tēnənz/. A tenant; the defendant in a real action.

Tenentibus in assisa non onerandis /tēnəntɪbəs ɪn əsəsə nən ɒnərəndız/. A writ that formerly lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he should not be molested in assize for damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them.

Tenere /tənərə/. Lat. In the civil law, to hold; to hold fast; to have in possession; to retain.

In relation to the doctrine of possession, this term expresses merely the fact of manual detention, or the corporal possession of any object, without involving the question of title; while habere (and especially possidere) denotes the maintenance of possession by a lawful claim; i.e., civil possession, as distinguished from mere natural possession.

Teneri /tənərər/. The Latin name for that clause in a bond in which the obligor expresses that he is "held and firmly bound" to the obligee, his heirs, etc.

Tenet; tenuit /tənət tənəyuvət/. Lat. He holds; he held. In the Latin forms of the writ of waste against a tenant, these words introduced the allegation of tenure. If the tenancy still existed, and recovery of the land was sought, the former word was used (and the writ was said to be "in the tenet"). If the tenancy had already determined, the latter term was used (the writ being described as "in the tenuit"), and then damages only were sought.

Tenheded, or tienheofed /tənheədəd/. In Old English law, a dean.

10-K. The name of the annual financial report required by the SEC of nearly all publicly-held corporations.
This report contains more information than the annual report to stockholders. Corporations must send a copy of the 10-K to those stockholders who request it. See also 10-Q.

Tenmentale /tín-mántēyl/. The number of ten men, which number, in the time of the Saxons, was called a "decennary;" and ten decennaries made what was called a "hundred." Also a duty or tribute paid to the crown, consisting of two shillings for each plowland.

Tenne /tē-nē/. A term of heraldry, meaning orange color. In engravings it should be represented by lines in bend sinister crossed by others bar-ways. Heralds who blazon by the names of the heavenly bodies, call it "dragon's head," and those who employ jewels, "jacinth." It is one of the colors called "stainard."

Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). A government-owned corporation that conducts a unified program of resource development for the advancement of economic growth in the Tennessee Valley region. The Authority's program of activities includes flood control, navigation development, electric power production, fertilizer development, recreation improvement, and forestry and wildlife development. While its power program is financially self-supporting, other programs are financed primarily by appropriations from Congress.

Tenor. A term used in pleading to denote that an exact copy is set out. "Tenor," in pleading a written instrument, imports what the very words are set out. "Purport" does not import this, but is equivalent only to "substance."

By the tenor of a deed, or other instrument in writing, is signified the matter contained therein, according to the true intent and meaning thereof.

In chancery pleading. A certified copy of records of other courts removed in chancery by certiorari.

Tenore indictamenti mittendo /tē-nō-ri-yī andiktamenti martēnōw/. A writ whereby the record of an indictment is set out. "Tenor," in pleading a written instrument, imports that the very words are set out. "Purport" means the manner in which it is held, especially with regard to time. Winterberg v. University of Nevada System, 89 Nev. 358, 513 P.2d 1248, 1250.

Tenure is the direct result of feudalism, which separated the dominium directum (the dominion of the soil), which is placed mediately or immediately in the crown, from the dominion utile (the possessory title), the right of extension of the statute of frauds, and requires the reduction of contracts to writing.

Tenth Amendment. An amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1791) which provides that the powers not delegated to the federal government are reserved to the States or to the people.

Tenurial costs of extension of the statute of frauds, and requires the reduction of contracts to writing.

Tenure. Generally, tenure is a right, term, or mode of holding or occupying, and "tenure of an office" means the manner in which it is held, especially with regard to time. Winterberg v. University of Nevada System, 89 Nev. 358, 513 P.2d 1248, 1250.

Tenure is the direct result of feudalism, which separated the dominium directum (the dominion of the soil), which is placed mediately or immediately in the crown, from the dominion utile (the possessory title), the right to the use and profits in the soil, designated by the term "seisin," which is the highest interest a subject can acquire. Kavanaugh v. Cohoes Power & Light Corporation, 114 Misc. 590, 187 N.Y.S. 216, 231.

Wharton gives the following list of tenures which were ultimately developed:

Lay Tenures

I. Frank tenement, or freehold. (1) The military tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, and reduced to free socage tenures) were: Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry; grand serjeanty; cornage. (2) Free socage, or plow-service; either petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, or gavelkind.

II. Villeinage. (1) Pure villeinage (whence copyholds at the lord's [nominal] will, which is regulated according to custom). (2) Privileged villeinage, sometimes called "villein socage" (whence tenure in ancient demesne, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord's will), and is of three kinds: Tenure in ancient demesne; privileged copyholds, customary freeholds, or free copyholds; copyholds of base tenure.

Spiritual Tenures

I. Frankalmoigne, or free alms.
II. Tenure by divine service.

Tenure by divine service. Exists where an ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, holds land by a certain divine service; as, to say prayers on a certain day in every year, "or to distribute in alms to an hundred poor men an hundred pence at such a day."

Tenured faculty. Those members of a school's teaching staff who hold their position for life or until retirement. They may not be discharged except for cause.

Term. A word or phrase; an expression; particularly one which possesses a fixed and known meaning in some science, art, or profession.

A fixed and definite period of time; implying a period of time with some definite termination. First–Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Conway Nat. Bank, App., 282 S.C. 303, 317 S.E.2d 776, 778. Period of determined or prescribed duration. A specified period of time; e.g. term of lease, loan, contract, court session, public office, sentence.

In civil law, a space of time granted to a debtor for discharging his obligation.

Bounds, limitation, or extent of time for which an estate is granted; as when a man holds an estate for any limited or specific number of years, which is called his "term," and he himself is called, with reference to the term he so holds, the "termor," or "tenant of the term."

Word, phrase, or condition in a contract, instrument, or agreement which relates to a particular matter. U.C.C. § 1-201(42). See also Open price term.

When used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A session signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business, and the session commences when the court convenes for the term, and continues until final adjournment, either before or at the expiration of the term. The term of the court is the time prescribed by law during which it may be in session. The session of the court is the time of its actual sitting. But "term" and "session" are often used interchangeably. See also Session; and Term of court, below.

General term. A phrase used in some jurisdictions to denote the ordinary session of a court, for the trial and determination of causes, as distinguished from a special term, for the hearing of motions or arguments or the despatch of various kinds of formal business, or the trial of a special list or class of cases. Or it may denote a sitting of the court in banc.

Regular term. A term begun at the time appointed by law, and continued, in the discretion of the court, to such time as it may appoint, consistent with the law.

Special term. In court practice in certain states, that branch of the court which is held by a single judge for hearing and deciding in the first instance motions and causes of equitable nature is called the "special term," as opposed to the "general term," held by three judges (usually) to hear appeals.

Peculiar or unusual conditions imposed on a party before granting some application to the favor of the court.

Term attendant on the inheritance. See Attendant terms.

Term bonds. A bond issue whose component bonds all mature at the same time. Contrast with "serial bonds." See also Bond.

Term fee. In English practice, a certain sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party; payable for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take place.

Term for deliberating. The time given to the beneficiary heir, to examine if it be for his interest to accept or reject the succession which has fallen to him.

Term for years. An estate for years and the time during which such estate is to be held are each called a "term;" hence the term may expire before the time, as by a surrender.

Term in gross. A term of years is said to be either in gross (outstanding) or attendant upon the inheritance. It is outstanding, or in gross, when it is unattached or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, as where it is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance; it is attendant, when vested in some trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance.

Term life insurance. See Insurance.

Term loan. A loan with a specified maturity date, as opposed to a demand loan which is due whenever the lender requests payment.

Term of court. The period of time prescribed by law during which a court holds session. The Supreme Court sits in an annual term that begins on the first Monday in October and in recent years ordinarily has ended in the first week of July. The Court may also hold special terms as necessary. The U.S. district courts do not have formal terms, but rather the times for holding regular sessions are determined by local rules of the respective courts. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 138, 139. See also General term; Regular term; Special term, above.

Term of lease. The word “term,” when used in connection with a lease, means the period which is granted for the lessee to occupy the premises, and does not include the time between the making of the lease and the tenant’s entry. De Pauw University v. United Electric Coal Co., 299 Ill.App. 339, 20 N.E.2d 146, 149.

Term of office. The period during which elected officer or appointee is entitled to hold office, perform its functions, and enjoy its privileges and emoluments.

Term probatatory. The period of time allowed to the promoter of an ecclesiastical suit to produce his witnesses, and prove the facts on which he rests his case.

Term to conclude. In English ecclesiastical practice, an appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are understood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations.

Term to propound all things. In English ecclesiastical practice, an appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes.

Under terms. A party is said to be under terms when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing.

Termes de la Ley. Terms of the law. The name of a lexicon of the law French words and other technicalities of legal language in old times.

Terminable interest. An interest in property which terminates upon the death of the holder or upon the occurrence of some other specified event. The transfer of a terminable interest by one spouse to the other spouse may not qualify for the marital deduction.

Terminable property. Name sometimes given to property of such a nature that its duration is not perpetual or indefinite, but is limited or liable to terminate upon the happening of an event or the expiration of a fixed term; e.g., a leasehold, a life-annuity, etc.

Terminate. To put an end to; to make to cease; to end. Perruccio v. Allen, 156 Conn. 282, 240 A.2d 912, 914.

Terminating building societies. Societies, in England, where the members commence their monthly contributions on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, by the advance of the capital of the society to such members as required it, and the payment of interest as well as principal by them, so as to insure such realization within a given period of years. They have been superseded by permanent building societies.

Termination. End in time or existence; close; cessation; conclusion. Perruccio v. Allen, 156 Conn. 282, 240 A.2d 912, 914.

With respect to a lease or contract, term refers to an ending, usually before the end of the anticipated term of the lease or contract, which termination may be by mutual agreement or may be by exercise of one party of one of his remedies due to the default of the other party. As regards a partnership, term refers to a winding up and cessation of the business as opposed to only a technical ending (as upon the death of a partner) which is a dissolution. A dissolved partnership may terminate or may be continued by a partnership of the remaining partners, including perhaps the estate or heirs of the deceased partner.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, “termination” means legally ending a contract without its being broken by either side. U.C.C. § 2-106.

See also Dissolution; Expiration; Lapse.

Termination of conditional contract. To abrogate so much of it as remains unperformed, doing away with existing agreement under agreed terms and consequences. To put an end to all of the unperformed portions thereof. Blodgett v. Merritt Annex Oil Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 169, 65 P.2d 123, 125.

Termination of employment. Within policies providing that insurance should cease immediately upon termination of employment, means a complete severance of relationship of employer and employee. Edwards v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. of United States, 296 Ky. 448, 177 S.W.2d 574, 574, 578. See also Employment at will; Wrongful discharge.

Terminer /tármánar/. L. Fr. To determine. See Oyer and terminer.

Termini /tármánay/. Lat. Ends; bounds; limiting or terminating points.

Termino /termíynow/. In Spanish law, a common; common land. Common because of vicinage.

Term life insurance. See Insurance.

Terminum /tármánam/. A day given to a defendant.

Terminum qui preterit, writ of entry ad /rit eé eérítría a éd tármánam kwáy prétíhriyat/. A writ which lay for the reversioner, when the possession was withheld by the lessee, or a stranger, after the determination of a lease for years.

Terminus /tármánas/. Boundary; a limit, either of space or time.

The phrases “terminus a quo” and “terminus ad quem” are used, respectively, to designate the starting point and terminating point of a private way. In the case of a street, road, or railway, either end may be, and commonly is, referred to as the "terminus."

Terminus annum certus debet esse et determinatus /tármanas anórom sórtas débat éisy ét datár-manéytas/. A term of years ought to be certain and determinate.

Terminus et feodum non possunt constare simul in una eademque persona /tármanas ét fyuwdam nón póssant konstériy sáymal in y úwna ieyédmkwiyi par-sówna/. A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time.

Terminus hominis /tármanas hómanes/. In English ecclesiastical, the time of one or two years, allowed by law for the determination of appeals.

Terminus juris /tármanas járas/. In English ecclesiastical practice, the time of one or two years, allowed by law for the determination of appeals.

Termor /tarmor/. He that holds lands or tenements for the judge.

Terms. Conditions, obligations, rights, price, etc., as specified in contract or instrument. See also Term.

Terms of trust. The phrase "terms of the trust" means the manifestation of intention of the settlor with respect to the trust expressed in a manner which admits of its proof in judicial proceedings. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 4.

Terms to be under. A party is said to be under terms, when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing.

Terra /téra/. Lat. Earth; soil; arable land.

Terra affirmata /téra ñerméytas/. Land let to farm.

Terra boscalis /téra boskéylas/. Woody land.

Terra culta /téra kálta/. Cultivated land.

Terra debilis /téra débalas/. Weak or barren land.

Terra dominica, or indominicta /téra domínska/ "indominékéytas/. The demesne land of a manor.

Terra dominicales regis /tëriy domínisy líyriyías/. The demesne lands of the crown.

Terra excultabilis /téra ékskáltybalas/. Land which may be plowed.

Terra extendenda /téra éksstendénda/. A writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery.

Terra frusca, or frisca /téra fríksa/. Fresh land, not lately plowed.

Terrage /téhras/. In old English law, a kind of tax or charge on land; a boon or duty of plowing, reaping, etc.

Terrages /téhras/. An exemption from all uncertain services.

Terra hydata /téra hodyta/. Land subject to the payment of hydage.

Terra lucrabilis /téra klúwréybalas/. Land gained from the sea or inclosed out of a waste.

Terra manens vacua occupantia conceditur /téra mañens vákyuus ókyypántay konsiéydstor/. Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant.

Terra normanorum /téra nórmanoróm/. Land held by a Norman.

Terra nova /téra növwa/. Land newly converted from wood ground or arable.

Terra putura /téra puwuþüra/. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein.

Terrarius /taréryas/. In old English law, a landholder.

Terra sabulosa /téra súbalowwa/. Gravelly or sandy ground.

Terra salica /téra sálaka/. In Salic law, the land of the house; the land within that enclosure which belonged to a German house. No portion of the inheritance of Salic land passes to a woman, but this the male sex acquires; that is, the sons succeed in that inheritance.

Terra testamentalis /téra tésamentéyjas/. Gavel-kind land, being disposable by will.

Terra transit cum onere /téra trénte kám ómnaériy/. Land passes with the incumbrances.

Terra vestita /téra vástíta/. Land sown with corn.

Terra wallabilis /téra wéynéybalas/. Tillable land.

Terra warrenata /téra wórënyéyta/. Land that has the liberty of free-warren.

Terr-e-tenant /tértèntant tär/. He who is literally in the occupation or possession of the land, as distinguished from the owner out of possession. But, in a more technical sense, the person who is seized of the land, though not in actual occupancy of it, and locally, in Pennsylvania, one who purchases and takes land subject to the existing lien of a mortgage or judgment against a former owner.

Terrier. In English law, a landroll or survey of lands, containing the quantity of acres, tenants' names, and such like; and in the exchequer there is a terrier of all the glebe lands in England, made about 1338. In general, an ecclesiastical terrier contains a detail of the temporal possessions of the church in every parish.

TERRIS bonis et catallis rehabendis post purgationem /téhras bównas ét katálas ríy(h)ábendas pówst pargéyshyównam/. A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged.

TERRIS et catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum /téra ét katálas téntas áltra débotam lávytáym/. A judicial write for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt.

Territorial. Having to do with a particular area; for example, territorial jurisdiction is the power of a court to take cases from within a particular geographical area.

Territorial courts. U.S. courts in each territory, such as the Virgin Islands. They serve as both Federal and state courts. Created under U.S.Const., Art. IV, Sec. 3, cl. 2.

Territorial jurisdiction. Territory over which a government or a subdivision thereof, or court, has jurisdiction. State v. Cox, 106 Utah 253, 147 P. 2d 858, 861. Jurisdiction considered as limited to cases arising or persons residing within a defined territory, as, a county, a judicial district, etc. The authority of any court is limited by the boundaries thus fixed. See also Extraterritorial jurisdiction; Jurisdiction.

Territorial property. The land and water over which the state has jurisdiction and control whether the legal title be in the state itself or in private individuals. Lakes and waters wholly within the state are its property and also the marginal sea within the three-mile-limit, but bays and gulfs are not always recognized as state property.

Territorial; territoriality. These terms are used to signify connection with, or limitation with reference to, a particular country or territory. Thus, "territorial law" is the correct expression for the law of a particular country or state, although "municipal law" is more common.

Territorial waters. Term refers to all inland waters, all waters between line of mean high tide and line of ordinary low water, and all waters seaward to a line three geographical miles distant from the coast line. C. A. B. v. Island Airlines, Inc., D.C.Hawaii, 235 F.Supp. 990, 1002. That part of the sea adjacent to the coast of a given country which is by international law deemed to be within the sovereignty of that country, so that its courts have jurisdiction over offenses committed on those waters, even by a person on board a foreign ship. See Three-mile limit.

Territory. A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. Geographical area under the jurisdiction of another country or sovereign power.

A portion of the United States, not within the limits of any state, which has not yet been admitted as a state of the Union, but is organized, with a separate legislature, and with executive and judicial officers appointed by the president. See Trust territory.

An assigned geographical area of responsibility; e.g. salesman's territory.

Territory of a judge. The territorial jurisdiction of a judge; the bounds, or district, within which he may lawfully exercise his judicial authority. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 81 et seq. (territorial composition of federal district courts). See also Jurisdiction.

Terror. Alarm; fright; dread; the state of mind induced by the apprehension of hurt from some hostile or threatening event or manifestation; fear caused by the appearance of danger. In an indictment for riot at common law, it must have been charged that the acts done were "to the terror of the people."

An element of offense of aggravated kidnapping, is any act which is done to fill with intense fear or to coerce by threat or force. Rogers v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 687 S.W.2d 337, 341.

Terrorism. "Act of terrorism" means an activity that involves a violent act or an act dangerous to human life that is a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State, or that would be a criminal violation if committed within the jurisdiction of the United States or of any State; and appears to be intended—(i) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population; (ii) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion, or (iii) to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3077.

Terroristic threats. A person is guilty of a felony if he threatens to commit any crime of violence with purpose to terrorize another or to cause evacuation of a building, place of assembly, or facility of public transportation, or otherwise to cause serious public inconvenience, or in reckless disregard of the risk of causing such terror or inconvenience. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3077; Model Penal Code, § 211.3. See also Terrorism.

Terry-stop. See Stop and frisk.

Tertia denunciatio /tairsh(i)yja daanjinyéysh(i)yow/. Lat. In old English law, third publication or proclamation of intended marriage.

Tertius interveniens /tairsh(i)yas intarviyn(i)yenz/. Lat. In the civil law, a third person intervening; a third person who comes in between the parties to a suit; one who interpleads.

Test. To bring one to a trial and examination, or to ascertain the truth or the quality or fitness of a thing. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing; a criterion, gauge, standard, or norm.

In public law, an inquiry or examination addressed to a person appointed or elected to a public office, to ascertain his qualifications therefor, but particularly a scrutiny of his political, religious, or social views, or his attitude of past and present loyalty or disloyalty to the government under which he is to act.

See also Competitive civil service examination; Examination.

Discovery. Requests for permission to test tangible things in civil actions are governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 34. Requests for reports or results of examinations or tests are governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 35, and Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.
Testable. A person is said to be testable when he or she has capacity to make a will. In general, person of twenty-one years of age and of sane mind is testable.

Test act. The statute 25 Car. II, c. 2, which directed all civil and military officers to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and make the declaration against transubstantiation, within six months after their admission, and also within the same time receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under penalty of £500 and disability to hold the office. This was abolished by St. 9 Geo. IV, c. 17, so far as concerns receiving the sacrament, and a new form of declaration was substituted.

Test action or case. An action selected out of a considerable number of suits, concurrently depending in the same court, brought by several plaintiffs against the same defendant, or by one plaintiff against different defendants, all similar in their circumstances, and embracing the same questions, and to be supported by the same evidence, the selected action to go first to trial (under an order of court equivalent to consolidation), and its decision to serve as a test of the right of recovery in the others, all parties agreeing to be bound by the result of the test action. A lawsuit brought to establish an important legal principle or right.

Testacy /téstəsɨ/. The state or condition of leaving a will at one's death. Opposed to "intestacy."

Testa de Nevil /ˈtɛstə də ˈnɛvəl/. An ancient and authentic record in two volumes, in the custody of the king's remembrancer in the exchequer, said to be compiled by John de Nevil, a justice itinerant, in the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the public records, and contain an account of fees held either immediately of the king or of others who held of the king in capite; fees held in frankalmoine; serjeants held of the king; widows and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king; churches in the gift of the king; escheats, and sums paid for scutages and aids, especially within the county of Hereford.

Testament. Under the early English law, a term that referred to the disposition of personal property by will; i.e. by "last will and testament." The words "and testament" are no longer necessary since a will now relates to both real and personal property.

Military testament. In English law, a nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. See also Nuncupative will; Soldier's will.

Mutual testaments. Wills made by two persons who leave their effects reciprocally to the survivor.

Mystic testament. A form of testament made under Spanish law which prevailed in Louisiana and California. In the law of Louisiana, a sealed testament. The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the "closed testament," is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing those dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence. Then he shall declare to the notary, in presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator, and by the notary and the witnesses. Civ.Code La. art. 1584.

Testamenta cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur, ultimum ratum est; sic est, cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in codem testamento /testamenta kām d(y)ůwɔw intar sǐy pāgāmənsh(iy)ə rəpəryiŋəntə, əltəmə rəytəm əst; sīk əst, kām d(y)ůwɔw intar sǐy pāgāmənsh(iy)ə rəpəryiŋəntə in jyōwɔdəm təstəməntəw/. When two conflicting wills are found, the last prevails; so it is when two conflicting clauses occur in the same will.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent /təstəməntə latəsitəm intərprətəsɨhjůymən habirìdy dɛbənt/. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.

Testamentary. Pertaining to a will or testament; as testamentary causes. Derived from, founded on, or appointed by a testament or will; as a testamentary guardian, letters testamentary, etc.

A paper, instrument, document, gift, appointment, etc., is said to be "testamentary" when it is written or made so as not to take effect until after the death of the person making it, and to be revocable and retain the property under his control during his life, although he may have believed that it would operate as an instrument of a different character. See In re Murphy's Estate, 193 Wash. 400, 75 P.2d 916, 920.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, upon the admission of the will to probate, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor.

Testamentary capacity. That measure of mental ability which is recognized in law as sufficient for the making of a will. A testator to have such capacity must have sufficient mind and memory to intelligently understand the nature of business in which he is engaged, to comprehend generally the nature and extent of property which constitutes his estate, and which he intends to dispose of, and to recollect the objects of his bounty. In re Lacy's Estate, Okl., 431 P.2d 366, 368. See also Capacity.

Testamentary character. Of the nature or pertaining to a disposition of property at death.
Testamentary class. Body of persons, uncertain in number at time of gift, ascertainable in future, and each taking in equal or in other definite proportions. A "testamentary class gift" is a gift to a group whose number at the time of the gift is uncertain but which will be ascertainable at some future time when all who constitute the class will take an equal or other definite portion, the amount of the share of each being dependent upon the number that ultimately constitutes the class. Lux v. Lux, 109 R.I. 592, 288 A.2d 701, 705.

Testamentary disposition. The passing of property to another upon the death of the owner. A disposition of property by way of gift, will or deed which is not to take effect unless the grantor dies or until that event.

Testamentary guardian. A guardian appointed by the last will of parent for the person and real and personal estate of child until the latter arrives of full age. In re De Saulles, 101 Misc. 447, 167 N.Y.S. 445, 453.

Testamentary intent. Requirement for a valid will that the testator must intend that the instrument presently operate as his or her last will and testament.

Testamentary paper or instrument. An instrument in the nature of a will; an unprobated will; a paper writing which is of the character of a will, though not formally such, and, if allowed as a testament, will have the effect of a will upon the devolution and distribution of property.

Testamentary power of appointment. A power of appointment that can be exercised only through the will (i.e., upon the death) of the holder. Restatement, Property, § 321(1). See also Power of appointment.

Testamentary trust. A trust created by a will which takes effect only upon the testator's death. The trust must satisfy requirements of both a valid trust and a valid will. See also Trust.

Testamentary trustee. See Trustee.

Testamenti factio /téstəməntəi ˈfɛkəsi(ɨ)əw/. Lat. In the civil law, the ceremony of making a testament, either as testator, heir, or witness.

Testamentum /téstəməntəm/. Lat. In the civil law, a testament; a will, or last will.

In old English law, a testament or will; a disposition of property made in contemplation of death.

A general name for any instrument of conveyance, including deeds and charters, and so called either because it furnished written testimony of the conveyance, or because it was authenticated by witnesses (testes).

Testamentum est voluntatis nostræ justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit /téstəməntəm ɛst ˈvoləntiətəs ˈnɔstrə ˈdʒɛst santənˈʃiə/. diy ɨˈjov kwəd kwɪs ˈpɔːst mɔrtəm sɨˈljuwəm fəˈʃræj vɪlət/. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which any one wishes done after his death [or, as Blackstone translates, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death"].

Testamentum, i.e., testatio mentis, facta nulla presente metu periculli, sed cogitatione mortalitatis /téstəməntəm, ɪd ɛst, téstəˈʃiə(ɨ)əw məntəs, ˈfɛktə nələw prəˈzɛnti ˈmɛti(ɨ)əuv pərˈkɪklələ, sɛd kəʊˈʃtɛjəliˈwɒnɪli mɔrtəlˈstiʃətəs/. A testament, i.e., the witnessing of one's intention, made under no present fear of danger, but in expectancy of death.

Testamentum inofficiosum /téstəməntəm ɪnəfəʃˈiəwəsəm/. Lat. In the civil law, an inofficious testament (q.v.).

Testamentum omne morte consummatur /téstəməntəm ˈɔmni mɔrtə səkwəmˈʃətə/. Every will is perfected by death. A will speaks from the time of death only.

Testari /téstəˈrɛə/. Lat. In the civil law, to testify; to attest; to declare, publish, or make known a thing before witnesses. To make a will.

Testate /téstətə/. One who has made a will; one who dies leaving a will. See Testator-trix; Compare Intestate.

Testate succession. Acquisition of property or rights through a will.

Testation /téstəˈʃiən/. Witness; evidence.

Testator-trix /téstəˈtərɪks/. A woman who makes a will; a female testator. Compare Intestate.

Testator /téstəˈtər/. One who makes a will or has made a testament or will; one who dies leaving a will. This term is borrowed from the civil law.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam /téstətəˈrɪs uliˈma ˈvɔləntəs ɛst pərɪˈmplənda sekɨˈndəm viˈɾəm ɪnˈtɛnʃənəm suˈam/. The last will of a testator is to be thoroughly fulfilled according to his real intention.

Testatrix /téstəˈtrəks/. A woman who makes a will; a woman who dies leaving a will; a female testator.

Testatum /téstəˈtəm/. The name of a writ which is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county in the same state, when defendant cannot be found in the county where the court is located: for example, after a judgment has been obtained, and a ca. sa. has been issued, which has been returned non est inventus, a testatum ca. sa. may be issued to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is.

In conveyancing, that part of a deed which commences with the words, "This indenture witnesses."

Testatum writ /téstəˈtəm rɪt/. In practice, a writ containing a testatum clause; such as a testatum capias, a testatum fi., and a testatum ca. sa. See Testatum.

Testatus /téstəˈtətəs/. Lat. In the civil law, testate; one who has made a will.

Test case. See Test action or case.

Teste. To bear witness formally. See Teste of a writ.

Tested /téstɪd/. To be tested is to bear the teste (q.v.).

Teste meipso /téstɪ miˈspəʊ/. Lat. In old English law and practice, a solemn formula of attestation by the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery.

Teste of a writ /téstiyz oʊ ə ɹɪt/. In practice, the concluding clause, commencing with the word "Witness," etc. A writ which bears the teste is sometimes said to be tested.

In English law, "teste" is a word commonly used in the last part of every writ, wherein the date is contained beginning with the words, "Teste meipso," meaning the sovereign, if the writ be an original writ, or be issued in the name of the sovereign; but, if the writ be a judicial writ, then the word "Teste" is followed by the name of the chief judge of the court in the which the action is brought, or, in case of a vacancy of such office, in the name of the senior puisne judge.

Testes /téstiyz/. Lat. Witnesses.

Testes ponderantur, non numerantur /téstiyz pön-daʀóntar, nɔn n(y)uwmaraʀóntar/. Witnesses are weighed, not numbered. That is, in case of a conflict of evidence, the truth is to be sought by weighing the credibility of the respective witnesses, not by the mere numerical preponderance on one side or the other.

Testes qui postulat debet dare eis sumptus competentes /téstiyz kwá póstyalat débät déríy iyás sámp(p)tas kómpsténtiyz/. Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.

Testes, trial per /tráyl(ə) pər téstiyz/. A trial had before a judge without the intervention of a jury, in which the judge is left to form in his own breast his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined; but this mode of trial, although it was common in the civil law, was seldom resorted to in the practice of the common law, but it is now becoming common when each party waives his right to a trial by jury.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero, dignioribus /téstiyz kway pósyalat débåt déríy iyås sámp(t)as kómpsténtiyz/. The witnesses who testify are in equal number [on both sides], the more worthy are to be believed.

Testibüs ponderantur, non ponderantur, non numerantur /téstiyz pön-daʀóntar, nɔn n(y)uwmaraʀóntar/. Witnesses are weighed, not numbered. That is, in case of a conflict of evidence, the truth is to be sought by weighing the credibility of the respective witnesses, not by the mere numerical preponderance on one side or the other.

Testibüs qui postulat debet dare eis sumptus competentes /téstiyz kwá pósyalat débåt déríy iyås sámp(t)as kómpsténtiyz/. Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.

Testify. To bear witness; to give evidence as a witness; to make a solemn declaration, under oath or affirmation, in a judicial inquiry, for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.

Testimonial. In the nature of testimony. Evidence is said to be testimonial when elicited from a witness in contrast to documentary evidence or real evidence.

Besides its ordinary meaning of a written recommendation to character, "testimonial" has a special meaning, under St. 39 Eliz., c. 17, § 3, passed in 1597, under which it signified a certificate under the hand of a justice of the peace, testifying the place and time when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling or birth, unto which he was to pass, and a convenient time limited for his passage. Every idle and wandering soldier or mariner not having such a testimonial, or willfully exceeding for above fourteen days the time limited thereby, or forging or counterfeiting such testimonial, was to suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy. This English act was repealed, in 1812, by St. 52 Geo. III, c. 31.

Testimonial evidence. Evidence elicited from a witness in contrast to documentary or real evidence. See also Evidence; Testimony.

Testimonial proof. In the civil law, proof by the evidence of witnesses, i.e., parol evidence, as distinguished from proof by written instruments, which is called "literal" proof. See Evidence.

Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda /téstamow(i)yam pöndaʀánda sánt, nɔn n(y)uwmaraʀánda/. Evidence is to be weighed, not enumerated.

Testimonio /téstamow(i)yow/. In Spanish law, an authentic copy of a deed or other instrument, made by a notary and given to an interested party as evidence of his title, the original remaining in the public archives.

Testimonium clause /téstamow(i)yam kloz/. In conveyancing, that clause of a deed or instrument with which it concludes; "In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals." A clause in the instrument reciting the date on which the instrument was executed and by whom.

Testimony. Evidence given by a competent witness under oath or affirmation; as distinguished from evidence derived from writings, and other sources. Testimony is particular kind of evidence that comes to tribunal through live witnesses speaking under oath or affirmation in presence of tribunal, judicial or quasi-judicial.

In common parlance, "testimony" and "evidence" are synonymous. Testimony properly means only such evidence as is delivered by a witness on the trial of a cause, either orally or in the form of affidavits or depositions.

See also Character evidence; Evidence; Failure to testify; Opinion evidence or testimony; Perpetuating testimony.

Expert testimony. See Evidence (Expert evidence); Expert witness.

Negative testimony. Testimony not bearing directly upon the immediate fact or occurrence under consideration, but evidencing facts from which it may be inferred that the act or fact in question could not possibly have happened.

Positive testimony. Direct testimony that a thing did or did not happen.

Testis /téʃtis/. Lat. A witness; one who gives evidence in court, or who witnesses a document.

Testis de visu preponderat alis /téʃtis di ɹêvəz(y)uw prəpendərat ɹəliʃ/. An eye-witness is preferred to others.

Testis lupanaris sufficit ad factum in lupanari /téʃtis ɬ(y)uwpənəɹəs səfəsət ɬə ɹəktəm in ɬ(y)uwpənəɹərə/. A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel.

Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest /téʃtis nəməw in suə ɹəkuə sə ɹəpuˌtəst/. No one can be a witness in his own case.
The Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem/téstos okyálytás ywínas plás válat kwám ohrátyay désam/. One eye-witness is worth more than ten ear-witnesses.

Testmoignes ne poent testifier le negative, mes l'affirmative. Witnesses cannot testify to a negative; they must testify to an affirmative.

Textus roffensis/téktas rofénäs/. In old English law, the Rochester text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc., of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ermulp, bishop of that see from A.D. 1114 to 1124.

Thainland/téynlaend/. In old English law, the land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thanes or thanes was so called.

Thalweg/tálvéyk/. Old German spelling of Talweg, which title see.

Under the doctrine of “thalweg,” the water boundary between states is defined as the middle of the deepest or most navigable channel, as distinguished from the geographic center or a line midway between the banks. U.S. v. Louisiana, 470 U.S. 93, 105 S.Ct. 1074, 1083, 84 L.Ed.2d 73. The middle of main navigable channel, the track taken by boats in their course downstream, which is that of the strongest current. Anderson-Tully Co. v. Walls, D.C.Miss., 266 F.Supp. 804, 812.

Thanage of the king/téynaj ñv ña kíg/. A certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called “thane.”

Thane/téyn/. An Anglo-Saxon nobleman; an old title of honor, perhaps equivalent to “baron.” There were two orders of thanes,—the king’s thanes and the ordinary thanes. Soon after the Conquest this name was disused.

Thanelands/téynlèndz/. Such lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon kings to their thanes with all immunities, except from the trinoda necessitas.

Thaneship/téynship/. The office and dignity of a thane; the seigniory of a thane.

That. A relative pronoun equivalent to who or which, either singular or plural.

Thavies inn. An inn of chancery. See Inns of chancery.

The. An article which particularizes the subject spoken of. In construing statute, definite article “the” particularizes the subject which it precedes and is word of limitation as opposed to indefinite or generalizing force “a” or “an”. Brooks v. Zabka, 168 Colo. 265, 450 P.2d 653, 655.

Thief. A popular name for larceny. The act of stealing. The taking of property without the owner's consent. People v. Sims, 29 Ill.App.3d 815, 331 N.E.2d 178, 179. The fraudulent taking of personal property belonging to another, from his possession, or from the possession of some person holding the same for him, without his consent, with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same, and to appropriate it to the use or benefit of the person taking.

It is also said that theft is a wider term than larceny and that it includes swindling and embezzlement and that generally, one who obtains possession of property by lawful means and thereafter appropriates the property to the taker's own use is guilty of a "theft". Kidwell v. Paul Revere Fire Ins. Co., 294 Ky. 834, 172 S.W.2d 639, 640; People v. Pillsbury, 59 Cal.App.2d 107, 138 P.2d 320, 322.

Thief is any of the following acts done with intent to deprive the owner permanently of the possession, use or benefit of his property: (a) Obtaining or exerting unauthorized control over property; or (b) Obtaining by deception control over property; or (c) Obtaining by threat control over property; or (d) Obtaining control over stolen property knowing the property to have been stolen by another.

See also Auto theft; Embezzlement; Extortion; Intimidation; Larceny; Robbery; Steal; Shoplifting.

Theft by deception. Under Model Penal Code § 223.3, a person is guilty of theft by deception if he purposely obtains property of another by deception.

Theft by false pretext. Obtaining property by means of false pretext with intent to deprive owner of value of property without his consent and to appropriate it to own use, followed by such appropriation. Hoovel v. State, 125 Tex.Cr.R. 545, 69 S.W.2d 104, 106.

Theft of services. Obtaining services from another by deception, threat, coercion, stealth, mechanical tampering or use of false token or device.

Theft-bote/téftbówt/. The offense committed by a party who, having been robbed and knowing the felon, takes back his goods again, or receives other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute. Farmers' Nat. Bank of Somerset v. Tarter, 256 Ky. 70, 75 S.W.2d 758, 760.

Theft-bote est emenda furti capta, sine consideratione curiae domini regis/téftbówt ést sméndo fárty kápta, sániy kánsidáréshiyóniy kyúhniríy dómmany riýjà/. Theft-bote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king.
Thegn /θéyn/. An Anglo-Saxon term meaning a retain¬er. At a later period these were king's thegns, who were persons of great importance, and Inferior thegns. Military service appears to have run through it all. After the Conquest, they were merged into the class of knights.

Thegnage tenure /θéynj ténjər/. A kind of tenure in Northumbria in the 13th century and beyond, of which little is known.

Thelonio irrationabili habendo /θelown(i)yow ihrahshonêbolay hâbêndow/. A writ that formerly lay for him that had any part of the king's demesne in fee-farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king's tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled.

Thelonium /θelown(i)yam/. An abolished writ for citi¬zens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll.

Thelonmannus /θelamá̈nasə̈s/. The toll-man or officer who receives toll.

Thelusson Act. In English law, the statute 39 & Geo. III, c. 98, which restricted accumulations to a term of twenty-one years from the testator's death. It was passed in consequence of litigation over the will of one Thelusson.

Theme. In Saxon law, the power of having jurisdiction over naifs or villeins, with their suits or offspring, lands, goods, and chattels.

Themmagium /θêmeyj(i)amə/. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme or team.

Then. This word, as an adverb, means "at that time," referring to a time specified, either past or future. It has no power in itself to fix a time. It simply refers to a time already fixed. It may also denote a contingency, and be equivalent to "in that event."

Then and there. At the time and place last previously mentioned or charged. Context, however, may give the phrase a more remote antecedent than the time and place last previously mentioned or charged.

Thence. From that place, or that time; on that account; therefore. In surveying, and in descriptions of land by courses and distances, this word, preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it.

Thence down the river. This phrase as used in field notes of a surveyor of a patent, is construed to mean with the meanders of the river, unless there is positive evidence that the meander line as written was where the surveyor in fact ran it; for such lines are to show the general course of the stream and to be used in estimating acreage, and not necessarily boundary lines.

Theocracy. Government of a state by the immediate direction of God (or by the assumed direction of a supposititious divinity), or the state thus governed.

Theoden. In Saxon law, a husbandman or inferior ten¬ant; an under-thane.

Theodosian Code /θiedyóswah(y)øn kowdə/. See Codex Theodosianus.

Theof. In Saxon law, offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations.

Theophilus' Institutes /θiyo̓falæ̊sz instat(y)uwtsə/. See Institutes.

Theory of case. Facts on which the right of action is claimed to exist. The basis of liability or grounds of defense. Higgins v. Fuller, 48 N.M. 218, 148 P.2d 575, 579. See Cause of action.

Theory of law. The legal premise or set of principles on which a case rests.

Theory of pleading doctrine. The pre-code principle that one must prove his case as pleaded. Otherwise, he fails though he has set forth facts sufficient to sustain his case on a theory different from his pleadings. The various codes and rules of civil procedure have abolished this strict pleading and proof requirement; see e.g. Fed. R.Civil P. 15 which permits amendment of pleadings to conform to evidence.

Theowes, theowmen, or thews /θ(y)uwzθ(y)uwmanə/. In feudal law, slaves, captives, or bondmen.

There. In or at that place.

Thereabout. About that place.

Thereafter. After the time last mentioned; after that; after that time; afterward; subsequently; thenceforth.

Thence. Without delay or lapse of time. Immedi¬ately where the terms thereupon and thereby are distin¬guished. Following on; in consequence of. Yuma County Water Users' Ass'n v. Schlecht, 262 U.S. 138, 43 S.Ct. 498, 500, 67 L.Ed. 909.

Thesaurus abscenditus /θesóhrs absoróndstasə/. In old English law, treasure hidden or buried.

Thesaurus competit domino regi, et non domino li¬beratis, nisi sit per verba specialia /θesóhrs kompatat domanow riyjay, et non domanow libartéytas, náyssy sit pár várba spéshiyéyī(i)yə/. A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words.

Thesaurus inventus /θesóhrs invéntəsə/. In old English law, treasure found; treasure-trove.

Thesaurus inventus est vetus dispositio pecunias, etc., cuius non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam domi¬num non habent /θesóhrs invéntas ést viyttas dispzishí(i)yow paskyúwníyiy, eetełórøam, kyúwjas nón ékstat mówdow mamóryią, ñdíyow ːt jarm dómanam nón hěhybiytə/. Treasure-trove is an ancient hiding of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner.

Thesaurus non competit regi, nisi quando nemo scit qui abscondit thesaurum /θ̂əʊsōhrəs, nón kòmpətst riyjəy, náyəy kwóndnəy niəəm sət kwéy absekəndət əθ̂əsōhram/. Treasure does not belong to the king, unless no one knows who hid it.

Thesaurus regis est vinculum pacis et bellorum nervus /θ̂əsōhəjəs ést vīgl(ə)ələm pēyəsə ēt belərm nərvəs/. The king's treasure is the bond of peace and the sinews of war.

Thesaurus, thesarium /θ̂əsəhərəm̄s/θ̂əsəhəriəm/. The treasury; a treasure.

Thesmothete /θ̂esməθeɪt/. A law-maker; a law-giver.

Thethinga /θ̂əθiŋə/. A tithing.

Thia /θ̂iə/. Lat. In the civil and old European law, an aunt.

Thief. One who steals; one who commits theft or larceny. See also Common thief.

Thin capitalization. When debt owed by a corporation to its shareholders is large in relationship to its capital structure (i.e., stock and shareholder equity), the I.R.S. may contend that the corporation is thinly capitalized. In effect, this means that some or all of the debt will be reclassified as equity. The immediate result is to disallow any interest deduction to the corporation on the reclassified debt. To the extent of the corporation's earnings and profits, interest payments and loan repayments are treated as dividends to the shareholders. I.R.C. § 385.

Thin corporation. A corporation with an excessive amount of debt in its capitalization. A thin corporation is primarily a tax concept. See Thin capitalization.

Things. The objects of dominion or property as contradistinguished from "persons." Gayer v. Whelan, 59 Cal.App.2d 255, 138 P.2d 763, 768. The object of a right; i.e., whatever is treated by the law as the object over which one person exercises a right, and with reference to which another person lies under a duty.

Such permanent objects, not being persons, as are sensible, or perceptible through the senses. Things are distributed into three kinds: (1) Things real or immovable, comprehending lands, tenements, and hereditaments; (2) things personal or movable, comprehending goods and chattels; and (3) things mixed, partaking of the characteristics of the two former, as a title-deed, a term for years. The civil law divided things into corporeal (tangi possunt) and incorporeal (tangi non possunt).

Things in action. A right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding. See Chose in action.

Things of value. To be the subject of gaming may refer to any thing affording the necessary lure to indulge the gambling instinct. Heartley v. State, 178 Tenn. 254, 157 S.W.2d 1, 3. Within meaning of federal larceny statute (18 U.S.C.A. § 641) a "thing of value" involves both intangible and tangible property. U.S. v. Jeter, C.A.Ky., 775 F.2d 670, 680.

Things personal. Goods, money, and all other moveables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he may go. Things personal consist of goods, money, and all other moveables, and of such rights and profits as relate to moveables. Also all vegetable productions, as the fruit or other parts of a plant when severed from the body of it, or the whole plant itself, when severed from the ground. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Bush, 191 Ark. 1085, 89 S.W.2d 723, 725. See also Property (Personal property).

Things real. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as lands and tenements and hereditaments. 2 Bl.Comm. 16. Western Union Telegraph v. Bush, 191 Ark. 1085, 89 S.W.2d 723, 725. See also Property (Real property).

Thingus. In Saxon law, a thane or nobleman; knight or freeman.

Think. To believe, to consider, to conclude, to esteem; to recollect or call to mind.

Third. Following next after the second; also, with reference to any legal instrument or transaction or judicial proceeding, any outsider or person not a party to the affair nor immediately concerned in it.

Thirdborough, or thirdborow /θ̂ərdəbə(ɹ)ə/. An under-constable.

Third conviction. See Habitual criminal; Recidivist.

Third degree. Term used to describe the process of securing a confession or information from a suspect or prisoner by prolonged questioning, the use of threats, or actual violence. See Confession; Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Term is also sometimes used as a classification of crime (e.g. murder in the third degree).

Thirdings /θ̂ərdəŋs/. In old English law, the third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat, in Hereford.

Third market. See Over-the-counter market.

Third-night-awn-hinde. In old English law by the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a "third-night-awn-hinde," and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offense. The first night, forman-night, or uncouth (unknown), he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, twa-night, a guest; and the third night, an awnhinde, a domestic.

Third party. One not a party to an agreement, a transaction, or an action but who may have rights therein. See also Party, Privily.

Third party action. A proceeding distinct from the main action. It is in the nature of an indemnity or contribution, the purpose of which is to bring into the lawsuit a party who is or may be liable to defendant for all or part of plaintiff's claim against defendant. Ho-Third party beneficiary. One for whose benefit a promise is made in a contract but who is not a party to the contract. Chitlik v. Allstate Ins. Co., 34 Ohio App.2d 193, 299 N.E.2d 295, 297, 63 O.O.2d 364. A person not a party to an insurance contract who has legally enforceable rights thereunder. A prime requisite to the status of "third party beneficiary" under a contract is that the parties to the contract must have intended to benefit the third party, who must be something more than a mere incidental beneficiary. McKinney v. Davis, 84 N.M. 352, 503 P.2d 332, 333. See also Privy.

Third-party-beneficiary contract. A contract between two or more parties, the performance of which is intended to benefit directly a third party, thus giving the third party a right to file suit for breach of contract by either of the original contract parties.

Third party check. Check which the payee endorses to another party, e.g. as when a person receives a check and endorses it to the IRS. A person who takes a third-party check in good faith and without notice of a security interest can be a holder in due course. Valley Nat. Bank v. Porter, C.A.Iowa, 705 F.2d 1027, 1028-29.

Third party complaint. A complaint filed by the defendant against a third-party (i.e., a person not presently a party to the lawsuit). This complaint alleges that the third party is or may be liable for all or part of the damages which the plaintiff may win from the defendant. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 14. For requisite content of third party claim under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see Complaint. See also Third-party practice.

Third-party practice. Under rules practice, a defendant may, after the main action has been commenced, institute an action against a person not a party to the action for all or part of the plaintiff's claim against him. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 14. Procedural device whereby defendant in an action may bring in additional party in claim against such party because of a claim that is being asserted against the defendant. Denneler v. Aubel Ditching Service, Inc., 203 Kan. 117, 453 P.2d 88, 91. See also Impieader; Third-party complaint; Vouching-in.

Thirds. The designation, in colloquial language, of that portion of a decedent's personal estate (one-third) which goes to the widow where there is also a child or children.

Thirteenth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution which abolished slavery and involuntary servitude in 1865.

Thirty-day letter. A letter which accompanies a revenue agent's report (RAR) issued as a result of an Internal Revenue Service audit of a taxpayer (or the rejection of a taxpayer's claim for refund). The letter outlines the taxpayer's appeal procedure before the Internal Revenue Service. If the taxpayer does not request any such procedures within the 30-day period, the Internal Revenue Service will issue a statutory notice of deficiency (the "90-day letter"). See also Ninety (90) day letter.

Thirty-nine articles. See Articles of faith.

This. When "this" and "that" refer to different things before expressed, "this" refers to the thing last mentioned, and "that" to the thing first mentioned. "This" is a demonstrative adjective, used to point out with particularity a person or thing present in place or in thought.

This day six months. In English law, fixing "this day six months," or "three months," for the next stage of a bill, is one of the modes in which the house of lords and the house of commons reject bills of which they disapprove. A bill rejected in this manner cannot be reintroduced in the same session.

Thoroughfare. The term means, according to its derivation, a street or passage through which one can fare (travel); that is, a street or highway affording an unobstructed exit at each end into another street or public passage. If the passage is closed at one end, admitting no exit there, it is called a "cul de sac."

Thrive. In old English law, a measure of corn or grain, consisting of twenty-four sheaves or four shocks, six sheaves to every shock.

Thread. A middle line; a line running through the middle of a stream or road. See Filum; Filum acquire; Filum vic; Thalweg.

Threat. A communicated intent to inflict physical or other harm on any person or on property. A declaration of an intention to injure another or his property by some unlawful act. State v. Schwepp, Minn., 237 N.W.2d 609, 615. A declaration of intention or determination to inflict punishment, loss, or pain on another, or to injure another or his property by the commission of some unlawful act. U. S. v. Daulong, D.C.La., 60 F.Supp. 235, 236. A menace; especially, any menace of such a nature and extent as to unsettle the mind of the person on whom it operates, and to take away from his acts that free and voluntary action which alone constitutes consent. A declaration of one's purpose or intention to work injury to the person, property, or rights of another, with a view of restraining such person's freedom of action.

The term, "threat" means an avowed present determination or intent to injure presently or in the future. A statement may constitute a threat even though it is subject to a possible contingency in the maker's control. The prosecution must establish a "true threat," which means a serious threat as distinguished from words uttered as mere political argument, idle talk or jest. In determining whether words were uttered as a threat the context in which they were spoken must be considered.

Threats against the President and successors to the President, mailing of threatening communications, and other extortionate acts, are federal offenses. 18 U.S.C.A. § 871 et seq.

See also Coercion; Duress; Extortion.

Terroristic threat. Any threat to commit violence communicated with intent to terrorize another, or to cause the evacuation of any building, place of assembly or facility of transportation, or in wanton disregard of the risk of causing such terror or evacuation. See Model Penal Code § 211.3; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3077. See also Terroristic threats.

Threatening letters. Mailing of threatening communications is a federal offense. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 876, 877.

Three-dollar piece. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of three dollars; authorized by the seventh section of the act of February 21, 1853.

Three-judge courts. Most cases in federal district courts are heard and determined by only a single judge. For many years, however, Congress has provided for a special three-judge panel in certain categories of cases thought to require special safeguards against arbitrary action, with direct review in the Supreme Court. Three judges are required in condemnation suits involving the TVA, 16 U.S.C.A. Section 831X, and in certain actions under the 1964 Civil Rights and 1965 Voting Rights Acts, 42 U.S.C.A. Sections 1971(g), 1973h(c), 2000a-5(b). Of most significance, however, were 28 U.S.C.A. Sections 2281 and 2282, which required three judges in suits to enjoin enforcement of state or federal statutes, or state administrative orders, on constitutional grounds. Sections 2281 and 2282 were however repealed in 1976 and § 2284 amended to restrict the convening of three-judge courts to when otherwise required by Congress, or to when an action is filed challenging the constitutionality of congressional apportionment or the apportionment of any statewide legislative body.

Three-mile limit. The distance of one marine league or three miles offshore normally recognized as the limit of territorial jurisdiction. See Territorial waters.

Threnges. Vassals, but not of the lowest degree; those who held lands of the chief lord.

Thrift institutions. See Bank; Savings and loan associations.

Thrithing /θrɪˈɑːɪŋ/. In Saxon and old English law, the third part of a county; a division of a county consisting of three or more hundreds. Gradually corrupted to “riding”. 1 Bl.Comm. 116.

Through. By means of, in consequence of, by reason of; in, within; over; from end to end, or from one side to the other. By the intermediary of; in the name or as agent of; by the agency of; because of. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. City of Richmond, 183 Va. 961, 33 S.E.2d 796, 802. “Through” is function word capable of several meanings depending on its use; it may indicate passage from one side to another, means of communication, or movement from point to point within a broad expanse or area. State v. Smith, Mo., 431 S.W.2d 74 78.

Through bill of lading. That species of bill of lading which is used when more than one carrier is required for shipping.

Through lot. A lot that abuts upon a street at each end.

Through rate. Total shipping costs when two or more shippers (carriers) are involved. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Throwback Rule. In taxation of trusts, the throwback rule requires that the amount distributed in any tax year which is in excess of that year’s distributable net income must be “thrown back” to the preceding year and treated as if it had then been distributed. The beneficiary is taxed in the current year although the computation is made as if the excess had been distributed in the previous year. If the trust did not have undistributed accumulated income in the preceding year, the amount of the throwback is tested against each of the preceding years; in other words, the throwback rule may require consideration of the trust income and its distributions for all of the years preceding the tax year. I.R.C. §§ 665–668.

As term is also used in taxation, if there is no income tax in the state to which a sale would otherwise be assigned for apportionment purposes, the sale essentially is exempt from state income tax, even though the seller is domiciled in a state that levies an income tax. Nonetheless, if the seller’s state has adopted a throwback rule, the sale is attributed to the seller’s state, and the transaction is subjected to a state-level tax. See also Apportionment.

Thrown from automobile. This phrase within the meaning of a criminal statute, is not necessarily an attack with a pointed weapon; it means pushing or driving with force, whether the point of the weapon be sharp or not.

Thrymsa /θrɪmˈsə/. A Saxon coin worth fourpence.

Thude-weald /θuːdːweːld/. A woodland, or person that looks after a wood.

Ticke /tɪk/. In old English law, the custom of giving entertainments to a sheriff, etc., for three nights.

Ticket. A colloquial expression for credit or trust; credit given for goods purchased.
TICKET

In English law, a license or permit given to a convict, as a reward for good conduct, originally in the penal settlements, which allows him to go at large, and labor for himself, before the expiration of his sentence, subject to certain specific conditions and revocable upon subsequent misconduct. English equivalent of parole. Such is governed by Criminal Justice Act of 1967, §§ 59-62, as amended by Criminal Law Act of 1977, and extended by Criminal Justice Act of 1982, § 33.

Ticket-of-leave man. A convict who has obtained a ticket of leave.

Ticket speculator. One who purchases and then resells tickets at a price over their face value. A scalper.

Tidal. Affected by or having tides. In order that a river may be "tidal" at a given spot, it may not be necessary that the water should be salt, but the spot must be one where the tide, in the ordinary and regular course of things, flows and reflows.

Tide. The ebb and flow of the sea. As affecting determination of upland boundary of shore, "tide" is rising and falling of water of the sea that is produced by attraction of sun and moon, uninfluenced by special winds, seasons or other circumstances, and meteorological influences should be distinguished as "meteorological tides," and "atmospheric meteorological tides" should be distinguished. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Sun Oil Co., C.A.Mo., 542 F.2d 1396, 1344. See Tying arrangement.

Tie-in arrangement. See Tied product; Tying arrangement.

Tiel. L. Fr. Such. Nul tie record, no such record.

Tiempo inhábil /tiempo inhábil/. Span. A time of inability; a time when the person is not able to pay his debts (when, for instance, he may not alienate property to the prejudice of his creditors). The term is used in Louisiana.

Tierce /tiers/tiers/. A liquid measure, containing the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons.

TIF. See Tax increment financing.

Tigh /tay/. In old records, a close or inclosure; a croft.

Tight. As colloquially applied to a note, bond, mortgage, lease, etc., this term signifies that the clauses providing the creditor's remedy in case of default (as, by foreclosure, execution, distress, etc.) are summary and stringent.

Tigni immittendi /tigni immittendi/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which is the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighboring house, in order that it may rest on the latter, and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight.

Tignum /tignum/. Lat. A civil law term for building material; timber.

Tihler. In old Saxon law, an accusation.

Tillage. A place tilled or cultivated; land under cultivation, as opposed to lands lying fallow or in pasture.

Timber lease. Lease of real property which contemplates that the lessee will cut timber on the demised premises. See also Timber rights.

Timberlode. A service by which tenants were bound to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house.

Timber rights. A profit à prendre, the owner of which is entitled to cut and remove timber from the real property described therein. Blair v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., Ala., 474 So.2d 661, 662. See also Profit (Profit à prendre), Timber lease.

Time. The measure of duration. The word is expressive both of a precise point or terminus and of an interval between two points.

A point in or space of duration at or during which some fact is alleged to have been committed. See also Computation of time; Elargement of time.

Cooling time. See Cooling off period.

Reasonable time. Such length of time as may fairly, properly, and reasonably be allowed or required, having regard to the nature of the act or duty, or of the subject-matter, and to the attending circumstances. It is a maxim of English law that "how long a 'reasonable time' ought to be is not defined in law, but is left to the discretion of the judges." Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U.S. 587, 591, 23 L.Ed. 328. See also Reasonable time.

Time-bargain. In the language of the stock exchange, an agreement to buy or sell stock at a future time, or within a fixed time, at a certain price. It is in reality nothing more than a bargain to pay differences.

Time bill. A bill of exchange which contains a definite or determinable date for payment in contrast to a demand or sight bill.

Time charter. A time charter is a specific and express contract by which the owner lets a vessel or some particular part thereof to another person for a specified time or use; the owner continues to operate the vessel, contracting to render services by his master and crew to carry goods loaded on the vessel, and the master and crew remain servants of the owner. Atlantic Banana Co. v. M. V. "Calança", D.C.N.Y., 342 F.Supp. 447, 453. A lease of vessel under which owner provides captain and crew who remain subject to owner's control. Gillentine v. McKeand, C.A.Mass., 426 F.2d 717, 719. Compare Bareboat charter.

Time credit. A letter of credit that is duly honored by the issuer accepting drafts drawn thereunder. Essentially synonymous with "usance credit" and "acceptance credit."

Time deposit. Another term for a savings account or certificate of deposit in a commercial bank. It is so called because in theory (though no longer in practice) a person must wait a certain amount of time after notice of desire to withdraw part or all of his or her savings. Certificates of deposit usually carry penalties for early withdrawal. Cash in a bank earning interest; contrast with demand deposit. See Deposit.

Time draft. A draft payable at a definite time in the future. See also Time bill, above.

Time immemorial. Time whereof the memory of a man is not to the contrary.

Time is the essence of contract. Means that performance by one party at time or within period specified in contract is essential to enable him to require performance by other party. Hayes Mfg. Corporation v. McCauley, C.C.A.Ohio, 140 F.2d 187, 189. When this phrase is in a contract, it means that a failure to do what is required by the time specified is a breach of the contract.

Time of memory. In English law, time commencing from the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Bl. Comm. 31. Lord Coke defines time of memory to be "when no man alive hath had any proof to the contrary, nor hath any conusance to the contrary."

Time order. An order which becomes a market or limited price order at a specified time.

Time out of memory. Time beyond memory; time out of mind; time to which memory does not extend.

Time-policy. A policy of marine insurance in which the risk is limited, not to a given voyage, but to a certain fixed term or period of time.

Time value. The price associated with the length of time an investor must wait until an investment matures or the related income is earned. See also Yield (Yield to maturity).

Timeliness. The importance of fulfilling the terms of a contract by the date provided for in the agreement. See, Time (Time is the essence of contract).

Time-price differential. "Time price differential" refers to a figure representing the difference between the cash price of an item and the total cost of purchasing that item on credit. Topline Equipment, Inc. v. Stan Witty Land, Inc., 321 Wash.App. 86, 639 P.2d 825, 829. Method by which seller charges one price for immediate cash payment and a different (advance in) price when payment is made at future date or in installments and the former is the cash price and the latter the "time-price" or credit price and difference in price is the "time-price differential". State ex rel. Guste v. Council of City of New Orleans, La.App., 297 So.2d 518, 525.

Timesharing. Form of shared property ownership, commonly in vacation or recreation condominium property, wherein rights vest in several owners to use property for specified period each year (e.g., two weeks each year).

Timocracy. An aristocracy of property; government by men of property who are possessed of a certain income.

Timores vani sunt aemandici qui non cadunt constantem virum /tamóriyz véynay sant éstamendiay kwáy nón kéydanst konsántám váyram/. Fears which do not assail a resolute man are to be accounted vain.

Tinel. L. Fr. A place where justice was administered.
Tineman /táynman/. Sax. In old forest law, a petty officer of the forest who had the care of vert and venison by night, and performed other servile duties.

Tinewald /táynvöld/tín'/. The ancient parliament or annual convention in the Isle of Man, held upon Midsummer-day, at St. John's chapel.

Tinkermen /tikorman/. Fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames by nets and unlawful engines.

Tipenny. A tribute paid for the liberty of digging in tin-mines.

Tip. A sum of money given, as to a servant, waiter, bellman, or the like, over and above actual cost or charge for services rendered, with the amount commonly varying upon the quality of such service. A form of gratuity for extra services rendered. Tip income is taxable. I.R.C. § 61(a).

In securities law, refers to advance or inside information passed by one person (a "tipper") to another (a "tippee") as a basis for a decision to buy or sell a security. Such information is presumed to be of material value and not available to the general public. The SEC prohibits trading on the basis of such information by insiders. See also Insider; Insider trading; Tippees; Tipper.

Tippees. In securities law, person who acquires material nonpublic information from another who enjoys a fiduciary relationship with the company to which such information pertains. Persons given information by insiders in breach of trust. Ross v. Licht, D.C.N.Y., 263 F.Supp. 395, 410. The purpose of SEC Rule 10b-5 (q.v.) is to prevent corporate insiders and their "tippees" from taking unfair advantage of the uninformed outsiders. Radiation Dynamics, Inc. v. Goldmuntz, C.A.N.Y., 464 F.2d 876. See also Insider; Tip; Tipper.

Tipper. A person who possesses material inside information and who makes selective disclosure of such information for trading or other personal purposes; "tippee" is one who receives such information from "tipper." Grumet v. Shearson/American Exp., Inc., D.C.N.J., 564 F.Supp. 336, 340. See also Insider; Tip; Tippees.

Tippling house. A place where intoxicating drinks are sold in drams or small quantities to be drunk on the premises, and where men resort for drinking purposes.

Tipstaff. An officer appointed by the court, whose duty is to wait upon the court when it is in session, preserve order, serve process, guard juries, etc. See Bailiff.

In English law, an officer appointed by the marshal of the king's bench to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver, who take into their custody all prisoners, either committed or turned over by the judges at their chambers, etc.

Tithe. A tenth part of one's income, contributed for charitable or religious purposes. Broadly, any tax or assessment of one tenth. See also Tithes; Tithing.

Tither /táyðor/. One who gathers tithes.

Tithes /táyði/. In English law, the tenth part of the increase, yearly arising and renewing from the profits of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. 2 Bl.Comm. 24. A species of incorporeal hereditament, being an ecclesiastical inheritance collateral to the estate of the land, and due only to an ecclesiastical person by ecclesiastical law. See also Tithe.

Great tithes. In English ecclesiastical law, tithes of corn, peas and beans, hay and wood.

Minute tithes. Small tithes, such as usually belong to a vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, etc.

Mixed tithes. Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground, e.g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc.

Personal tithes. Personal tithes are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labor of a man's person; as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise and handicrafts, etc.

Predial tithes. Such as arise immediately from the ground; as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, and herbs.

Tithe-free. Exempted from the payment of tithes.

Tithe rent-charge. A rent-charge established in lieu of tithes, under the tithes commutation act, 1836 (St. 6 § 7 Wm. IV, c. 71). As between landlord and tenant, the tenant paying the tithe rent-charge is entitled, in the absence of express agreement, to deduct it from his rent, under section 70 of the above act. And a tithe rent-charge unpaid is recoverable by distress as rent in arrear.

Tithing /táyðing/. Act of paying tithes. One of the civil divisions of England, being a portion of that greater division called a "hundred." It was so called because ten freeholders with their families composed one. It is said that they were all knit together in one society, and bound to the king for the peaceable behavior of each other. In each of these societies there was one chief or principal person, who, from his office, was called "teething-man," now "tithing-man."

Tithing-man /táyðimán/. A constable. After the introduction of justices of the peace, the offices of constable and tithing-man became so similar that they were regarded as precisely the same.

In New England, a parish officer annually elected to preserve good order in the church during divine service, and to make complaint of any disorderly conduct.

In Saxon law, the head or chief of a tithing or decen¬nary of ten families; he was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. In modern English law, he is the same as an under-constable or peace-officer.

Tithing-penny /táyðipén/. In Saxon and old English law, money paid to the sheriff by the several tithings of his county.
Titius /ˈtɪʃ(ɪ)əs/. In Roman law, a proper name, frequently used in designating an indefinite or fictitious person, or a person referred to by way of illustration. "Titius" and "Seius," in this use, correspond to "John Doe" and "Richard Roe," or to "A.B." and "C.D."

Title. A mark, style, or designation; a distinctive appellation; the name by which anything is known. Thus, in the law of persons, a title is an appellation of dignity or distinction, a name denoting the social rank of the person bearing it; as "duke" or "count." So, in legislation, the title of a statute is the heading or preliminary part, furnishing the name by which the act is individually known. It is usually prefixed to the statute in the form of a brief summary of its contents; as "An act for the prevention of gaming." Again, the title of a patent is the short description of the invention, which is copied in the letters patent from the inventor's petition; e.g., "a new and improved method of drying and preparing malt."

The title of a book, or any literary composition, is its name; that is, the heading or caption prefixed to it, and disclosing the distinctive appellation by which it is to be known. This usually comprises a brief description of its subject-matter and the name of its author.

Law of Trademarks

A title may become a subject of property; as one who has adopted a particular title for a newspaper, or other business enterprise, may, by long and prior usage, or by compliance with statutory provisions as to registration and notice, acquire a right to be protected in the exclusive use of it. See Trademark.

Real Property Law

The formal right of ownership of property. Title is the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property. The union of all the elements which constitute ownership. Full independent and fee ownership. The right to or ownership in land; also, the evidence of such ownership. Such ownership may be held individually, jointly, in common, or in cooperate or partnership form.

One who holds vested rights in property is said to have title whether he holds them for his own benefit or for the benefit of another. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2, Comment d.

See also Deed; Estate.

Procedure

Every action, petition, or other proceeding has a title, which consists of the name of the court in which it is pending, the names of the parties, etc. Administration actions are further distinguished by the name of the deceased person whose estate is being administered. Every pleading, summons, affidavit, etc., commences with the title. In many cases it is sufficient to give what is called the "short title" of an action, namely, the court, the reference to the record, and the surnames of the first plaintiff and the first defendant. See also Caption.

Generally

Absolute title. As applied to title to land, an exclusive title, or at least a title which excludes all others not compatible with it. An absolute title to land cannot exist at the same time in different persons or in different governments. See also Fee simple.

Abstract of title. See that title.

Adverse title. A title set up in opposition to or defeasance of another title, or one acquired or claimed by adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Bad title. See that title.

Bond for title. See Bond.

By accession. Title acquired by additions innocently acquired such as in the case of intermingling of another's property with one's own. See Accession.

By accretion. Title acquired by additions to one's property as in the case of deposits of soil from a stream. See Accretion.

By adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Chain of title. See that title; also Abstract of title.

Clear title, good title, merchantable title, marketable title, are synonymous; "clear title" meaning that the land is free from incumbrances, "good title" being one free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts, comprising both legal and equitable titles and fairly deducible of record. See Marketable title.

Clear title of record, or clear record title. Title free from apparent defects, grave doubts, and litigious uncertainties, and is such title as a reasonably prudent person, with full knowledge, would accept. A title dependent for its validity on extraneous evidence, ex parte affidavits, or written guaranties against the results of litigation is not a clear title of record, and is not such title as equity will require a purchaser to accept. See Marketable title.

Cloud on title. See that title.

Color of title. See that title.

Covenants for title. Covenants usually inserted in a conveyance of land, on the part of the grantor, and binding him for the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred to the grantee. They comprise "covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty." See Covenant.
Barely presumptive title. Title which is free of defects and litigation and hence may be transferred to another. See Marketable title.

Imperfect title. One which requires a further exercise of the granting power to pass the fee in land, or which does not convey full and absolute dominion. See Marketable title.

Legal title. See that title.

Lucrative title. In the civil law, title acquired without the giving of anything in exchange for it; the title by which a person acquires anything which comes to him as a clear gain, as, for instance, by gift, descent, or devise. Opposed to Onerous title, as to which see below.

Marketable title. See that title.

Onerous title. In the civil law, title to property acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration for it, such as the payment of money, the rendition of services, the performance of conditions, the assumption of obligations, or the discharge of liens on the property; opposed to "lucrative" title, or one acquired by gift or otherwise without the giving of an equivalent.

Paper title. A title to land evidenced by a conveyance or chain of conveyances; the term generally implying that such title, while it has color or plausibility, is without substantial validity.

Paramount title. See that title.

Perfect title. Various meanings have been attached to this term: (1) One which shows the absolute right of possession and of property in a particular person. See Fee simple. (2) A grant of land which requires no further act from the legal authority to constitute an absolute title to the land taking effect at once. (3) A title which does not disclose a patent defect suggesting the possibility of a lawsuit to defend it; a title such as a well-informed and prudent man paying full value for the property would be willing to take. (4) A title which is good both at law and in equity. (5) One which is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt. (6) A marketable or merchantable title. See Marketable title.

Presumptive title. A barely presumptive title, which is of the very lowest order, arises out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property (jus possessionis), without any apparent right, or any pretense of right, to hold and continue such possession.

Record title. See Record.

Root of title. Root of title means that conveyance or other title transaction or other link in the chain of title of a person, purporting to create the interest claimed by such person, upon which he relies as a basis for the marketability of his title, and which was the most recent to be recorded or established as of a date forty years prior to the time when marketability is being determined. The effective date of the "root of title" is the date on which it is recorded.

Singular title. The title by which a party acquires property as a singular successor.

Tax title. See Tax.

Title by adverse possession or prescription. The right which a possessor acquires to property by reason of his adverse possession during a period of time fixed by law. See Adverse possession.

The elements of title by prescription are open, visible and continuous use under a claim of right, adverse to and with knowledge of owner. Dry Gulch Ditch Co. v. Hutton, 170 Or. 656, 133 P.2d 601, 610. Such title is equivalent to a "title by deed" and cannot be lost or divested except in the same manner, and mere recognition of title in another after such acquisition will not operate to divest the adverse claimant of that which he has acquired. Maloney v. Bedford, 290 Ky. 647, 162 S.W.2d 198, 199.

Title by descent. That title which one acquires by law as heir to the deceased owner.

Title by prescription. See Title by adverse possession or prescription, above.

Title deeds. Deeds which constitute or are the evidence of title to lands. See Deed.

Title defective in form. Title on face of which some defect appears, not one that may prove defective by circumstances or evidence dehors the instrument. Title defective in form cannot be basis of prescription.

Title insurance. See Insurance.

Title of a cause. The distinctive appellation by which any cause in court, or other juridical proceeding, is known and distinguished from others. See Caption.

Title of an act. The heading, or introductory clause, of a statute, wherein is briefly recited its purpose or nature, or the subject to which it relates.

Title of clergymen (to orders). Some certain place where they may exercise their functions; also an assurance of being preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice.

Title of declaration. That preliminary clause of a declaration which states the name of the court and the term to which the process is returnable.

Title of entry. The right to enter upon lands.

Title of record. Evidence that real property is in the lawful possession of owner. Such title is acquired through a deed, a will, adverse possession, or eminent domain. The conditions of the title are found in a title search.

Title registration. See Torrens title system.

Title retention. A form of lien, in the nature of a chattel mortgage, to secure the purchase price. American Indemnity Co. v. Allen, for Use and Benefit of Commerce Union Bank, 176 Tenn. 134, 138 S.W.2d 445, 446.

Title to orders. In English ecclesiastical law, a title to orders is a certificate of prevenient or provision required by the thirty-third canon, in order that a person may be admitted into holy orders, unless he be a fellow or chaplain in Oxford or Cambridge, or master of arts of five years' standing in either of the universities, and living there at his sole charges; or unless the bishop himself intends shortly to admit him to some benefice or curacy.

Unity of title. See that title.

Unmarketable title. See that title.

Warranty of title. See Warranty.

Title company. Company that examines real estate titles and, commonly, issues title insurance. See Title search.

Title documents. Those instruments necessary for establishing or for conveying good title; e.g., deed.

Title guaranty company. A business organization which searches title to determine whether any defects or encumbrances are recorded and which then gives the buyer of the property or the mortgagee a guaranty of the title.

Title company. Company that examines real estate titles and, commonly, issues title insurance. See Title search.

Title insurance. See Insurance.

Title opinion. An opinion (usually by an attorney or title company) on the legal state of the title of specific real property. It should reflect any clouds on title such as rights of way, servitudes and easements. See also Title search.

Title search. An examination of the records of the registry of deeds or other office which contains records of title documents to determine whether title to the property is good; i.e., whether there are any defects in the title. The examiner then prepares an abstract of the documents examined. See also Abstract of title; Back title letter; Examination; Title company.

Title standards. Criteria by which a title to real estate may be evaluated to determine whether it is defective or marketable. Many states through associations of conveyancers and real estate attorneys have adopted such standards.

Title theory. A mortgage law theory that holds that from the date of the mortgage execution until the mortgage is satisfied or foreclosed, legal title belongs to the mortgagor and the right to possession belongs to the mortgagor while mortgage is not in default.

Title transaction. Any transaction affecting title to any interest in land, including title by will or descent, title by tax deed, or deed by trustee, referee, guardian, executor, administrator, master in chancery, sheriff, or any other form of deed, or decree of any court, as well as warranty deed, quitclaim deed, mortgage, or transfer or conveyance of any kind.

Titulada /tityuwa'da/. In Spanish law, title.

Titulus /tityulas/. Lat. Title. In the civil law, the source or ground of possession; the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not.

In old ecclesiastical law, a temple or church; the material edifice. So called because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title.

Titus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est; dicitur a tuendo /tityulas est justa kóza pósadién-dav id kwod nóstrum ét, disator éy t(y)awéndow/. A title is the just right of possessing that which is our own; it is so called from "tuendo," defending.

To. While this is ordinarily a word of exclusion, when used in describing premises, it has been held that the word in a statute may be interpreted as exclusionary or inclusionary depending on the legislative intent as drawn from the whole statute. Clark v. Bunnell, 172 Colo. 32, 470 P.2d 42, 44. It may be a word of inclusion, and may also mean "into."

Toft. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay.

Toftman. In old English law, the owner of a toft.

Togati /towgétyay/. Lat. In Roman law, advocates; so called under the empire because they were required, when appearing in court to plead a cause, to wear the toga, which had then ceased to be the customary dress in Rome.

Together. In union with, along with. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 Mont. 601, 98 P.2d 335, 341.

To have and to hold. The words in a conveyance which show the estate intended to be conveyed. Thus, in a conveyance of land in fee-simple, the grant is to "A. and his heirs, to have and to hold the said [land] unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns forever."

Strictly speaking, however, the words "to have" denote the estate to be taken, while the words "to hold" signify that it is to be held of some superior lord, i.e., by way of tenure (q.v.). The former clause is called the "habendum;" the latter, the "tenendum."

Token. A sign or mark; a material evidence of the existence of a fact. A sign or indication of an intention to do something as in the case of one who places a small order to show good faith to a seller with a view towards placing a larger order at a future time.

Token-money. A conventional medium of exchange consisting of pieces of metal, fashioned in the shape and size of coins, and circulating among private persons, by consent, at a certain value. No longer permitted or recognized as money.
Tolerate. To allow so as not to hinder; to permit as something not wholly approved of; to suffer; to endure.

Toleration. The allowance of religious opinions and modes of worship which are contrary to, or different from, those of the established church or belief.

Toleration Act. The statute 1 W. & M. St. 1, c. 18, for exempting Protestant dissenters from the penalties of certain laws is so called.

Toll, v. To bar, defeat, or take away; thus, to toll the entry means to deny or take away the right of entry.

Toll, n. A sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, highway, bridge, or the like, of a public nature. Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co., 123 U.S. 288, 8 S.Ct. 113, 31 L.Ed. 149; Rogge v. United States, C.C.A.Alaska, 128 F.2d 800, 802. The price of the privilege of travel over that particular highway and it is a quid pro quo and rests on principle that he who receives the toll does or has done something as an equivalent to him who pays it. State ex rel. Washington Toll Bridge Authority v. Yelle, 195 Wash. 636, 82 P.2d 120, 125. Charge for long-distance telephone calls.

Tollage. Payment of toll; money charged or paid as toll; the liberty or franchise of charging toll.

Tollbooth. A prison; a customhouse; an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed or tolls collected.

Tolldish. A vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

Toller. One who collects tribute or taxes.

Tollere /tōleri/. Lat. In the civil law, to lift up or raise; to elevate; to build up.

Tolle voluntatem et erit omnis actus indifferens /tōliy volantýtaym et ēhrst ōmniy ˈɛktas indifýrens/. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent.

Tolls. In a general sense, any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any goods or merchandise to be taken of the buyer. See also Toll.

Tollesester /towlisestar/. In old English law, an excuse; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale.

Tolt. In old English law, a writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron was taken and removed into a county court.

Tolta /tōlta/. In old English law, wrong; rapine; extortion.

Tomb /tůwm/. An excavation in earth or rock, intended to receive the dead body of a human being.

Tombstone /tůwmstəwn/. Stone marking place of burial and usually inscribed with memorial of deceased.

Tombstone ad. A notice, circular or advertisement placed in newspaper of a stock offering containing basic information and language to the effect that the announcement is neither an offer to sell nor a solicitation of an offer to buy any of the securities listed. The actual securities offer is made only by means of the prospectus. See also Red herring.

Ton. A measure of weight; differently fixed, at two thousand pounds avoirdupois, or at twenty hundredweights, each hundred-weight being one hundred and twelve pounds avoirdupois. A short ton is 20 short hundred-weight (2000 lbs.) or 0.907 metric tons; a long ton is 20 long hundred-weight (2240 lbs.) or 1.016 metric tons. There are also various types of tons in shipping usage; e.g. freight ton and register ton.

Ton mile. In transportation, the measure equal to the transportation of one ton of freight one mile.

Tonnage. The capacity of a vessel for carrying freight or other loads, calculated in tons. But the way of estimating the tonnage varies in different countries. Per ton duty or charge on cargo. Total shipping tonnage of country or port.

Tonnage-duty. A tax laid upon vessels according to their tonnage or cubical capacity. The vital principle of a tonnage duty is that it is imposed, whatever the subject, solely according to the rule of weight, either as to the capacity to carry or the actual weight of the thing itself. 46 U.S.C.A. § 121 et seq.

Tonnage-rent. When the rent reserved by a mining lease or the like consists of a royalty on every ton of minerals gotten in the mine, it is often called a "tonnage-rent." There is generally a dead rent in addition.

Tonnagium /tənyj(i)əm/. In old English law, a custom or impot upon wines and other merchandise exported or imported, according to a certain rate per ton.

Tonnietight /tánstəyt/. In old English law, the quantity of a ton or tun, in a ship's freight or bulk, for which tonnage or tunnage was paid to the king.

Tonsura /tons(y)ʊra/. Lat. In old English law, a shaving, or polling; the having the crown of the head shaved; tonsure. One of the peculiar badges of a clerk or clergyman.

Tontine /tontiyn/. A financial arrangement (such as an insurance policy) in which a group of participants share advantages on such terms that upon the default or death of any participant, his advantages are distributed among the remaining participants until only one remains, whereupon the whole goes to him; or on the expiration of an agreed period, the whole goes to those participants remaining at that time. Under the "Tontine" plan of insurance, no accumulation or earnings are credited to the policy unless it remains in force for the Tontine period of a specified number of years. Thus those who survive the period and keep their policies in force share in the accumulated funds and those who die or permit their policies to lapse during period do not; neither do their beneficiaries participate in such accumulation.

In French law, a species of association or partnership formed among persons who are in receipt of perpetual or life annuities, with the agreement that the shares or annuities of those who die shall accrue to the survivors. This plan is said to be thus named from Tonti, an Italian, who invented it in the seventeenth century. The principle is used in some forms of life insurance.

Tort and carried away. In criminal pleading, technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny.

Top lease. A lease made before the prior lease has expired; therefore the term of the new lease overlaps the term of the old lease. St. Clair v. Exeter Exploration Co., C.A.N.D., 671 F.2d 1091, 1095. A subsequent oil and gas lease which covers one or more mineral interests that are subject to a valid, subsisting prior lease.

Torrens title system /tɔrəns tæltʃ ˈsaɪtəm/. A system of registration of land title. The originator of the system was Sir Richard Torrens, 1814-1884, reformer of Australian Land Laws.

Tort (from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted, wrested aside). A private or civil wrong or injury, including action for bad faith breach of contract, for which the court will provide a remedy in the form of an action for damages. K Mart Corp. v. Ponsock, 103 Nev. 39, 732 P.2d 1364, 1368. A violation of a duty imposed by general law or otherwise upon all persons occupying the relation to each other which is involved in a given transaction. Coleman v. California Yearly Meeting of Friends Church, 27 Cal.App.2d 579, 81 P.2d 473, 470. There must always be a violation of some duty owing to plaintiff, and generally such duty must arise by operation of law and not by mere agreement of the parties.

A legal wrong committed upon the person or property independent of contract. It may be either (1) a direct invasion of some legal right of the individual; (2) the infraction of some public duty by which special damage accrues to the individual; (3) the violation of some private obligation by which like damage accrues to the individual.

Children. See Parental liability. entitled to the fee; and they were hence called "tortious conveyances."

Tortura legum pessima /tort(y)ura liygam pésama/. The torture or wrestling of laws is the worst [kind of torture].

Torture. To inflict intense pain to body or mind for purposes of punishment, or to extract a confession or information, or for sadistic pleasure. Within meaning of statute allowing imposition of death sentence, occurs when the victim is subjected to serious physical abuse before his death. Hardy v. State, 247 Ga. 235, 275 S.E.2d 319, 321. As element of first-degree murder by torture, consists of cold-blooded, calculated intent to inflict extreme and prolonged pain for the purposes of revenge, extortion, persuasion or for any sadistic purpose. People v. Talamantez, App. 4 Dist.1984, 169 C.A.3d 443, 215 Cal.Rptr. 542.

Tory. Originally applied to presbyterians in Scots Gaelic. Then to a papist outlaw in Ireland who supported the hereditary right to the Crown of James despite his Catholic faith. After 1688 it was identified with those supporters of the interests of Anglicanism and the squirearchy, not the Whiggish landed aristocracy, and with the financially well-off middle classes. Used today derogatorily to refer to conservatives rather than Labour, the left and the Social Democrats.

The name was also given, in America, during the struggle of the colonies for independence, to the party of those residents who favored the side of the British Crown and opposed independence.

Tot. In old English practice, a word written by the foreign oppressor or other officer opposite to a debt due the king, to denote that it was a good debt; which was hence said to be totted.

Tota curia /towshiy(i)y(i)z kwowshiy(i)y(i)z/. Lat. As hence said to be totted.

Total. Whole, not divided, lacking no part, entire, full, lacking no part, entire, full, tota curia. L. Lat. In the old reports, the whole court.

Total. Whole, not divided, lacking no part, entire, full, complete, the whole amount. Utter, absolute. Glaze v. Hart, 225 Mo.App. 1205, 36 S.W.2d 684.

Total disability. A person is "totally disabled" if his physical condition, in combination with his age, training, and experience, and the type of work available in his community, causes him to be unable to secure anything more than sporadic employment resulting in an insubstantial income. Cavanaugh v. Frederick Willys, Inc., Minn., 361 N.W.2d 49, 50. Means loss of earning power as a worker, manifested either by inability to perform work obtainable or inability to secure work, and not absolute helplessness or entire physical disability. Clark v. Gilley, Ky., 311 S.W.2d 391, 392.

With meaning of workers' compensation acts, means lack of ability to follow continuously some substantially gainful occupation without serious discomfort or pain and without material injury to health or danger to life. McKissick Products Corp. v. Gardner, Okl., 280 P.2d 718, 720. See also Disability, Temporary total disability.

Total eviction. That which occurs when the possessor (i.e. tenant) is wholly deprived of his rights in the premises.

Total Incapacity. See Total disability.

Totality of circumstances test. Test used to determine the constitutionality of various search and seizure procedures, e.g. issuance of a search warrant, Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 238, 239, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 2332, 76 L.Ed.2d 527; investigative stops, U.S. v. Sokolow, 109 S.Ct. 1581, 1585, 104 L.Ed.2d 1. This standard focuses on all the circumstances of a particular case, rather than any one factor.

Total loss. Fire insurance. The complete destruction of the insured property by fire, so that nothing of value remains from it; as distinguished from a partial loss, where the property is damaged, but not entirely destroyed. Test whether building burned is "total loss" is whether substantial portion is left standing in condition reasonably suitable as basis on which to reconstruct building in like condition as to strength, security, and utility as it was before fire. Commerce Ins. Co. v. Sergi, Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 1046. Total loss is such destruction of a building as that, after the fire, there remains standing in place no substantial remnant whereof a reasonably prudent owner, uninsured, desiring to restore the building to its original condition, would utilize as a basis of such restoration. Crouchfield v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 306 S.W.2d 948, 952.

Actual total loss. The total loss of a vessel covered by a policy of insurance, by its real and substantive destruction, by injuries which leave it no longer existing in specie, by its being reduced to a wreck irretrievably beyond repair, or by its being placed beyond the control of the insured and beyond his power of recovery. Distinguished from a constructive total loss, which occurs where the vessel, though injured by the perils insured against, remains in specie and capable of repair or recovery, but at such an expense, or under such other conditions, that the insured may claim the whole amount of the policy upon abandoning the vessel to the underwriters. In such cases the insured is entitled to indemnity as for a total loss.

Constructive total loss. See Actual total loss, above.

Partial loss. Exists where an injury results to a vessel from a peril insured against, but where the loss is neither actually nor constructively total. See also Actual total loss, above.

Totidem verbis /tódadam várba/. Lat. In so many words.

Toties quoties /tówshiy(i)y(z) kwówshiy(i)y(z)/. Lat. As often as occasion shall arise.

Totis viribus /tótas váyrobás/. Lat. With all one's might or power; with all his might; very strenuously.

Totted /tótad/. A good debt to the crown, i.e., a debt paid to the sheriff, to be by him paid over to the king.

Totten trust. See Trust.
Toward. In the direction of, or, on a course or line.

Towage. The act or service of towing ships and vessels, usually by means of a small vessel called a "tug." Also, the charge for such service.

Town. A community which is smaller and less organized than a city; a small municipality. A civil and political division of a state, varying in extent and importance, but usually one of the divisions of a county. In the New England states, the town is the political unit, and is a municipal corporation. In some other states, where the county is the unit, the town is merely one of its subdivisions, but possesses some powers of local self-government. In still other states, such subdivisions of a county are called "townships," and "town" is the name of a village, borough, or smaller city. The word "town" is quite commonly used as a generic term and as including both cities and villages.

Town-clerk. In those states where the town is the unit for local self-government, the town-clerk is a principal officer who keeps the records, issues calls for town-meetings, and performs generally the duties of a secretary to the political organization.

Town collector. One of the officers of a town charged with collecting the taxes assessed for town purposes.

Town commissioner. In some of the states where the town is the political unit the town commissioners constitute a board of administrative officers charged with the general management of the town's business.

Town-crier. An officer in a town whose business it is to make proclamations.

Town-hall. The building maintained by a town for town-meetings and the offices of the municipal authorities.

Town house. Type of dwelling unit normally having two, but sometimes three, stories; usually connected to a similar structure by a common wall, and commonly (particularly in planned unit developments) sharing and owning in common the surrounding grounds.

Town-meeting. Under the municipal organization of the New England states, the town-meeting is a legal assembly of the qualified voters of a town, held at stated intervals or on call, for the purpose of electing town officers, and of discussing and deciding on questions relating to the public business, property, and expenses of the town.

Town or city tax. Such tax as a town or city may levy for its peculiar expenses; as distinguished from a county or state tax; e.g., New York City tax.

Town order or warrant. An official direction in writing by the auditing officers of a town, directing the treasurer to pay a sum of money.

Town pound. A place of confinement maintained by a town for estrays.

Town purpose. When it is said that taxation by a town, or the expenditure of the town's money, must be for town purposes, it is meant that the purposes must be public with respect to the town; i.e., concern the welfare and advantage of the town as a whole.

Town-reeve. The reeve or chief officer of a town.
Township. Township, in government survey, is square tract six miles on each side containing thirty-six square miles of land. U. S. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., C.A.Or., 392 F.2d 448, 449. In some of the states, this is the name given to the civil and political subdivisions of a county.

Township trustee. One of a board of officers to whom, in some states, affairs of a township are intrusted.

Townsite. Portion of public domain segregated by proper authority and procedure as site for a town.

Town treasurer. The treasurer of a town which is an organized municipal corporation.

Toxic /tôksık/. (Lat. toxicum; Gr. toxikon.) Poisonous; having the character or producing the effects of a poison; referable to a poison; produced by or resulting from a poison.

Toxical. Poisonous; containing poison.

Toxicant /tôksêkant/. A poison; a toxic agent; any substance capable of producing toxication or poisoning.

Toxicate /tôksêkeit/. To poison. Not used to describe the act of one who administers a poison, but the action of the drug or poison itself.

Auto-intoxication. Self-empoisonment from the absorption of the toxic products of internal metabolism, e.g., ptomaine poisoning.

Intoxication. The state of being poisoned; the condition produced by the administration or introduction into the human system of a poison. This term is properly used as equivalent to “drunkenness,” which, however, is more accurately described as “alcoholic intoxication.” See also Intoxication.

Toxicology. The science of poisons; that department of medical science which treats of poisons, their effect, their recognition, their antidotes, and generally of the diagnosis and therapeutics of poisoning.

Toxin. In its widest sense, this term may denote any poison or toxicant; but as used in pathology and medical jurisprudence it signifies, in general, any diffuse alkaloidal substance (as, the ptomaines, abrin, brucin, or serpent venoms), and in particular the poisonous products of pathogenic (disease-producing) bacteria.

Tracea /trâshâyâ/. In old English law, the track or trace of a felon, by which he was pursued with the hue and cry; a foot-step, hoof-print, or wheel-track.

Tracing. A tracing is a mechanical copy or facsimile of an original, produced by following its lines, with a pen or pencil, through a transparent medium, called tracing paper. See also Skiptracing.

Tract of land. A lot, piece or parcel of land, of greater or less size, the term not importing, in itself, any precise dimension, though term generally refers to a large piece of land. Holt v. Wichita County Water Improvement Dist. No. 2, Tex.Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 527, 529. Term is synonymous with parcel of land and does not have reference to size but to contiguous quantity of land. Floral Hills Memory Gardens, Inc. v. Robb, 227 Ga. 470, 181 S.E.2d 373, 374.

Tract index. A page or set of pages in an index book devoted to listing all documents which affect a particular tract of land.

Tradas in ballium /trâyðâs in bâliyam/. You deliver to bail. In old English practice, the name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime, commanding the sheriff that, if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainpernors for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize.

Trade. The act or the business of buying and selling for money; traffic; barter. May v. Sloan, 101 U.S. 231, 25 L.Ed. 797. Purchase and sale of goods and services between businesses, states or nations. Trade is not a technical word and is ordinarily used in three senses: (1) in that of exchanging goods or commodities by barter or by buying and selling for money; (2) in that of a business occupation generally; (3) in that of a mechanical employment, in contradistinction to the learned professions, agriculture, or the liberal arts. People v. Polar Vent of America, Inc., 10 Misc.2d 378, 174 N.Y.S.2d 789, 793.

An occupation or regular means of livelihood and is business one practices or the work in which one engages regularly. One’s calling; occupation; gainful employment; means of livelihood. People v. Carr, 163 Cal. App.2d 568, 329 P.2d 746, 752. See also Trade or business.

Transaction involving purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, or other securities. See also Balance (Balance of trade); Commerce; Trade and commerce; Trade or business.

Trade acceptance. A draft or bill of exchange drawn by the seller on the purchaser of goods sold, and accepted by such purchaser, and its purpose is to make the book account liquid, and permit the seller to raise money on it before it is due under the terms of the sale, and its principal function is to take the place of selling goods on an open account and when properly drawn, it is negotiable. Gilliland & Echols Farm Supply & Hatchery v. Credit Equipment Corp., 269 Ala. 190, 112 So.2d 331, 332.

A draft drawn by a seller which is presented for signature (acceptance) to the buyer at the time goods are purchased and which then becomes the equivalent of a Trade dress. A distinctive mark, motto, device, or emblem, which a manufacturer stamps, prints, or otherwise affixes to the goods he produces, so that they may be identified in the market, and their origin be vouched for. Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U.S. 82, 87, 25 L.Ed. 550. Exclusive rights to use a trademark are granted by the federal government for ten years, with the possibility of additional ten year renewal periods. 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1058, 1059.

The term "trademark" includes any word, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof—(1) used by a person, or (2) which a person has a bona fide intention to use in commerce and applies to register on the principal register established by the Trademark Act, to identify and distinguish his or her goods, including a unique product, from those manufactured or sold by others and to indicate the source of the goods, even if that source is unknown. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

See also Certification mark; Collective mark; Common descriptive name; Descriptive mark; Distinctiveness; Functionality; Infringement; Likelihood of confusion; Official Gazette; Patent and Trademark Office; Related goods; Secondary meaning; Service mark; Trade dress; Trade name; Use in commerce.

Descriptive and suggestive trademarks. Distinction between descriptive and suggestive trademarks is that "suggestive" terms are those which require the buyer to use thought, imagination, or perception to connect the mark with the goods, while "descriptive" terms are those which directly convey to the buyer the ingredients, qualities, or characteristics of the product. Educational Development Corp. v. Economy Co., C.A.Okl., 562 F.2d 26, 29.

Fanciful mark. A trademark consisting of a made-up or coined word is said to be "fanciful." Such marks are considered inherently distinctive, and thus are protected.
Geographically descriptive mark. A geographic word used as a trademark that indicates where the goods are grown or manufactured is considered geographically descriptive. Such marks will only be protected at common law and registered under the Trademark Act upon proof of secondary meaning. See Secondary meaning.

Strong trademark. For purposes of determining the likelihood of confusion between marks, is a mark which is generally fictitious, arbitrary or fanciful and is inherently distinctive. A strong mark is entitled to a greater degree of protection from infringing uses than is a weak one, because of its unique usage. Alpha Industries, Inc. v. Alpha Steel Tube & Shapes, Inc., C.A.Cal., 616 F.2d 440, 445. Compare Weak trademark, below.

Suggestive mark or term. One that suggests, rather than describes, some particular characteristic of goods and services to which it applies and requires consumer to exercise imagination in order to draw conclusion as to nature of goods or services. Engineered Mechanical Services, Inc. v. Applied Mechanical Technology, Inc., D.C.La., 584 F.Supp. 1149, 1156.

Trade name distinguished. A "trade name" is a descriptive of a manufacturer or dealer and applies to business and its goodwill, whereas "trademark" is applicable only to vendable commodities. American Steel Foundries v. Robertson, 269 U.S. 372, 46 S.Ct. 160, 70 L.Ed. 317. Compare Weak trademark, below.

Weak trademark. A mark that is a meaningful word in common usage or is merely a suggestive or descriptive trademark, and is entitled to protection only if it has acquired a secondary meaning. See also Secondary meaning. Compare Strong trademark, above.

Trade name. That name which is used by manufacturers, industrialists and merchants to identify their businesses, which actually symbolizes reputation of business. Frances Denney, Inc. v. New Process Co., W.D.Va., 670 F.Supp. 661, 667. The name or title lawfully adopted and used by a particular organization engaged in commerce, which can be used in advertising, promotion, and to generate publicity for the business. Caesars World, Inc. v. Caesar's Palace, D.C.N.J., 490 F.Supp. 818, 822.

The terms "trade name" and "commercial name" include individual names and surnames, firm names and trade names used by manufacturers, industrialists, merchants, agriculturists, and others to identify their businesses, vocations, or occupations; the names or titles lawfully adopted and used by persons, firms, associations, corporations, companies, unions, and any manufacturing, industrial, commercial, agricultural, or other organizations engaged in trade or commerce and capable of suing and being sued in a court of law. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127.

See also Certification mark; Collective mark. Compare Service mark; Trademark.

Trade or business. Any business or professional activity conducted by a taxpayer, the objective of which is to earn a profit. General test for determining whether person is engaged in "trade or business" so as to be entitled to deduct expenses as trade or business expenses under Internal Revenue Code is whether taxpayer's primary purpose and intention in engaging in the activity is to make a profit. Zell v. C.I.R., C.A. 10, 763 F.2d 1139, 1142.

Trader. A merchant; a retailer. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, goods, or chattels to sell the same at a profit. People v. Terkanian, 27 Cal. App.2d 460, 81 P.2d 251, 253. One who sells goods substantially in the form in which they are bought; one who has not converted them into another form of property by his skill and labor. Albuquerque Lumber Co. v. Bureau of Revenue of New Mexico, 42 N.M. 58, 75 P.2d 334, 336. See also Dealer; Merchant.

In securities, one who as member of a stock exchange buys and sells on the floor of the exchange either for brokers or on his own account. Likewise, in commodity market, one who buys and sells commodities (e.g. grain) and commodity futures for others and for his own account in anticipation of a speculative profit. See also Broker; Dealer.

Trade secret. A "trade secret," as protected from misappropriation, may consist of any formula, pattern, device of compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives person an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it; or, it may be a formula or a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers. Cherne Indus., Inc. v. Grounds & Associates, Inc., Minn., 278 N.W.2d 81, 89, 90; Kodekey Electronics, Inc. v. Mechanex Corp. C.A.Colo., 486 F.2d 449, 455.

A plan or process, tool, mechanism, or compound know only to its owner and those of his employees to whom it is necessary to confide it. A secret formula or process not patented, but known only to certain individuals using it in compounding some article of trade having a commercial value. Palin Mfg. Co., Inc. v. Water Technology, Inc., 103 Ill.App.3d 926, 59 Ill.Dec. 553, 431 N.E.2d 1310, 1314.

Tradesman. A mechanic, craftsman, or artificer of any kind, whose livelihood depends primarily on the labor of his hands.

Trade-union. A combination of workers of the same trade or of several allied trades, for the purpose of securing by united action the most favorable conditions regarding wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. See also Union.
Trade usage. The usage or customs commonly observed by persons conversant in, or connected with, a particular trade.

A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question. The existence and scope of such a usage are to be proved as facts. If it is established that such a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is for the court. U.C.C. § 1-205(2). Compare Course of dealing. See also Usage (Usage of trade).

Tradición /träditsyöynn/. Span. In Spanish law, delivery.

Trading. Engaging in trade (q.v.); pursuing the business or occupation of trade or of a trader.

Trading corporation. See Corporation.

Trading stamps. The name for a method of conducting some kinds of retail business which consists of an agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation that the latter shall print the names of the former in its subscribers' dictionary and circulate a number of copies of the book, and that the merchants shall purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be given to purchasers with their purchases, and by them preserved and posted in the books aforesaid until a certain number have been secured, when they shall be presented to the corporation in exchange for the choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation.

Trading voyage. One which contemplates the touching and stopping of the vessel at various ports for the purpose of traffic or sale and purchase or exchange of commodities on account of the owners and shippers, rather than the transportation of cargo between terminal points, which is called a "freighting voyage."

Trading with the enemy. Offense of carrying on commerce with a country or with a subject of a nation with whom the U.S. is at war. Federal laws prohibit commercial intercourse with nations and with subjects and allies of nations with whom the U.S. is at war. 50 U.S.C.A. App. § 1 et seq.

Traditio /trädishyoyw/. Lat. In the civil law, delivery; transfer of possession; a derivative mode of acquiring, by which the owner of a corporeal thing, having the right and the will of aliening it, transfers it for a lawful consideration to the receiver.

Quasi traditio. A supposed or implied delivery of property from one to another. Thus, if the purchaser of an article was already in possession of it before the sale, his continuing in possession is considered as equivalent to a fresh delivery of it, delivery being one of the necessary elements of a sale; in other words, a quasi traditio is predicated.

Traditio brevi manu. A species of constructive or implied delivery. When he who already holds possession of a thing in another's name agrees with that other that thenceforth he shall possess it in his own name, in this case a delivery and redelivery are not necessary.

Traditio clavium. Delivery of keys; a symbolic kind of delivery, by which the ownership of merchandise in a warehouse might be transferred to a buyer.

Traditio longa manu. A species of delivery which takes place where the transferor places the article in the hands of the transferee, or, on his order, delivers it at his house.

Traditio rei. Delivery of the thing.

Traditio loqui facit chartam /trädish(y)ow lówkway féysat kárta/. Delivery makes a deed speak. Delivery gives effect to the words of a deed.

Past customs and usages which influence or govern present acts or practices.

Traditionary evidence. Evidence derived from tradition or reputation or the statements formerly made by persons since deceased, in regard to questions of pedigree, ancient boundaries, and the like, where no living witnesses can be produced having knowledge of the facts.

Traditio nihil amplius transfferre debeat vel potest, ad eum qui accipit, quam est apud eum qui tradit /trädish(y)ow náy(h)al émpliyá déšári débat vél pówtást, ád íyam kwáy áksápat, kwám ét ápíd íyam kwáy tréydat/. Delivery ought to, and can, transfer nothing more to him who receives than is with him who delivers.

Traditor /trédatar/tréy/. In old English law, a traitor; one guilty of high treason.

Traditur in ballium /tréditar in béliyam/. In old practice, means delivered to bail. Emphatic words of the old Latin bail-piece.

Traffic. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like. The passing or exchange of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money. The subjects of transportation on a route, as persons or goods; the passing to and fro of persons, animals, vehicles, or vessels, along a route of transportation, as along a street, highway, etc. See Commerce.

Traffic balances. Balances of moneys collected in payment for the transportation of passengers and freight.

Trafficking. Trading or dealing in certain goods and commonly used in connection with illegal narcotic sales.

Traffic regulations. Prescribed rules of conduct to promote the orderly and safe flow of traffic.
Trahren /trē̱(h)enz/. Lat. In French law, the drawer of a bill.

Trail-baston. Justices of trail-baston were justices appointed by King Edward I, during his absence in the Scotch and French wars, about the year 1305. They were so styled, says Hollingshed, for trailing or drawing the staff of justice. Their office was to make inquisition, throughout the kingdom, of all officers and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances, of intruders into other men’s lands, barrators, robbers, breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders.

Trainbands. The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercises.

Traitor. One who, being trusted, betrays; one guilty of treason (q.v.).

Traitorously /trē̱torəsli/. In criminal pleading at common law, an essential word in indictments for treason. The offense must be laid to have been committed traitorously.

Trajectitia pecunia /træjkɛtʃɪə ˈpɛkuːnɪə/. A loan to a shipper to be repaid only in case of a successful voyage. The lender could charge an extraordinary rate of interest, nauticum foenus.

Trajectitus /træjkɛtʃɪəs/. Lat. In the civil law, transit or conveyance by sea.

Trapeznik /træpzəˈnɪk/. In Russian law, the drawer of a bill.

Train steamer. A ship which is not governed by any pre-arranged ports of call but which stops at those ports for which it has cargo.

Transact. To undertake negotiations; to carry on business; to have dealings; to carry through; perform; to carry on or conduct; to pass back and forth as in negotiations or trade; to bring into actuality or existence. Knoepfle v. Suko, N.D., 108 N.W.2d 456, 462.

Transaction  /trænzəˈkʃən/. An act of transacting or conducting any business; between two or more persons; negotiation; that which is done; an affair. An act, agreement, or several acts or agreements between parties whereby a cause of action or alteration of legal rights occur. Miles v. Starks, Tex.Civ.App., 590 S.W.2d 223, 227. It may involve selling, leasing, borrowing, mortgaging or lending. Something which has taken place, whereby a cause of action has arisen. It must therefore consist of an act or agreement, or several acts or agreements having some connection with each other, in which more than one person is concerned, and by which the legal relations of such persons between themselves are altered. It is a broader term than “contract”. Hoffman Machinery Corporation v. Ebenstein, 150 Kan. 790, 96 P.2d 661, 663. See also Closed transaction; Trade; Transaction.

Transaction or occurrence test. Fed.R.Civil P. 13(a) provides that a claim qualifies as a compulsory counterclaim if it arises out of the “transaction or occurrence” that is the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim. Courts generally have agreed that these words should be interpreted liberally in order to further the general policies of the federal rules which are to avoid multiple

Test of whether or not a corporation is transacting business in State without a certificate of authority shall maintain an action in State if it has not obtained a certificate of authority, is not susceptible of precise definition automatically resolving every case; each case must be dealt with on its own circumstances to determine if foreign corporation has engaged in local activity or only in interstate commerce. Materials Research Corp. v. Metron, Inc., 64 N.J. 74, 312 A.2d 147, 150.

Transaction business. Term as used in statute providing that no foreign corporation transacting business in State without a certificate of authority shall maintain an action in State if it has not obtained a certificate of authority, is not susceptible of precise definition automatically resolving every case; each case must be dealt with on its own circumstances to determine if foreign corporation has engaged in local activity or only in interstate commerce. Materials Research Corp. v. Metron, Inc., 64 N.J. 74, 312 A.2d 147, 150.

Test of whether or not a corporation is transacting business, in a district, for purpose of section of the Clayton Act providing that an action may be brought against a corporation in any district wherein it transacts business, is the practical everyday business or commercial concept of doing business of any substantial character. Interstate Cigar Co. v. Corral Wodiska y Ca, D.C.N.Y., 30 F.R.D. 364, 355; Kolb v. Chrysler Corp., D.C.Wis., 387 F.Supp. 504, 508.

See also Doing business; Minimum contacts.

"Doing business" distinguished. The concept of “transacting business” under venue provisions of Investment Company Act of 1940, Securities Act of 1933, and Securities Exchange Act of 1934, requires less business activity than that necessary to sustain jurisdiction under a “doing business” or “minimum contacts” standard, and is intended to have a more flexible and broader meaning than the jurisdictional predicates. Zorn v. Anderson, D.C.N.Y., 265 F.Supp. 745, 747.

Transactional immunity. See Immunity (Immunity from prosecution).

Transaction or occurrence test. Fed.R.Civil P. 13(a) provides that a claim qualifies as a compulsory counterclaim if it arises out of the “transaction or occurrence” that is the subject matter of the opposing party’s claim. Courts generally have agreed that these words should be interpreted liberally in order to further the general policies of the federal rules which are to avoid multiple suits and to encourage the determination of the entire controversy among the parties. Thus, the "transaction" test does not require the court to differentiate between opposing legal and equitable claims or between claims in tort and those in contract. Most courts, rather than attempting to define the key terms of Rule 13(a) precisely, have preferred to suggest standards by which the compulsory or permissive nature of specific counterclaims can be determined. Four tests have been suggested: (1) Are the issues of fact and law raised by the claim and counterclaim largely the same? (2) Would res judicata bar a subsequent suit on defendant's claim absent the compulsory counterclaim rule? (3) Will substantially the same evidence support or refute plaintiff's claim as well as defendant's counterclaim? (4) Is there any logical relation between the claim and the counterclaim? Old Homestead Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 47 F.R.D. 560, 563. See Counterclaim (Compulsory counterclaim).

Cross-claims. Most courts have held that the above standards used for dealing with the "transaction or occurrence" test for compulsory counterclaims also apply to cross-claims under Fed.R.Civ.P. 13(g). Old Homestead Co. v. Continental Baking Co., 47 F.R.D. 560, 563. See Cross-claim.

Transazione /trænˈzæʒiən/ An Italian term which technically refers to an instrument whereby parties agree to put an end to a dispute by means of mutual concessions and is the equivalent of "transactio" under the Roman law, the principles of which have been carried into the common law and are found in agreements of accord and satisfaction and compromise and settlement.

Transcript. That which has been transcribed. A copy of any kind, though commonly the term refers to a copy of the record of a trial, hearing or other proceeding as prepared by a court reporter. A writing made from or after an original. A copy of an original writing or deed and suggests the idea of an original writing. O'Quinn v. Tate, Tex.Civ.App., 187 S.W.2d 241, 243.

An official copy of the record of proceedings in a trial or hearing. Word-for-word typing of everything that was said "on the record" during the trial. The stenographer (court reporter) types this transcription which is paid for by the parties requesting it.

Transcript of record. Refers to the printed record as made up in each case of the proceedings and pleadings necessary for the appellate court to review the history of the case.

Transcriptio pedis finis levati mittendo in cancellarium /trænskrɪˈpʃ(ə)n/ The transfer of an instrument or document, that vests in the transferee such rights as the transferor had therein. See U.C.C. §§ 3-201(1) & 7-504(1). Transfer is the all-encompassing term used by the Uniform Commercial Code to describe the act which passes an interest in an instrument to another. Scheid v. Shields, 269 Or. 236, 524 P.2d 1209, 1210.

Transfer means every mode, direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary, of disposing of or parting with property or with an interest in property, including retention of title as a security interest and foreclosure of the debtor's equity of redemption. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

See Barter; Constructive transfer; Exchange; Gift; Sale; Will.

Transferable. A term used in a quasi legal sense, to indicate that the character of assignability or negotiability attaches to the particular instrument, or that it may pass from hand to hand, carrying all rights of the original holder. The words "not transferable" are sometimes printed upon a ticket, receipt, or bill of lading, to show that the same will not be good in the hands of any person other than the one to whom first issued.

Transfer agent. An organization, usually a bank, that handles transfers of shares for a publicly held corporation. Generally, a transfer agent assures that certificates submitted for transfer are properly endorsed and that there is appropriate documentation of the right to transfer. The transfer agent issues new certificates and oversees the cancellation of the old ones. Transfer agents also usually maintain the record of shareholders for the corporation and mail dividend checks.

Transferee. He to whom a transfer is made.

Transferee liability. Under certain conditions, if the Internal Revenue Service is unable to collect taxes owed by a transferee of property, it may pursue its claim against the transferee of such property. The transferee's liability for taxes is limited to the extent of the value of the assets transferred. For example, the Internal Revenue Service can force a donee to pay the gift tax when such tax cannot be paid by the donor making the transfer. 1.R.C. §§ 6901–6905.

Transfer in contemplation of death. A transfer made under a present apprehension on the part of the transferor, from some existing bodily or mental condition or impending peril, creating a reasonable fear that death is near at hand. See Contemplation of death.

Transfer of a cause. The removal of a case from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1404(a), 1406(a), 1631. See Forum non conveniens; Removal of causes.

Transferor. One who makes a transfer.

Transfer payments. Payments made by the government to individuals for which no services are concurrently rendered in return. A transfer payment might be a Social Security check or an unemployment check.

Transferred intent doctrine. If an illegal yet unintended act results from the intent to commit a crime, that act is also considered illegal. Under doctrine of “transferred intent,” original malice is transferred from one against whom it was entertained to person who actually suffers consequence of unlawful act. Provenzano v. State, Fla., 497 So.2d 1177, 1181. For example, if a person intentionally directs force against one person wrongfully but, instead, hits another, his intent is said to be transferred from one to the other and he is liable to the other though he did not intend it in the first instance. See also Intent (Transferred intent).

Transfers to Minors Act. The Uniform Transfers to Minors Act (UTMA) replaces and revises the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act (UGMA). As expanded, the Act allows the transfer of any type of property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, and wheresoever located (within or without the state) to a custodianship. In addition, the UTMA permits (in addition to outright lifetime gifts) transfers from trusts, estates, and guardianships even if the trust, will, etc., instrument does not expressly permit such transfers. Transfers from persons indebted to the minor also may be made to the custodianship if the minor does not have a conservator. The UTMA also permits the legal representative of the minor to transfer other property of the minor to the custodianship for the purpose of convenience or economy.

Many states have repealed the former UGMA and substituted this new UTMA. See also Gifts (or Transfers) to Minors Act.

Transfer tax. A tax upon the passing of the title to property or a valuable interest therein out of or from the estate of a decedent, by inheritance, devise, or bequest. See Estate tax; Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.

Tax on the transfer of property, particularly of an incorporeal nature, such as bonds or shares of stock, between living persons. A tax imposed by New York State when a security is sold or transferred from one person to another. Also, a tax imposed by states on each deed conveying real estate. The tax is paid by the seller. See also Revenue stamps.

Transfer ticket. An undertaking on the part of a common carrier to continue the carriage further without additional charge if the passenger, in accordance with its terms, again presents himself at the proper place for carriage. It generally designates the point at which the journey is to be renewed, but contains no contract, express or implied, for safety in making the transfer. Anton v. St. Louis Public Service Co., 335 Mo. 198, 71 S.W.2d 702, 706.

Transferuntur dominia sine titulo et traditione, per usucaptionem, scil, per longam continuam et pacificam possessionem /transfertuntur domin(i)um(i) in(y)a sany ni tit(i)law et tradishiyownyi, pat yuwyuwyu kapi shiyowm nam, silesat, pat lôgam kantinuymaw et pasifakam pasêshiyowmam/. Rights of dominion are transferred without title or delivery, by usucaption, to-wit, long and quiet possession.

Transfretatio /transfretatéysh(i)yow/. Lat. In old English law, a crossing of the strait [of Dover]; a passing or sailing over from England to France. The royal passages or voyages to Gascony, Brittany, and other parts of France were so called, and time was sometimes computed from them.

Transgressio /transgrésh(i)yow/. In old English law, a violation of law. Also trespass; the action of trespass.

Transgressio est cum modus non servatur nec mensura, debit enim quilibet in suo facto modum habere et mensuram /transgresheš(i)yow est käm mówdas nón sařvéytar něk mens(y)iura, débát lýnam kwáljabat in s(y)iówow féktof mówdam habiriy et mens(y)iuram/. Transgression is when neither mode nor measure is preserved, for every one in his act ought to have a mode and measure.

Transgressione /transgréshiyowñy/. In old English law, a writ or action of trespass.

Transgressionem multiplicata, crescat poene infictio /transgéshiyowñy múltašskéyta, kréskat pýnyf infikš(i)yow/. When transgression is multiplied, let the infliction of punishment be increased.

Transgressive trust /transgrésav trés/. See Trust.

Transhipment. In maritime law, the act of taking the cargo out of one ship and loading it in another.

Transient, n. /transzh(i)yant/. One who, or that which, is temporary. Synonymous with transitory, fugitive, fleeting, momentary.

Transient, adj. Passing across, as from one thing or person to another; passing with time of short duration; not permanent; not lasting; temporary. Tilly v. Woodham, La.App., 163 So. 771, 772.

Transient foreigner. One who visits the country, without the intention of remaining.

Transient merchant. A merchant who engages in the vending or sale of merchandise at any place in the state temporarily, and who does not intend to become, and does not become, a permanent merchant of such place.

Transient person. One who has no legal residence within a jurisdiction for the purpose of state venue statute. Aetna Finance Co. v. Gutierrez, 96 N.M. 538, 632 P.2d 1176.

Transire, v. /traenzáriy/. Lat. To go, or pass over; to pass from one thing, person, or place to another.

Transire, n. /traenzáriy/. In English law, a warrant or permit for the custom-house to let goods pass.

Transit. A stop-over privilege on a continuous journey granted by carrier by which a break de facto in continuity of carriage of goods is disregarded and two legs of a journey are treated as though covered without interruption, uniting both legs into a through route for which a joint rate can be published. Galveston Truck Line Corporation v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 797, 802; Baltimore and O. R. Co. v. United States, D.C.N.Y., 24 F.Supp. 734, 735. Within policy covering goods in transit, term has significance of activity and of motion and direction; literally it means in course of passing from point to point, and ordinarily goods in transit would imply that foods will lawfully be picked up at given place and hauled to place designated by owner or one with authority to so designate. Simons v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 398 S.W.2d 833, 834. Term may also be applied to a check which is mailed for collection while it is still in the mails and uncollected. See also In transitu; Stoppage in transit.

Transportation of goods or persons from one place to another. Passage; act of passing.

Transit in rem judicatam /trázant an rém jw-dákéytam/. It passes into a matter adjudged; it becomes converted into a res judicata or judgment. A contract upon which a judgment is obtained is said to pass in rem judicatam.

Transitive covenant. See Covenant.

Transitory. Passing from place to place; that which may pass or be changed from one place to another; the opposite of “local.” See Transitory action.

Transitory action. An action that is personal; i.e., brought against the person of the defendant—and brought in any county in which service upon the defendant is obtained. A lawsuit that may be brought in any one of many places. Actions are “transitory” when transaction on which they are based might not occur except in some particular place; the distinction being in nature of subject of injury and not in means used or place at which cause of action arises. Howle v. Twin States Exp., 237 N.C. 667, 75 S.E.2d 732, 736. See also In personam; In rem.

Transit privilege. A rate accommodation designed to permit shipper of raw materials or agricultural products to unload and process commodities at a point en route without being required to pay local rates for each segment of the entire route. Burlington Northern Inc. v. U.S., C.A. 8, 561 F.2d 167, 168.

Transit terra cum onere /trázant téh rá kam ównár/i. Land passes subject to any burden affecting it.

Transitus /trázntas/. Lat. Passage from one place to another; transit. In transitu, on the passage, transit, or way.

Translado /transládow/. Span. A transcript.

Translation. The reproduction in one language of a book, document, or speech in another language.

The transfer of property; but in this sense it is seldom used. 2 Bl.Comm. 294.

In ecclesiastical law, as applied to a bishop, the term denotes his removal from one diocese to another.

Translattitium edictum /traenzlatish(i)yrm adiktam/. Lat. In Roman law, the praetor, on his accession to office, did not usually publish an entirely new edict, but retained the whole or a part of that promulgated by his predecessor, as being of an approved or permanently useful character. The portion thus repeated or handed down from year to year was called the “edictum translattitium.”

Translative fact. A fact by means of which a right is transferred or passes from one person to another; one, that is, which fulfills the double function of terminating the right of one person to an object, and of originating the right of another to it.

Transmission. In the civil law, the right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights.

Transmit. To send or transfer from one person or place to another, or to communicate. State v. Robbins, 253 N.C. 47, 116 S.E.2d 192, 193.

Transmittal letter. Non-substantive document which establishes a record of delivery; e.g., letter to the SEC which accompanies a preliminary filing.

Transportation. The movement of goods or persons from one place to another, by a carrier. Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S.Ct. 1125, 38 L.Ed. 1047.

Criminal law. A species of punishment consisting in removing the criminal from his own country to another (usually a penal colony), there to remain in exile for a prescribed period. Fong Yue Ting v. U.S., 149 U.S. 698, 13 S.Ct. 1016, 37 L.Ed. 905. See Deportation.

Trap. A device, as a pitfall, snare, or machine that shuts suddenly as with a spring, for taking game and other animals. Hence, any device or contrivance by which one may be caught unawares, strategem; snare; gin. It imports an affirmative intent or design either malicious or mischievous, to cause injury. Gumbart v. Waterbury Club Holding Corporation, D.C.Conn., 27 F.Supp. 228, 229, 230. The doctrine of "trap" as ground for recovery by trespasser is rested upon theory that owner expected trespasser and prepared an injury. Moseley v. Alabama Power Co., 246 Ala. 416, 21 So.2d 305, 307. The "trap" or "pitfall" which would raise duty of care on part of owner or occupier of land running to a licensee must be an ultrahazardous hidden peril of which occupier has knowledge but licensee does not, and it is not necessary that such trap or pitfall be designed or intended to catch or entrap anything. Bichsel v. Blumhost, Mo.App., 429 S.W.2d 301, 306. See also Entrapment.

Traslado /tra̱nsládo/. In Spanish law, a copy; a sight.

A copy of a document taken by the notary from the original, or a subsequent copy taken from the protocol, and not a copy taken directly from the matrix or protocol.

Trassans /tra̱ssán/. Drawing; one who draws. The drawer of a bill of exchange.

Trassatus /tra̱séytəs/. One who is drawn, or drawn upon. The drawee of a bill of exchange.

Trauma /tra̱wma/. A physical injury caused by a blow, or fall, or a psychologically damaging emotional experience. An injury, wound, shock, or the resulting condition or neurosis. Ortkiese v. Clarson & Ewell Engineering, Fla., 126 So.2d 556, 561.

Traumatic /tra̱mátwik/. Caused by or resulting from a wound or any external injury; as, traumatic insanity, produced by an injury to or fracture of the skull with consequent pressure on the brain. Figueroa v. Industrial Commission, 22 Ariz.App. 594, 529 P.2d 1188, 1191.

Traumatism /tra̱wmatizəm,tró/. A diseased condition of the body or any part of it caused by a wound or external injury.

Travail /travayl/. The act of child-bearing. A woman is said to be in her travail from the time the pains of child-bearing commence until her delivery.

Travel. To go from one place to another at a distance; to journey. Spoken of voluntary change of place. Within the meaning of a constitutional right to travel means migration with intent to settle and abide. Strong v. Collatos, D.C.Mass., 450 F.Supp. 1356, 1360.

Travel Act. Federal act prohibiting travel in interstate or foreign commerce to further unlawful gambling, prostitution, extortion, bribery or arson, as well as illegal transactions involving liquor or narcotics. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1952.

Traveled part of highway. See Travel way.

Traveled place. A place where the public have, in some manner, acquired the legal right to travel.

Traveled way. The traveled path, or the path used for public travel, within located limits of the way. Also called "traveled part of highway."

Traveler. One who passes from place to place, whether for pleasure, instruction, business or health.

Traveler's check. Instrument purchased from bank, express company, or the like, in various denominations, which can be used as cash upon second signature by purchaser. It has the characteristics of a cashier’s check of the issuer. Pines v. United States, C.C.A.Iowa, 123 F.2d 825, 828. It requires the signature of the purchaser at the time he buys it and also at the time when he uses it.

Traveler's letter of credit. A type of letter of credit which is addressed to a correspondent bank. When the traveler wishes to draw credit on the correspondent bank, he identifies himself as the person in whose favor the credit is drawn.

Travel expenses. Travel expenses include meals and lodging and transportation expenses while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business (including that of an employee). See Tax home.

Traverse. In common law pleading, a traverse signifies a denial. Thus, where a defendant denies any material allegation of fact in the plaintiff's declaration, he is said to traverse it, and the plea itself is hence frequently termed a "traverse." See also Denial.

Common traverse. A simple and direct denial of the material allegations of the opposite pleading, and without inducement or abeque hoc.

Criminal practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment until a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. 4 Bl.Comm. 351.

General traverse. One preceded by a general inducement, and denying in general terms all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, instead of pursuing the words of the allegations which it denies.

Special traverse. A peculiar form of traverse or denial, the design of which, as distinguished from a common traverse, is to explain or qualify the denial, instead of putting it in the direct and absolute form. It consists of an affirmative and a negative part, the first setting forth the new affirmative matter tending to explain or qualify the denial, and technically called the "inducement," and the latter constituting the direct denial itself, and technically called the "abeque hoc."

Traverse jury. A petit jury; a trial jury; a jury impaneled to try an action or prosecution, as distinguished from a grand jury. See Jury.

Traverse of indictment or presentment. The taking issue upon and contradicting or denying some chief point of it.

Traverse of office. The proving that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator is defective and untruly made. It is the challenging, by a subject, of an inquest of office, as being defective and untruly made.
Traverse upon a traverse. One growing out of the same point or subject-matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side.

Traverser. In pleading, one who traverses or denies. A prisoner or party indicted; so called from his traversing the indictment.

Traversing note. A pleading in chancery, consisting of a denial put in by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant, generally denying all the statements in the plaintiff's bill. The effect of it is to put the plaintiff upon proof of the whole contents of his bill, and is only resorted to for the purpose of saving time, and in a case where the plaintiff can safely dispense with an answer. A copy of the note must be served on the defendant.

T.R.E. An abbreviation of "Tempore Regis Edwardi" (in the time of King Edward), of common occurrence in Domesday, when the valuation of manors, as it was in the time of Edward the Confessor, is recounted.

Treachery. Deliberate and wilful betrayal of trust and confidence.

Tread-mill, or tread-wheel. An instrument of prison discipline, being a wheel or cylinder with an horizontal axis, having steps attached to it, up which the prisoners walk, and thus put the axis in motion. The men hold on by a fixed rail, and, as their weight presses down the step upon which they tread, they ascend the next step, and thus drive the wheel.

Treason. A breach of allegiance to one's government, usually committed through levying war against such government or by giving aid or comfort to the enemy. The offense of attempting by overt acts to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance; or of betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power. Treason consists of two elements: adherence to the enemy, and rendering him aid and comfort. Cramer v. U.S., 325 U.S. 1, 65 S.Ct. 918, 932, 89 L.Ed. 1441. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 2381. A person can be convicted of treason only on the testimony of two witnesses, or confession in open court. Art. III, Sec. 3, U.S. Constitution.

Constructive treason. Treason imputed to a person by law from his conduct or course of actions, though his deeds taken severally do not amount to actual treason. This doctrine is not known in the United States.

High treason. In English law, treason against the king or sovereign, as distinguished from petit or petty treason, which might formerly be committed against a subject.

Misprision of treason. See Misprision of treason.

Petit treason. In old English law, the crime committed by a wife in killing her husband, or a servant his lord or master, or an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary. 4 Bl. Comm. 75.

Treason-felony. Under the English statute 11 & 12 Vict., c. 12, passed in 1848, is the offense of compassing, devising, etc., to depose her majesty from the crown; or to levy war in order to intimidate either house of parliament, etc., or to stir up foreigners by any printing or writing to invade the kingdom. This offense is punishable with penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than five years, etc., under statutes 11 & 12 Vict., c. 12, § 3; 20 & 21 Vict., c. 3, § 2; 27 & 28 Vict., c. 47, § 2. By the statute first above mentioned, the government is enabled to treat as felony many offenses which must formerly have been treated as high treason.

Treasonable. Having the nature or guilt of treason.

Treasure. A treasure is a thing hidden or buried in the earth, on which no one can prove his property, and which is discovered by chance. See Treasure-trove.

Treasurer. An officer of a public or private corporation, company, or government, charged with the receipt, custody, investment, and disbursement of its moneys or funds.

Treasurer, Lord High. Formerly the chief treasurer of England, who had charge of the moneys in the exchequer, the chancellor of the exchequer being under him. He appointed all revenue officers and escheaters, and leased crown lands. The office is obsolete, and his duties are now performed by the lords commissioners of the treasury.

Treasurer of the United States. See Treasury Department.

Treasurer's Remembrancer. In English law, he whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behalf.

Treasure-trove. Literally, treasure found. Money or coin, gold, silver, plate or bullion found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown. 1 Bl. Comm. 258. Called in Latin "thesaurus inventus"; and in Saxon "fyndertinga." Finder of treasure-trove, is entitled thereto as against owner of land where such treasure is found and all the world save the true owner, in absence of statute. Schley v. Couch, 284 S.W.2d 333, 335.

Treasury. A place or building in which stores of wealth are reposed; particularly, a place where the public revenues are deposited and kept, and where money is disbursed to defray the expenses of government.

That department of government which is charged with the receipt, custody, and disbursement (pursuant to appropriations) of the public revenues or funds.

Treasury bench. In the English house of commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker is so called, because occupied by the first lord of the treasury or principal minister of the crown.

Treasury bill. Short-term obligations of the federal government. Treasury bills are for specified terms of three, six and twelve months.
An obligation of the U.S. Treasury with a maturity date less than one year from the date of issue and bearing no interest but sold at a discount. Distinguished from a certificate of indebtedness, which also is of a maturity of one year or less but bears interest. Compare Treasury bond; Treasury certificate; Treasury note.

Treasury bond. A bond issued by a corporation and then reacquired; such bonds are treated as retired when reacquired and an extraordinary gain or loss on reacquisition is recognized. Compare Treasury stock.

Long term debt instruments of U.S. government.

Treasury certificate. An obligation of the U.S. generally maturing in one year on which interest is paid on a coupon basis. Compare Treasury bill.

Treasury Department. The Treasury Department was created by act of Congress approved September 2, 1789. Many subsequent acts have figured in the development of the Department delegating new duties to its charge and establishing the numerous bureaus and divisions which now compose the Treasury. The Department of the Treasury performs four basic types of functions: formulating and recommending financial, tax, and fiscal policies; serving as financial agent for the U.S. Government; law enforcement; and manufacturing coins and currency. See also Internal Revenue Service.

Treasury note. An obligation of the federal government, with a maturity of one to ten years, on which interest is paid by coupon. Compare Treasury bond; Treasury stock.

Treasury Regulations. See Regulations.

Treasury securities. See Treasury stock.

Treasury shares. See Treasury stock.

Treasury stock. Stock which has been issued as fully paid to stockholders and subsequently reacquired by the corporation to be used by it in furtherance of its corporate purposes; stock which is merely to be held as unsubscribed for and unissued is not usually regarded as "treasury stock". Bronson v. Bagdad Cooper Corp., 51 A.2d 677, 679. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act and the statutes of several states have eliminated the concept of treasury shares; reacquired shares automatically having the status of authorized but unissued shares. Compare Treasury bond.

Treasury warrant. Order in check form on U.S. Treasury on which treasury (i.e. government) disbursements are paid.

Treaty. A compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare. Louis Wolf & Co. v. United States, Cust. & Pat.App., 107 F.2d 819, 827; United States v. Belmont, N.Y., 301 U.S. 324, 57 S.Ct. 758, 761, 81 L.Ed. 1134. An agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized, and solemnly ratified by the several sovereigns or the supreme power of each state. Edye v. Robertson, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798; Carlton v. Kelly, 229 U.S. 447, 33 S.Ct. 945, 954, 57 L.Ed. 1274, 46 L.R.A., N.S., 397. A treaty is not only a law but also a contract between two nations and must, if possible, be so construed as to give full force and effect to all its parts. United States v. Reid, C.C.A.Or., 73 F.2d 153, 155. The term has a far more restricted meaning under U.S. Constitution than under international law. Weinberger v. Rossi, Dist.Col., 456 U.S. 25, 102 S.Ct. 1510, 1514, 71 L.Ed.2d 715. See also Compact.

United States treaties may be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Art. II, Sec. 2. U.S. Const. States may not enter into treaties (Art. I, Sec. 10, cl. 1), and, once made, shall be binding on the states as the supreme law of the land (Art. VI, cl. 2). See Supremacy clause; Treaty clause.

Treaty clause. The provision in the U.S. Constitution, Art. II, Sec. 2, which gives to the President the power "by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur."

Treaty of peace. An agreement or contract made by belligerent powers, in which they agree to lay down their arms, and by which they stipulate the conditions of peace and regulate the manner in which it is to be restored and supported.

Treaty power. See Treaty clause.

Treble costs. See Costs.

Treble damages. See Damages.

Tresayle /tr3sey(3)/. An abolished writ sued on ouster by abatement, on the death of the grandfather's grandfather.

Tres faciunt collegium /tripz feysh(i)yant kallyjyi(m)/. Three make a corporation; three members are requisite to constitute a corporation. 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

Trespass. An unlawful interference with one's person, property, or rights. At common law, trespass was a form of action brought to recover damages for any injury to one's person or property or relationship with another.

Any unauthorized intrusion or invasion of private premises or land of another. Antkiewicz v. Motorists Mut. Ins. Co., 91 Mich.App. 389, 283 N.W.2d 749, 753. Trespass comprehends any misfeasance, transgression or offense which damages another person's health, reputa-

See also Forcible trespass; Intruder.

Continuing trespass. One which is in its nature a permanent invasion of the rights of another; as, where a person builds on his own land so that a part of the building overhangs his neighbor's land or dumps rubbish on the land of another. In such a case, there is a continuing wrong so long as the offending object remains.

A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or other thing which the actor or his predecessor in legal interest has placed on the land: (a) with the consent of the person then in possession of the land, if the actor fails to remove it after the consent has been effectively terminated, or (b) pursuant to a privilege conferred on the actor irrespective of the possessor's consent, if the actor fails to remove it after the privilege has been terminated, by the accomplishment of its purpose or otherwise. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 160.

Criminal trespass. Criminal trespass is entering or remaining upon or in any land, structure, vehicle, aircraft or watercraft by one who knows he is not authorized or privileged to do so; and (a) He enters or remains therein in defiance of an order not to enter or to leave such premises or property personally communicated to him by the owner thereof or other authorized person; or (b) Such premises or property are posted in a manner reasonably likely to come to the attention of intruders, or are fenced or otherwise enclosed. See also Criminal.

Joint trespass. Exists where two or more persons unite in committing it, or where some actually commit the tort, the others command, encourage or direct it.

Permanent trespass. One which consists of a series of acts, done on successive days, which are of the same nature, and are renewed or continued from day to day, so that, in the aggregate, they make up one indivisible wrong. 3 Bl.Comm. 212.

Trespass ab initio. One who innocently or with a privilege enters upon land may become a trespasser "from the beginning" if his subsequent conduct constitutes trespass by an abuse of such privilege.

Trespass de bonis asportatis /trëspas dy bównas aspartéytas/. (Trespass for goods carried away.) The technical name of that species of action of trespass for injuries to personal property which lies where the injury consists in carrying away the goods or property. See 3 Bl.Comm. 150, 151.

Trespass for mesne profits /trëspas for mïyn prôfts/. A form of action supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has wrongfully received during the time of his occupation. 3 Bl.Comm. 205.

Trespass on the case. The form of action, at common law, adapted to the recovery of damages for some injury resulting to a party from the wrongful act of another, unaccompanied by direct or immediate force, or which is the indirect or secondary consequence of defendant's act. Such action is the ancestor of the present day action for negligence where problems of legal and factual cause arise. Mueller v. Brunn, 105 Wis.2d 171, 313 N.W.2d 790, 794. Commonly called, by abbreviation, "Case."

Trespass quare clausum fregit /trëspas kwóri klózam friyjot/. "Trespass wherefore he broke the close." The common-law action for damages for an unlawful entry or trespass upon the plaintiff's land. In the Latin form of the writ, the defendant was called upon to show why he broke the plaintiff's close; i.e., the real or imaginary structure inclosing the land, whence the name. It is commonly abbreviated to "trespass qu. cl. fr." See also Trespass to try title, below.

Trespass to chattels. An unlawful and serious interference with the possessory rights of another to personal property.

Trespass to land. At common law, every unauthorized and direct breach of the boundaries of another's land was an actionable trespass. It is a wrong against one who has this right to possession, not necessarily against the person who has title but no immediate right to possession. No intent to commit a trespass was required. All that was necessary was that the act resulting in the trespass be volitional, and that the resulting trespass be direct and immediate. Nor did actual damage need be shown. Any trespass justified at least nominal damages. The present prevailing position of the courts, and Restatement of Torts, finds liability for trespass only in the case of intentional intrusion, or negligence, or some "abnormally dangerous activity" on the part of the defendant. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 166. See Zimmer v. Stephenson, 66 Wash.2d 477, 403 P.2d 343. Compare Nuisance.

Extent of trespasser's liability for harm. A trespass on land subjects the trespasser to liability for physical harm to the possessor of the land at the time of the trespass, or to the land or to his things, or to members of his household or to their things, caused by any act done, activity carried on, or condition created by the trespasser, irrespective of whether his conduct is such as would subject him to liability were he not a trespasser. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 162.

Failure to remove thing tortiously placed on land. A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or other thing which the actor has tortiously placed there, whether or not the actor has the ability to remove it. A trespass may be committed by the continued presence on the land of a structure, chattel, or other thing which the actor's predecessor in legal interest therein has tortiously placed there, if the actor, having acquired his legal interest in the thing with knowledge of such tortious conduct or having thereafter learned of it, fails to remove the thing. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 161.

Intrusions upon, beneath, and above surface of land. (1) Except as stated in Subsection (2), a trespass may be committed on, beneath, or above the surface of the earth. (2) Flight by aircraft in the air space above the land of another is a trespass if, but only if, (a) it enters into the immediate reaches of the air space next to the land, and (b) it interferes substantially with the other’s use and enjoyment of his land. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 159.

Liability for intentional intrusions on land. One is subject to liability to another for trespass, irrespective of whether he thereby causes harm to any legally protected interest of the other, if he intentionally (a) enters land in the possession of the other, or causes a thing or a third person to do so, or (b) remains on the land, or (c) fails to remove from the land a thing which he is under a duty to remove. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 158.

Trespass to try title. The name of the action used in several of the states for the recovery of the possession of real property unlawfully withheld, from an owner who has a right of immediate possession, with damages for any trespass committed upon the same by the defendant. A procedure by which rival claims to title or right to possession of land may be adjudicated, and as an incident partition may also be had when the controversy concerning title or right to possession is settled. It is different from "trespass quare clausum fregit (see above)" in that title must be proved. See also Ejectment.

Trespass vi et armis. Trespass with force and arms. The common-law action for damages for any injury committed by the defendant with direct and immediate force or violence against the plaintiff or his property. See Mawson v. Vess Beverage Co., Mo.App., 173 S.W.2d 606, 613.

Trespasser. One who has committed trespass. One who intentionally and without consent or privilege enters another’s property. One who enters upon property of another without any right, lawful authority, or express or implied invitation, permission, or license, not in performance of any duties to owner, but merely for his own purpose, pleasure or convenience. Mendoza v. City of Corpus Christi, Tex.App. 13 Dist., 700 S.W.2d 632, 654.

Innocent trespasser. See that title.

Joint trespassers. Two or more who unite in committing a trespass.

Trespasser ab initio. Trespassor whose acts relate back so as to make a previous act, at the time innocent, unlawful; as if he enter peaceably, and subsequently commit a breach of the peace, his entry is considered a trespass.

Trestornare. In old English law, to turn aside; to divert a stream from its course. To turn or alter the course of a road.

Tresviri. Officers who had the charge of prisons, and the execution of condemned criminals.

Tret. An allowance made for the water or dust that may be mixed with any commodity. It differs from tare (q.v.).

Trethinga. In old English law, a trithing; the court of a trithing.

Treyt. Withdrawn, as a juror. Written also treat.

Tria capita. In Roman law, were civitas, libertas, and familia; i.e., citizenship, freedom, and family rights.

Trial. A judicial examination and determination of issues between parties to action, whether they be issues of law or of fact, before a court that has jurisdiction. Tittsworth v. Chaffin, Mo.App., 741 S.W.2d 314, 317. A judicial examination, in accordance with law of the land, of a cause, either civil or criminal, of the issues between the parties, whether of law or fact, before a court that has proper jurisdiction.

See also Biturcated trial; Civil jury trial; Examining trial; Fair and impartial trial; Mini-trial; Mistrial; Speedy trial; Trifurcated trial.

Bench trial. See Trial by court or judge, below.

New trial. A re-examination in the same court of an issue of fact, or some part or portions thereof, after the verdict by a jury, report of a referee, or a decision by the court. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 59; Fed.R.Crim.P. 33. See Trial de novo, below. See also Motion for new trial; Plain error rule; Venire facias de novo.

Nonjury trial. See Trial by court or judge, below.

Public trial. A trial held in public, in the presence of the public, or in a place accessible and open to the attendance of the public at large, or of persons who may properly be admitted. The Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const., affords the accused the right to a speedy and "public" trial. See, however, Trial by news media, below.

Separate trial. See that title.

Speedy trial. See that title.

State trial. See State.

Trial at nisi prius. The ordinary kind of trial which takes place at the sittings, assizes, or circuit, before a single judge.

Trial balance. In bookkeeping, a listing of debit and credit balances of all ledger accounts. The listing is generally taken at end of an accounting period to check as to whether all entries have been made in both debit and credit accounts, though such listing need not prove accuracy of accounts if an error has been made in both the debit and credit entry.
A listing of account balances; all accounts with debit balances are totaled separately from accounts with credit balances. The two totals should be equal. Trial balances are taken as a partial check of the arithmetic accuracy of the entries previously made.

Trial by certificate. A form of trial formerly allowed in cases where the evidence of the person certifying was the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. Under such circumstances, the issue might be determined by the certificate alone, because, if sent to a jury, it would be conclusive upon them, and therefore their intervention was unnecessary.

Trial by court or judge. Trial before judge alone, in contrast to trial before jury and judge. A jury waived trial.

Trial by fire. See Ordeal.

Trial by Grand Assize. A peculiar mode of trial formerly allowed in England on writs of right. See Assize.

Trial by jury. A trial in which the issues of fact are to be determined by the verdict of a jury, duly selected, impaneled, and sworn. The terms "jury" and "trial by jury" were used at the adoption of the Constitution, and have their source in the English legal system. A jury for the trial of a cause was a body of twelve men, described as upright, well-qualified, and lawful men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court, sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence given them, who, after hearing the parties and their evidence, and receiving the instructions of the court relative to the law involved in the trial, and deliberating, when necessary, apart from all extraneous influences, must return their unanimous verdict upon the issue submitted to them. In federal court, and as well in many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of less than twelve members or that a verdict of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict of the jury. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 48; Fed.R.Crim.P. 23.

The Seventh Amendment to Federal Constitution provides that "in suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." See also Fed.R.Civ.P. 38(a). The right to a jury trial is also preserved in state constitutions. In civil cases in federal court, a jury trial must be expressly demanded or such right will be deemed waived (Fed.R.Civ.P. 38); while in criminal cases the right exists unless expressly waived and approved by court and government (Fed.R.Crim.P. 23(a)). See also Jury trial.

Summary jury trial. A settlement technique designed to resolve disputes. Attorneys present abbreviated arguments to jurors who render an informal nonbinding verdict that guides the settlement of the case. Normally, six mock jurors are chosen after a brief voir dire conducted by the court. Following short opening statements, all evidence is presented in the form of a descriptive summary to the mock jury through the par-}

TRIAL

Trial by news media. The process by which the news media in reporting an investigation of a person on trial leads its readers to act as judge and jury in determining guilt, liability or innocence before the person is tried in a judicial forum. Failure to protect accused from inherently prejudicial publicity may constitute deprivation of right to fair and impartial trial as guaranteed by due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment. Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600.

Local court rules have been widely adopted, seeking to set a proper balance between a free press and a fair trial by putting restrictions on the release of information by attorneys and courthouse personnel, making special provision for the conduct of proceedings in extensively publicized and sensational cases, and barring photography, radio, and television equipment from the courtroom and its environs.

See also Gag order.

Trial by proviso. A proceeding formerly allowed where the plaintiff in an action desists from prosecuting his suit, and does not bring it to trial in convenient time. The defendant, in such case, may take out the venire facias to the sheriff, containing these words, "proviso quod," etc., i.e., provided that. If plaintiff take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both. This is called "going to trial by proviso."

Trial by the record. A form of trial resorted to where issue is taken upon a plea of nul tiel record, in which case the party asserting the existence of a record as pleaded is bound to produce it in court on a day assigned. If the record is forthcoming, the issue is tried by inspection and examination of it. If the record is not produced, judgment is given for his adversary. 3 Bl. Comm. 330.

Trial by wager of battel. See Wager of battel.

Trial by wager of law. In old English law, a method of trial, where the defendant, coming into court, made oath that he did not owe the claim demanded of him, and eleven of his neighbors, as compurgators, swore that they believed him to speak the truth. 3 Bl.Comm. 343. See Wager of law.

Trial by witnesses. The name "trial per testes" was used for a trial without the intervention of a jury, was the only method of trial known to the civil law, and was adopted by depictions in chancery. The judge was thus left to form, in his own breast, his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined. Such type trial was very rarely used at common law.

Trial court. The court of original jurisdiction; the first court to consider litigation.

Trial de novo. A new trial or retrial had in which the whole case is retried as if no trial whatever had been had in the first instance. Housing Authority of City of Newark v. Norfolk Realty Co., 71 N.J. 314, 364 A.2d 1052, 1058. A trial of the entire case anew, both on law and on facts. In re Initiative Petition No. 260, State Question No. 377, Okl., 298 P.2d 753, 756. See New trial, above. See also Motion for new trial; Plain error rule.

Trial jury. See Jury.

Trial list. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term. See Trial calendar.

Trial calendar. Comprehensive list of cases awaiting trial and containing the dates for trial, names of counsel, expected time required for trial, etc. In some states it is maintained by the trial judge and in others, by the clerk of court. See e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 79. See also Calendar; Docket.

Trial court. The court of original jurisdiction where all evidence is first received and considered; the first court to consider litigation. Used in contract to appellate court.

Trial on merits. Trial of substantive issues in case. Ennis v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., 282 A.D. 971, 125 N.Y.S.2d 535, 537. Term used in contrast to a hearing on motion or on other interlocutory matters.

Trial per pais. Historically, a trial by one’s peers.

Triatio ibi semper debet fieri, ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam, trayeysh(iy)ow aybay juratoriyz miyliyoram/. Trial ought always to be had where the jurors can have the best information.

Tribal lands. Lands of Indian reservation which are not allotted to or occupied by individual Indians but rather the unallotted or common lands of the nation.

Land allotted in severalty to a restricted Indian is no longer part of the “reservation” nor is it “tribal land” but the virtual fee is in the allottee with certain restrictions on the right of alienation. United States v. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 127 F.2d 349, 353.

See also Indian country; Indian lands; Indian reservation; Indian tribal property.

Tribuere/trabyewarwiy/. Lat. In the civil law, to give; to distribute.

Tribunal. The seat of a judge; a court of law; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction; a judicial court; the jurisdiction which the judges exercise.

In Roman law, an elevated seat occupied by the prator, when he judged, or heard causes in form. Originally a kind of stage made of wood in the form of a square, and movable, but afterwards built of stone in the form of a semicircle.

Tribunaux de commerce/tribyuwnow do komérs/. In French law, certain courts composed of a president, judges, and substitutes, which take cognizance of all cases between merchants, and of disagreements among partners. Appeals lie from them to the courts of justice.

Tributary, n. /tribyat(èh)riy/. Any stream flowing directly or indirectly into a river. Bull v. Siegrist, 169 Or. 180, 126 P.2d 832, 834.

Tributary, adj. /tribyat(èh)riy/. Paying or yielding tribute, taxed or assessed by tribute.

Tribute/tribyuwt/. A contribution which is raised by a prince or sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state.

A sum of money paid by an inferior sovereign or state to a superior potentate, to secure the friendship or protection of the latter.

Acknowledgment of gratitude or respect.

Tricesima/trasézama/. An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.

Triding-mote/tráydi̇gmówt/. The court held for a triding- or trithing.

Triduum/trid(y)uwam/. In old English law, the space of three days. Ecclesiastically, a devotion of prayer which lasts three days.

Triennial Act/tríyeniyal sekt/. An act of parliament of 1641, which provided that if in every third year parliament was not summoned and assembled before September 3, it should assemble on the second Monday of the next November.

Also an act of 1694, which provided that a parliament be called within three years after dissolution, and that the utmost limit of a parliament be three years. This was followed by the Septennial Act of 1716.

Triennium/tríyam/. In Roman law, a subdivision of the as, containing four unciae; the proportion of four-twelfths or one-third. 2 Bl.Comm. 462, note m. A copper coin of the value of one-third of the as.

Trier of fact. Term includes (a) the jury and (b) the court when the court is trying an issue of fact other than one relating to the admissibility of evidence. Calif. Evid.Code. Commonly refers to judge in jury waived trial or jury which, in either case, has the exclusive obligation to make findings of fact in contrast to rulings of law which must be made by judge. Also may refer to hearing officer or judge in administrative proceeding.

Trifurcated trial. A trial which is divided into three stages or parts as for example, a trial on issue of liability, trial for general damages, and trial for special damages.

Trigamus/trigamaz/. In old English law, one who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives; a trigamist.

Trigild. In Saxon law, a triple gild, geld, or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction.
Tripartite /trɪˈpɜːrtɪt/. In conveyancing, of three parts; a term applied to an indenture to which there are three several parties (of the first, second, and third parts), and which is executed in triplicate.

Trinoda necessitas /trɪˈnɒdə nɛˈsɛstəs/. Lat. In Saxon law, a threelfold necessity or burden. A term used to denote the three things from contributing to the performance of which no lands were exempted, viz., pontis reparatio (the repair of bridges), arcis constructio (the building of castles), et expeditio contra hostem (military service against an enemy). 1 Bl.Comm. 263, 357.

Trionymaldum /trɪˈneɪməldəm/. In old European law, an extraordinary kind of composition for an offense, consisting of three times nine, or twenty-seven times the single geld or payment.

Trinity Masters. Elder brethren of the Trinity House. If a question arising in an admiralty action depends upon technical skill and experience in navigation, the judge or court is usually assisted at the hearing by two Trinity Masters who sit as assessors, and advise the court on questions of a nautical character.

Trinity sittings. Sittings of the English court of appeal and of the high court of justice in London and Middlesex, commencing on the Tuesday after Whitsun week, and terminating on the 8th of August. One of the four divisions of the English legal year. See also Easter, Hilary, Michaelmas sittings. Rules of the Supreme Court 1865. The divisions were formerly called terms until the Judicature Act of 1873.

Triniumgeldum /trɪˈnɪməʊrdʒəldm/. In old English law, a customary duty or toll for weighing wool; so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam.

Trivial. Trifling; inconsiderable; of small worth or importance. In equity, a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court.

TRO. Temporary restraining order.

Trophy. Anything taken from an enemy and shown or treasured up in proof of victory. A price or token of victory in any contest; hence, a memento of victory or success; an ornamental group of objects hung together on a wall, or any collection of objects typical of some event, art, industry, or branch of knowledge; a memento or memorial. In re Vortex Cup Co., Cust. & Pat.App., 83 F.2d 821, 822.

Trophy money. Money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, etc.
Trover /trow'vər/. In common-law practice, the action of trover (or trover and conversion) is a species of action on the case, and originally lay for the recovery of damages against a person who had found another's goods and wrongfully converted them to his own use. Subsequently the allegation of the loss of the goods by the plaintiff and the finding of them by the defendant was merely fictitious, and the action became the remedy for any wrongful interference with or detention of the goods of another. In form a fiction; in substance, a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use. Common-law form of action to recover value of goods or chattels by reason of an alleged unlawful interference with possessory right of another, by assertion or exercise of possession or dominion over the chattels, which is adverse and hostile to rightful possessor. L. F. Dommerich & Co. v. Bress, D.C.N.J., 280 F Supp. 590, 598. Such remedy lies only for wrongful appropriation of goods, chattels, or personal property which is specific enough to be identified. See also Conversion; Detinue; Replevin.

Troy weight. A weight of twelve ounces to the pound, having its name from Troyes, a city in Aube, France.

Truancy. Wilful and unjustified failure to attend school by one who is required to attend. It is a punishable offense within the juvenile system in some states and, in others, it is the basis of a petition for a child in need of services.

Truce. In international law, a suspension or temporary cessation of hostilities by agreement between belligerent powers; an armistice.

Truce of God. In medieval law, a truce or suspension of arms promulgated by the church, putting a stop to private hostilities at certain periods or during certain sacred seasons.

True. Conformable to fact; correct; exact; actual; genuine; honest. In one sense, that only is “true” which is conformable to the actual state of things. In that sense, a statement is “untrue” which does not express things exactly as they are. But in another and broader sense the word “true” is often used as a synonym of “honest”, “sincere”, not “fraudulent.” Zolintakis v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, C.C.A.Utah, 108 F.2d 902, 905; Moulor v. American Life Ins. Co., 111 U.S. 335, 4 S.Ct. 466, 28 L.Ed. 447.

True admission. A formal act done in course of judicial proceedings which waives or dispenses with production of evidence for purposes of litigation that proposition of fact alleged by opponent is true. Malitz v. Jackoway-Katz Cap Co., 336 Mo. 1000, 82 S.W.2d 909, 917. See also Admission; Stipulation.

True bill. The endorsement made by a grand jury upon a bill of indictment, when they find it sustained by the evidence laid before them, and are satisfied of the truth of the accusation. The endorsement made by a grand jury when they find sufficient evidence to warrant a criminal charge. An indictment.

True copy. A true copy does not mean an absolutely exact copy but means that the copy shall be so true that anybody can understand it. See Certified copy; Copy.

True, public, and notorious. These three qualities were formally predicated in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally.

True value. For tax assessment purposes, term refers to the market value of the property at fair and bona fide sale at private contract, and is in essence the value property has in exchange for money. City of Newark v. West Milford Tp., Passaic County, 9 N.J. 295, 88 A.2d 211, 214. In condemnation proceedings, is market value or price which would be agreed upon at voluntary sale between willing seller and willing purchaser, taking into consideration all available uses to which land might be put, as well as all factors, which lead to reimbursement for loss caused by taking. State Through Dept. of Highways v. Poulan, La.App., 160 So.2d 387, 388. See also Market value; Value.

True value rule. Under this rule, one who subscribes for and receives corporate stock must pay therefor the par value thereof either in money or in money’s worth, so that the real assets of the corporation shall at least square with its books, and whenever, whether by fraud, accident or mistake, the true value of property, labor or services received in payment does not equal par value, stock is deemed unpaid for to the full extent of the difference, and holders are liable to creditors for the difference, notwithstanding good faith of directors. Jo¬hansen v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 345 Mo. 135, 131 S.W.2d 599, 603.

True verdict. The voluntary conclusion of the jury after deliberate consideration, and it is none the less a true verdict because the respective jurors may have been liberal in concessions to each other, if conscientiously and freely made. A verdict is not a “true verdict,” when it is the result of any arbitrary rule or order, whether imposed by themselves, or by the court or officer in charge. See Verdict.

Trust. A legal entity created by a grantor for the benefit of designated beneficiaries under the laws of the state and the valid trust instrument. The trustee holds a fiduciary responsibility to manage the trust’s corpus assets and income for the economic benefit of all of the beneficiaries. A confidence reposed in one person, who is termed trustee, for the benefit of another, who is called the cestui que trust, respecting property which is held by the trustee for the benefit of the cestui que trust. State ex rel. Wirt v. Superior Court for Spokane County, 10 Wash.2d 362, 116 P.2d 752, 755. Any arrangement whereby property is transferred with intention that it be administered by trustee for another’s benefit. A fiduciary relationship in which one person is the holder of the title to property subject to an equitable obligation to keep or use the property for the benefit of another. Scotti's Drive In Restaurants, Inc. v. Mile High-Dart In Corp., Wyo., 528 P.2d 1193, 1195.
A trust can be created for any purpose which is not illegal, and which is not against public policy. Collins v. Lyon, Inc., 181 Va. 230, 24 S.E.2d 572, 579.

Essential elements of trust are designated beneficiary and trustee, fund sufficiently identified to enable title to pass to trustee, and actual delivery to trustee with intention of passing title. City Bank Farmers' Trust Co. v. Charity Organization Soc. of City of New York, 238 App.Div. 720, 265 N.Y.S. 267.

An association or organization of persons or corporations having the intention and power, or the tendency, to create a monopoly, control production, interfere with the free course of trade or transportation, or to fix and regulate the supply and the price of commodities. In the history of economic development, the "trust" was originally a device by which several corporations engaged in the same general line of business might combine for their mutual advantage, in the direction of eliminating destructive competition, controlling the output of their commodity, and regulating and maintaining its price, but at the same time preserving their separate individual existence, and without any consolidation or merger. This device was the erection of a central committee or board, composed, perhaps, of the presidents or general managers of the different corporations, and the transfer to them of a majority of the stock in each of the corporations, to be held "in trust" for the several stockholders so assigning their holdings. These stockholders received in return "trust certificates" showing that they were entitled to receive the dividends on their assigned stock, though the voting power of it had passed to the trustees. This last feature enabled the trustees or committee to elect all the directors of all the corporations, and through them the officers, and thereby to exercise an absolutely controlling influence over the policy and operations of each constituent company, to the ends and with the purposes above mentioned. Though the "trust," in this sense, is now seldom if ever resorted to as a form of corporate organization, having given place to the "holding corporation" and other devices, the word became current in statute laws as well as popular speech, to designate almost any form of combination of a monopolistic character or tendency. Northern Securities Co. v. U.S., 193 U.S. 197, 24 S.Ct. 436, 48 L.Ed. 679; Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. State of Missouri, 238 U.S. 41, 35 S.Ct. 671, 673, 59 L.Ed. 1192.

In a looser sense the term is applied to any combination of establishments in the same line of business for securing the same ends by holding the individual interests of each subservient to a common authority for the common interests of all. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. State of Missouri, 238 U.S. 41, 35 S.Ct. 671, 673, 59 L.Ed. 1192.

A trust, as the term is used in the Restatement, when not qualified by the word "charitable," "resulting" or "constructive," is a fiduciary relationship with respect to property, subjecting the person by whom the title to the property is held to equitable duties to deal with the property for the benefit of another person, which arises as a result of a manifestation of an intention to create it. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 2.

Accumulation trust. Trust in which trustees are directed to accumulate income and gains from sales of trust assets for ultimate disposition when the trust is terminated. Many states have laws governing the time over which accumulations may be made. See also Accumulation trust.

Active trust. One which imposes upon the trustee the duty of taking active measures in the execution of the trust, as, where property is conveyed to trustees with directions to sell and distribute the proceeds among creditors of the grantor; distinguished from a "passive" or "dry" trust.

In a "passive trust" the legal and equitable titles are merged in the beneficiaries and beneficial use is converted into legal ownership, while in an "active trust" the title remains in trustee for purpose of the trust. Johnson v. Thornton, 264 S.C. 252, 214 S.E.2d 124, 127.

Alimony trust. Device used to secure obligation of husband to pay support or alimony for wife. Transfer by husband to trustee of property from which wife as beneficiary will be supported after divorce or separation.

Annuity trust. An annuity trust is a trust from which the trustee is required to pay a sum certain annually to one or more individual beneficiaries for their respective lives or for a term of years, and thereafter either transfer the remainder to or for the use of a qualified charity or retain the remainder for such a use. The sum certain must not be less than 5% of the initial fair market value of the property transferred to the trust by the donor. A qualified annuity trust must comply with the basic statutory requirements of I.R.C. § 664. See also Annuity trust.

Blind trust. Device used to give management of one's investments to an outside person over whom the beneficiary has no control. For example, to avoid the possibility of disqualification a judge could utilize a blind trust with respect to his or her investments. Union Carbide Corp. v. U.S. Cutting Service, Inc., C.A.I11., 782 F.2d 710, 718.

Bond trust. A trust, the res of which consists in bonds which yield interest income.

Business trust. See Business; Massachusetts trust; Trust estates as business companies.

Bypass trust. Also known as a credit trust, credit shelter trust or exemption equivalent trust, it is an estate planning tool whereby a deceased spouse's estate passes to a trust rather than to the surviving spouse, thereby reducing the likelihood that the surviving spouse's subsequent estate will exceed the estate tax threshold. Typically, the surviving spouse is given a life estate in the trust.

Cestui que trust. The person for whose benefit a trust is created or who is to enjoy the income or the avails of it. See Beneficiary.

Charitable remainder trust. A trust which consists of assets which are paid over to the trust after the expiration of a life estate or intermediate estates and designated for charitable purposes. See also Charitable remainder annuity trust.

Charitable trusts. Trusts designed for the benefit of a class or the public generally. They are essentially different from private trusts in that the beneficiaries are uncertain. In general, such must be created for charitable, educational, religious or scientific purposes. See Public trust, below.

Clifford trust. Under this tax planning device, a transfer of income-producing property is made to a trust which provides that the income is either to be paid or accumulated for the benefit of a beneficiary other than the grantor for a period of more than ten years, at which time the trust is to terminate and the property reverts back to the grantor. This transfer is made at the cost of a gift tax and if the gift tax paid is less than the income tax which will be saved as the result of the shifting of the income from the high-bracket grantor to the low-bracket beneficiary, the technique has merit from a tax point of view. Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 60 S.Ct. 554, 84 L.Ed. 788; I.R.C. §§ 671–678. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 changed the laws with respect to the Clifford Trust and for transfers made after March 1, 1986, the trust is subject to taxation at the grantor's rate, which effectively eliminates the benefits of the Clifford Trust.

Community trust. An agency organized for the permanent administration of funds placed in trust for public health, educational and charitable purposes.

Complete voluntary trust. One completely created, the subject-matter being designated, the trustee and beneficiary being named, and the limitations and trusts being fully and perfectly declared.

Complex trust. A complex trust is any trust other than a simple trust. One in which the trustees have discretion as to whether to distribute and discretion as to amounts distributed. Such trusts are governed for tax purposes by I.R.C. §§ 661–663.

Constructive trust. A trust raised by construction of law, or arising by operation of law, as distinguished from an express trust. Wherever the circumstances of a transaction are such that the person who takes the legal estate in property cannot also enjoy the beneficial interest without necessarily violating some established principle of equity, the court will immediately raise a constructive trust, and fasten it upon the conscience of the legal owner, so as to convert him into a trustee for the parties who in equity are entitled to the beneficial enjoyment.

Constructive trusts do not arise by agreement or from intention, but by operation of law, and fraud, active or constructive, is their essential element. Actual fraud is not necessary, but such a trust will arise whenever circumstances under which property was acquired made it inequitable that it should be retained by him who holds the legal title. Constructive trusts have been said to arise through the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, or under the broad doctrine that equity regards and treats as done what in good conscience ought to be done, and such trusts are also known as "trusts ex maleficio" or "ex delicto" or "involuntary trusts" and their forms and varieties are practically without limit, being raised by courts of equity whenever it becomes necessary to prevent a failure of justice. See also Involuntary trust; Trust ex maleficio, below.

Contingent trust. An express trust depending for its operation upon a future event.

Creation of trust. A trust may be created by: (a) a declaration by the owner of property that he holds it as trustee for another person; or (b) a transfer inter vivos by the owner of property to another person as trustee for the transferor or for a third person; or (c) a transfer by will by the owner of property to another person as trustee for a third person; or (d) an appointment by one person having a power of appointment to another person as trustee for the donee of the power or for a third person; or (e) a promise by one person to another person whose rights thereunder are to be held in trust for a third person. Restatement, Second, Trusts § 17.

Credit trust. See Bypass trust, above.

Declaration of trust. See Declaration.

Deed of trust. See Deed.

Directory trust. One which is not completely and finally settled by the instrument creating it, but only defined in its general purpose and to be carried into detail according to later specific directions.

Direct trust. An express trust, as distinguished from a constructive or implied trust. See Express trust below.

Discretionary trust. Trust in which trustees have discretion as to types of investment and also as to whether and when distributions may be made to beneficiaries. Trusts under which the trustee or another party has the right to accumulate (rather than pay out) the income for each year. Depending on the terms of the trust instrument, such income may be accumulated for future distributions to the income beneficiaries or added to corpus for the benefit of the remainderperson.

Dry trust. One which merely vests the legal title in the trustee, and does not require the performance of any active duty on his part to carry out the trust.

Educational trusts. Trusts for the founding, endowing, and supporting schools for the advancement of all useful branches of learning, which are not strictly private.

TRUST
Equipment trust. Financing method commonly used by railroads in which the equipment's title is transferred to trustees as security for the financing.

Estate trust. An estate trust is a trust, for all or part of the income of which is to be accumulated during the surviving spouse's life and added to corpus, with the accumulated income and corpus being paid to the estate of the surviving spouse at death. This type of trust is commonly used to qualify property for the marital deduction.

Executed trust. A trust of which the scheme has in the outset been completely declared. A trust in which the estates and interest in the subject-matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust, and require no further instruments to complete them.

Executory trust. One which requires the execution of some further instrument, or the doing of some further act, on the part of the creator of the trust or of the trustee, towards its complete creation or full effect.

Express active trust. Where will confers upon executor authority to generally manage property of estate and pay over net income to devisees or legatees, such authority creates an "express active trust".

Express private passive trust. Such exists where land is conveyed to or held by one person in trust for another, without any power being expressly or impliedly given trustee to take actual possession of land or exercise acts of ownership over it, except by beneficiary's direction.

Express trust. A direct trust. A trust created or declared in express terms, and usually in writing, as distinguished from one inferred by the law from the conduct or dealings of the parties. A trust directly created for specific purposes in contrast to a constructive or resulting trust which arises by implication of law or the demands of equity. Trusts which are created by the direct and positive acts of the parties, by some writing, or deed, or will, or by words expressly or impliedly evincing an intention to create a trust. Concord v. Concord, 116 R.I. 323, 356 A.2d 487, 491.

Fixed trust. A non-discretionary trust in which the trustee may not exercise his own judgment.

Foreign situs trust. A trust which owes its existence to foreign law. It is treated for tax purposes as a non-resident alien individual.

Foreign trust. A trust created and administered under foreign law.

Grantor trust. A trust in which the grantor transfers or conveys property in trust for his own benefit alone or for himself and another.

Honorary trust. Trust for specific non-charitable purposes where there is no definite ascertainable beneficiary and hence unenforceable in the absence of statute.

Illusory trust. A trust arrangement which takes the form of a trust, but because of powers retained in the settlor has no real substance and in reality is not a completed trust. In re Herron's Estate, Fla.App., 237 So.2d 563, 566.

Imperfect trust. An executory trust (q.v.) see also Executed trust, above.

Implied trust. A trust raised or created by implication of law; a trust implied or presumed from circumstances. Constructive and resulting trusts are implied trusts because they arise by implication of law or by demands of equity. Such arise by operation of law when the circumstances of a transaction are such that the court finds it inequitable for the legal owner to enjoy the beneficial interest. Price v. State, 79 Ill.App.3d 143, 34 Ill.Dec. 690, 398 N.E.2d 365, 370.

Indestructible trust. A trust which may not be terminated or revoked. See Claffin trust.

Instrumental trust. See Ministerial trusts, below.

Insurance trust. A trust, the res of which consists of insurance policies or their proceeds. See also Insurance.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created by an instrument which becomes operative during the settlor's lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect on the death of the settlor. A Living trust (q.v.).

Involuntary trust. Involuntary or "constructive" trusts embrace all those instances in which a trust is raised by the doctrines of equity, for the purpose of working out justice in the most efficient manner, when there is no intention of the parties to create a trust relation. This class of trusts may usually be referred to fraud, either actual or constructive, as an essential element.

Irrevocable trust. Trust which may not be revoked after its creation as in the case of a deposit of money by one in the name of another as trustee for the benefit of a third person (beneficiary).

Land trust. See Land trust.

Limited trust. Trust created for a limited period of time in contrast to a perpetual trust.

Liquidation trust. Trust created for purpose of terminating a business or other undertaking and for distributing the res.

Living trust. An inter vivos trust created and operative during the lifetime of the settlor and commonly for benefit or support of another person.

Marital deduction trust. A testamentary trust created to take full advantage of the marital deduction (q.v.) provisions of the Int.Rev.Code.

Massachusetts or business trusts. See Business; Massachusetts trust; Trust estates as business companies.

Ministerial trusts. (Also called "instrumental trusts." ) Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; as to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding.

Naked trust. A dry or passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee, beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.

Nominee trust. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, pursuant to a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

Non-discretionary trust. A fixed trust under which the trustees may exercise no judgment or discretion at least as to distributions.

Oral trust. See Oral trust.

Passive trust. A trust as to which the trustee has no active duty to perform. "Passive trust," which equity court may terminate before it ends by its terms, is one in which the trustee does not have responsibilities or discretionary duties to perform. Nickson v. Filtrol Corp., Del.Ch., 262 A.2d 267, 271.

Perpetual trust. A trust which is to continue as long as the need for it continues as for the lifetime of a beneficiary or the term of a particular charity.

Personal trust. Trusts created by and for individuals and their families in contrast to business or charitable trusts.

Pour-over trust. A provision in a will in which the testator leaves the residue of his estate to a trustee of a living trust for purpose of that pour-over trust.

Power of appointment trust. Type of trust used to qualify property for the marital deduction. Property is left in trust for a surviving spouse. The trustee is required to distribute income to the spouse for life and the spouse is given an unqualified power to appoint the property to herself or to her estate.

Precatory trust. Where words employed in a will or other instrument do not amount to a positive command or to a distinct testamentary disposition, but are terms of entreaty, request, recommendation, or expectation, they are termed "precatory words," and from such words the law will raise a trust, called a "precatory trust," to carry out the wishes of the testator or grantor.

Private trust. One established or created for the benefit of a certain designated individual or individuals, or a known person or class of persons, clearly identified or capable of identification by the terms of the instrument creating the trust, as distinguished from trusts for public institutions or charitable uses.

Public trust. One constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description; public trusts and charitable trusts may be considered in general as synonymous expressions. See also Charitable trusts, above.

Q-TIP trust. See that title.

Real estate investment trust (REIT). Type of tax shelter wherein investors purchase certificates of ownership in trust which invests such funds in real estate and then distributes profits to investors.

Reciprocal trust. Trust which one person creates for the benefit of another who in turn creates a trust for the benefit of the first party.

Resulting trust. One that arises by implication of law, or by the operation and construction of equity, and which is established as consonant to the presumed intention of the parties as gathered from the nature of the transaction. It arises where the legal estate in property is disposed of, conveyed, or transferred, but the intent appears or is inferred from the terms of the disposition, or from the accompanying facts and circumstances, that the beneficial interest is not to go or be enjoyed with the legal title.

Revocable trust. A trust in which the settlor reserves the right to revoke.

Savings bank trust. A Totten trust (q.v.).

Secret trusts. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal promise by the legatee or devisee that he will hold it in trust for another person.

Shifting trust. An express trust which is so settled that it may operate in favor of beneficiaries additional to, or substituted for, those first named, upon specified contingencies.

Short term trust. Trust which by its terms is to be administered for a short period of time and then terminated.

Simple trust. A simple trust corresponds with the ancient use, and arises where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. A simple trust is a trust which provides that all of its income is required to be distributed currently, even if it is not in fact distributed, does not provide that any amounts are to be paid, permanently set aside, or used for charitable purposes; and does not distribute any amount other than current income.

Simple trusts are those that are not complex trusts. Such trusts may not have a charitable beneficiary, accumulate income, nor distribute corpus.

Special trust. One in which a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in case of a simple trust, a mere passive depository of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts.

Special trusts have been divided into (1) ministerial (or instrumental) and (2) discretionary. The former, such as demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; the latter, such as cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment.
Spendthrift trust. See Spendthrift trust.

Split-interest trust. Type of charitable trust commonly consisting of a life estate to an individual and a remainder to a charity. The Tax Reform Act of 1969 has placed restrictions on this type of trust.

Sprinkling trust. When a trustee has the discretion to either distribute or accumulate the entity accounting income of the trust and to distribute it among the trust’s income beneficiaries in varying magnitudes, a sprinkling trust exists. The trustee can “sprinkle” the income of the trust.

Support trust. A trust in which the trustee has the power to pay the beneficiary only so much of the trust income as is necessary for the beneficiary’s support, education and maintenance. See also Spendthrift trust, above.

Tentative trust. See Totten trust, below.

Testamentary trust. Trust created within a will and executed with the formalities required of a will in contrast to an inter vivos trust which is created by the grantor during his lifetime. A trust which does not take effect until the death of the settlor. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trust Act.

Totten trust. Device used to pass property in bank account after depositor’s death to designated person through vehicle of trust rather than through process of probate. Reidy v. Almich, 4 Ariz.App. 144, 418 P.2d 390, 393. It is a tentative trust revocable at will until the depositor dies or completes the gift in his lifetime by some unequivocal act or declaration such as delivery of the passbook or notice to the beneficiary. If the depositor dies before the beneficiary without revocation or some decisive act or declaration of disaffirmance the presumption arises that an absolute trust was created as to the balance on hand at the death of the depositor.

Transgressive trust. A name sometimes applied to a trust which transgresses or violates the rule against perpetuities.

Trust allotments. Allotments to Indians, in which a certificate or trust patent is issued declaring that the United States will hold the land for a designated period in trust for the allottee. U. S. v. Bowling, 256 U.S. 484, 41 S.Ct. 561, 562, 65 L.Ed. 1054.

Trust certificate. An obligation issued to finance railroad equipment and by which title to the equipment is held by trustees as security for repayment of the money invested.

Trust company. A corporation formed for the purpose of taking, executing, and administering all such trusts as may be lawfully committed to it, and acting as testamentary trustee, executor, guardian, etc. To these functions are sometimes (but not necessarily) added the business of acting as fiscal agent for corporations, attending to the registration and transfer of their stock and bonds, serving as trustee for their bond or mortgage creditors, engaging in fiduciary investment and estate planning functions, and transacting a general banking and loan business. A bank which is authorized to serve in fiduciary capacity as executor, administrator, etc. Such companies are commonly associated or combined with commercial banks.

Trust deed. The document by which one creates a trust. An indenture by which property is transferred to a trust. May also include a deed from the trustees. In some states, a mortgage deed.

A species of mortgage given to a trustee for the purpose of securing a numerous class of creditors, as the bondholders of a railroad corporation, with power to foreclose and sell on failure of the payment of their bonds, notes, or other claims. In some of the states, a trust deed or deed of trust is a security resembling a mortgage, being a conveyance of lands to trustees to secure the payment of a debt, with a power of sale upon default, and upon a trustee to apply the net proceeds to paying the debt and to turn over the surplus to the grantor.

A trust deed on real estate as security for a bond issue is, in effect, a mortgage on property executed by the mortgagor to a third person as trustee to hold as security for the mortgage debt as evidenced by the bonds, for the benefit of the purchasers of the bonds as lenders. See also Deed (Deed of trust); Mortgage.

Trust deposit. Where money or property is deposited to be kept intact and not commingled with other funds or property of bank and is to be returned in kind to depositor or devoted to particular purpose or requirement of depositor or payment of particular debts or obligations of depositor. Also called special deposit. See also Deposit.

Trust estate. This term may mean either the estate of the trustee—that is, the legal title—or the estate of the beneficiary, or the corpus of the property which is the subject of the trust.

Trust ex delicto. See Trust ex maleficio, below.

Trust ex maleficio. Where actual fraud is practiced in acquiring legal title, the arising trust is referred to as a “trust ex maleficio.” Andres v. Andres, 1 Ark.App. 75, 613 S.W.2d 404, 407.

A “constructive trust,” otherwise known as “trust ex maleficio,” a “trust ex delicto,” a “trust de son tort,” an “involuntary trust” or an “implied trust” is a trust by operation of law which arises against one who, by fraud, actual or constructive, by duress or abuse of confidence, by commission of a wrong or by any form of unconscionable conduct, artifice, concealment or questionable means and against good conscience, either has obtained or holds right to property which he ought not in equity and good conscience hold and enjoy. Briggs v. Richardson, App., 288 S.C. 537, 343 S.E.2d 653, 654. See also Constructive trust, above.

Trust fund. A fund held by a trustee for the specific purposes of the trust; in a more general sense, a fund which, legally or equitably, is subject to be devoted to a particular purpose and cannot or should not be diverted.
TRUST

therefrom. In this sense it is often said that the assets of a corporation are a "trust fund" for the payment of its debts. See also Trust fund.

Trust fund doctrine. In substance, where corporation transfers all its assets with a view to going out of business and nothing is left with which to pay debts, transferee is charged with notice of the circumstances of the transaction, and takes the assets subject to an equitable lien for the unpaid debts of the transferring company; the property of a corporation being a fund subject to be first applied to the payment of debts. Meikle v. Export Lumber Co., C.C.A. Or., 67 F.2d 301, 304.

Under such doctrine, if insolvent corporation's assets are distributed among its stockholders before its debts are paid, each stockholder is liable to creditors for full amount received by him. Scott v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.8, 117 F.2d 36, 39.

See Common trust fund; Trust fund; Trust fund theory or doctrine.

Trust in invitum. A constructive trust imposed by equity, contrary to the trustee's intention and will, upon property in his hands.

Trust legacy. See Legacy.

Trust receipt. See Trust receipt.

Unitrust. A unitrust is a trust from which the trustee is required, at least annually, to pay a fixed percentage which is not less than five percent of the net fair market value of the trust assets, valued annually, to one or more beneficiaries, at least one of which is not a charity, for life or for a term of years, with an irrevocable remainder interest to be held for the benefit of, or paid over to, charity. A qualified unitrust must comply with the basic statutory requirements of I.R.C. § 664.

Vertical trust. In antitrust law, a combination which gathers together under a single ownership a number of businesses or plants engaged in successive stages of production or marketing.

Voluntary trust. An obligation arising out of a personal confidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another, as distinguished from an "involuntary" trust, which is created by operation of law. According to another use of the term, "voluntary" trusts are such as are made in favor of a volunteer, that is, a person who gives nothing in exchange for the trust, but receives it as a pure gift; and in this use the term is distinguished from "trusts for value," the latter being such as are in favor of purchasers, mortgagees, etc. A "voluntary trust" is an equitable gift, and in order to be enforceable by the beneficiaries must be complete. The difference between a "gift inter vivos" and a "voluntary trust" is that, in a gift, the thing itself with title passes to the donee, while, in a voluntary trust, the actual title passes to a cestui que trust while the legal title is retained by the settlor, to be held by him for the purposes of the trust or is by the settlor transferred to another to hold for the purposes of the trust.

Voting trust. A trust which holds the voting rights to stock in a corporation. It is a useful device when a majority of the shareholders in a corporation cannot agree on corporate policy. See also Voting trust.

Trustee. Person holding property in trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 3(3). The person appointed, or required by law, to execute a trust. One in whom an estate, interest, or power is vested, under an express or implied agreement to administer or exercise it for the benefit or to the use of another. One who holds legal title to property "in trust" for the benefit of another person (beneficiary) and who must carry out specific duties with regard to the property. The trustee owes a fiduciary duty to the beneficiary. Reinecke v. Smith, Ill., 289 U.S. 172, 53 S.Ct. 570, 77 L.Ed. 1109.

See also Bare trustee.

Bankruptcy trustee. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy trustee).

Bond offering. The bondholders' representative in a public debt offering. The trustee is responsible for monitoring the borrower's compliance with the terms of the indenture.

Joint trustees. Two or more persons who are intrusted with property for the benefit of one or more others.

Judicial trustee. One appointed by a decree of court to execute a trust, as distinguished from one appointed by the instrument creating the trust.

Testamentary trustee. A trustee appointed by or acting under a will; one appointed to carry out a trust created by a will. The term does not ordinarily include an executor or an administrator with the will annexed, or a guardian, except when they act in the execution of a trust created by the will and which is separable from their functions as executors, etc.

Trustee ad litem. Trustee appointed by a court in contrast to a trustee selected by a settlor or executor.

Trustee de son tort. Person who is treated as a trustee because of his wrongdoing with respect to property entrusted to him or over which he exercised authority which he lacked.

Trustee ex malo ficio. A person who, being guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct, is held by equity to the duty and liability of a trustee, in relation to the subject-matter, to prevent him from profiting by his own wrong. See Trust (Trust ex malo ficio).

Trustee in bankruptcy. A person in whom the property of a debtor is vested in trust for the creditors. See Bankruptcy Code, § 321 et seq.; 28 U.S.C.A. § 581 et seq.

Trustee process. The name given, in certain New England states, to the process of garnishment or foreign attachment. See Garnishment; Process.

Unit investment trust. A trust established whereby funds are pooled and invested in income-producing securities such as bonds, preferred stock, etc. Units of the trust are sold to investors who maintain an interest in the trust in proportion to their investment.
Trusteeship. Fiduciary relationship between trustee and beneficiary wherein trustee holds title to property for the benefit of the beneficiary.

Trust estates as business companies. A practice originating in Massachusetts of vesting a business or certain real estate in a group of trustees, who manage it for the benefit of the beneficial owners; the ownership of the latter is evidenced by negotiable (or transferable) shares. The trustees are elected by the shareholders, or, in case of a vacancy, by the board of trustees. Provision is made in the agreement and declaration of trust to the effect that when new trustees are elected, the trust estate shall vest in them without further conveyance. The declaration of trust specifies the powers of the trustees. They have a common seal; the board is organized with the usual officers of a board of trustees; it is governed by by-laws; the officers have the usual powers of like corporate officers; so far as practicable, the trustees in their collective capacity, are to carry on the business under a specified name. The trustees may also hold shares as beneficiaries. Provision may be made for the alteration or amendment of the agreement or declaration in a specified manner. In Eliot v. Freeman, 220 U.S. 178, 31 S.Ct. 360, 55 L.Ed. 424, it was held that such a trust was not within the corporation tax provisions of the tariff act of Aug. 5, 1909. See also Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, 220 U.S. 187, 31 S.Ct. 361, 55 L.Ed. 428. See also Massachusetts trust.

Trust fund. Money or property set aside as a trust for the benefit of another and held by a trustee. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Common Trust Fund Act. See also Common trust fund; Trust (Trust fund; Trust fund doctrine); Trust fund theory or doctrine.

Trust fund theory or doctrine. Generic term used in many contexts to describe the imposition of fiduciary obligations on persons who control money or property of another under certain circumstances. A creature of equity which operates to treat officers, directors, or majority shareholders of a corporation as holding in trust for the benefit of creditors such corporate assets as have been improperly appropriated. Whisenhunt v. Park Lane Corp., D.C.Tex., 418 F.Supp. 1096, 1098. See also Common trust fund; Trust (Trust fund; Trust fund doctrine).

Trust indenture. The document which contains the terms and conditions which govern the conduct of the trustee and the rights of the beneficiaries. Commonly used when a corporation floats bonds. See Indenture.

Trust Indenture Act. Federal Act (1939) designed to protect investors in certain types of bonds by requiring that the trust indenture be approved by the SEC and include certain protective clauses and exclude certain exculpatory clauses, and that trustees be independent of the issuing company. 15 U.S.C.A. § 77aaa et seq. See also Indenture.

Trust instrument. The formal document which creates the trust and contains the powers of the trustees and the rights of the beneficiaries. It may be a deed in trust or a formal declaration of trust. See also Trust (Trust deed).

Trutaris /træsta/. In old European law, trust; faith; confidence; fidelity.

Trust officer. The official or officer in a trust company who has direct charge of funds administered by it in its capacity as trustee.

Trustor. One who creates a trust. Also called settlor.

Trust property. The property which is the subject matter of the trust. The trust res (q.v.). See also Principal.

Trust receipt. A pre-U.C.C. security device now governed by Article 9 of the Code. A receipt stating that the wholesale buyer has possession of the goods for the benefit of the financier. Today there usually must be a security agreement coupled with the filing of a financing statement. Method of financing commercial transactions by means of which title passes directly from manufacturer or seller to banker or lender who as owner delivers goods to dealer in whose behalf he is acting secondarily, and to whom title goes ultimately when primary right of banker or lender has been satisfied. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Bosse, 76 Idaho 409, 283 P.2d 937, 938.

Trust res. The property of which the trust consists. It may be real or personal and the trustee has legal title. See also Principal.

Trust territory. A territory or colony placed under the administration of a country by the United Nations.

Trusty. A prisoner who, because of good conduct, is given some measure of freedom in and around the prison.

Truth. There are three conceptions as to what constitutes "truth": agreement of thought and reality; eventual verification; and consistency of thought with itself. For "Fact" and "truth" distinguished, see Fact.

Truth-in-Lending Act. The purpose of the Truth-in-Lending Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1601 et seq.) is to assure that every customer who has need for consumer credit is given meaningful information with respect to the cost of that credit. In most cases the credit cost must be expressed in the dollar amount of finance charges, and as an annual percentage rate computed on the unpaid balance of the amount financed. Other relevant credit information must also be disclosed so that the customer may compare the various credit terms available to him from different sources and avoid the uninformed use of credit. The Act further provides a customer the right, in certain circumstances, to cancel a credit transaction which involves a lien on his residence. The intent of the Act is to promote the informed use of consumer credit. Adiel v. Chase Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, C.A.Fla., 810 F.2d 1051, 1054. The requirements of the Act are implemented by Regulation Z of the Federal Reserve Board, 12 CFR pt. 226. Many states have their own Truth-in-Lending Acts, e.g., Mass.G.L. ch. 140D. See also Consumer Credit Protection Act; Regulation Z; Uniform Consumer Credit Code.
TRY. To examine judicially. To examine and investigate a controversy, by the legal method called “trial,” for the purpose of determining the issues it involves.

Tsar. The less common spelling of “czar” (q.v.).

Tuas res tibi habeto /t(y)úwás ríy tìbey hóbìytow/. Lat. Have or take your things to yourself. The form of words by which, according to the old Roman law, a man divorced his wife.

Tub. In mercantile law, a measure containing sixty pounds of tea, and from fifty-six to eighty-six pounds of camphor.

Tub-man. In English law, a barrister who has a pre-audience in the Court of Exchequer, and also one who has a particular place in court. Such ceased to exist in 1873. See also Postman.

Tuchas /túwchas/. In Spanish law, objections or exceptions to witnesses.

Tucker Act. The Tucker Act, which was passed in 1887, was a response by Congress to the inadequacies of the original Court of Claims legislation. By this act, the jurisdiction of the court was extended to include claims founded upon the Constitution, act of Congress, or executive department regulation, as well as claims for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort, in addition to all claims within the scope of the earlier statutes. The present provisions of the Tucker Act are embodied in 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(a)(2), 1491. See also Claims Court, U.S.; Court of Claims.

Tuerto /tarn/. In English law, this phrase means turned to a right. In English law, this phrase means that a person whose estate is divested by usurpation cannot expel the possessor by mere entry, but must have recourse to an action, either possessory or driotual.

Turning State’s evidence. See State’s evidence.

Turnkey. A person, under the superintendence of a jailer, who has the charge of the keys of the prison, for the purpose of opening and fastening the doors.

Turn-key contract. Project in which all owner need do is “turn the key” in the lock to open the building with nothing remaining to be done and all risks to be assumed by contractor. Glassman Const. Co., Inc. v. Maryland City Plaza, Inc., D.C.Md., 371 F.Supp. 1154, 1159. Term used in building trade to designate those contracts in which builder agrees to complete work of building and installation to point of readiness for occupancy. It ordinarily means that builder will complete work to certain specified point, such as building a complete house ready for occupancy as a dwelling, and that builder agrees to assume all risk. Gantt v. Van der Hoek, 251 S.C. 307, 162 S.E.2d 267, 270.

In oil drilling industry a job wherein driller of oil well undertakes to furnish everything and does all work required to complete well, place it on production, and turn it over ready to turn the key and start oil running into tanks. Retsal Drilling Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Tex., 127 F.2d 355, 357. A turn-key contract to drill a well involves the testing of the formation contemplated by the parties and completion of a producing well or its abandonment as a dry hole, all done for an agreed-upon total consideration, putting the risk of rising costs, well trouble, weather, and the like upon the driller, but it does not, in the absence of a clear expression, require the driller to guarantee a producing well. Totah Drilling Co. v. Abraham, 64 N.M. 380, 328 P.2d 1083, 1089.

Turbary /túbariy/. Turbary, or common of turbary, is the right or liberty of digging turf upon another man’s ground.

Turf and twig. A piece of turf, or a twig or a bough, were delivered by the feoffer to the feoffee in making livery of seisin. 2 Bl.Comm. 315.

Turn, or tourn /tärn/. In English law, the great court of the county, as the old county court was the court-baron. Of this the sheriff was judge, and the court was incident to his office; wherefore it was called the sheriff’s tourn; and it had its name originally from the sheriff making a turn of circuit about his shire, and holding this court in each respective hundred.

Turncoat witness. A witness whose testimony was expected to be favorable but who turns around and becomes an adverse witness. See also Adverse witness.

Turned to a right. In English law, this phrase means that a person whose estate is divested by usurpation cannot expel the possessor by mere entry, but must have recourse to an action, either possessory or driotual.

Turntable doctrine. Also termed “attractive nuisance” doctrine. This doctrine requires the owner of premises not to attract or lure children into unsuspected danger or great bodily harm, by keeping thereon attractive machinery or dangerous instrumentalities in an exposed and unguarded condition, and where injuries have been received by a child so enticed the entry is not regarded as unlawful, and does not necessarily preclude a recovery of damages; the attractiveness of the machine or structure amounting to an implied invitation to enter. It imposes a liability on a property owner for injuries to a child of tender years, resulting from something on his premises that can be operated by such a child and made dangerous by him, and which is attractive to him and calculated to induce him to use it, where he fails to protect the thing so that a child of tender years cannot be hurt by it.

Doctrine is that who maintains or creates upon his premises or upon the premises of another in any public place an instrumentality or condition which may reasonably be expected to attract children of tender years and to constitute a danger to them is under duty to take the precautions that a reasonably prudent person would take under similar circumstance, to prevent injury to such children. Schock v. Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows, 5 Wash.2d 599, 105 P.2d 838, 843.

The dangerous and alluring qualities of a railroad turntable gave the "attractive nuisance rule" the name of "Turntable Doctrine." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 292 Ky. 120, 166 S.W.2d 43, 46.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine.

Turpis /tárps/. Lat. In the civil law, base; mean; vile; disgraceful; infamous; unlawful. Applied both to things and persons.

Turpis causa /tárps kóza/. A base cause; a vile or immoral consideration; a consideration which, on account of its immorality, is not allowed by law to be sufficient either to support a contract or found an action; e.g., future illicit intercourse.

Turpis contractus /tárps kóntrákts/. An immoral or iniquitous contract.

Turpis est pars quo non convenit cum suo toto /tárps èst párz kwíj nón kánvínzn kãm s(y)úwów tów-tów/. The part which does not agree with its whole is of mean account [entitled to small or no consideration].

Turpitude /tárps(y)úwéd/. In its ordinary sense, inherent baseness or vileness of principle or action; shameful wickedness; depravity. In its legal sense, everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. An action showing gross depravity. Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Russell, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1079, 1084.

Moral turpitude. A term of frequent occurrence in statutes, especially those providing that a witness' conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude may be shown as tending to impeach his credibility. In general, it means neither more nor less than "turpitude," i.e., anything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals. It is also commonly defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow man or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. Although a vague term, it implies something immoral in itself, regardless of its being punishable by law. Thus excluding unintentional wrong, or an improper act done without unlawful or improper intent. It is also said to be restricted to the gravest offenses, consisting of felonies, infamous crimes, and those that are malum in se and disclose a depraved mind. Bartos v. United States District Court for District of Nebraska, C.C.A.Neb., 19 F.2d 722, 724. See also Moral turpitude.

Turpitude /tárps(y)úwéd/. Lat. Baseness; infamy; immorality; turpitude.

Tuta est custodia que sibimet creditur /t(y)úwta èst kástówid(i)ýa kwíj sibaymét krédátor/. That guardianship is secure which is intrusted to itself alone.

Tutela /t(y)úwtílya/. Lat. In the civil law, tutelage; that species of guardianship which continued to the age of puberty; the guardian being called "tutor," and the ward, "pupillus." A power given by the civil law over a free person to defend him when by reason of his age he is unable to defend himself. A child under the power of his father was not subject to tutelage, because not a free person, caput liberum.

Tutela actio /t(y)úwtílya áksh(i)ýow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action of tutelage; an action which lay for a ward or pupil, on the termination of tutelage, against the tutor or guardian, to compel an account.

Tutelage /t(y)úwtálaj/. Guardianship; state of being under a guardian. See Tutela.

Tutela legitima /t(y)úwtílya lájítóma/. Legal tutelage; tutelage created by act of law, as where none had been created by testament.

Tutelam reddere /t(y)úwtílyam réddóri/. Lat. In the civil law, to render an account of tutelage. Tutelam reposcere, to demand an account of tutelage.

Tutela testamentaria /t(y)úwtílya téštamentár(i)ýya/. Testamentary tutelage or guardianship; that kind of tutelage which was created by will.

Tuteur. In French law, a kind of guardian.

Tuteur officieux. A person over fifty years of age may be appointed a tutor of this sort to a child over fifteen years of age, with the consent of the parents of such child, or, in their default, the in loco parentis duties which such a tutor becomes subject to are analogous to those in English law of a person who puts himself in loco parentis to any one.

Tuteur subrogé. The title of a second guardian appointed for an infant under guardianship. His functions are exercised in case the interests of the infant and his principal guardian conflict.

Tutius erratur ex parte mitiore /t(y)úwsh(i)ýas éhřéytař èks pártiy mishiyórýi/. It is safer to err on the gentler side [or on the side of mercy].

Tutius semper est errare acquietando, quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordiae quam ex parte justitiae /t(y)úwsh(i)ýas sémper èst éhřéyri akwáystándów, kwéxm in pywuniýéndów, èks pártiy mízárskórđiyi kwéxm èks pártiy jáštšiyiy/. It is always safer to err in acquitting than punishing, on the side of mercy than on the side of justice.

In the civil law, this term corresponds nearly to "guardian" (i.e., a person appointed to have the care of the person of a minor and the administration of his estate), except that the guardian of a minor who has passed a certain age is called "curator," and has powers and duties differing somewhat from those of a tutor.

Tutor alienus /tyúwtor ēyliyiynos/. In English law, the name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen, and takes the profits. He may be called to an account by the infant and be charged as guardian in socage.

Tutor propin /tyúwtar prôwpriyys/. The name given in old English law to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

Tutorship. The office and power of a tutor. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. There are four sorts of tutorships: Tutorship by nature; tutorship by will; tutorship by the effect of the law; tutorship by the appointment of the judge. Civ.Code La. art. 247.

Tutorship by nature. Upon the death of either parent, the tutorship of minor children belongs of right to the other. Upon divorce or judicial separation from bed and board of parents, the tutorship of each minor child belongs of right to the parent under whose care he or she has been placed or to whose care he or she has been entrusted; however, if the parents are awarded joint custody of a minor child, then the cotutorship of the minor child shall belong to both parents with equal authority, privileges, and responsibilities, unless modified by order of the court or by an agreement of the parents, approved by the court awarding joint custody. In the event of the death of a parent to whom joint custody had been awarded, the tutorship of the minor children of the deceased belongs of right to the surviving parent. All those cases are called tutorship by nature. Civ.Code La. art. 250.

Tutorship by will. The right of appointing a tutor, whether a relation or a stranger, belongs exclusively to the father or mother dying last. This is called "tutorship by will," because generally it is given by testament; but it may likewise be given by any declaration by the surviving father or mother, or the parent who is the curator of the other spouse, executed before a notary and two witnesses. Civ.Code La. art. 237.

Tutrix /tyúwrtryiks/. A female tutor.

T.V.A. Tennessee Valley Authority.

Twa night gest /tûwnayt gést/. In Saxon law, a guest on the second night. By the laws of Edward the Confessor it was provided that a man who lodged at an inn, or at the house of another, should be considered, on the first night of his being there, a stranger (uncuth); on the second night, a guest; on the third night, a member of the family. This had reference to the responsibility of the host or entertainer for offenses committed by the guest.

Twelfth Amendment. The highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1200s. If any injury were done to such persons, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth.

Twelfth Amendment. Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1804) which altered the method of voting in presidential elections by requiring each elector to vote for President and Vice President on separate ballots instead of voting for two persons for President on single ballot as before.

Twelve-day writ. A writ issued under the English St. 18 & 19 Vict., c. 67, for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes, abolished by rule of court in 1880.

Twelvemonth /twélvminθ/. This term (in the singular number), includes all the year; but twelve months are to be computed according to twenty-eight days for every month.

Twelve-month bond. Twelve-month bond, under statute effective Jan. 20, 1837 (Hartley's Dig. art. 1277), had a double character, first as an obligation known to the Spanish civil law, and second, as a summary statutory judgment, with the force and effect of any other judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; it being also a consent judgment.

Twelve Tables. The earliest statute or code of Roman law, framed by a commission of ten men, B.C. 450, upon the return of a commission of three who had been sent abroad to study foreign laws and institutions. The Twelve Tables consisted partly of laws transcribed from the institutions of other nations, partly of such as were altered and accommodated to the manners of the Romans, partly of new provisions, and mainly, perhaps, of laws and usages under their ancient kings. They formed the source and foundation for the whole later development of Roman jurisprudence. They exist now only in fragmentary form. See 1 Kent.Comm. 520. These laws were substantially a codification, and not merely an incorporation, of the customary law of the people. There were Greek elements in them, but still they were essentially Roman.

Twentieth Amendment. The so-called lame duck Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (1933) which changed the beginning of Presidential and Vice-Presidential terms from March 4 to January 20, and of Congressional terms from March 4 to January 3, thereby eliminating the short session of Congress which had formerly convened early in December in even-numbered years, and in which a number of Congressmen sat who had not been re-elected to office. The Amendment also provides for Presidential succession under certain circumstances.
Twenty-Fifth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution (1967) which provides for filling vacancy in offices of President and Vice-President on the death, removal, or resignation of the office holders.

Twenty-First Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution (1933) which repealed Prohibition Amendment (18th) but prohibited the importation of intoxicating beverages into any State where delivery or use of such beverages violated the State's laws.

Twenty-Fourth Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution (1964) which prohibits federal or State denial of right to vote in any primary or other election for federal elective officers because of the prospective voter's failure to pay any poll tax or other tax. See Poll-tax.

Twenty-Second Amendment. Amendment to the Constitution (1951) which prevents any person from being elected President more than twice, or, if he has succeeded to the Presidency before the midpoint of his predecessor's term, from being elected more than once.

Twenty-Sixth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution (1971) which established voting age at 18.

Tying arrangement. A condition imposed by a seller or lessor that a buyer or lessee may obtain a desired product (the "tying" product) only if it also agrees to take an additional product (the "tied" product), which may or may not be desired. Some tying arrangements violate either § 3 of the Clayton Act or § 1 of the Sherman Act. See also Reciprocal dealing arrangement; Tied product.

Variable proportion tying arrangement. A tying arrangement in which different buyers use different amounts of the tied product in proportion to their use of the tying product. For example, an arrangement in which the lessor of photocopy machines requires all lessees to purchase their photocopying paper from the lessor. Commonly used by lessors as price discrimination devices.

Tyrant. A despot; a sovereign or ruler, legitimate or otherwise, who uses his power unjustly and arbitrarily, to the oppression of his subjects.

Tyranny. Arbitrary or despotic government; the severe and autocratic exercise of sovereign power, either vested constitutionally in one ruler, or usurped by him by breaking down the division and distribution of governmental powers.

Tymbrella. In old English law, a tumbrel, castigatory, or ducking stool, anciently used as an instrument of punishment for common scolds.

Tzung. A mount or hill.

Tythe. Company of ten; a district; a tenth part. See Tithing.

TZAR /tsar/zár/. The emperor and empress of Russia. See Czar.
U.B. An abbreviation for "Upper Bench."

Uberrima fides /yuwbéhrma fáidiyz/. Lat. The most abundant good faith; absolute and perfect candor or openness and honesty; however slight. A phrase used to express the perfect good faith, concealing nothing, with which a contract must be made; for example, in the case of insurance, the insured must observe the most perfect good faith towards the insurer. Gulfstream Cargo, Ltd. v. Reliance Ins. Co., C.A.Fla., 409 F.2d 974, 981. Contracts of life insurance are said to be "uberrima fides" when any material misrepresentation or concealment is fatal to them.

Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest /yuwbay selskwgd kgnsiydgtsr, kgnsiydgtgr et id sayniy kwow riyz ipsi lón pówtst/.

When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing granted cannot exist.

Ubi aliquid impeditur propter unum, eo remoto, tollitur impedimentum /yuwbay selakwad impiydatar propter yuwnam, iyow rmówwtow, tôistar impédaméntow/. Where anything is impeded by one single cause, if that be removed, the impediment is removed.

Ubi cessat remedium ordinarium, ibi decurrit ad extraordinarium /yuwbay sesat ramiyd(i)yyam, órdanéryam, áybay dakhârstar âd ékstrâordanéryam/. Where the ordinary remedy fails, recourse must be had to an extraordinary one.

Ubi culpa est, ibi pecna subsesse debet /yuwbay kálpá èst, áybay píyánsá sábééyí débét/. Where the crime is committed, there ought the punishment to be undergone.

Ubicunque est injuria, ibi damnum sequitur /yuwbaykaqkwiy est injuriya, aybay dsemnam sek-watar/. Wherever there is a wrong, there damage follows.

Ubi damna dantur, victus victori in expensis condemnari debet /yuwbay dámno dántar viktas vitkýaray in akspénsas kondánmernary débót/. Where damages are given, the vanquished party ought to be condemned in costs to the victor.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi eadem lex; et de similibus idem est judicium /yuwbay iyéydan réysh(i)yyów, áybay iyéydam léks; ét diý similábás áydam ét juwdish(i)yyám/. Where the same reason exists, there the same law prevails; and, of things similar, the judgment is similar. Where there is the same law, and the same judgment should be rendered on the same state of facts.

Ubi est forum, ibi ergo est jus /yuwbay èst fóram, áybay árgow èst jás/. The law of the forum governs.

Ubi est specialis, et ratio generalis generaliter accipienda est /yuwbay èst speshiyéylas, ét réysh(i)yyow jénaréylas jénaréylstar aksipiýéndë ëst/. See Ubi lex est specialis, etc.

Ubi et dantis et accipientis turpitudo versatur, non posses repeti dicimus; quotiens autem accipientis turpitudo versatur, repeti posse /yuwbay et dántas ét dántas ét aksipiýéntas târpâtyuwbaydow vârséytar, non pósíy répétay díâsâs; kwówshanz ótam aksipiýéntas târpâtyuwbaydow vârséytar, répétay pósíy/.

Where there is turpitude on the part of both giver and receiver, we say it cannot be recovered back; but as often as the turpitude is on the side of the receiver [alone] it can be recovered back.

Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla /yuwbay fékamt nálam, áybay fórsh(i)yó nála/. Where there is no principal fact, there can be no accessory. Where there is no act, there can be no force.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium /yuwbay jás, áybay ramiyd(i)yyam/. Where there is a right, there is a remedy. It is said that the rule of primitive law was the reverse: Where there is a remedy, there is a right.

Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum /yuwbay jás insârdam, áybay jás nálam/. Where the law is uncertain, there is no law.

Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima /yuwbay leks selakwam ków(j)jat osténdaryi kózam, naésíy est kwód kóza sit jásé ét lajtâma/. Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and lawful.

Ubi lex est specialis, et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est /yuwbay léks èst speshiyéylas, ét réysh(i)yyow jénaréylas aksipiýéndë ëst/. When the law is special, and the reason of it general, it ought to be taken as being general. When the reason for a particular legislative act and acts of the same general character is the same, they should have the same effect. Guile v. La Crosse Gas & Electric Co., 145 Wis. 157, 130 N.W. 234, 241.

Ubi lex non distinguunt, nec nos distinguere debemus /yuwbay léks nón dástíngwòt, nèk nóws dástíngwary dáblymás/. Where the law does not distinguish, neither ought we to distinguish.
ubi major pars est, ibi totum /yübwbay möjyarp pärs äst, äbyäb täytom/. where the greater part is, there the whole is. that is, majorities govern.

ubi matrimonium, ibi dos /yübwbay mötramöwön(i)yam, äbyäb döw/. where there is marriage, there is dower.

ubi non adest norma legis, omnia quasi pro suspectis habenda sunt /yübwbay nön ädest nórmô lijâs, önmiy(i)owa kywýsäf prôw sâspëktâs habénda sânt/. when the law fails to serve as a rule, almost everything ought to be suspected.

ubi non est annua renovatio, ibi decima non debent solvi /yübwbay nön èst ânyuwo rësnâvyësh(y)ow, äbyäb dësamiy nön dëbant sölväy/. where there is no annual renovation, there tithes ought not to be paid.

ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas /yübwbay nön èst kàntëndäy ôkôrâtës, äbyäb nön èst paränday nàsëstâs/. where there is no authority for establishing a rule, there is no necessity of obeying it.

ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio judicis, vel procedendum ad similia /yübwbay nön èst ârëtiyôw jyûwdsas, vël prôwswadëndam âd samîliy(i)ya/. where there is no direct law, the opinion of the judge is to be taken, or references to be made to similar cases.

ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio, quoad mundum /yübwbay nön èst lëks, äbyäb nön èst trënsgrësh(i)yow, kôwswad mândam/. where there is no law, there is no transgression, so far as relates to the world.

ubi non est manifesta injustitia, judices habentur pro bonis viris, et judicatum pro veritate /yübwbay nön èst mënsäfëstët jyûstëtsh(i)ya, jyûwdsiyz habëntar prôw bôwsw víras, ôt jyûwdskëytam prôw vëhrûstëtit/. where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth.

ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius /yübwbay nön èst prënsëpëylas, nön pôwert èsîy âksëssëtîr(y)as/. where there is no principal, there cannot be an accessory.

ubi nulla est conjectura quaet ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica, sed populiari ex usu /yübwbay nälâ èst kônjekt(y)ûra kwîly d(y)ûwköt ëyli(i)yow, várbo intëläjënda ñánt èks prëpräytëtiyô, nön grëmëtâka, sëd pôyâlëray èks yûwsw-yw/. where there is nothing to call for a different construction, [the] words [of an instrument] are to be understood, not according to their strict grammatical meaning, but according to their popular and ordinary sense.

ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos /yübwbay nälâm mötramöwön(i)ylan, äbyäb nälâ döw/. where there is no marriage, there is no dower.

ubi periculum, ibi et lucrum collocatur /yübwbay përfik(y)alâm, äbyäb èt l(y)ûwktram kôlakëytar/. he at whose risk a thing is, should receive the profits arising from it.

ubi pugnans inter se in testamento juberentur, neutrum ratum est /yübwbay pûgnâñsh(i)yôs intar sîl in teštëmtôw jûwbrëntar, n(y)yûwtrâm rëytam äst/. where repugnant or inconsistent directions are contained in a will, neither is valid.

ubi quid generaliter conceditur ineunt haec exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jûs fasque /yübwbay kwid jërënyâlytâr kanîlyâyât inest hîyôk âksëpësh(y)ow, sây nön âšikswiât sît kôntôr jës fësëkwiy/. where a thing is conceded generally [or granted in general terms], this exception is implied: that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right.

ubi quis delinquit, ibi punietur /yübwbay kwâs dâlînkwât, äbyäb pyûwniyîytar/. where a man offends, there he shall be punished. in cases of felony, the trial shall be always by the common law in the same place where the offense was, and shall not be supposed in any other place.

ubi supra /yübwbay s(y)ûwpra/. lat. where above mentioned.

ubi verba conjuncta non sunt sufficient alterutrum esse factum /yübwbay vårba kânjäktô nön sînt sëfësët Ôltar(y)ûwtrôm èsîy fëktam/. where words are not joined, it is enough if one or other be complied with. where words are used disjunctively, it is sufficient that either one of the things enumerated be performed.

Ullage /ələj/. In commercial law, the amount wanting when a cask, on being gauged, is found not to be completely full.

Ulna ferrea /əlˈnə fərˈriə/. L. Lat. In old English law, the iron ell; the standard ell of iron, kept in the exchequer for the rule of measure.

Ulnage /əlnəj/. Alnage. See Alnager.

Ulterior. Beyond what is manifest, seen or avowed, as Employers Ins. Ass’n v. Reed, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 858, 862.

One that is essential to the right of action or matter of defense, and the trial court is under the duty of submitting only ultimate or controlling issues. Perales v. Braslaw’s Furniture Co., Tex.Civ.App., 493 S.W.2d 638, 640.

Ultimate issue. That question which must finally be answered as, for example, the defendant’s negligence is the ultimate issue in a personal injury action. See also Ultimate facts.

Ultimatum /əltəmətəm/. Lat. The last. The final and ultimate proposition made in negotiating a treaty, a contract, or the like. The word also means the result of a negotiation, and it comprises the final determination of a party concerned in the matter in dispute.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam /əltəma vaNTəntəs testətərəs əst pərəmplənda səkəndəm vərəm inTentsiyəwənəm səyəwəm/. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Ultimum supplicium /əltəməm sapplɪʃiəm/. Lat. The last or extreme punishment; the extremity of punishment; the punishment of death. 4 Bl.Comm. 17.

Ultimum supplicium esse mortem solam interpretamur /əltəməm sapplɪʃiəm əsə mortəm səwəlm əntəprətəmərmər/. The extremest punishment we consider to be death alone.

Ultimus haeres /əltəməs hərəs/. Lat. The last or remote heir; the lord. So called in contradistinction to the haeres proximus and the haeres remotor.

Ultra /əltəra/. Lat. Beyond; outside of; in excess of. Damages ultra. Damages beyond a sum paid into court.

Ultra mare /əltəra mərə/. Beyond sea. One of the old essoins or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process.

Ultra reprise. After deduction of drawbacks; in excess of deductions or expenses.

Ultra vires /əltəra vəəriəs/. An act performed without any authority to act on subject. Haslund v. City of Seattle, 86 Wash.2d 607, 547 P.2d 1221, 1230. Acts beyond the scope of the powers of a corporation, as defined by its charter or laws of state of incorporation. State ex rel. v. Holston Trust Co., 168 Tenn. 546, 79 S.W.2d 1012, 1016. The term has a broad application and includes not only acts prohibited by the charter, but acts which are in excess of powers granted and not prohibited, and generally applied either when a corporation has no power whatever to do an act, or when the corporation has the power but exercises it irregularly. People ex rel. Barrett v. Bank of Peoria, 295 Ill.App. 543, 15 N.E.2d 333, 335. Act is ultra vires when corporation is without authority to perform it under any circumstances or for any purpose. By doctrine of ultra vires a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its corporate powers is unlawful. Community Federal Sav. & Loan Ass’n of Independence, Mo. v. Fields, C.C.A. Mo., 128 F.2d 705, 708. Ultra vires act of municipality is one which is beyond powers conferred upon it by law. Charles v. Town of Jeanerette, Inc., La.App., 234 So.2d 794, 798.

Ultra posse non potest esse, et vice versa /əltəra pəsəs nən pətəst əsəi, ət vəsi vəsərə/. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse [what cannot exist is not possible].

Umpirage /əmpərəgə/. The decision of an umpire. The word "Umpirage," in reference to arbitrators; the same as the word "award," in reference to arbitrators; but "award" is commonly applied to the decision of the umpire also.

Umpire /əmpərə/. Third party selected to arbitrate labor dispute. One clothed with authority to act alone in rendering a decision where arbitrators have disagreed. Hughes v. National Fuel Co., 121 W.Va. 392, 3 S.E.2d 621, 626. When matters in dispute are submitted to two or more arbitrators, and they do not agree in their decision, it is usual for another person to be called in as "umpire," to whose sole judgment it is then re-Unauthorized use. The criminal offense of use of a motor vehicle without the authority of the owner, knowing that such use is without his permission. It differs from larceny to the extent that in the crime of unauthorized use, the government need not prove the intent to deprive permanently the owner of the vehicle. See also Joyriding.

Unavailability. In law of evidence, on a showing that a witness or his testimony is not available, prior reported testimony of that witness which can be faithfully reproduced is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. A witness is unavailable if he is dead, insane or beyond the jurisdiction of the court's process to compel his appearance, or that the proponent of the prior statement be unavailable, despite due diligence, to obtain the attendance of the witness. See Fed.Evid.R. 804.

Unavailability as defined in rule providing for admission of prior testimony, requires, among other things, either that the witness be beyond the jurisdiction of the court's process to compel his appearance, or that the proponent of the prior statement be unavailable, despite due diligence, to obtain the attendance of the witness. See 150 N.J.Super. 172, 375 A.2d 279, 283.

Una voce /yúw ná wós wí/. Lat. With one voice; unanimously; without dissent.

Unavoidable. Not avoidable, incapable of being shunned or prevented, inevitable, and necessary.

Unavoidable accident. An inevitable accident; one which could not have been prevented by a party to the event. See Sabin v. Sunset Garden Co., 184 Okl. 106, 85 P.2d 294, 295. Within the meaning of statutes in several states relating to the vacation of judgments, means some casualty or misfortune growing out of conditions or circumstances that prevented the party or his attorney from doing something that, except therefor, would have been done, and does not include mistakes or errors of judgment growing out of a failure to obtain the attendance of the witness. See also Accident; Act of God.

Unavoidable casualty. An event or accident which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent, happening against will and without negligence. See also Accident; Act of God.

Unavoidable cause. A cause which reasonably prudently and carefully men under like circumstances do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects, under similar circumstances, they do not and would not ordinarily avoid. See also Unavoidable accident.
Unavoidable dangers. This term in a marine policy covering unavoidable dangers of the river includes those unpreventable by persons operating the vessel, and, like the term perils of the sea, includes all kinds of marine casualties, thus including accidents in which there is human intervention.

Unborn beneficiaries. Those persons named in a general way as sharing in an estate or gift though not yet born. Commonly, a court appoints a guardian ad litem to protect and to represent their interests.

Unborn child. The individual human life in existence and developing prior to birth.

A child not yet born at the happening of an event. A child not born at the time of an injury to his mother which causes the child to suffer an injury may recover in most jurisdictions after birth if the child were viable in his mother's womb at the time of the defendant's wrongdoing. In the majority of states, injuries sustained by a viable, unborn child which cause the child's death may form the basis of a wrongful death action brought by the estate of the stillborn child. Amadio v. Levin, 509 Pa.199, 501 A.2d 1085, 1087.

See also Child; Viable child; Wrongful death statutes.

Unbroken. Continuous, as adverse possession.

Unceasesath. In Saxon law, an oath by relations not to avenge a relation's death.

Uncertainty. The state or quality of being unknown or vague. Such vagueness, obscurity, or confusion in any written instrument, e.g., a will, as to render it unintelligible to those who are called upon to execute or interpret it, so that no definite meaning can be extracted from it. See also Ambiguity.

Unchastity. Impurity in mind and conduct, which may exist without actually engaging in unlawful sexual intercourse.

Uncia /snshiya/ Lat. In Roman law, an ounce; the twelfth part of the Roman "as," or pound. The twelfth part of anything; the proportion of one-twelfth. 2 Bl.Comm. 462, note n.

Uncia agri, uncia terre /snshiy'o âgray, snshiy'o térh-riy/. These phrases often occur in the charters of the British kings, and signify some measure or quantity of land. It is said to have been the quantity of twelve modii; each modius being possibly one hundred feet square.

Unciarius harex /snshiyeriysis hirhiz/. Lat. In Roman law, an heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance.

Uncle. The brother of one's father or mother.

Unclean hands doctrine. Doctrine simply means that in equity, as in law, plaintiff's fault, like defendant's, may be relevant to question of what, if any, remedy plaintiff is entitled to. Shondel v. McDermott, C.A.Ind., 775 F.2d 859, 868. Principle that one who has unclean hands is not entitled to relief in equity. Doctrine means no more than that one who has defrauded his adversary in the subject matter of the action will not be heard to assert right in equity. Under this doctrine, a court of equity may deny relief to a party whose conduct has been inequitable, unfair, and deceitful, but doctrine applies only when the reprehensible conduct complained of pertains to the controversy at issue. Goben v. Barry, 234 Kan. 721, 676 P.2d 90, 97.

Uncollected funds. A credit, such as an increase in the balance of a checking or other deposit account in a bank, that is given on the basis of a check or other right to payment that has not been paid by the drawee or other payor.

Unconditional. Not limited or affected by any condition; applied especially to the quality of an insured's estate in the property insured. See Owner (Sole and unconditional owner).

Unconditional discharge. One whose term of confinement has expired is unconditionally discharged if there are attached no parole provisions to his release.

A release from liability without any terms or delimiting conditions attached.

Unconscionability. A doctrine under which courts may deny enforcement of unfair or oppressive contracts because of procedural abuses arising out of the contract formation, or because of substantive abuses relating to terms of the contract, such as terms which violate reasonable expectations of parties or which involve gross disparities in price; either abuse can be the basis for a finding of unconscionability. Remco Enterprises, Inc. v. Houston, 9 Kan.App.2d 296, 677 P.2d 567, 572.

Basic test of "unconscionability" of contract is whether under circumstances existing at time of making of contract and in light of general commercial background and commercial needs of particular trade or case, clauses involved are so one-sided as to oppress or unfairly surprise party. Division of Triple T Service, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 60 Misc.2d 720, 304 N.Y.S.2d 191, 201. Unconscionability is generally recognized to include an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, to a contract together with contract terms which are unreasonably favorable to the other party. Gordon v. Crown Central Petroleum Corp., D.C.Ga., 423 F.Supp. 58, 61.

Typically the cases in which unconscionability is found involve gross overall one-sidedness or gross one-sidedness of a term disclaiming a warranty, limiting damages, or granting procedural advantages. In these cases one-sidedness is often coupled with the fact that the imbalance is buried in small print and often couched in language unintelligible to even a person of moderate education. Often the seller deals with a particularly susceptible clientele. Kugler v. Romain, 58 N.J. 522, 279 A.2d 640.

Uniform Commercial Code. (1) If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconsciona-Uncontestable clause. Provision in a life insurance policy that prevents the carrier from contesting a claim if the policy has been in force for a certain number of years (commonly two years).

Uncontrollable. Incapable of being controlled or ungovernable.

Uncontrollable impulse. As an excuse for the commission of an act otherwise criminal, this term means an impulse towards its commission of such fixity and intensity that it cannot be resisted by the person subject to it, in the enfeebled condition of his will and moral sense resulting from derangement or mania. See Insanity.

Uncore prist /ˈnkɔːr prɪst/. L Fr. Still ready. A species of plea or replication by which the party alleges that he is still ready to pay or perform all that is justly demanded of him. In conjunction with the phrase "tout temps prist," it signifies that he has always been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bl.Comm. 303.

Uncouth /ˈʌnkʌθ/. In Saxon law, unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. See Twa night gest.

Unde nihil habet /ˈʌndi ˈnɪl ˈhæbət/. Lat. In old English law, the name of the writ of dower, which lay for a widow, where no dower at all had been assigned her within the time limited by law. 3 Bl.Comm. 183.

Under. Sometimes used in its literal sense of below in position, beneath, but more frequently in its secondary meaning of "inferior" or "subordinate." Also according to; as, "under the testimony."

Under and subject. Words frequently used in conveyances of land which is subject to a mortgage, to show that the grantee takes subject to such mortgage.

Undercapitalization. A term used in reference to a business which does not have enough cash or "capital" to effectively carry on the business. See also Thin capitalization.

Under-chamberlains of the exchequer. In old English law, two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies, and read the same, that the clerk of the pell and comptrollers thereof might see their entries were true. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domedays Book. The office is now abolished.

Under color of law. See Color of law.

Under control. This phrase does not necessarily mean the ability to stop instanter under any and all circumstances, an automobile being "under control" within the meaning of the law if it is moving at such a rate, and the mechanism and power under such control, that it can be brought to a stop with a reasonable degree of celerity. And motorist is only bound to use that degree of care, caution, and prudence that an ordinarily careful, cautious, and prudent man would have used at the time under same or similar circumstances in operation of said automobile. In general, as applied to street cars or railroad trains, the term denotes the control and preparation appropriate to probable emergencies. It is such control as will enable a train to be stopped promptly if need should arise. It implies the ability to stop... within the distance the track is seen to be clear. See also Control; Lookout.

Undercover agent. A person who works as an agent without disclosing his role as an agent. In police work, one who makes contact with suspected criminals without disclosing his role as an agent of the police. He gathers evidence of criminal activity which may later be used at trial of the criminals. Such agents are commonly used in narcotic investigations. See also Informer.

Undercurrent or underflow of surface stream. Those waters which slowly find their way through sand and gravel constituting bed of a stream, or lands under or immediately adjacent to stream, and are themselves part of surface stream. Maricopa County Municipal Water Conservation Dist. No. 1 v. Southwest Cotton Co., 39 Ariz. 65, 4 P.2d 369, 380.

Underground. See Undercurrent or underflow of surface stream.

Underground waters. See Water (Subterranean waters).

Under herd. A term conveying the idea that a considerable number of domestic animals are gathered together and held together by herders in constant attendance and in control of their movements from place to place on a public range or within certain areas.

Under insurance. Insurance coverage in an amount less than the value of the property insured or less than the risk exposure.

Underinsured motorist coverage. Such insurance provides for situations in which offending motorist does not carry enough coverage to pay damages incurred by the injured party. Over half of the states have statutes providing for some form of underinsured coverage. It is not designed to relieve an insured or his family from the failure to purchase adequate liability coverage. Linder v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins., Minn., 384 N.W.2d 481, 483. Compare Uninsured motorist coverage.

Under-lease. Exists where lessee lets premises for less time than period of his unexpired term; a sub-lease. Also the transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term.

Under protest. A payment made or an act done under compulsion while the payor or actor asserts that he waives no rights by making the payment or by doing the act. U.C.C. § 1-207. See Protest.

Under-sheriff. An officer who acts directly under the sheriff, and performs all the duties of the sheriff's office, a few only excepted where the personal presence of the high-sheriff is necessary. See Delfelder v. Teton Land and Investment Co., 46 Wyo. 142, 24 P.2d 702. A sheriff's deputy, who, being designated by the sheriff as an "under sheriff," becomes his chief deputy with authority by virtue of his appointment to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff. A distinction is sometimes made between this officer and a deputy, the latter being appointed for a special occasion or purpose, while the former discharges, in general, all the duties required by the sheriff's office. See also Deputy.

Undersigned, the. The person whose name is signed or the persons whose names are signed at the end of a document; the subscriber or subscribers.

Understand. To know; to apprehend the meaning; to appreciate; as, to understand the nature and effect of an act. International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Pence, Tex. Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 206, 210. To have a full and clear knowledge of; to comprehend. Thus, to invalidate a deed on the ground that the grantor did not understand the nature of the act, the grantor must be incapable of comprehending that the effect of the act would divest him of the title to the land set forth in the deed. As used in connection with the execution of wills and other instruments, the term includes the realization of the practical effects and consequences of the proposed act. See Capacity.

Understanding. In the law of contracts, an agreement. An implied agreement resulting from the express terms of another agreement, whether written or oral. An informal agreement, or a concurrence as to its terms. A valid contract engagement of a somewhat informal character. This is a loose and ambiguous term, unless it be accompanied by some expression to show that it constituted a meeting of the minds of parties upon something respecting which they intended to be bound. See Agreement; Contract.

Understood. The phrase "it is understood," when employed as a word of contract in a written agreement, has the same general force as the words "it is agreed."

Undertake. To take on oneself, to engage in; to enter upon; to take in hand; set about; attempt; as, to undertake a task or a journey; and, specifically, to take upon oneself solemnly or expressly. To lay oneself under obligation or to enter into stipulation; to perform or to execute; to covenant; to contract. Hence, to guarantee; be surety for; promise; to accept or take over as a charge; to accept responsibility for the care of. To engage to look after or attend to, as to undertake a patient or guest. To endeavor to perform or try; to promise, engage, agree, or assume an obligation.

Undertaker. One who undertakes (to do something). In a mechanic's lien statute, the word has been held not to include a mere furnisher of material in connection with the erection of the building. One whose business is to prepare the dead for burial and to take the charge and management of funerals.

Undertaking. A promise, engagement, or stipulation. An engagement by one of the parties to a contract to the other, as distinguished from the mutual engagement of the parties to each other. It does not necessarily imply a consideration. In a somewhat special sense, a promise given in the course of legal proceedings by a party or his counsel, generally as a condition to obtaining some concession from the court or the opposite party. A promise or security in any form. See Stipulation.

Under-tenant. A tenant under one who is himself a tenant; one who holds by under-lease. See also Under-lease.
Under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs.
Phrase as used in statutes or ordinances prohibiting the operation of motor vehicle by a party under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs covers not only all well-known and easily recognized conditions and degrees of intoxication, but any abnormal mental or physical condition which is the result of indulging in any degree in intoxicating liquors or drugs, and which tends to deprive one of that clearness of intellect and control of himself which he would otherwise possess. Any condition where intoxicating liquor or drugs has so far affected the nervous system, brain or muscles of the driver as to impair, to an appreciable degree, his ability to operate a motor vehicle in the manner that an ordinary, prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would operate or drive under like conditions. Luellen v. State, 64 Okl.Cr. 382, 81 P.2d 323, 328. A condition that makes a person less able, either mentally or physically, or both, to exercise clear judgment, and with steady hands and nerves, to operate an automobile with safety to himself and to the public. Village of Park Forest v. Angel, 37 Ill.App.3d 746, 347 N.E.2d 278, 285. See also Intoxication.

Undertook. Agreed; promised; assumed. This is the technical word to be used in alleging the promise which forms the basis of an action of assumpsit.

Under-treasurer of England. He who transacted the business of the lord high treasurer.

Under-tutor. In Louisiana, in every tutorship there shall be an under-tutor, whom it shall be the duty of the judge to appoint at the time letters of tutorship are certified for the tutor. It is the duty of the under-tutor to act for the minor whenever the interest of the minor is in opposition to the interest of the tutor. Civ.Code La. Art. 273.

Underwrite. To insure life or property. See Insurance.
To agree to sell bonds, etc., to the public, or to furnish the necessary money for such securities, and to buy those which cannot be sold. An underwriting contract, aside from its use in insurance, is an agreement, made before corporate shares are brought before the public, that in the event of the public not taking all the shares of the number mentioned in the agreement, the underwriter will take the shares which the public do not take; "underwriting" being a purchase, together with a guarantee of a sale of the bonds. In re Hackett, Hoff and Thiermann, C.C.A.Wis., 70 F.2d 815, 819. See also Offering (Public offerings); Prospectus; Underwriter.

Underwriter. Any person, banker, or syndicate that guarantees to furnish a definite sum of money by a definite date to a business or government entity in return for an issue of bonds or stock. A professional firm (e.g., investment banker) that handles the marketing of a corporate or government security offering to the public; it either buys all of a new security offering for a specified price and then sells it to the public, either directly or through dealers, or takes a commission on the securities it actually sells.

Term refers to any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributor's or seller's commission. Investment Company Act, § 2, 15 U.S.C.A. § 80a-2(40).

See also Investment banker; Underwrite.

In insurance, the party assuming a risk in return for the payment of a premium (the insurer).

Underwriting agreement. Agreement between corporation and underwriter covering terms and conditions of new issue of securities to be offered to public. See Underwrite.

Underwriting spread. The difference between the selling price to the public of a new security offering and the proceeds received by the offering firm. This is also termed an underwriting discount.

Undisclosed agency. Exists where agent deals with a third person without notifying that person of the agency. An agency relationship in which the third party has no knowledge of the existence of the agency.

Undisclosed principal. A principal whose identity is unknown by a third person, and the third person has no knowledge that the agent is acting in an agency capacity at the time the contract is made. See also Principal.

Undisputed. Not questioned or challenged; uncontested.

Undisputed fact. An admitted fact, which the court has not deemed sufficiently material to add to the finding, or has inadvertently omitted from it; a fact not found by the court does not become an "undisputed fact," merely because one or more witnesses testify to it without direct contradiction.

Undistributed profits. See Undivided profits.

Undistributed profits tax. Tax imposed on the unreasonable accumulation of profits by a corporation which has sufficient surplus for expansion and other needs beyond the amount which it could but does not pay out in dividends. I.R.C. § 531 et seq. See also Accumulated earnings tax.

Undivided interest. See Tenancy (Joint tenancy; Tenancy by the entirety; Tenancy in common).

Undivided profits. Profits which have not been distributed as dividends or set aside as surplus. Current undistributed earnings. Edwards v. Douglas, 269 U.S. 204, 46 S.Ct. 85, 89, 70 L.Ed. 235.

Undivided right. An undivided right or title, or a title to an undivided portion of an estate, is that owned by one of two or more tenants in common or joint tenants before partition. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal.

Undue. More than necessary; not proper; illegal. It denotes something wrong, according to the standard of morals which the law enforces in relations of men, and in fact illegal, and qualifies the purpose with which influence is exercised or result which it accomplishes. Morris v. Morris, 192 Miss. 518, 6 So.2d 311, 312.

Undue influence. Persuasion, pressure, or influence short of actual force, but stronger than mere advice, so overpowers the dominated party's free will or judgment that he or she cannot act intelligently and voluntarily, but acts, instead, subject to the will or purposes of the dominating party.

Any improper or wrongful constraint, machination, or urgency of persuasion whereby the will of a person is overpowered and he is induced to do or forbear an act which he would not do or would do if left to act freely. Influence which deprives person influenced of free agency or destroys freedom of his will and renders it more the will of another than his own. Misuse of position of confidence or taking advantage of a person's weakness, infirmity, or distress to change improperly that person's actions or decisions.

Term refers to conduct by which a person, through his power over mind of testator, makes the latter's desires conform to his own, thereby overmastering the volition of the testator. Parrisella v. Fotopulos, 111 Ariz. 4, 522 P.2d 1081, 1083. For purpose of executing instruments, such exists when there was such dominion and control exercised over mind of person executing such instruments, under facts and circumstances then existing, as to overcome his free agency and free will and to substitute will of another so as to cause him to do what he would not otherwise have done but for such dominion and control. Board of Regents of University of Tex. v. Yarbrough, Tex.Civ.App., 470 S.W.2d 80, 86, 92.

See also Coercion; Duress.

Unearned income. See Income.

Unearned increment. Value due to no labor or expenditure on the part of an owner but to natural causes making an increased demand for it, such as increase of population or the general progress of society. Miller v. Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co., 123 W.Va. 320, 15 S.E.2d 687, 699.

Unearned interest. Interest generally received by a financial institution in advance of the time in which it is earned.

Unearned surplus. As distinguished from "earned surplus" includes: (a) "paid-in surplus"—amounts contributed for or assigned to shares in excess of stated capital applicable thereto; (b) "revaluation surplus"—surplus arising from a revaluation of assets above cost, and (c) "donated surplus"—contributions other than for shares, whether from shareholders or others. Conine v. Leikam, Okl., 570 P.2d 1156, 1160. See also Surplus.

Unemployment. State of being not employed; lack of employment. A. J. Meyer & Co. v. Unemployment Compensation Commission, 348 Mo. 147, 152 S.W.2d 184, 189. See also Seasonal employment.

Structural unemployment. Unemployment that results when there is a shift in the demand for a particular product or service such that certain skills and jobs are no longer needed or desired.

Unencumbered. Without any impediments, e.g., an unencumbered title to property.

Unequal. Not uniform. Los Angeles County v. Ransohoff, 24 Cal.App.2d 238, 74 P.2d 828, 830. Ill-balanced; uneven; partial; discriminatory; prejudicial; unfair—not synonymous with inappropriate, which means unsuitable, unfit, or improper. See Discrimination; Separate but equal doctrine.

Unequivocal. Clear; plain; capable of being understood in only one way, or as clearly demonstrated. Free from uncertainty, or without doubt; and, when used with reference to the burden of proof, it implies proof of the highest possible character and it imports proof of the nature of mathematical certainty. Berry v. Maywood Mut. Water Co. No. 1, 11 Cal.App.2d 479, 53 P.2d 1032. See also Unambiguous.

Unerring. Incapable of error or failure; certain; sure; infallible.

Unethical. Not ethical; hence, colloquially, not according to business or professional standards.

Unethical conduct. See Rules of Professional Conduct.

Unexceptionable. Without any fault; not subject to any objection or criticism.

Unexpected. Not expected, coming without warning, sudden. See Act of God; Accident.

Unexpired term. Remainder of a period prescribed by law or provided for in lease after a portion of such time has passed, and phrase is not synonymous with "vacancy." State ex rel. Sanchez v. Dixon, La.App., 4 So.2d 591, 596.

Unfair competition. A term which may be applied generally to all dishonest or fraudulent rivalry in trade and commerce, but is particularly applied to the practice of endeavoring to substitute one's own goods or products in the markets for those of another, having an established reputation and extensive sale, by means of imitating or counterfeiting the name, title, size, shape, or distinctive peculiarities of the article, or the shape, color, label, wrapper, or general appearance of the package, or other such simulations, the imitation being carried far enough to mislead the general public or deceive an unwary purchaser, and yet not amounting to an absolute counterfeit or to the infringement of a trademark or trade-name. Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co.,
UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION

Unfair labor practice. Within National Labor Relations Act, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer:
1. To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.
2. To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it.
3. By discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization.
4. To discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because he has filed charges or given testimony under the Act.
5. To refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employees. National Labor Relations Act, §§ 7, 8; 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 102 et seq., 157, 158.

The following acts have been held to be unfair labor practices under National Labor Relations Act:

Unfair methods of competition. This phrase within Federal Trade Commission Act has broader meaning...
UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION

The term though not defined by the statute is clearly inapplicable to practices never heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud, or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly. The act was not intended to fetter free and fair competition as commonly understood and practiced by honorable opponents in trade. In re Amtrong Trading Corporation, Cust. & Pat.App., 75 F.2d 826, 830. But a method was said to be an unfair method if it does not leave to each actual or potential competitor a fair opportunity for play of hiscontending force engendered by an honest desire for gain. California Rice Industry v. Federal Trade Commission, C.C.A.9, 102 F.2d 716, 721.

See also Antitrust acts; Unfair competition; Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act; Vertical restraints of trade.

Unfair prejudice. Within context of rule regarding admission of evidence means undue tendency to suggest decision on improper basis, commonly, though not necessarily, emotional one. Generally, danger of unfair prejudice in admission of evidence always exists where it is used for something other than its logical probative force. Empire Gas Corp. v. American Bakers Co., N.D.I1L., 646 F.Supp. 269, 276. Such is caused by evidence that is likely to arouse emotional response rather than rational decision among jurors. State v. Rice, 48 Wash.App. 7, 737 P.2d 726, 730.

Unfair trade practices. See Unfair competition; Unfair methods of competition.

Unfaithful. Characterized by bad faith; not synonymous with "illegal," which means unlawful or contrary to law, nor with "improper," which, as applied to conduct, implies such conduct as a man of ordinary and reasonable prudence would not, under the circumstances, have been guilty of.

Unfinished. Not completed; not brought to an end; imperfect; the last effort, as a final touch is given to a work. Bell & Graddy v. O'Brien, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 560, 562.

Unfit. Unsuitable; incompetent; not adapted or qualified for a particular use or service; having no fitness. As applied to relation of rational parents to their child, word "unfit" usually, though not necessarily, imports something of moral delinquency, but, unsuitability for any reason, apart from moral defects, may render a parent unfit for custody. In Interest of Johnson, 214 Kan. 780, 522 P.2d 330, 334.

Ungeld. In Saxon law, an outlaw; a person whose murder required no composition to be made, or weregeld to be paid, by his slayer.

Unica taxatio /yúwnaks takséysh(i)yow/ . The obsolete language of a special award of venire, where, of several defendants, one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury, who are to try and assess damages on the issue, are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default.

Unified bar. See Integrated bar.

Unified estate and gift tax. See Unified transfer tax.

Unified tax credit. A credit against the federal Unified Transfer Tax, replacing the former lifetime gift tax exemption and the estate tax exemption. I.R.C. §§ 2010-2505.

Unified transfer tax. A federal tax levied on the transfer of property through an estate at the time of death or on a taxable transfer by gift. The estate or the donor is responsible for payment of the tax. The unified credit may be applied against the unified transfer tax.

Uniform. Conforming to one rule, mode, pattern, or unvarying standard; not different at different times or places; applicable to all places or divisions of a country. Equable; applying alike to all within a class; sameness.

A statute is general and uniform in its operation when it operates equally upon all persons who are brought within the relations and circumstances provided for; when all persons under the same conditions and in the same circumstances are treated alike, and classification is reasonable and naturally inherent in the subject-matter. The words "general" and "uniform" as applied to laws have a meaning antithetical to special or discriminatory laws.

The burdens of taxation, to be uniform, must have the essential of equality, and must bear alike upon all the property within the limits of the unit wherein it is lawful to levy taxes for a purpose, whether that unit be the state, county, or a municipality. And requirement is met when tax is equal on all persons belonging to described class on which tax is imposed. With reference to locality, a tax is "uniform" when it operates with equal force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found, and with reference to classification, it is Uniform when it operates without distinction or discrimination upon all persons composing the described class. Uniformity in taxation implies equality in the burden of taxation, which cannot exist without uniformity in the mode of assessment, as well as in the rate of taxation. Further, the uniformity must be coextensive with the territory to which it applies. And it must be extended to all property subject to taxation, so that all property may be taxed alike and equally. Edye v. Robertson, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798.

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. See Custody of children.

Uniform Commercial Code. One of the Uniform Laws drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and the American Law Institute governing commercial transactions (including sales and leasing of goods, transfer of funds, commercial paper, bank deposits and collections, letters of credit, bulk transfers, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, investment securities, and secured transactions). The U.C.C. has been adopted in whole or substantially by all states.

Uniform Consumer Credit Code. (Also called the "U.S.C.") A Uniform Law, adopted by some states: (a) to simplify, clarify, and modernize the law governing consumer credit and usury; (b) to provide rate ceilings to assure an adequate supply of credit to consumers; (c) to further consumer understanding of the terms of credit transactions and to foster competition among suppliers of consumer credit so that consumers may obtain credit at reasonable cost; (d) to protect consumers against unfair practices by some suppliers of consumer credit, having due regard for the interests of legitimate and scrupulous creditors; (e) to permit and encourage the development of fair and economically sound consumer credit practices; (f) to conform the regulation of disclosure in consumer credit transactions to the Federal Truth-in-Lending Act; and (g) to make uniform the law, including administrative rules, among the various jurisdictions. See also Consumer Credit Protection Act; Truth-in-Lending Act.

Uniform Controlled Substances Act. A uniform and comprehensive law governing use, sale, and distribution of drugs and narcotics adopted by most states, including Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. See 21 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq. for federal Act. See also Controlled Substance Acts.

Uniform Customs and Practice for Commercial Documentary Credits (UCP). A publication of the International Chamber of Commerce which codifies the widespread understanding of bankers and merchants about the mechanics and operations of letters of credit. The UCP is law in the sense that the typical commercial credit is issued subject to the UCP, and courts refer to the UCP to interpret and supplement primary sources of credit law, such as U.C.C. Article 5.

Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act. One version of a "baby" F.T.C. Act that provides private remedies for a variety of unfair and deceptive acts, including false advertising and disparagement. The remedies under this particular uniform statute, as enacted by certain states, are limited to injunctive relief.

Uniform Divorce Recognition Act. One of the Uniform Laws adopted by some states governing questions of full faith and credit and recognition of divorces of sister states.

Uniformity. See Uniform.

Uniform Laws or Acts. Laws in various subject areas, approved by the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, that are often adopted, in whole or substantially, by individual states; their purpose being to make the laws on various subjects uniform throughout the states. Examples are the Uniform Anatomical Gifts Act; Uniform Partnership Act; and the Uniform Commercial Code. See also Model act.

Uniform Principal and Income Act. One of the Uniform Laws adopted by some states governing allocation of principal and income in trusts and estates.

Uniform State Laws. See Model act; Uniform Laws or Acts.

Unify. To cause to be one; to make into a unit; to unite; to become one; to consolidate.

Unigeniture /yuwnijenatysr/. The state of being the only begotten.

Unilateral. One-sided; ex parte; having relation to only one of two or more persons or things.

Unilateral contract. See Contract.

Unilateral mistake. A mistake or misunderstanding as to the terms or effect of a contract, made or entertained by one of the parties to it but not by the other.

Unilateral record. Records are unilateral when offered to show a particular fact, as a prima facie case, either for or against a stranger.

Unimproved land. A statutory term which includes lands, once improved, that have reverted to a state of nature, as well as lands that have never been improved.

Uninclosed place. A place not entirely inclosed, an uninclosed place.

Unilateral. One-sided; having relation to only one of two or more persons or things.

Unilateral contract. See Contract.

Unilateral mistake. A mistake or misunderstanding as to the terms or effect of a contract, made or entertained by one of the parties to it but not by the other.

Unilateral record. Records are unilateral when offered to show a particular fact, as a prima facie case, either for or against a stranger.

Unimproved land. A statutory term which includes lands, once improved, that have reverted to a state of nature, as well as lands that have never been improved.

Uninclosed place. A place not entirely inclosed, an "inclosed" place being a place inclosed on all sides by some sort of material.

Unincorporated association. Voluntary group of persons, without a charter, formed by mutual consent for purpose of promoting common enterprise or prosecuting common objective. Local 4076, United Steelworkers of America v. United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, Uninfected. Untainted or uncontaminated, not affected unfavorably, not impregnated or permeated with that which is bad or harmful. Leonardo v. A. Habermann Provision Co., 143 Ohio St. 623, 56 N.E.2d 232, 237, 28 O.O. 511.

Uninsured motorist coverage. Protection afforded an insured by first party insurance against bodily injury inflicted by an uninsured motorist, after the liability of the uninsured motorist for the injury has been established. Sturdy v. Allied Mut. Ins. Co., 203 Kan. 783, 457 P.2d 34, 36. Purpose is to guarantee that the injured insured will be in the same position in the event of injury attributable to negligence of an uninsured motorist as the insured would be if he were injured through the negligence of a motorist carrying liability insurance. Jarstad v. National Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., Nev., 552 P.2d 49, 50.

Uninsured motorist coverage in automobile liability policies is designed to close the gaps inherent in motor vehicle financial responsibility and compulsory insurance legislation, and this insurance coverage is intended, within fixed limits, to provide financial recompense to innocent persons who receive injuries and dependents of those who are killed, through the wrongful conduct of motorists who, because they are uninsured and not financially responsible, cannot be made to respond in damages. Wright v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 270 N.C. 577, 155 S.E.2d 100, 106.

See also Unsatisfied judgment funds. Compare Underinsured motorist coverage.

Unintelligible. That which cannot be understood.

Union. An organization of workers, formed for the purpose of negotiating with employers on matters of wages, seniority, working conditions, fringe benefits, and the like.

A league; a federation; an unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose; as, a trade or labor union. A joinder of separate entities. State ex rel. Dawson v. Dinwiddie, 186 Okl. 63, 95 P.2d 867, 869.

A popular term in America for the United States; also, in Great Britain, for the consolidated governments of England and Scotland, or for the political tie between Great Britain and Ireland.

See also Agency shop; Bargaining unit; Craft union; Credit union; Decertification; Labor organization; Labor union shop; Open shop; Preferential shop; Right-to-work laws.

Closed union. Union with highly restrictive membership requirements such as high initiation fees, and long apprenticeship periods. See also Closed shop; compare Open union, below.

Company union. Union formed or sponsored by the employer. For all practical purposes, such union is now illegal because employers are prohibited from interfering with union representation by the National Labor Relations Act.

Craft union. Union composed of members of the same trade or craft, as carpenters, plumbers, etc. regardless of the company for which they work.

Horizontal union. A craft union which cuts across employer or industry lines.

Independent union. Union formed by employees of a particular employer without affiliation with an international union.

Industrial union. Union composed of workers in a particular industry regardless of their particular trade or craft, as for example, the United Automobile Workers union.

International union. A parent union with affiliates in other countries such as Canada and Mexico.

Local union. A union of workers in one plant or location but affiliated with a parent or larger union. The local is the bargaining unit of the union.

National union. A parent union with locals in various parts of the United States, though not outside the country.

Open union. A union whose admission requirements are relatively easy to meet. See also Open shop; compare Closed union, above.

Trade union. Generically, a labor union. Restrictively, a craft union.

Union shop. Exists where all workers, once employed, must become union members within a specified period of time as a condition of their continued employment. See also Closed shop; Open shop; Right to work laws.

Vertical union. An industrial union organized along lines of industry and not craft.

Union certification. The process by which an official governmental body such as the National Labor Relations Board declares that a particular union has qualified as the bargaining representative of the employees of a company or industry by reason of a majority vote of the workers.

Union contract. A written agreement between the union and employer covering such matters as wages, seniority rights and working conditions.

Union-jack. The national flag of Great Britain and Ireland, which combines the banner of St. Patrick with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. The word derives from the jack of a ship, a flag flown at the bow of a ship since the seventeenth century, other than the ensign which designates the ship's status as merchant or military. The jack designates the ship's nationality.

Union mortgage clause. A clause, as in a fire policy (together with the rider making the loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee), which provides that if the policy is made payable to a mortgagee of the insured real estate, no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee, or his agents or those claiming under him, shall affect his right to recover in case of loss on such real estate. Such clause creates independent contract between insurer and mortgagee and is distinguished from "open mortgage clause" in that latter clause simply provides that policy is payable to mortgagee as his interest may appear. Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. German Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n of Lohman, 231 Mo.App. 699, 105 S.W.2d 1001. And mortgagee under such latter clause is merely an appointee to receive fund recoverable in case of loss to extent of his interest. Capital Fire Ins. Co. of Cal. v. Langhorne, C.C.A.Minn., 146 F.2d 237, 241.

Union rate. The wage scale set by a union as a minimum wage to be paid and generally expressed as an hourly rate or piece-work rate.

Union security clause. Provision in union contract which establishes status of union in a plant. It provides for the relation of the union to the workers and their positions. Any contract clause requiring some or all employees represented by a union to become or remain members of the union as a condition of employment.

Unissued stock. Stock of a corporation which has been authorized but is not outstanding (i.e. not issued).

Unit. A single thing of any kind. A term sometimes used in the sense of a share, as in an oil syndicate, or as equivalent to an investment security. With respect to labor unit, see Bargaining unit.

Unitary business. "Unitary business operation," to which unitary apportionment method of reporting business income is applied, is one in which there is high degree of interrelationship and interdependence between, typically, one corporation, which generally is a parent corporation, and its corporate subsidiaries or otherwise associated corporations, which are usually engaged in multistate, and in some instances in international, business operations. PMID Inv. Co. v. State, Dept. of Revenue, 216 Neb. 553, 345 N.W.2d 815, 817. For purpose of determining taxable corporate income, recognized test for a "unitary business" is whether operation of portion of business within the state is dependent upon or contributory to operation of the business outside the state. Joslin Dry Goods Co. v. Dolan, 200 Colo. 291, 615 P.2d 16, 17. See also Unitary theory; Tax (Unitary tax).

Unitary tax. See Unitary business; Tax (Unitary tax).

Unitary theory. Under the unitary theory, the sales, property, and payroll of related corporations are combined for nexus and apportionment purposes, and the worldwide income of the unitary entity is apportioned to the state. Subsidiaries and other affiliated corporations that are found to be part of the corporation's unitary business (because they are subject to overlapping ownership, operation, or management) are included in the apportionment procedure. See also Tax (Unitary tax); Unitary business.
year thereafter a cumulative supplement containing the laws passed since 1926 was published. In 1932 a new edition was issued which incorporated the cumulated supplements to the 1926 edition, and this became the United States Code, 1932 ed. Every six years a new edition of the U.S. Code is published with cumulative supplement volumes being issued during the intervening years.

United States Code Annotated. This multi-volume publication includes the complete text of the United States Code, together with case notes of state and federal decisions which construe and apply specific Code sections, cross references to related sections, historical notes, and library references. U.S.C.A. is further supplemented with the United States Code Congressional and Administrative News and periodic pamphlet supplements containing laws as passed by Congress during the current session.

United States Commissioners. See Magistrate.

United States Courts. Except in the case of impeachments, the judicial power of the United States is vested by the Constitution in a Supreme Court and such other inferior courts as may be from time to time established by Congress. All the judges are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to hold office during good behavior, and their compensation cannot be diminished during their term of office. Art. III, U.S.Const. Such “inferior” courts include the Courts of Appeals, District Courts, Claims Court, Bankruptcy Courts, and Tax Court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. See also specific courts.

United States currency. Commonly understood to include every form of currency authorized by the United States government, whether issued directly by it or under its authority. See Legal tender.

United States Magistrates. See Magistrate.

United States notes. See Treasury bill; Treasury note.

United States officer. Usually and strictly, in United States statutes, a person appointed in the manner declared under Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const., providing for the appointment of officers, either by the President and the Senate, the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of departments. Steele v. U.S., 267 U.S. 505, 45 S.Ct. 417, 418, 69 L.Ed. 761. See also specific courts.

United States Reports. The official printed record of cases heard and decided by the U.S. Supreme Court which usually includes a syllabus of each case, the opinion of the Court, concurring and dissenting opinions, if any, the disposition made of each case, and orders of the Court. Originally a series of Reports was issued during the incumbency of each successive court reporter and such were cited as United States Reports. (1801-1815); Wheaton (1816-1827); Peters (1828-1843); Howard (1843-1860); Black (1861-1862); and Wallace (1863-1874). By 1874, when the number of volumes totalled 90, the practice began of eliminating the reporter’s name and citing them as United States Reports.

United States Supreme Court. See Supreme Court.

United States trustee. See Bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy trustee).

Unit investment trust. An investment company organized under a trust indenture, contract of custodianship or agency or similar instrument. 15 U.S.C.A. § 80a–4(2). The most common form of organization is the trust indenture. The holder of shares in this investment vehicle has an undivided interest in a fixed pool of securities held by the trustee or custodian.

Unit of production. The “unit of production” method of determining the taxable net income or profit in the oil or gas business is accomplished by a system of accounting by which is ascertained, as nearly as science will permit, the total amount of recoverable oil in the property, and to each barrel of this oil is assigned its part of the capital investment, and from the sale price of each barrel produced and sold there is deducted the expenses of producing it, and its proportion of the capital investment, leaving the balance as profit, and thus, when the property is exhausted, the operator has received back his capital and expenses, and accounted for his net income or loss.

Unit ownership acts. State laws governing condominium ownership. See Planned unit development.

Unit pricing. System under which contract items are priced per unit and not on the basis of a flat contract price.

Unit rule. A method of valuing securities by multiplying the total number of shares held by the sale price of one share sold on a licensed stock exchange, ignoring all other facts regarding value. Citizens Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Reeves, Ky., 259 S.W.2d 432, 434.

Unitrust. A trust from which a fixed percentage of the net fair market value of the trust's assets, valued annually, is paid each year to the beneficiary. See also Trust.

Unity. Under common law, “four unities” had to be present to create a joint tenancy: interest—the tenants must have one and the same interest; title—the interests must accrue by one and the same instrument or conveyance; time—the interests must commence at one and the same time; and possession—the property must be held by one and the same undivided possession. If any one of these unities were lacking, the estate was not one in joint tenancy. Robertson v. Ludwig, 12 Kan. App.2d 571, 752 P.2d 690, 696. 2 Bl.Comm. 180. See also these specific unities, infra.

Unity of interest. As required in case of joint tenancy, means that interests must accrue by one and same conveyance. Hernandez v. Becker, C.C.A.N.M., 54 F.2d 542, 547. It also signifies that the interests must be equal; that is, no one of joint tenants can have a greater interest in the property than each of the others, while, in the case of tenants in common, one of them may have a larger share than any of the others. However, this unity of interest requisite refers to equality among the cotenants only as to their interests in the estate; it does not relate to quality in contribution of purchase money. Carozza v. Murray, 69 Md.App. 492 A.2d 1349, 1352. See Unity.

Unity of possession. Joint possession of two rights by several titles. Exists for example where a person takes a lease of land from another at a certain rent, and afterwards purchases the fee-simple of such land. By this he acquires unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished. It is also one of the essential properties of a joint estate, requiring that the joint tenants must hold the same undivided possession of the whole and enjoy same rights until death of one. Hernandez v. Becker, C.C.A.N.M., 54 F.2d 542, 547. See Unity.

Unity of seisin. Exists where a person seised of land which is subject to an easement, profit à prendre, or similar right, also becomes seised of the land to which the easement or other right is annexed.

Unity of time. One of the four unities recognized at common law to create a joint tenancy. The interests of the parties commence at one and the same time. 2 Bl.Comm. 181. Robertson v. Ludwig, 12 Kan.App.2d 571, 752 P.2d 690, 696. See also Unity.

Unity of title. As applied to joint tenants, signifies that they hold their property by one and the same title, while tenants in common may take property by several titles. See Unity.

The majority rule regarding water rights that all land within the watershed that forms a part of a contiguous whole belonging to one person and bordering on the water is riparian land regardless of when ownership of the part was acquired.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est, et causa /yuwnavarsstas rirsm/ spectandam est, et cóza/. The commencement and cause of every contract are to be regarded.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur /yuwnavarsstas rirsm/ non odioyétyar/. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all; the testimony of a single witness shall not be admitted under any circumstances. A maxim of the civil and canon law.

Universal. Having relation to the whole or an entirety; pertaining to all without exception; a term more extensive than "general," which latter may admit of exceptions.

Universal agent. One who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. See also Agent.

Universalia sunt notiora singularibus /yuwnavarsstas rirsm/ singyaléybas/. Things universal are better known than things particular.

Universal legacy. See Legacy.

Universal partnership. See Partnership.

Universal succession. In the civil law, succession to the entire estate of another, living or dead, though generally the latter, importing succession to the entire property of the predecessor as a juridical entirety, that is, to all his active as well as passive legal relations.

Universitas /yuwnavarsstas/. Lat. In the civil law, a corporation aggregate. Literally, a whole formed out of many individuals. 1 Bl.Comm. 469.

Universitas facti /yuwnavarsstas fákktay/. In the civil law, a plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e.g., a herd of cattle, a stock of goods.

Universitas juris /yuwnavarsstas júras/. In the civil law, a quantity of things of all sorts, corporeal as well as incorporeal, which, taken together, are regarded as a whole; e.g., an inheritance, an estate.

Universitas rerum /yuwnavarsstas ríram/. In the civil law, literally, a whole of things. Several single things, which, though not mechanically connected with one another, are, when taken together, regarded as a whole in any legal respect.

Universitas vel corporatio non dictur alicquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi majorpars id faciat /yuwnavarsstas vél kórporéshiy(h)ów nón disostar álakwíd fészary násay sít kólyjlyéystar dálbaréytoy, éshyámsay méýjar páre id féysh(i)y(ay)at/. A university or corporation is not said to do anything unless it be deliberated upon as a body, although the majority should do it.

University. An institution of higher learning, consisting of an assemblage of colleges united under one corporate organization and government, affording instruction in the arts and sciences and the learned professions, and conferring degrees.

Universus /yuwnavárvas/. Lat. The whole; all together.

Unjust. Contrary to right and justice, or to the enjoyment of his rights by another, or to the standards of conduct furnished by the laws.

Unjust enrichment doctrine. General principle that one person should not be permitted unjustly to enrich himself at expense of another, but should be required to make restitution of or for property or benefits received, retained or appropriated, where it is just and equitable that such restitution be made, and where such action involves no violation or frustration of law or opposition to public policy, either directly or indirectly. Tulalip Shores, Inc. v. Mortland, 9 Wash.App. 271, 511 P.2d 1402, 1404. Unjust enrichment of a person occurs when he has and retains money or benefits which in justice and equity belong to another. L & A Drywall, Inc. v. Whitmore Const. Co., Inc., Utah, 608 P.2d 626, 630.

Three elements must be established in order to sustain a claim based on unjust enrichment: A benefit conferred upon the defendant by the plaintiff; an appreciation or knowledge by the defendant of the benefit; and the acceptance or retention by the defendant of the benefit under such circumstances as to make it inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without the payment of its value. Everhart v. Miles, 47 Md.App. 131, 136, 422 A.2d 28. See also Quantum meruit.

Unknown Injury rule. See Injury.

Unknown persons. Persons whose identities cannot be ascertained.

Unkouth /ˈʌnkʌθ/. Unknown. The law French form of the Saxon "uncouth."

Unlage. Sax. An unjust law.

Unlawful. That which is contrary to, prohibited, or unauthorized by law. That which is not lawful. The acting contrary to, or in defiance of the law; disobeying or disregarding the law. Term is equivalent to "without excuse or justification." State v. Noble, 90 N.M. 360, 563 P.2d 1153, 1157. While necessarily not implying the element of criminality, it is broad enough to include it. See Crime; Criminal.

Term as applied to agreements and the like, denotes they are ineffectual in law, for they involve acts which, though not positively forbidden, are disapproved by law and are therefore not recognized as ground of legal rights because they are against public policy. Conine v. Leikam, Okl., 570 P.2d 1156, 1159.

Unlawful act. Act contrary to law, and presupposes that there must be an existing law. A violation of some prohibitory law and includes all willful, actionable violations of civil rights, and is not confined to criminal acts. State v. Hailey, 350 Mo. 300, 165 S.W.2d 422, 427. See also Unconstitutional.

Unlawful assembly. At common law, the meeting together of three or more persons, to the disturbance of the public peace, and with the intention of co-operating in the forcible and violent execution of some unlawful private enterprise. If they take steps towards the performance of their purpose, it becomes a rout; and, if they put their design into actual execution, it is a riot. 4 Bl.Comm. 146. An unlawful assembly is a meeting of three or more persons with a common plan in mind which, if carried out, will result in a riot. In other words, it is such a meeting with intent to (a) commit a crime by open force, or (b) execute a common design lawful or unlawful, in an unauthorized manner likely to cause courageous persons to apprehend a breach of the peace.

Unlawful assembly is the meeting or coming together of not less than five (5) persons for the purpose of engaging in conduct constituting either disorderly conduct, or a riot, or when in a lawful assembly of not less than five (5) persons, agreeing to engage in such conduct. Kansas Criminal Code, 21-4102.

See also Assembly, right of; Riot.

Unlawful belligerents. Enemies passing the boundaries of the United States for purpose of destroying war industries and supplies without a uniform or other emblem signifying their belligerent status or discarding that means of identification after entry. Ex parte Qui- rin, App.D.C., 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 15, 87 L.Ed. 3.

Unlawful detainer. The unjustifiable retention of the possession of real property by one whose original entry was lawful and of right, but whose right to the possession has terminated and who refuses to quit, as in the case of a tenant holding over after the termination of the lease and in spite of a demand for possession by the landlord. Brandley v. Lewis, 97 Utah 217, 92 P.2d 338, 339. Actions of "unlawful detainer" concern only right of possession of realty, and differ from ejectment in that no ultimate question of title or estate can be determined. McCracken v. Wright, 159 Kan. 615, 167 P.2d 814, 817. See also Detainer; Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Unlawful detainer proceeding. A statutory procedure by which a landlord can legally evict a tenant in default on his or her rent. See Unlawful detainer.

Unlawful entry. An entry upon lands effected peaceably and without force, but which is without color of title and is accomplished by means of fraud or some other willful wrong.

Unlawfully. Illegally; wrongfully. See Criminal; Unlawful; Unlawful act.

This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offence; it was formerly necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offence which it created, used the word; but was unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and was manifestly illegal.

Unless. If it be not that; if it be not the case that; if not; supposing not; if it be not; except. A reservation or option to change one's mind provided a certain event happens, a conditional promise. A subordinate conjunction in common usage, connecting a dependent or subordinate clause to the main clause of a sentence. Kansas City Structural Steel Co. v. L. G. Barcus & Sons, Inc., 217 Kan. 88, 535 P.2d 419, 423.

Unless lease. An oil and gas lease which provides that lease will be rendered null and void and lessee will automatically be relieved from liability, upon failure to commence operations or to pay rent. It must be ex-pessably stipulated in the lease that lease shall become null and void at a certain time "unless" the lessee begins operations or pays the rental stipulated. Where the word "unless" precedes the description of the act to be performed under an oil lease, no obligation to perform that act is imposed by the lease. McCrabb v. Moulton, C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 689, 691.

Unlimited. Without confines, unrestricted, boundless.

Unliquidated. Not ascertained in amount; not determined; remaining unassessed or unsettled, as unliquidated damages. Davies v. Turner, 61 Ga.App. 531, 6 S.E.2d 356, 358.

Unliquidated claim or demand. A claim which has not been finally determined either as to liability or amount of damages. A disputed claim. Under the law of accord and satisfaction, a claim or debt will be regarded as unliquidated if it is in dispute as to the proper amount. Paulsen Estate v. Naches-Selah Irr. Dist., 190 Wash. 205, 67 P.2d 856, 858.

For purposes of rule that prejudgment interest is allowed if a claim is liquidated but not if a claim is unliquidated, claim is "unliquidated" when the amount of the damages cannot be computed except on conflicting evidence, inferences and interpretations. Town of Longboat Key v. Carl E. Widell & Son, Fla.App., 362 So.2d 719, 723.

See also Unliquidated.

Unliquidated damages. Damages which have not been determined or calculated. Those which are not yet reduced to a certainty in respect to amount, nothing more being established than the plaintiff's right to recover, or such as cannot be fixed by a mere mathematical calculation from ascertainable data in the case. Costello v. Hartford Institute of Accounting, Inc., 193 Conn. 160, 475 A.2d 310, 314. See also Damages.

Unliquidated debt. An obligation which has not been reduced to a specific money amount; also, there may be a bona fide dispute between the parties as to this undetermined amount. Compare Liquidated debt.

Unlisted security. Security that is not listed on an organized exchange (e.g., New York Stock Exchange) and, as such, is traded on over-the-counter markets.

Unlivery. A term used in maritime law to designate the unloading of cargo of a vessel at the place where it is properly to be delivered.

An unloading clause in an automobile liability policy covers the entire process involved in the movement of articles by and from a motor vehicle to the place where they are turned over to the one to whom the insured is to make delivery, if the clause is construed in accordance with what may be called the "complete operation" rule. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. of N. Y., 108 Utah 500, 161 P.2d 428. There are, however, two other rules or doctrines used by various courts in applying the unloading clause of such a policy. One is known as the "coming to rest" rule, and the other is the "continuous passage" rule. But the complete operation rule is said to be the modern doctrine, supported by the trend of the later cases. London Guarantee & Acc. Co. v. C. B. White & Bros., 188 Va. 195, 49 S.E.2d 254.

In determining whether activity constitutes "unloading" within meaning of insurance policy which provides coverage for liability arising out of loading and unloading truck, "complete operations" rule is followed under which "unloading" embraces all operations required in any specific situation to effect a complete delivery of the article; the number of temporary or intermediate stops or resting places is immaterial. Manhattan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Travelers Ins. Co., 66 Cal.App.3d 794, 136 Cal.Rptr. 400, 402. "Loading or unloading" within homeowner's policy excluding personal liability coverage with respect to "loading or unloading" of automobiles has primary reference to objects transported from one place for delivery to some at least temporary final destination. Morari v. Atlantic Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 10 Ariz.App. 142, 457 P.2d 304, 306. "Unloading" as used in a motor vehicle liability policy has been completed when, following removal of the material from the vehicle, the deliverer has finished his handling of it and has placed the material in the hands of the receiver at the designated reception point, even though it is necessary for the consignee, or someone in his behalf, to transport it thereafter to another point. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., Fla. App., 260 So.2d 249, 255.

Unlooked for mishap or untoward event. One occurring unexpectedly and not naturally or in ordinary course of events.

Unmarketable title. Exists when for vendee to accept title proffered such would lay him open to fair probability of vexatious litigation with possibility of serious loss. It being sufficient to render it so if ordinarily prudent man with knowledge of the facts and aware of legal questions involved would not accept it in the ordinary course of business but title need not be bad in fact. Stover v. Whiting, 157 Mich.App. 462, 403 N.W.2d 575, 578. Exists where some defect of substantial character exists and facts are known which fairly raise reasonable doubt as to title. Schu v. Clapp, 154 Kan. 372, 118 P.2d 570, 574. Title is "unmarketable" where it is of such a character as to expose the purchaser to the hazards of litigation and where there are outstanding possible interests in third persons. Boocheer v. Borth, 377 N.Y.S.2d 781, 784. And mere quibbles and pecadilloes which the ingenuity of counsel can raise against a title do not alone render it an "unmarketable title". Barrett v. McMannis, 153 Kan. 420, 110 P.2d 774, 778. Compare Marketable title.

Unmarried. Its primary meaning is never having been married; but it is a word of flexible meaning and it may be construed as not having a husband or wife at the time in question; e.g. widow or widower or divorcee.
UNNATURAL OFFENSE

Unnatural offense. The infamous crime against nature; i.e., sodomy or buggery.

Unnatural will. An expression applied to disposition of estate or large portion thereof to strangers, to exclusion of natural objects of testator’s bounty without apparent reason.

Unnecessary. Not required by the circumstances of the case.

Unnecessary hardship. As considered, sufficient to establish basis for granting zoning variance, is shown by establishing that: physical characteristics of property are such that it could not be used for any permitted purpose; property could be so used only at prohibitive expense; or that characteristics of area are such that property has no value or any distress value for any permitted purpose. Eighteenth & Rittenhouse Associates v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 26 Pa.Cmwlth. 554, 364 A.2d 973, 975. Within zoning ordinance so as to authorize granting of variance on such ground if land cannot yield a reasonable return if used only for a purpose allowed in zone, such exists where the plight of owner is due to unique circumstances not to general conditions in the neighborhood and use to be authorized will not alter essential character of the locality. Calcagno v. Town Board of Town of Webster, 265 App.Div. 687, 41 N.Y.S.2d 140, 142. It has also been said that test whether terms of zoning ordinance impose an “unnecessary hardship” depends on whether use restriction is so unreasonable as to constitute an arbitrary interference with basic right of private property. Scaduto v. Town of Bloomfield, 127 N.J.L. 1, 20 A.2d 649, 650. See also Variance (Zoning).

Un ne doit prise advantage de son tort demesne /an no dwâ priyz avantstâzh do sôn för dsmên/. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur /yuwnow absárâdów déytów infânâôty sakwântâr/. One absurdity being allowed, an infinity follows.

Uno actu /yuwnow âkt(y)uw/. Lat. In a single act; by one and the same act.

Unoccupied. Within fire policy exempting insurer from liability in case dwelling is “unoccupied,” means when it is not used as a residence, when it is no longer used for the accustomed and ordinary purposes of a dwelling or place of abode, or when it is not the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. Hence a mere temporary absence of occupants of dwelling house from such premises, with intention to return thereto does not render dwelling “unoccupied”. Foley v. Sonoma County Farmers’ Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 18 Cal.2d 232, 115 P.2d 1, 2, 3. See Occupation.

Uno flatu /yuwnow fléyt(y)uw/. Lat. In one breath. Uno flatu, et uno intuittu, at one breath, and in one view.

Unprecedented. Having no precedent or example, novel, new, unexampled. State v. Malone, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 292, 300. Unusual and extraordinary; affording no reasonable warning or expectation of recurrence.

Unprecedented rainfall. An unusual and extraordinary rainfall as has no example or parallel in the history of rainfall in the vicinity affected, or as affords no reasonable warning or expectation that it will likely occur again.

Unprofessional conduct. That which is by general opinion considered to be unprofessional because immoral, unethical or dishonorable. State Board of Dental Examiners v. Savelle, 90 Colo. 177, 8 P.2d 693, 697. That which violates ethical code or rules of profession (e.g. Model Rules of Professional Conduct) or such conduct which is unbecoming member of profession in good standing. It involves breach of duty which professional ethics enjoin. Within statutes, rules, etc., promulgating standards of professional conduct for attorneys denotes conduct which it is recommended be made subject to disciplinary sanctions. Hawk v. Superior Court In and For Solano County, 42 C.A.3d 108, 116 Cal.Rptr. 713, 721. See Rules of Professional Conduct.

Unrealized profit or loss. A profit or loss that has not yet materialized. An example of an unrealized profit would be in the appreciation of stock. Although the stock price has increased, if the stock is not sold, the profit is considered a "paper" profit or unrealized profit.

Unrealized receivables. Amounts earned by a cash basis taxpayer but not yet received. Because of the method of accounting used by the taxpayer, such amounts have no income tax basis.

Unreasonable appreciation. An unrealized holding gain; frequently used in the context of marketable securities. A paper profit (q.v.). See also Equity.

Unreasonable compensation. Under the Internal Revenue Code, a deduction is allowed for "reasonable" salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered. To the extent compensation is "excessive" (i.e., "unreasonable"), no deduction will be allowed. The problem of unreasonable compensation usually is limited to closely-held corporations where the motivation is to pay out profits in some form deductible to the corporation. Deductible compensation, therefore, becomes an attractive substitute for nondeductible dividends when the shareholders also are employed by the corporation.

Unreasonable decision. Term can be applied to an administrative agency's decision only when it is determined that the evidence presented leaves no room for difference of opinion among reasonable minds. South Cent. Bell Telephone Co. v. Public Service Com'n, Ky. App., 702 S.W.2d 447, 451.

Unreasonable refusal to submit to operation. An injured employee's refusal to submit to an operation is unreasonable, so as to deprive him or her of right to workers' compensation if it appears that an operation of a simple character not involving serious suffering or danger will result in substantial physical improvement. Black Star Coal Co. v. Surgener, 297 Ky. 653, 181 S.W.2d 53, 54.

Unreasonable restraint of trade. Restraint of trade is "unreasonable," for purpose of Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1), only where it produces significant anticompetitive effect. Kerasotes Michigan Theatres, Inc. v. National Amusements, Inc., D.C.Mich., 658 F.Supp. 1514, 1518. A conclusion that a restraint of trade is unreasonable may be based either (1) on the nature or character of the contracts, or (2) on surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Under either branch of the test, the inquiry is confined to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 690, 98 S.Ct. 1355, 1364, 55 L.Ed.2d 637. Within Sherman Act, term includes agreements for price maintenance of articles moving in interstate commerce. American Tobacco Co. v. U.S., C.A.Ky., 147 F.2d 93, 108. That is, any combination or conspiracy that operates directly on prices or price structure and has for its purpose the fixing of prices. United States v. Waltham Watch Co., C.A.N.Y., 47 F.Supp. 524, 531. See Price-fixing; Restraint of trade; Robinson-Patman Act.

Unreasonable restraint on alienation. Such act is brought about by gift of absolute ownership in property followed by such condition as takes away incidents of such ownership.

Unreasonable search and seizure. See Exclusionary Rule; Fourth Amendment; Probable cause; Search.

Unrelated business income. Income recognized by an exempt organization that is generated from activities not related to the exempt purpose of the entity. For instance, the pharmacy located in a hospital often generates unrelated business income. I.R.C. § 511.

In order for income of tax exempt organization to be "unrelated business taxable income" income must be derived from an activity which is a trade or business, the trade or business must not be substantially related to the exempt purposes of the organization and the exempt organization must regularly carry on the trade or business. Oklahoma Cattlemen's Ass'n v. U.S., D.C. Okl., 310 F.Supp. 320, 321.

Unrelated business income tax. Tax levied on the unrelated business taxable income of an exempt organization. See Unrelated business income.

Unrelated offenses. A violation of law which is independent of the offense being charged. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident. Fed.Evid.R. 404(b).

Unresponsive evidence. In evidence, an answer to a question which is irrelevant to the question asked.

Unruly and dangerous animals. Within the meaning of the law, such as are likely to injure other domestic animals and persons.

Unsafe. Dangerous; not secure.

Unsatisfied judgment funds. Fund created by state law in several states to reimburse persons having claims arising out of automobile accidents who have been unable to collect from the party responsible for the accident because such party is not insured or is financially not able to pay. See also Uninsured motorist coverage.

Unsecured debt. Debt obligations that are not backed by pledged collateral or security agreement.

Unsolemn war. War denounced without a declaration; war made not upon general but special declaration; imperfect war. People v. McLeod, 1 Hill, N.Y., 409, 37 Am.Dec. 328.

Unsolemn will. In the civil law, one in which an executor is not appointed.

Unsound mind. Non-legal term referring to one who from infirmity of mind is incapable of managing himself or his affairs. The term, therefore, includes insane persons (see Insanity). It exists where there is an essential deprivation of the reasoning faculties, or where a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 582. But eccentricity, uncleanness, slovenliness, neglect of person and clothing, and offensive and disgusting personal habits do not constitute unsoundness of mind. See also Capacity.

Untenantable. Term frequently used in landlord-tenant law to mean the condition of premises that are not fit for occupancy or rental. See also Warranty (Warranty of habitability).

Unthrift. A prodigal; a spendthrift. 1 Bl.Comm. 306.

Until. Up to time of. A word of limitation, used ordinarily to restrict that which precedes to what immediately follows it, and its office is to fix some point of time or some event upon the arrival or occurrence of which what precedes will cease to exist. Empire Oil and Refining Co. v. Babson, 182 Okl. 336, 77 P.2d 682, 684.

Untoward event. See Unlooked for mishap or untoward event.

Untrue. Prima facie inaccurate, but not necessarily wilfully false. A statement is "untrue" which does not express things exactly as they are. Zolintakis v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, C.C.A.Utah, 108 F.2d 902, 905. See Misrepresentation.

Unumquodque dissolvitur eodem ligamine quo colligatum est, /yũwɔ̃kwodkwiy dysolvutar iyɔwɔdɔm ǀagɛmɔnɪ jɛktw lɔgɛjɛtɔr/. Every obligation is dissolved by the same solemnity with which it is created.

Unumquodque eodem modo quo colligatum est, dissolvitur, —quo constituitur, destruatur /yũwɔ̃kwodkwiy ǀiyɔwɔdɔm mɔwɔdɔm jɛktw lɔgɛjɛtɔm ɛst, dysolvutar, jɛktw kɔnɔstɔtwɔtwɔtɔr, dysolvutar/. Everything is dissolved by the same means by which it is put together,—destroyed by the same means by which it is established.

Unumquodque est id quod est principalis in ipso /yũwɔ̃kwodkwiy ɛst ið kwɔd ɛst prɪnkwɔl(i)yɔs ǀn ipswana/. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself.

Unumquodque principiorum est sibimetipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda /yũwɔ̃kwodkwiy prɔnslipɔyɾɔm ɛst sibamɔmpɔs ǀɛfɛdiz, ɛt prɔspikwɔyvɔ ǀvən sɔnt prɔbnɔdwa/. Every general principle [or maxim of law] is its own pledge or warrant; and things that are clearly true are not to be proved.

Unus nullus rule, the /ɔs yũwɔs nũs rũwl/. The rule of evidence which obtains in the civil law, that the testimony of one witness is equivalent to the testimony of none.

Unusual punishment. See Corporal punishment; Punishment (Cruel and unusual punishment).

Unvalued policy. One where the value of property insured is not settled in policy, and in case of loss must be agreed on or proved. Hartford Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 256 Ky. 338, 76 S.W.2d 17, 18.

Unwholesome food. Food not fit to be eaten; food which if eaten would be injurious.

Unworthy. Unbecoming; discreditable; not having suitable qualities or value.

Unwritten law. All that portion of the law, observed and administered in the courts, which has not been enacted or promulgated in the form of a statute or ordinance, including the unenacted portions of the common law, general and particular customs having the force of law, and the rules, principles, and maxims established by judicial precedents or the successive like decisions of the courts. See also Natural law.

UPA. Uniform Partnership Act.

Upkeep. The act of keeping up or maintaining; maintenance, repair.

Uplands. Lands bordering on bodies of waters.

Uplifted hand. The hand raised towards the heavens, in one of the forms of taking an oath, instead of being laid upon the Gospels.

Upper bench. The court of king’s bench, in England, was so called during the interval between 1649 and 1660, the period of the commonwealth, Rolle being then chief justice. See 3 Bl.Comm. 202.

Upset price. The price at which any subject, as lands or goods, is exposed to sale by auction, below which it is not to be sold. In a final decree in foreclosure, the decree should name an upset price large enough to cover costs and all allowances made by the court, receiver’s certificates and interest, liens prior to the bonds, amounts diverted from the earnings, and all undetermined claims which will be settled before the confirmation and sale.

Upstreaming. Practice by parent corporation of using cash flow or other assets of subsidiary for its own use or for purposes not necessarily tied to those of subsidiary.

U.R. Initials of “uti rogas,” be it as you desire, a ballot thus inscribed, by which the Romans voted in favor of a bill or candidate.

Urban. Of or belonging to a city or town. Within city limits. Derived from the Latin “urbanis,” which in that language imports the same meaning. City of South Pasadena v. City of San Gabriel, 134 Cal.App. 403, 25 P.2d 516.

Urban homestead. See Homestead.

Urban renewal. Comprehensive term embracing redevelopment plan indicating its relationship to such local objectives as appropriate land uses, improved traffic, public transportation, public utilities, recreation, community facilities and other public improvements. It also includes acquisition of air rights over highways and railroads which have a blighting influence if the rights are developed for low or moderate income housing.

Urban servitude. In the civil law, city servitudes, or servitudes of houses are called “urban.” They are the easements appertaining to the building and construction of houses; as, for instance, the right to light and air, or the right to build a house so as to throw the rain-water on a neighbor’s house.
Urbs /ürbs/. Lat. In Roman law, a city, or a walled town. Sometimes it is put for civitas, and denotes the inhabitants, or both the city and its inhabitants; i.e., the municipality or commonwealth. By way of special pre-eminence, urbs meant the city of Rome.

Ure /yūr/. L. Fr. Effect; practice. Mis en ure, put in practice; carried into effect.

URES A. Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Divorce Act.

U.S. An abbreviation for "United States."

Usage. A reasonable and lawful public custom in a locality concerning particular transactions which is either known to the parties, or so well established, general, and uniform that they must be presumed to have acted with reference thereto. Practice in fact. Electrical Research Products v. Gross, C.C.A.Alaska, 120 F.2d 301, 305. Uniform practice or course of conduct followed in certain lines of business or professions or some procedure or phase thereof. Turner v. Donovan, 3 Cal. App.2d 485, 39 P.2d 858, 859. Usage cannot be proved by isolated instances, but must be certain, uniform and notorious. Unkovich v. New York Cent. R. Co., 128 N.J.Eq. 377, 17 A.2d 558, 561. Habitual or customary practice which prevails within geographical or sociological area, and is course of conduct based upon series of actual occurrences, and in order to be controlling upon parties to contract, it must be adopted by them, or be well known to parties or to persons in their circumstances. Sam Levitz Furniture Co. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 10 Ariz.App. 225, 457 P.2d 938, 941. See also Custom and usage; Local usage; Trade usage.

"Custom" distinguished. "Usage" is a repetition of acts, and differs from "custom" in that the latter is the law or general rule which arises from such repetition; while there may be usage without custom, there cannot be a custom without a usage accompanying or preceding it. U. S. for Use of E & R Const. Co., Inc. v. Guy H. James Const. Co., D.C.Tenn., 390 F.Supp. 1193, 1209. It is distinguished from "custom" in that "usage" derives its efficacy from assent of parties to transaction, and hence is important only in consensual agreements, while "custom" derives its efficacy from its adoption into the law, is binding irrespective of any manifestation of assent by parties concerned, and may be of importance in any department of law. Gulf Refining Co. v. Universal Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 32 F.2d 555, 557.

Fair usage. See Fair use doctrine.

General usage. One which prevails generally throughout the country, or is followed generally by a given profession or trade, and is not local in its nature or observance.

Usage of trade. The prevailing and accepted customs within a particular trade or industry. It is implied that merchants are cognizant of the usage of their trade. A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation, or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question.

See U.C.C. § 1-205(2). See also Course of dealing; Trade usage.

Usance. In mercantile law, the common period fixed by the usage or custom or habit of dealing between the country where a bill is drawn, and that where it is payable, for the payment of bills of exchange. It means, in some countries, a month, in others two or more months, and in others half a month.

U.S.D.C. United States District Court.

Use, v. To make use of; to convert to one's service; to employ; to avail oneself of; to utilize; to carry out a purpose or action by means of; to put into action or service, especially to attain an end. State v. Howard, 221 Kan. 51, 557 P.2d 1280, 1281.

Term "use" of narcotics, for purposes of statute defining offense of narcotics use, refers to act of injecting or ingesting controlled substance or narcotic. People v. Jones, 5 Dist., 189 C.A.3d 398, 234 Cal.Rptr. 408, 412.

Use, n. Act of employing everything, or state of being employed; application, as the use of a pen, or his machines are in use. Also the fact of being used or employed habitually; usage, as, the wear and tear resulting from ordinary use. Berry-Kofron Dental Laboratory Co. v. Smith, 345 Mo. 922, 137 S.W.2d 452, 454, 455, 456. The purpose served; a purpose, object or end for useful or advantageous nature. Brown v. Kennedy, Ohio App., 49 N.E.2d 417, 418. To put or bring into action or service; to employ for or apply to a given purpose. Beggs v. Texas Dept. of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Tex.Civ.App., 496 S.W.2d 252, 254. To avail oneself of; to employ; to utilize; to carry out a purpose or action by means of; to put into action or service, especially to attain an end. State v. Howard, 221 Kan. 51, 557 P.2d 1280, 1281.

A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or terre-tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

A right in one person, called the "cestui que use," to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same, and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses and trusts are not so much different things as different aspects of the same subject. A use regards principally the beneficial interest; a trust regards principally the nominal ownership. The usage of the two terms is, however, widely different. The word "use" is employed to denote either an estate vested since the statute of uses, and by force of that statute, or to denote such an estate created before the statute as, had it been created since, would have become a legal estate by force of the statute. The word "trust" is employed since that statute to denote the relation between the party invest¬ ed with the legal estate (whether by force of that statute or independently of it) and the party beneficially enti¬ tled, who has hitherto been said to have the equitable estate.

See also Beneficial use; Best use; Charitable use; Con¬ forming use; Exclusive use; Highest and best use; Nonconforming use; Public use; Raising a use; Unauthorized use.

Civil law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from "usufruct," which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy.

Conveyancing. "Use" literally means "benefit;" thus, in an ordinary assignment of chattels, the assignor trans¬ fers the property to the assignee for his "absolute use and benefit." In the expressions "separate use," "super¬ stitious use," and "charitable use," "use" has the same meaning.

Non-technical sense. The "use" of a thing means that one is to enjoy, hold, occupy, or have some manner of benefit thereof. Use also means usefulness, utility, ad¬ tvantage, productive of benefit.

Generally

Cestui que use. A person for whose use and benefit lands or tenements are held by another. The latter, before the statute of uses, was called the "feoffee to use," and held the nominal or legal title.

Charitable use. See Charitable.

Conditional use. See Special exception.

Contingent use. A use limited to take effect upon the happening of some future contingent event; as where lands are conveyed to the use of A. and B., after a marriage shall be had between them.

Exclusive use. See that title.

Executed use. The first use in a conveyance upon which the statute of uses operates by bringing the possession to it, the combination of which, i.e., the use and the posses¬ sion, form the legal estate, and thus the statute is said to execute the use.

Executing uses. These are springing uses, which confer a legal title answering to an executory devise; as when a limitation to the use of A. in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B., to arise at a future period, or on a given event.

Feoffee to uses. A person to whom (before the statute of uses) land was conveyed "for the use" of a third person.
He held the nominal or legal title, while the third person, called the "cestui que use," was entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the estate.

Official use. An active use before the statute of uses, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses; as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds among B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty, he had the legal possession of the estate to be sold.

Passive use. A permissive use (q.v.).

Permissive use. A passive use which was resorted to before the statute of uses, in order to avoid a harsh law; as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture. It was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy; as a conveyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate.

Resulting use. A use raised by equity for the benefit of the feoffee who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. A resulting use arises where the legal seisin is transferred, and no use is expressly declared, nor any consideration or evidence of intent to direct the use. The use then remains in the original grantor, for it cannot be supposed that the estate was intended to be given away, and the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to such resulting use.

Secondary use. A use limited to take effect in der¬ egation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a "shift¬ ing use," as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that, when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs.

Shifting use. A use which is so limited that it will be made to shift or transfer itself, from one beneficiary to another, upon the occurrence of a certain event after its creation. For example, an estate is limited to the use of
A. and his heirs, provided that, upon the return of B. from Rome, it shall be to the use of C. and his heirs; this is a shifting use, which transfers itself to C. when the event happens. 2 Bl.Comm. 335. These shifting uses are common in all settlements; and, in marriage settle¬ m ents, the first use is always to the owner in fee till the marriage, and then to other uses. The fee remains with the owner until the marriage, and then it shifts as uses arise.

Springing use. A use limited to arise on a future event where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor, or remains in him in the meantime.

Statute of uses. An English statute enacted in 1536 (27 Hen. VIII, c. 10), directed against the practice of creat¬ ing uses in lands, and which converted the purely eq¬ uitable title of persons entitled to a use into a legal title or absolute ownership with right of possession. The statute is said to "execute the use," that is, it abolishes the intervening estate of the feoffee to uses, and makes the beneficial interest of the cestui que use an absolute legal title.

Superstitious use. See that title.

Use and habitation. Within a grant does not mean the exclusive use and habitation, but the necessities of the grantee are determinative of extent of privileges to be enjoyed. Barrett v. Barrett, La.App., 5 So.2d 381, 383.

Use and occupation. This is the name of an action, being a variety of assumpsit, to be maintained by a landlord against one who has had the occupation and enjoyment of an estate, under a contract to pay therefor, express or implied, but not under such a lease as would support an action specifically for rent. Thackray v. Ritz, 130 Misc. 403, 223 N.Y.S. 668, 669.

Use plaintiff. In common law pleading, one for whose use (benefit) an action is brought in the name of another. Thus, where the assignee of a chose in action is not allowed to sue in his own name, the action would be entitled "A. B. (the assignor) for the Use of C. D. (the assignee) against E. F." In this case, C. D. is called the "use plaintiff."

Usee. A person for whose use a suit is brought; otherwise termed the "use plaintiff."

Useful. The basic quid pro quo contemplated by the Constitution and the congress for granting a patent monopoly is the benefit derived by the public from an invention with substantial utility. Specific benefit must exist in currently available form. Brenner v. Manson, 383 U.S. 519, 534, 535, 86 S.Ct. 1033, 1041, 1042, 16 L.Ed.2d 69. By "useful" is meant such an invention as may be applied to some beneficial use in society, in contradistinction to an invention which is illegal, injurious to morals or against public policy.

Useful life. In accounting and taxation, the period of time for which an asset is capable of being used for the production of income.

For income tax purposes, the "useful life" of depreciable property is period over which asset may reasonably be expected to be useful to taxpayer in his trade or business or in production of income, and such is necessarily an estimate made at time when property is first put to use. Cohn v. U.S., C.A.Tenn., 259 F.2d 371, 377. Useful life for depreciation purposes is an estimate; length of the useful period must be shown by evidence that allows it to be estimated with reasonable accuracy. Richard S. Miller & Sons, Inc. v. U.S., Ct.Cl., 537 F.2d 446, 455. The term "depreciable life," as used in general excise tax law, is synonymous with the term "useful life" as used for purpose of the depreciation deduction under income tax law. Matter of 711 Motors, Inc., 56 Hawii 644, 547 P.2d 1343, 1347.

Usefulness. Capabilities for use. The word pertains to the future as well as to the past.

Use immunity. Term generally refers to order of court which compels witness to give testimony of self-incriminating nature but provides that such testimony may not be used as evidence in subsequent prosecution of such witness. People v. Sutter, 134 C.A.3d 806, 184 Cal.Rptr. 829, 833. See also immunity.

Use in commerce. A prerequisite for trademark registration. An applicant must show a bona fide intention to use the mark in commerce with respect to the goods or services for which registration is sought and not merely to reserve any rights in a mark. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1051(b). See also Trademark.

User. The actual exercise or enjoyment of any right, property, drugs, franchise, etc.

Adverse user. Such a use of the property under claim of right as the owner himself would make, asking no permission, and disregarding all other claims to it, so far as they conflict with this use. See also Adverse possession.

User de action /yúzwár dékshan/. L. Fr. In old practice, the pursuing or bringing an action.

User fee. Charges imposed on persons for the use of a particular facility. A charge designed only to make the user of state-provided facilities pay a reasonable fee to help defray the costs of their construction and maintenance may be constitutionally imposed on interstate and domestic users alike. Evansville-Vanderburgh A.A. Dist. v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 405 U.S. 707, 714, 92 S.Ct. 1349, 1354, 31 L.Ed.2d 620. Such charges are usually upheld as long as they are neither discriminatory nor excessive.

Use tax. A sales tax that is collectible by the seller where the purchaser is domiciled in a different state. A tax on the use, consumption, or storage of tangible property, usually at the same rate as the sales tax, and levied for the purpose of preventing tax avoidance by the purchase of articles in a state or taxing jurisdiction which does not levy sales taxes or has a lower rate. A tax on the use, consumption, or storage of tangible property, usually at the same rate as the sales tax, and levied for the purpose of preventing tax avoidance by the purchase of articles in a state or taxing jurisdiction which does not levy sales taxes or has a lower rate.

A levy on privilege of using, within taxing state, property purchased outside the state, if the property would have been subject to the sales tax had it been purchased at home. King v. L & L Marine Service, Inc., Mo., 647 S.W.2d 524, 526. Such tax ordinarily serves to complement sales tax by eliminating incentive to make major purchases in states with lower sales taxes; it requires resident who shops out-of-state to pay use tax equal to sales tax savings. Minneapolis Star and Tribune Co. v. Minnesota Com'r of Revenue, U.S.Minn., 460 U.S. 575, 103 S.Ct. 1365, 1370, 75 L.Ed.2d 295.

Use variance. See Variance.

Usher. This word is said to be derived from "huissier," and is the name of a subordinate officer in some English courts of law.

Usher of the Black Rod. In old English law, the gentleman usher of the black rod is an officer of the House of Lords appointed by letters patent from the crown. The office was instituted in 1350. So named for... the staff of office, an ebony stick surmounted with a gold lion. His duties are, by himself or deputy, to desire the attendance of the Commons in the House of Peers when the royal assent is given to bills, either by the king or queen in person or by commission, to execute orders for the commitment of persons guilty of breach of privilege, and also to assist in the introduction of peers when they take the oaths and their seats. As to the first he must knock three times at the door of the House of Commons to announce the entry, a ceremony dating from the House’s indignation at Charles I’s attempt to arrest Pym, Hampden and 3 other members of the House in 1642.

Using mail to defraud. The elements of this offense are the formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud, and use of mails for purpose of executing or attempting to execute such scheme or artifice; the latter element being gist of the offense. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341. Stryker v. United States, C.C.A.Colo., 95 F.2d 601, 604, 605. The crime is complete when mails are used in such scheme, and what happened subsequently is not controlling. United States v. Ames, D.C.N.Y., 39 F.Supp. 885, 886. See Mail fraud.

Using the service of another for pay. This phrase as used in Compensation Act defining employer means right to control the means and manner of that service, as distinguished from results of such service; the word “service” meaning the performance of labor for the benefit of another. Rutherford v. Tobin Quarries, 336 Mo. 1171, 82 S.W.2d 918, 923.

Usque /uskwiy/. Lat. Up to; until. This is a word of Usque /usufructus/. In the civil law, a real right of limited duration on the property of another. The features of the right vary with the nature of the things subject to it as consumables or nonconsumables. Civ. Code La. art. 535. The right of using and enjoying and receiving the profits of property that belongs to another, and a “usufructuary” is a person who has the usufruct or right of enjoying anything in which he has no property interest. Marshall v. Marshall, Tex.App.—Dallas, 735 S.W.2d 587, 598.

There are three types of “usufructs”: natural profits produced by the subject of the usufruct, industrial profits produced by cultivation, and civil profits, which are rents, freights and revenues from annuities and from other effects or rights. Marshall v. Marshall, Tex.App.—Dallas, 735 S.W.2d 587, 598. See also Legal Usufruct.

Usufructuary /usufructarius/. In the civil law, one who has the usufruct or right of enjoying anything in which he has no property.

Usufruit /usufruit/. In French law, the same as the usufruit of the English and Roman law.

Usura /usufructus/. Lat. In the civil law, money given for the use of money; interest. Commonly used in the plural, “usura” /usufructus/. Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing lent. But to have an understanding [literally, to breathe or whisper), in an incidental way, about some compensation to be made at the pleasure of the borrower, is not lawful.

Usura manifesta /yuwz(y)ura maenafesta/. Manifest or open usury, as distinguished from usura velata, veiled or concealed usury, which consists in giving a bond for the loan, in the amount of which is included the stipulated interest.

Usura maritima /yuwz(y)ura maritama/’mërätáyma/. Interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and is not affected by the usury laws.

Usurarius /yuwzhareriyas/. In old English law, a usurper.

Usurious /yuwzhuriyas/. Pertaining to usury; partaking of the nature of usury; involving usury; tainted with usury; as, a usurious contract. See Usury.

Usurious contract. A contract where interest to be paid exceeds the rate established by statute. Commerce Farm Credit Co. v. Ramp, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 1144, 1149. See also Usury.

Usurp /yuwsarp/. To seize and hold any office by force, and without right; applied to seizure of office, place, functions, powers, rights, etc. of another. State ex rel. Scanes v. Babb, 124 W.Va. 428, 20 S.E.2d 683, 686.

Usurpation /yuwsarpeysh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, the interruption of a usucaption, by some act on the part of the real owner.

Usurpation /yuwsarpeyshyan/. The unlawful encroachment or assumption of the use of property, power or authority which belongs to another. An interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession.

The unlawful seizure or assumption of sovereign power. The assumption of government or supreme power by force or illegally, in derogation of the constitution and of the rights of the lawful ruler.

Usurpation for which writ of prohibition may be granted involves attempted exercise of power not possessed by inferior officer.

Usurpation of advowson /yuwsarpeyshyan av advawzan/. An injury which consists in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson or right of presentation, and which happens when a stranger who has no right presents a clerk, and the latter is thereupon admitted and instituted.

Usurpation of franchise or office /yuwsarpeyshyan av fränchays ar ôfas/. The unjustly intruding upon or exercising any office, franchise, or liberty belonging to another. "Usurpation" of public office authorizing quo warranto action under statute may be with or without forcible seizure of office and prerogatives thereof, and may consist of mere unauthorized assumption and exercise of power in performing duties of office upon claim of right thereto. State ex rel. Kirk v. Wheatley, 133 Ohio St. 164, 12 N.E.2d 491, 493, 10 O.O. 236. See also Usurpation.

Usurped power. See Usurp; Usurpation.

Usurper. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

Usurper of a public office. One who either intrudes into a vacant office or ousts the incumbent without any color of title. Neal v. Parker, 200 Ark. 10, 139 S.W.2d 41, 44. One who intrudes on office and assumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. Alleger v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663. Any person attempting to fill pretended office attempted to be created by an unconstitutional law. Bodcaw Lumber Co. of Louisiana v. Jordan, La.App., 14 So.2d 98, 101.

Usury. Charging an illegal rate of interest. Collectively, the laws of a jurisdiction regulating the charging of interest rates. A usurious loan is one whose interest rates are determined to be in excess of those permitted by the usury laws. An illegal contract for a loan or forbearance of money, goods, or things in action, by which illegal interest is reserved, or agreed to be reserved or taken. An unconscionable and exorbitant rate or amount of interest. An unlawful contract upon the loan of money, to receive the same again with exorbitant increase. The reserving and taking, or contracting to reserve and take, either directly or by indirection, a greater sum for the use of money than the lawful interest. See also Legal interest; Loansharking; Usury laws.

Old English law. Interest of money; increase for the loan of money; a reward for the use of money. 2 Bl.Comm. 454. The taking of any compensation whatever for the use of money.

Usury laws. Statutes that prohibit finance charges (interest and other forms of compensation for loaning money) above a certain level for debt. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 891 et seq. with respect to extortionate credit transactions. See also Loan sharking; Usury.

Usus /yuws/. Lat. In Roman law, a precarious enjoyment of land, corresponding with the right of habitatio of houses, and being closely analogous to the tenancy at sufferance or at will of English law. The usurarius (i.e., tenant by usus) could only hold on so long as the owner found him convenient, and had to go so soon as ever he was in the owner's way (molestus). The usus could not have a friend to share the produce. It was scarcely permitted to him (Justinian says) to have even his wife with him on the land; and he could not let or sell, the right being strictly personal to himself.

Usus bellicci /yuwsas bélass//. Lat. In international law, warlike uses or objects. It is the usus bellicci which determine an article to be contraband.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium /yuwsas êst dominiyam fad(y)uwshiyéryam/. Use is a fiduciary dominion.

Usus et status sive possesio potius different secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei /yuwsas êt stétyas savyviy powsé(y)ow pówsh(y)as diférant skándam rãshiyownam fóray, kwam skándam rãshiyownam riyay/. Use and estate, or possession, Utility is established if only partial success is attained. Emery Industries v. Schumann, C.C.A.Ill., 111 F.2d 209, 211.

Uti possidetis /yúwta y posidíyéta/. Lat. Civil law. A species of interdict for the purpose of retaining possession of a thing, granted to one who, at the time of contesting suit, was in possession of an immovable thing, in order that he might be declared the legal possessor. See Utubi.

International law. A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war. A treaty which terminates a war may adopt this principle or that of the status quo ante bellum, or a combination of the two. In default of any treaty stipulation, the former doctrine prevails. Guillermo Alvarez y Sanches v. U.S., 42 Ct.Cl. 458.

Uti rogás /yúwta rówgá/. Lat. In Roman law, the form of words by which a vote in favor of a proposed law was orally expressed. Uti rogás, volo vel jubeo, as you ask, I will or order; I vote as you propose; I am for the law. The letters “U. R.” on a ballot expressed the same sentiment.

Utlagatus, or utlagatum /átłagétyás/-ísm/. In English law, an outlawed person; an outlaw.

Utlagatus est quasi extra legem positus. Caput gerit lupinum /átlagétyás ét kwéyésay ékstrá lýjám póztas. képat jérst íyúwpáyñsm/-í. An outlaw is, as it were, put out of the protection of the law. He bears the head of a wolf.

Utlagatus pro contumacia et fuga, non propter hoc convicts est de facto principali /átlagétyás prów köntómédiayí(y) ét fyúwga, nón próptar hók konvkiktas ét díy fáktow prínsapéylay/-í. One who is outlawed for contumacy and flight is not on that account convicted of the principal fact.

Utlage. L. Fr. An outlaw.

Utesse. An escape of a felon out of prison.

Utmest care. Term is substantially synonymous with “highest care.”

Utmest resistance. This term, under the rule that to constitute rape there must be utmost resistance by the woman, is a relative rather than a positive term, and means that greatest effort of which she is capable must be used to foil assailant. Most states have eliminated this as a requirement to prove nonconsent in rape cases; e.g. State v. Salkil, Mo., 659 S.W.2d 330.

Ut poene ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat /át piyñiy ád pókows, miyítas ád ómníyíy parvlyn(y)ay/. That the punishment may reach a few, but the fear of it affect all. A maxim in criminal law, expressive of one of the principal objects of human punishment. 4 Bl. Comm. 11.
Ut res magis valeat quam pereat /ät riyz méyjas wéllyat kwém péhriyat/. That the thing may rather have effect than be destroyed. Charitable bequests are also governed by this maxim. King v. Richardson, C.C. A.N.C., 136 F.2d 849, 858.

Utrubi /ätroby/. In the civil law, the name of a species of interdict for retaining a thing, granted for the purpose of protecting the possession of a movable thing, as the uti possidetia was granted for an immovable.

Utrumque nostrum /yuwrómwikw nóstram/. Both of us. Words used formerly in bonds.

Ut summae potestatis regis est posse quantum velit, sic magnitudinis est velle quantum possit /ät šimiy póvdástétyas riyjas ěst pósiy kwontam vylyat, sík màgnat(y)úwdanás ěst wélly kwontam pósat/. As the highest power of a king is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do.

Utter, v. To put or send (as a forged check) into circulation; to publish or put forth; to offer. To utter and publish an instrument, as a counterfeit note, is to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that it is good; uttering it is a declaration that it is good, with an intention or offer to pass it. To utter, as used in a statute against forgery and counterfeiting, means to offer, whether accepted or not, a forged instrument, with the representation, by words or actions, that the same is genuine.

The phrase “utters or publishes as true”, as used in federal forgery statute, means to make or attempt any use of a written or printed instrument or document, such as an attempt to place a check in circulation (as when it is presented for payment), whereby, or in connection with which, some assertion, representation or claim is made to another in some way or manner, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, or by words or conduct, that the check or document is genuine. United States v. Rader, W.D.Ark., 185 F.Supp. 224, aff’d 288 F.2d 452.

Uttering a forged instrument. The crime of passing a false or worthless instrument, such as a check, or counterfeit security, with the intent to defraud or injure the recipient. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 472, 479, 483. See Counterfeit; Forgery; Utter.

Utter, adj. Entire; complete; absolute; total.

Utterance. See Excited utterance; Spontaneous declarations.

Utter bar. In English law, the bar at which those barristers, usually junior men, practice who have not yet been raised to the dignity of king’s counsel. These junior barristers are said to plead without the bar; while those of the higher rank are admitted to seats within the bar, and address the court or a jury from a place reserved for them, and divided off by a bar. Also called “outer bar.”

Utter barrister. In English law, those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers, and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king’s counsel are.

Uxor /škor/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife; a woman lawfully married.

Et uxor. And his wife. A term used in indexing, abstracting, and describing conveyances made by a man and his wife as grantors, or to a man and his wife as grantees. Often abbreviated “et ux.” Thus, “John Doe et ux. to Richard Roe.”

Jure uxoris. In right of his wife. A term used of a husband who joins in a deed, is seised of an estate, brings a suit, etc., in the right or on the behalf of his wife. 3 Bl.Comm. 210.

Uxor et filius sunt nomina naturae /škor et filiyas sànt nómana natyuriy/. Wife and son are names of nature.

Uxoricide /šksorasayd/. The killing of a wife by her husband; one who murders his wife. Not a technical term of the law.

Uxor non est sui juris, sed sub potestate viri /škor nón ěst šiyjúway jùras, sêd sáb póvdástétyli víry/. A wife is not her own mistress, but is under the power of her husband.

Uxor sequitur domicilium viri /škor sèkwitar dómásili(y)am víry/. A wife follows the domicile of her husband.
V.

As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for "Victoria," "volume," or "verb;" also "vide" (see) and "voce" (word). It is also a common abbreviation of "versus," in the titles of causes, and reported cases.

V.A. Veterans Affairs (Department of); Veterans Administration. See Veterans Administration.

Vacancy. A place or position which is empty, unfilled, or unoccupied. An unoccupied or unoccupied post, position, or office. An existing office, etc., without an incumbent. The state of being destitute of an incumbent, or a proper or legally qualified officer. The term is principally applied to an interruption in the incumbency of an office, or to cases where the office is not occupied by one who has a legal right to hold it and to exercise the rights and perform the duties pertaining thereto. The word "vacancy," when applied to official positions, means, in its ordinary and popular sense, that an office is unoccupied, and that there is no incumbent who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of a future event, though the word is sometimes used with reference to an office temporarily filled.

A strip of unsurveyed and unsold public lands. Hughes v. Rhodes, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 820, 821. See also Vacant.

In fire policy insuring dwelling, term "vacant" means empty, without inanimate objects, deprived of contents; a thing is vacant when there is nothing in it; "vacant" means abandoned and not used for any purpose. Alcock v. Farmers Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of DeKalb County, Mo. App., 591 S.W.2d 126, 128. See also Vacancy, and as to vacant Possession and Succession, see those titles.

Vacantia bona /vakâšnya bówna/. Lat. In the civil law, goods without an owner, or in which no one claims a property; escheated goods.

Vacate. To annul; to set aside; to cancel or rescind. To render an act void; as, to vacate an entry of record, or a judgment. As applied to a judgment or decree it is not synonymous with "suspend" which means to stay enforcement of judgment or decree.

To put an end to; as, to vacate a street. To move out; to make vacant or empty; to leave; especially, to surrender possession by removal; to cease from occupancy. See also Annul; Reverse; Vacancy.

Vacatio /vakâšnya/ow/. Lat. In the civil law, exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation; exemption from the burden of office.

Vacation. A recess or leave of absence; a respite or time of respite from active duty or employment; an intermission or rest period during which activity or work is suspended. It is a period of freedom from duty or work, but not the end of employment. In re Dauber, 151 Pa.Super. 293, 30 A.2d 214, 216. The act or result of vacating. An intermission of procedure. It is not a termination of the relation of master and servant or employer and employee. In schools, there are customary vacations at Christmas, Easter, other holidays, and during the summer.

That period of time between the end of one term of court and the beginning of another. Compare Recess.

Vacation of judgment. The setting aside of a judgment on grounds that it was issued by mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect or fraud. While the term "vacate" has been replaced by Fed.R.Civ.P. 60, the basis for relief from judgment is the same as formerly when one sought to vacate a judgment.

Vacatur /vakât̄ar/. Lat. Let it be vacated. In practice, a rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated; a vacating.

Vacatura /vâkåtuara/. An avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice.

Vacua possessio /vâkyuwa pozêsnya/ow/. Lat. The vacant possession, i.e., free and unburdened possession, which (e.g.) a vendor had and has to give to a purchaser of lands.

Vacuity /vâkyuwatåiy/. Emptiness; vacancy; want of reality; nihility.

Vacuus /vâkyuws/. Lat. In the civil law, empty; void; vacant; unoccupied.

Vadelet /vâlét/. See Valek, valect, or vadelet.

Vades /vâdîyâ/. Lat. In the civil law, pledges; securities; bail; security for the appearance of a defendant or accused person in court.

Vadiare duellum /vâdiyëri d(y)âwâlám/. L. Lat. In old English law, to wage or gage the duellum; to wage battle; to give pledges mutually for engaging in the trial by combat.

Vadimonium /vədəmɒnɪm/ıyam/. Lat. In Roman law, bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. An ancient form of suretyship.

Vadium /véyd(i)ıyam/ıyam/. A pledge; security by pledge of property.

Vadium mortuam /véyd(i)ıyam mɔrtjuwam/. A mortgage or dead pledge; a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that, if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgagor. 2 Bl.Comm. 157.

Vadium ponere /véyd(i)ıyam pónąriy/. To take bail for the appearance of a person in a court of justice.

Vadium vivum /véyd(i)ıyam váyvam/. A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land. It was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt.

Vadlet /vədəli/. In old English law, the king’s eldest son; hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards.

Vadam /véydam/. In old records, a ford, or wading. Vad(t)am vayvam/. A species of sevam contraxit habitationis haebatey-shiyowas/. We call him a “vagabond” who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence.

Vagabond. A vagrant or homeless wanderer without means of honest livelihood. Neering v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 383 Ill. 366, 50 N.E.2d 497, 502. One who wanders from place to place, having no fixed dwelling, or, if he has one, not abiding in it; a wanderer, especially such a person who is lazy and generally worthless and without means of honest livelihood. See also Vagrant.

Vagabonds are described in old English statutes as “such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, and haunt customary taverns and ale-houses and routs about; and no man wot from whence they came, nor whither they go.” 4 Bl.Comm. 169.

Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domicilliunum contraxit habitations /vəgəbəndəm nɪŋkəpəɪməs íam kwáy nəsliəbəy domæsili(ıyam kəntrəkst həbətəyshiyowas/ı. We call him a “vagabond” who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence.

Vagrancy. At common law, the act of going about from place to place by a person without visible means of support, who is idle, and who, though able to work for his or her maintenance, refuses to do so, but lives without labor or on the charity of others.

As defined by Kansas Criminal Code, vagrancy is: (a) Engaging in an unlawful occupation; or (b) Being of the age of eighteen (18) years or over and able to work and without lawful means of support and failing or refusing to seek employment; or (c) Loitering in any community without visible means of support; or (d) Loitering on the streets or in a place open to the public with intent to solicit for immoral purposes; or (e) Deriving support in whole or in part from begging. KSA 21-4108. State vagrancy statutes, however, vary greatly, and many have been declared unconstitutional because, as drawn, they purport to punish conduct which is not criminal or are worded too vaguely to inform persons of the nature of the act declared criminal; e.g., Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156, 162, 92 S.Ct. 839, 843, 31 L.Ed.2d 110.

Vagrancy laws. See Vagrancy; Visible means of support.

Vagrant. At common law, wandering or going about from place to place by idle person who had no lawful or visible means of support and who subsisted on charity and did not work, though able to do so. State v. Harlowe, 174 Wash. 227, 24 P.2d 601.

A general term, including, in English law, the several classes of idle and disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues.

One who wanders from place to place; an idle wanderer, specifically, one who has no settled habitation, nor any fixed income or livelihood. A vagabond; a tramp. A person able to work who spends his time in idleness or immorality, having no property to support him and without some visible and known means of fair, honest and reputable livelihood. State v. Oldham, 224 N.C. 415, 30 S.E.2d 318, 319. One who is apt to become a public charge through his own laziness. People, on Complaint of McDonough, v. Gesino, Sp.Sess., 22 N.Y. S.2d 284, 285.

See Vagabond; Vagrancy.

Vagrant act. In English law, the statute 5 Geo. IV, c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. The act of 17 Geo. II divided vagrants into idle and disorderly persons; rogues and vagabonds; and incorrigible rogues. Other statutes were passed as late as 32 Geo. III bearing on this subject.

Vague. Indefinite. Uncertain; not susceptible of being understood. For purposes of determining whether statute is constitutionally infirm by reason of being vague, statute is “vague” if its prohibitions are not clearly defined, State v. Fry, 218 Neb. 558, 357 N.W.2d 216, 218; or if it does not provide explicit standards for its enforcement, Pliscou v. Holtville Unified School Dist., D.C.Cal., 411 F.Supp. 842, 850. See also Vagueness doctrine.

Vagueness doctrine. Under this principle, a law (e.g., criminal statute) which does not fairly inform a person of what is commanded or prohibited is unconstitutional as violative of due process. The doctrine originates in due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, and is basis for striking down legislation which contains insufficient warning of what conduct is unlawful. McCrery v. State, Ala.Cr.App., 429 So.2d 1121, 1123. It requires that penal statutes give notice to ordinary person of what is prohibited and provide definite standards to guide discretionary actions of police officers so as to prevent arbitrary and discriminatory law enforcement. Porta v. Mayor, City of Omaha, Neb., D.C.Neb., 593
VALIDITY OF A TREATY. The term “validity,” as applied to treaties, admits of two descriptions—necessary and voluntary. By the former is meant that which results from the treaties having been made by persons authorized by, and for purposes consistent with, the constitution. By voluntary validity is meant that validity which a treaty, voidable by reason of violation by the other party, still continues to retain by the silent acquiescence and will of the nation. It is voluntary, because it is at the will of the nation to let it remain or to extinguish it. The principles which govern and decide the necessary validity of a treaty are of a judicial nature, while those on which its voluntary validity depends are of a political nature.

VALID REASON. These words, in a statute providing for the withdrawal of the names of petitioner for a road improvement district when valid reasons therefor are presented, mean a sound sufficient reason, such as fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, duress, etc.; a reason upon which the petitioner could support or justify his change in attitude. The word “valid” necessarily possesses an element of legal strength and force, and inconsistent positions have no such force.

VALLEY. As applied to a mountainous country, term refers to lowlands, in contradistinction to mountain slopes and ridges.

VALUE. The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preference, according to which the first fruits and tenths are collected and paid. It is commonly called the “king’s books,” by which the clergy are at present rated.

VALUE OF A TRENURY. The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. In feudal law, the guardian in chivalry had the right of tendering to his infant ward a suitable match, without “disparagement” (inequality), which, if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage (valor maritagi) to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give, to the guardian for such an alliance. 2 Bl.Comm. 70.

A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married, by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this though no convenient marriage had been offered.

Valuable. Of financial or market value; commanding or worth a good price; of considerable worth in any respect, whether monetary or intrinsic.

Valuable Consideration. A class of consideration upon which a promise may be founded, which entitles the promisee to enforce his claim against an unwilling promisor. For contract, may consist either in some right, interest, profit, or benefit accruing to one party, or some forbearance, detriment, loss, or responsibility given, suffered, or undertaken by the other. Atherton v. Atherton, Mo.App., 480 S.W.2d 513, 518. A gain or loss to either party is not essential, it is sufficient if the party in whose favor the contract is made parts with a right which he might otherwise exert. Miller Ice Co. v. Crim, 299 Ill.App. 615, 20 N.E.2d 347. It need not be translatable into dollars and cents, but is sufficient if it consists of performance, or promise thereof, which promisor treats and considers of value to him. It is not essential that the person to whom the consideration moves should be benefited, provided the person from whom it moves is, in a legal sense, injured. The injury may consist of a compromise of a disputed claim or forbearance to exercise a legal right, the alteration in position being regarded as a detriment that forms a consideration independent of the actual value of the right forborne. Mutual promises in contract is sufficient. For Fair and valuable consideration see that title. See also Consideration.

Valuable improvements. As used in a statute relating to the specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of real estate, improvements of such character as add permanent value to the freehold, and such as would not likely be made by one not claiming the right to the possession and enjoyment of the freehold estate. Improvements of a temporary and unsubstantial character will not amount to such part performance as, when accompanied by possession alone, will take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds. The valuable improvements may, however, be slight and of small value, provided they are substantial and permanent in their nature, beneficial to the freehold, and such as none but an owner would ordinarily make.

Valuable papers. This term as used in statute requiring that a holographic will devising realty be found among the "valuable papers" of decedent, in order to be effective, refers to such papers as are regarded by the testator as worthy of preservation and therefore in his estimation of some value. Franzoni v. Podesta, 21 Tenn. App. 577, 113 S.W.2d 769, 773, 777. And does not refer only to papers having money value. Pulley v. Cartwright, 23 Tenn.App. 690, 137 S.W.2d 336, 340.

Valuation. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth or price of a thing. See also Appraisal; Assessed valuation; Fair value; Special use valuation; Value.

Valuation list. In English law, a list of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish, showing the names of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the property, the gross estimated rental, and the ratable value; prepared by the overseers of each parish in a union under section 14 of the union assessment committee act, 1862 (St. 25 & 26 Vict., c. 103), for the purposes of the poor rate.

Value. The utility of an object in satisfying, directly or indirectly, the needs or desires of human beings, called by economists "value in use," or its worth consisting in the power of purchasing other objects, called "value in exchange." Joint Highway Dist. No. 9 v. Ocean Shore R. Co., 128 Cal.App. 743, 18 P.2d 413, 417. Also the estimated or appraised worth of any object or property, calculated in money. To estimate the worth of; to rate at a certain price; to appraise; or to place a certain estimate of worth on in a scale of values. Hoard v. Wiley, 113 Ga.App. 328, 147 S.E.2d 782, 784.

Any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. The term is often used as an abbreviation for "valuable consideration," especially in the phrases "purchaser for value," "holder for value," etc. See Consideration; Valuable consideration.

In economic consideration, the word "value," when used in reference to property, has a variety of significations, according to the connection in which the word is employed. It may mean the cost of a production or reproduction of the property in question, when it is sometimes called "sound value;" or it may mean the purchasing power of the property, or the amount of money which the property will command in exchange, if sold, this being called its "market value," which in the case of any particular property may be more or less than either the cost of its production or its value measured by its utility to the present or some other owner; or the word may mean the subjective value of property, having in view its profitableness for some particular purpose, sometimes termed its "value for use."

Salable value, actual value, market value, fair value, reasonable value, and cash value may all mean the same thing and may be designed to effect the same purpose. Cummings v. National Bank, 101 U.S. 153, 25 L.Ed. 903.

"Value," as used in Art. I, § 8, U.S.Const., giving Congress power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, is the true, inherent, and essential value, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere and to every one, and in this sense regulating the value of the coinage is merely determining and maintaining coignage composed of certain coins within certain limitations at a certain specific composition and weight.

For taxation purposes, "value" is the worth established by bargaining process of willing buyer and willing seller. In re Montpelier & Barre R.R. Corp., 135 Vt. 102, 369 A.2d 1379, 1381. See Fair market value.

Value as it relates to stolen property is the market value at the time and place of the taking, or, in case of property without a market value, the cost of replacing it. Givens v. State, 143 Tex.Cr.R. 277, 158 S.W.2d 535, 536. The National Stolen Property Act defines value as "face, par or market value, whichever is the greatest ..." 18 U.S.C.A. § 2311. U.S. v. Wentz, C.A.W.Va., 800 F.2d 1325, 1326.

Value as used in eminent domain proceeding means market value (q.v.). Epstein v. Boston Housing Authority, 317 Mass. 297, 58 N.E.2d 135, 137. See also Just compensation; Market value.

Most generally, a legal basis for enforcing a transfer of property or an undertaking, including a promise or other commitment, which is different from common-law consideration. For purposes of the U.C.C. generally, see U.C.C. § 1-201(44); for purposes of due-course status, see U.C.C. §§ 3-303; 4-208 & 4-209.

Under U.C.C. § 1-201(44), a person gives "value" for rights if he acquires them: (a) in return for a binding commitment to extend credit or for the extension of immediately available credit whether or not drawn upon and whether or not a chargeback is provided for in the event of difficulties in collection; or (b) as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a pre-existing claim; or (c) by accepting delivery pursuant to a pre-existing contract for purchase; or (d) generally, in return for any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract.

Actual cash value. In insurance, its customary meaning is replacement cost new less normal depreciation, though it may be determined by current market value of similar property or by the cost to replace or repair the property.

Book value. The value at which assets of a business are carried on the books of the company. The book value of fixed assets is arrived at by subtracting accumulated depreciation from the cost of the fixed assets. It may also refer to the net worth of a business arrived at by subtracting liabilities from assets. See also Book.

Cash surrender value. In life insurance, the amount which the insurer will pay before death when the policy is cancelled. See also Cash value.

Intrinsic value. The value which a thing has as of itself, and not the value reflecting extrinsic factors such as market conditions.

Liquidation value. The value of a business or of an asset when it is sold other than in the ordinary course of business as in the liquidation of a business.

Market value. Fair value of property as between one who wants to purchase it and another who desires to sell it. What willing purchaser will give for property under fair market conditions. People v. F. H. Smith Co., 230 App.Div. 268, 243 N.Y.S. 446, 451. Not what the owner could obtain after reasonable and ample time, such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make a sale of like property. Wade v. Rathbun, 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. 758, 67 P.2d 765, 766. See Fair cash market value; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Net value. The "reserve" or "net value" of a life insurance policy is the fund accumulated out of the net premiums during the earlier years of the policy where the premium throughout life or a term of years exceeds the actual value of the risk. The "net value" of a policy is equivalent to "reserve," and means that part of the annual premium paid by insured which, according to the American Experience Table of Mortality, must be set apart to meet or mature the company's obligations to insured, the net value of a policy on a given date being its actual value, its reserve.

No par value. Stock of a corporation which has no par value but which represents a proportionate share of the ownership of the corporation.

Optimal use value. Synonym for Most suitable use value (q.v.).

Par value. The nominal value of stock arrived at by dividing the total stated capital stock by the number of shares authorized.

Residual value. Amount expected to be obtained when a fixed asset is disposed of at the end of its useful life (also called scrap or salvage value).

Scrap value. The value of the constituent materials and components of a thing; not its value for the purpose for which it was made.

Stated value. The dollar value of no par stock established by the corporation as constituting the capital of the corporation.

Surrender value. See Cash surrender value, above.

True value. As referring to value at which property must be assessed, is price which would be paid therefor on assessing date to willing seller, not compelled to sell, by willing purchaser, not compelled to purchase. New York Bay R. Co. v. Kelly, 22 N.J.Misc. 204, 37 A.2d 624, 628.

Use value. The value established by the usefulness of an object and not its value for sale or exchange.

Value of matter in controversy. See Amount in controversy; Jurisdictional amount.

Value received. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a lawful consideration has been given for it. Clayton v. Clayton, 125 N.J.L. 537, 17 A.2d 496, 497. It is prima facie evidence of consideration, Moses v. Bank, 149 U.S. 298, 13 S.Ct. 900, 37 L.Ed. 743; although not necessarily in money.

Value added tax. See Tax.

Valued policy. Insurance policy in which a definite valuation is by agreement of both parties put on the subject-matter of the insurance and written in the face of the policy and such value, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is conclusive on the parties. One in which both property insured and loss are valued. It is distinguished from an "open policy", which is one where the value of the property insured is not settled in the policy. Perez v. Los Fresno State Bank, Tex.Civ.App.1974, 512 S.W.2d 796, 800.

Valueless. Worthless.

Valuer /vélyuwar/. A person whose business is to appraise or set a value upon property; an appraiser.

Valvazors, or vidamas /vévalsórs/vydamz/. An obsolete title of dignity next to a peer.

Vana est illa potentia que nunquam venit in actum /véyrno ēst ilā pātīnāsh(i)yā kwī nākykam viynat an ēktam/. That power is vain [idle or useless] which never comes into action [which is never exercised].
Vandalism. Such willful or malicious acts as are intended to damage or destroy property. Vort v. Westbrook, 221 Ga. 39, 142 S.E.2d 813, 814, 815. Willful or ignorant destruction of property of another, commonly referring to artistic or literary treasures. Hostility to or contempt for what is beautiful or venerable. Unkelbee v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore, D.C.Mun.App., 41 A.2d 168, 170. Vandalism connotes act of vandalism and in ordinary usage is not limited to destruction of works of art, but has broadened its meaning to include destruction of property generally. Eis v. Hawkeye-Security Ins. Co., 192 Kan. 103, 386 P.2d 206, 210. Within dwelling policy means the willful and malicious destruction of property generally, and the destruction must have been intentional or in such reckless and wanton disregard of rights of others as to be equivalent of intent, and malice may be inferred from act of destruction. Livaditis v. American Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa., 117 Ga.App. 297, 160 S.E.2d 449, 450. See also Desebrace; Desecrate.

Vani timores sunt estimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virum /vévnay tamoraz sánt éstiménday, kway nón kéydnont in konstántam viram/. Those are to be regarded as idle fears which do not affect a steady [firm or resolute] man.

Vani timoris justa excusatio non est /vévnay tamoraz jássta ékskyuwéysh(i)yow nón ést/. A frivolous fear is not a legal excuse.

Vantarius /ventér(i)yas/. L. Lat. In old records, a forefootman.

Variable annuity. An annuity whose periodic payments depend upon some uncertain outcome, such as stock market prices. An annuity contract in which the premiums or payments are invested in securities to keep pace with inflation. The payments, therefore, which the annuitant receives vary from time to time. See also Annuity.

Variable interest rate. Interest rate that is set according to fluctuation in the prime rate; it is a floating rate.

Variable-rate mortgage. See Mortgage.

Variance. Civil and criminal practice. A discrepancy or disagreement between two instruments or two pleading allegations in the same cause, which should by law be entirely consonant. Thus, if the evidence adduced by the plaintiff does not agree with the allegations of his pleadings, it is a variance. A disagreement between the allegations and the proof in some matter which, in point of law, is essential to the charge or claim. The test of materiality of "variance" in an information is whether the pleading so fully and correctly informs a defendant of offense with which he is charged that, taking into account proof which is introduced against him, he is not misled in making his defense. People v. Guerrero, 22 Cal.2d 183, 137 P.2d 21, 24.

To constitute a fatal variance, there must be a real and tangible difference between the allegations in the pleading and the proof offered in its support. The difference must be substantial and material. It must be one that actually misleads the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense on the merits; or, in criminal cases, one which might mislead the defense or expose a defendant to being put twice in jeopardy for the same offense, as, e.g., when evidence offered at trial proves facts materially different from those alleged in the indictment. Gaither v. U.S., 413 F.2d 1061, 1071, 134 U.S.App.D.C. 154.

Stipulations to vary discovery procedures are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 29.

The assertion of "variance" or discrepancy between the pleadings and proof has essentially been eliminated in civil cases by Fed.R.Civil P. 15(b) which permits liberal amendment of the pleadings to conform to the evidence. This same rule is followed by most state courts. In criminal cases, variances that do not affect the substantial rights of the accused will be disregarded. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 7(c), (e), 52(a).

Accounting. In accounting, a variance is the difference between the actual and standard cost of such things as direct materials, direct labor, and overhead. An unfavorable variance generally means that the actual costs incurred exceeded the budgeted amounts.

Zoning. Permission to depart from the literal requirements of a zoning ordinance by virtue of unique hardship due to special circumstances regarding person's property. It is in the nature of a waiver of the strict letter of the zoning law upon substantial compliance with it and without sacrificing its spirit and purpose. Rosendale-Skinker Imp. Ass'n v. Board of Adjustment of City of St. Louis, Mo., 425 S.W.2d 929, 937. An authorization to a property owner to depart from literal requirements of zoning regulations in utilization of his property in cases in which strict enforcement of the zoning regulations would cause undue hardship. Daniel v. District of Columbia Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, D.C. App., 329 A.2d 773, 775. A "use variance" is a variance permitting a use other than that permitted in particular district by zoning ordinance. Anderson v. Board of Appeals, Town of Chesapeake Beach, 22 Md.App. 28, 322 A.2d 220, 225. Compare Area variance; Special exception; Special use permit; Unnecessary hardship.

Various. Separate. Simmons v. Ramsbottom, 51 Wyo. 419, 68 P.2d 153, 156. Unlike; different; more than one; numerous; several; of diverse kinds.

Vas /vás/. Lat. In the civil law, a pledge; a surety; bail or surety in a criminal proceeding or civil action.
Vasectomy. Resection of the ductus deferens. Surgical excision of part of the vas deferens, resulting in sterilization of the male.

Vassal /vásəl/. A feudal tenant or grantee; a feudatory; the holder of a fief on a feudal tenure, and by the obligation of performing feudal services. The correlative term was "lord." The vassal himself might have been lord of some other vassal.

In later times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bl.Comm. 53.

Vassalage /vásəlæj/. The state or condition of a vassal.

Vassal states. In international law, states which were supposed to possess only those rights and privileges which had been expressly granted to them, but actually they seem to have been very independent. Egypt was such; also Crete.

Vasseleria /vásələriə/. The tenure or holding of a vassal.

Vastum /vástəm/. L. Lat. A waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have right of commoning.

Vastum foresta vel bosci /véystam farésti vél bósai/. Waste of a forest or wood. That part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay in a manner waste and barren.

VAT. Value added tax. See Tax.

Vauderie /vóðəri/. In old European law, sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois.

Vavasour /váveəsər/. One who was in dignity next to a vassal.

Vauderie /vówdəri/. In old European law, sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois.

Vavasour /véveəsər/. One who was in dignity next to a baron. One who held of a baron.

V.C. An abbreviation for "vice-chancellor."

V.C.C. An abbreviation for "vice-chancellor's court."

V.E. An abbreviation for "venditioni exponas" (q.v.).

Vehicle. That in or on which persons, goods, etc. may be carried from one place to another, especially along the ground. Any moving support or container fitted or used for the conveyance of bulky objects; a means of conveyance. That which is used as an instrument of conveyance, transmission or communication. Term refers to every device in, upon or by which a person or property is or may be transported upon a highway. Term has been held to include a "moped" (People v. Jordan, 75 Cal. App.3rd Supp. 1, 142 Cal.Rptr. 401, 406). While a bicycle has been held by some courts to be a vehicle under traffic laws (Richards v. Goff, 26 Md.App. 344, 338 A.2d 80, 84), others have held that it is not (Fowles v. Dakin, 160 Me. 392, 205 A.2d 169, 173).

Vehicular crimes. Criminal acts committed while operating a motor vehicle, e.g. vehicular manslaughter (N.Y. Penal Law 125.13), vehicular assault (N.Y. Penal Law 120.04). See also Vehicular homicide.

Vehicular homicide. Homicide caused by the unlawful and negligent operation of a motor vehicle. Both intentional conduct and negligence may be the basis for such charge though statutes vary from state to state as to the elements of the crime. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 210.4 (negligent homicide); N.Y. Penal Law 125.13 (vehicular manslaughter). See also Homicide.

Veies /viˈiə/. L. Fr. Distresses forbidden to be reprieved; the refusing to let the owner have his cattle which were distrained.

Vein. A continuous body of mineral or mineralized rock, filling a seam or fissure in the earth's crust, within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain (which boundaries clearly separate it from the neighboring rock), and having a general character of continuity in the direction of its length. McMullin v. Magnuson, 102 Colo. 230, 78 P.2d 964, 968. It includes all deposits of mineral matter found through a mineralized zone or belt coming from the same source, impressed with the same forms, and appearing to have been created by the same processes. Inyo Marble Co. v. Loundagin, 120 Cal.App. 298, 7 P.2d 1067, 1072.

The terms "principal," "original," and "primary," as well as "secondary," "accidental," and "incidental," have all been employed to describe the different veins found within the same surface boundaries, but their meaning is not entirely clear in all cases. They may refer to the relative importance or value of the different veins, or the relations to each other, or to the time of discovery, but the words "secondary," "accidental," and "incidental" are most frequently used to distinguish between the discovery vein and other veins within the same surface boundaries.

Discovery vein. That vein which served as a basis of the location, in contradistinction to secondary, accidental, and incidental veins. The primary vein for the purpose of locating a mining claim and determining which are the end and which the side lines. Where the discovery vein crosses the opposite side lines of the claim as located, the side lines become end lines, not only with respect to such vein, but for determination of extralateral rights in any other vein which apexes within the claim.

Vejours. Viewers; persons sent by the court to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right. It signifies, also, such as are sent to view those that essoin themselves de malo lecti, (i.e., excuse themselves on ground of illness) whether they be in truth so sick as that they cannot appear, or whether they do counterfeit.

Velabrum /valébrum/. In old English law, a tollbooth.

Vellitius jubeatis quirites? /vélístos juwbjéytas kwárátytys/. Lat. Is it your will and pleasure, Romans? The form of proposing a law to the Roman people.

Velle non creditur qui obsequitur imperio patris vel domini /vély yón krédstar kwá ybeskwátar impír(i)yow pátras vél dómánay/. He is not presumed to consent who obeys the orders of his father or his master.

Vel non /vélnón/. Or not. These words appear in the phrase "devisavit vel non" (q.v.), meaning, literally, "did he devise or not." Examples of their use by the courts may be seen in the following quotations: "So the sufficiency vel non of the order of publication is important"; "the negligence vel non of the owner was * * * for the jury"; and "We come at last to the merits vel non of this appeal".

Veltraria /véltriérya/. The office of dog-leader, or coursier.

Venal /viynal/. Pertaining to something that is bought; capable of being bought; offered for sale; mercenary. Used usually in an evil sense, such purchase or sale being regarded as corrupt and illegal.

Venaria /vénériya/. Beasts caught in the woods by hunting.

Venatio /vénátiyow/. Hunting.

Vend. To transfer to another for a pecuniary equivalent; to make an object of trade, especially by hawking or peddling; to sell. Goins v. State, 194 Ark. 598, 108 S.W.2d 1082, 1083. The term is not commonly applied to the sale of real estate, although its derivatives "ven¬dor" and "vendee" are.

Vendee. A purchaser or buyer; one to whom anything is sold. Generally used of the purchaser of real property, one who acquires goods by sale being generally called a "buyer." Compare Vendar.

Vendens eadem rem duobus falsarius est /vénéndnz iyéndám rém dyuwóvóbas fòlsér(i)yow ést/. He is fraudulent who sells the same thing twice.

Vendetta. A private blood feud, in which a family seeks to avenge one of its members on the offender or his family. Stephens v. Howells Sales Co., D.C.N.Y., 16 F.2d 805, 806.

Vendible /véndsbál/. Fit or suitable to be sold; capable of transfer by sale; merchantable.
Vendue /vendyew/vényew/. A sale; generally a sale at public auction; and more particularly a sale so made under authority of law, as by a constable, sheriff, tax collector, administrator, etc.

Vendue master /vényew mástew/. An auctioneer.

Venereal /vaniriyal/. Sexual; as, venereal diseases.

Venereal disease /vaniriyal dázíyew/. One of several diseases identified with sexual intercourse. Collective term for gonorrhea, chancroid, and syphilis.

Venia /viýew/. A kneeling or low prostration on the ground by penitents; pardon.

Venia aetatis /viýew iatytes/. A privilege granted by a prince or sovereign, in virtue of which a person is entitled to act, sui juris, as if he were of full age.

Venial facilitas incentivum est delinquendi /vyñiyvi fasilätêz insentäyväm est délîkwenâyew/. Facility of ground by penitents; pardon.

Venire /vanayriy/. Lat. To come; to appear in court.

Venire facias /vanayriy fésysh(y)as/. A writ to summon a jury of matrons to execute the writ de ventre inspiciendo.

Venture capital. Funding for new companies or others embarking on new or turnaround ventures that entails some investment risk but offers the potential for above average future profits. Venture capital is often provided by firms that specialize in financing new ventures with capital supplied by investors interested in speculative or high risk investments. See also Risk capital; Seed money.
Venue. Formerly spelled visne. In common law pleading and practice, a neighborhood; the neighborhood, place, or county in which an injury is declared to have been done, or fact declared to have happened. 3 Bl. Comm. 294.

The particular county, or geographical area, in which a court with jurisdiction may hear and determine a case. Venue deals with locality of suit, that is, with question of which court, or courts, of those that possess adequate personal and subject matter jurisdiction may hear the specific suit in question. Japan Gas Lighter Ass'n v. Ronson Corp., D.C.N.J., 257 F.Supp. 219, 224. It relates only to place where or territory within which either party may require case to be tried. Leege v. Strand, 384 P.2d 665, 668. It has relation to convenience of litigants and may be waived or laid by consent of parties. Iselin v. La Coste, C.C.A.La., 147 F.2d 791, 795.

In the federal courts, the term refers to the district in which the suit is brought. Venue may be determined by where the action arose or where the parties reside or conduct their business. The venue statute for civil actions in federal district courts is 28 U.S.C.A. § 1391.

In federal cases the prosecutor's discretion regarding the location of the prosecution is limited by Article III, § 2, U.S.Const., which requires trial in the state where the offense "shall have been committed," and the Sixth Amendment, which guarantees an impartial jury "of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed." See also Federal criminal cases, below.

Venue does not refer to jurisdiction at all. Arganbright v. Good, 46 Cal.App.2d Supp. 877, 116 P.2d 186. "Jurisdiction" of the court means the inherent power to decide a case, whereas "venue" designates the particular county or city in which a court with jurisdiction may hear and determine the case. Village of Oakdale v. Ferrante, 44 Ohio App.2d 318, 338 N.E.2d 767, 769. As such, while a defect in venue may be waived by the parties, lack of jurisdiction may not.

See also Change of venue; Forum conveniens; Forum non conveniens.

Federal criminal cases. Except as otherwise permitted by statute or by the rules, the prosecution shall be had in a district in which the offense was committed. The court shall fix the place of trial within the district with due regard to the convenience of the defendant and the witnesses. Fed.R.Crim.P. 18 et seq.

Veracity. Truthfulness; accuracy.

Veray /veray/. L. Fr. True. An old form of vrai. Thus, veray, or true tenant, is one who holds in fee-sim-ple; veray tenant by the manner, is the same as tenant by the manner (q.v.), with this difference only: that the fee-simple instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another.

Verba /várba/. Lat. (Plural of verbum.) Words.

Verba accipienda sunt cum effectu, ut sortiantur effectum /várba akskipiyénda sánt käm afekt(y)uw, ãt söräshyéntar afektam/. Words are to be received with effect, so that they may produce effect.

Verba accipienda sunt secundum subjectam materiam /várba akskipiyénda sánt sôkëndam subjéktam matiriyam/. Words are to be understood with reference to the subject-matter.

Verba accipienda ut sortiantur effectum /várba akskipiyénda ãt söräshyéntar afektam/. Words are to be taken so that they may have some effect.

Verba aequo sociis, ac in dubio sensu positat, intelligitur digniori et potenteri sensu /várba akiviwaka, āk in dî(y)uwbiyow pôzôta, intélagántar digniyóyará et patënnshiyóyará sëns(y)uw/. Equivocal words, and such as are put in a doubtful sense, are [to be] understood in the more worthy and effectual sense [in their best and most effective sense].

Verba aliquid operari debent; debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur /várba alâkwad ãpôrârây débánt; débánt intélájây ãt alâkwad ãpôrârëntâr/. Words ought to have some operation; they ought to be interpreted in such a way as to have some operation.

Verba aliquid operari debent, verba cum effectu sunt accipienda /várba alâkwid ãpôrârây débânt, várba käm afekt(y)uw sánt akskipiyénda/. Words are to be taken so as to have effect.

Verba artis ex arte /várba ártas ès ártiy/. Terms of art should be explained from the art.

Verba cancellariæ /várba káamshëlyiyi/. Words of the chancery. The technical style of writs framed in the office of chancery.

Verba chartarum fortius accipientur contra proferentem /várba kartérm forshi(y)ës aksipiyántar kôntra prôfërentam/. The words of charters are to be received more strongly against the grantor [or the person offering them].

Verba cum effectu accipienda sunt /várba käm afekt(y)uw akskipiyénda sánt/. Words ought to be used so as to give them their effect.

Verba currentis monetæ, tempus solutionis designant /várba kahréntás manëjiyit, têmpas sal(y)uwshiyôwëns dësëgnant/. The words "current money" designate current at the time of payment.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu ut res magis valere quam pereat /várba débânt intélájây käm afekt(y)uw, ãt rïyz mëyjâs wâliyost kwëm pëhriyôy/. Words ought to be understood with effect, that a thing may rather be preserved than destroyed.
Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur /vārba débant intéllayaj at álakhád óprérántar/. Words ought to be understood so as to have some operation.

Verba dicta de persona intelligi debent de conditio personae /vārba diktá díly porsówna intéllayaj débant díly kondíshiyómwny porsówny/. Words spoken of a person are to be understood of the condition of the person.

Verba fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem /vārba fórsh(i)yás aksípiyántar kóntrá próférántem/. Words are to be taken most strongly against him who uses them.

Verba generalia generiliter sunt intelligenda /vārba jenarnélf(i)yá jenarléyléyart sánt intéllajéyanda/. General words are to be generally understood.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personae /vārba jenrail(o)yá rēstrīngyántar ád háblastéyam riýay vél ápýt(y)úwdanam porsówny/. General words must be narrowed either to the nature of the subject-matter or to the aptitude of the person.

Verba illata (relata) inesse videntur /vārba áléyta ínésyíy vañéntar/á”rałyóts/”. Words referred to are to be considered as if incorporated.

Verba in differenti materia per prius, non per posterius, intelligenda sunt /vārba in diféarrényat mátriyá pár préyas, nón pár póstríyiyas, intéllajéyanda sánt/. Words on a different subject are to be understood by what precedes, not by what comes after. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba intelligenda sunt in casu possibili /vārba intéllajéyanda sánt in kéys(y)úw pósibyal/á/. Words are to be understood in [or “of,” or “in reference to”] a possible case. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire /vārba ántišiñg yántars vúnt in diféarrényat mátriyá pár préyas, nón pár póstríyiyas, intéllajéyanda sánt/. Words on a different subject are to be understood by what precedes, not by what comes after. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam inueniri /vārba átá sánt intéllajéyanda, át riýy yéyjás válllyst kéwm péhryìy/á/. The words [of an instrument] are to be so understood, that the subject-matter may rather be of force than perish [rather be preserved than destroyed; or, in other words, that the instrument may have effect, if possible]. 2 Bl.Comm. 380.

Verbal. Strictly, of or pertaining to words; expressed in words, whether spoken or written, but commonly in spoken words; hence, by confusion, spoken; oral. Parol; by word of mouth; as, verbal agreement, verbal evidence; or written, but not signed, or not executed with the formalities required for a deed or prescribed by statute in particular cases.

Verbal act doctrine. Under this doctrine, utterances accompanied by some act or conduct in which it is desired to give legal effect are admissible where conduct to be characterized by words is material to issue and equitable in its nature, and words accompany conduct and aid in giving it legal significance. Keefe v. State, 50 Ariz. 293, 295, 72 P.2d 425, 427. Under doctrine, where declarations of an individual are so connected with his acts as to derive a degree of credit from such connection, independently of the declaration, the declaration becomes part of the transaction and is admissible. The “verbal act doctrine” and the “res gestae doctrine” coincide practically and serve equally to admit certain sorts of statements, but they are nevertheless wholly distinct in their nature and in their right to exist. American Employers Ins. Co. v. Wentworth, 90 N.H. 112, 5 A.2d 265, 269. See also Excited utterance; Res (Res Gestae); Verbal acts.

Verbal acts. Situations in which legal consequences flow from the fact that words were said, e.g. the words of offer and acceptance which create a contract, or words of slander upon which an action for damages is based. The rule against hearsay does not apply to proof of relevant verbal acts because evidence of such acts is being offered to prove something other than the truth of an out of court assertion. See Excited utterance; Res (Res Gestae); Verbal act doctrine.

Verbal assaults. See Threat.

Verbal contract. An oral, nonwritten agreement; a parol contract. See also Contract (Parol contract); Oral contract.

Verbal note. A memorandum or note, in diplomacy, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps is not required; and, on the other hand, to guard against the supposition that it is forgotten, or that there is an intention of not prosecuting it any further.

Verbal process. In Louisiana, procès verbal (q.v.).

Verba mere àquívoca, si per communem usum loquendi in intellectu certo summuntur, talis intellectus praferendus est /vārba míriy skwivákéytā, sáy pár kamyúwým yúwám lwókwenyay in intaléklýywyw sártow samántar, téyías intaléktás préférántes ét/. [In the case of] words merely equivocal, if they are taken by the common usage of speech in a certain sense, such sense is to be preferred. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba nihil operari melius est quam absurde /vārba náy(h)ál ópréráy míyýl(i)yás ét kwérm absórídy/. It is better that words should have no operation at all than [that they should operate] absurdly. A maxim of the civil law.

Verba non tam intuita, quam causa et natura rei, ut mens contrahentium ex eis potius quam ex verbis apparent /vārba nón tám int(y)úwéndá, kwérm kóza ét náy(h)ýra riýy, át ménz kontrahént(i)ýam éksa yýas pówsh(i)yás kwérm éks várba pápríyatl/. The words [of a contract] are not so much to be looked at as the cause and nature of the thing [which is the subject of it], in order that the intention of the contracting parties may appear rather from them than from the words.

Verba offendi possunt, imo ab eis recedere licet, ut verba ad sanum intellectum reducantur /vārba afénday póssánt, áýymow áb óyás rásíyadríy liýst, át várba ád sénýam intaléklým riyd(y)úwkéntar/. Words may be opposed [taken in a contrary sense], nay, we may disregar them altogether, in order that the [general] words [of an instrument] may be restored to a sound meaning. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba ordinandis quando verificari possumunt in sua vera significatione, trahil ad extraneum intellectum non debent /varba ordanehsiowynas kwondow vēhrsfokeiroy pōsont in s(y)ūwa vīra signfaskēshiyōnīyi, trēhyay ād akstērēni(i)yam intsektam nōn débant/. When the words of an ordinance can be carried into effect in their own true meaning, they ought not to be drawn to a foreign intendment. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quæ certitudine indigent, sunt referenda /varba postiriyora proptar sārdat(y)ūwdanam ādata, ād prayōro kwīy sārdat(y)ūwdanāy īndajant, sānt ṛearfrēndā/. Subsequent words, added for the purpose of certainty, are to be referred to the preceding words which require the certainty.

Verba precaria /varba prēker(i)yā/. In the civil law, precatory words; words of trust, or used to create a trust.

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent /varba prōw rīy ēt səbjektə matr(i)yā āksopay débant/. Words ought to be understood in favor of the thing and subject-matter. A maxim of the civilians.

Verba quæ alicjud operari possunt non debent esse superfūna /varba kwīy ālskaw āpōrērāy pōsont nōn débant ēsīy səpōřfluwa/. Words which can have any kind of operation ought not to be [considered] superfluous.

Verba, quantumvis generalia, ad aptitudinem res·trīngantur, etiamsi nullam aliām patenetur restrictionem /varba, kwontamvas jēnareyl(i)yā, ad ėpēta(y)ūwdanam ārēsirīnkar, ēshīyamay nālām ēy(i)yam pētēnərənt rēstrīksihwaiyanam/. Words, however general, are restrained to fitness (i.e., to harmonize with the subject-matter), though they would bear no other restriction.

Verba relata hoc maxime operantur per referentiam, ut in eis inesse videntur /varba rālēyə hōk mēksamiy oprāntər pār rēfrēnshiyəlam, āt ēn yēsā īnēsiy vādentər/. Related words [words connected with others by reference] have this particular operation by the reference, that they are considered as being inserted in those [clauses which refer to them]. Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clauses referring to them.

Verba relata inesse videntur /varba rālēyə inēsiy vādentər/. Words to which reference is made seem to be incorporated.

Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nesciat /varba sūkāndam matr(i)yəm subjektam intēlajay niymow ēst kwāy nēshiyət/. There is no one who does not know that words are to be understood according to their subject-matter.
of their like settled opinions on another issue, producing a result which does not command the approval of the whole panel. See also Quotient verdict.

Directed verdict. Verdict ordered by the judge as a matter of law when he rules that the party with the burden of proof has failed to make out a prima facie case. The judgment under these circumstances orders the jury to return a verdict for the other party. See Fed.R.Civil P. 50. Motion for judgment of acquittal is used in place of directed verdict in criminal cases. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 29.

Excessive verdict. See that title.

False verdict. One obviously opposed to the principles of right and justice; an untrue verdict. Formerly, if a jury gave a false verdict, the party injured by it might sue out and prosecute a writ of attainder against them, either at common law or on the statute 11 Hen. VII, c. 24, at his election, for the purpose of reversing the judgment and punishing the jury for their verdict; but not where the jury erred merely in point of law, if they found according to the judge's direction. The practice of setting aside verdicts and granting new trials, however, so superseded the use of attainder that there is no instance of one to be found in the books or reports later than in the time of Elizabeth, and it was altogether abolished by 6 Geo. IV, c. 50, § 60. See Non obstante vereclito.

General verdict. A verdict whereby the jury find either for the plaintiff or for the defendant in general terms; the ordinary form of a verdict. Glenn v. Sumner, 132 U.S. 122, 10 S.Ct. 41, 33 L.Ed. 301. A finding by the jury in the terms of the issue, or all the issues, referred to them. That by which they pronounce generally upon all or any of the issues, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant;—distinguished from a special verdict, which is that by which the jury finds facts only.

General verdict with interrogatories. The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. The court shall give such explanation or instruction as may be necessary to enable the jury both to make answers to the interrogatories and to render a general verdict, and the court shall direct the jury both to make written answers and to render a general verdict. When the general verdict and the answers are harmonious, the appropriate judgment upon the verdict and answers shall be entered. When the answers are consistent with each other but one or more is inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment may be entered in accordance with the answers, notwithstanding the general verdict, or the court may return the jury for further consideration of its answers and verdict or may order a new trial. When the answers are inconsistent with each other but one or more is likewise inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment shall not be entered, but the court shall return the jury for further consideration of its answers and verdict or shall order a new trial. Fed.R.Civil P. 49(b).

Instructed verdict. See Directed verdict, above.

Joint verdict. See that title.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante vereclito.

Open verdict. A verdict of a coroner's jury which finds that the subject "came to his death by means to the jury unknown," or "came to his death at the hands of a person or persons to the jury unknown," that is, one which leaves open either the question whether any crime was committed or the identity of the criminal.

Partial verdict. In criminal law, a verdict by which the jury acquits the defendant as to a part of the accusation and finds him guilty as to the residue.

Privy verdict. One given after the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privy to the judge out of court. Such a verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. This practice is now superseded by that of rendering a sealed verdict.

Public verdict. A verdict openly delivered by the jury in court.

Quotient verdict. See that title.

Repugnant verdict. Verdicts are "repugnant" when there are charges of two crimes, each of which has identical elements, and there is finding of guilt on one but not on the other. People v. Blandford, 37 A.D.2d 1003, 325 N.Y.S.2d 486, 487.

Sealed verdict. See Sealed.

Several defendants. If there are two or more defendants, the jury at any time during its deliberations may return a verdict or verdicts with respect to a defendant or defendants as to whom it has agreed; if the jury cannot agree with respect to all, the defendant or defendants as to whom it does not agree may be tried again. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31(b).

Special verdict. A special finding of the facts of a case by a jury, leaving to the court the application of the law to the facts thus found. The "special" verdict is a statement by the jury of the facts it has found—in essence, the jury's answers to questions submitted to it; the court determines which party, based on those answers, is to have judgment. With the advent of the apportionment rule among tortfeasors, closely followed by the adoption of a rule of comparative negligence to replace the traditional rule of contributory negligence, the need to have the jury reveal its specific findings of percentages of fault in personal injury and wrongful death cases has given rise to the increased use of the special verdict.

The court may require a jury to return only a special verdict in the form of a special written finding upon each issue of fact. In that event, the court may submit to the jury written questions susceptible of categorical or other brief answer or may submit written forms of the several special findings which might properly be made under the pleadings and evidence; or it may use such other method of submitting the issues and requiring the written findings thereon as it deems most appropriate. The court shall give to the jury such explanation and instructions concerning the matter thus submitted as may be necessary to enable the jury to make its findings upon each issue. Fed.R.Civil P. 49(a).

Split verdict. A verdict in which one party prevails on some claims in issue while the other party prevails on other claims. Beckman Instruments v. LKB Produkter AB, C.A., 892 F.2d 1547. In criminal law, a verdict finding a defendant guilty of one charge but innocent of another, or finding one defendant guilty while acquitting a codefendant. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31.

Stipulation on majority verdict. The parties may stipulate that a verdict of a stated majority of the jurors shall be taken as the verdict of the jury. Fed.R.Civil P. 48.

Verdict by lot. See Chance verdict, above.

Verdict contrary to law. A verdict which a law does not authorize jury to render on evidence because conclusion drawn is not justified thereby. One which is contrary to the principles of law as applied to the facts which the jury were called upon to try and contrary to the principles of law which should govern the cause. Piepho v. Gesse, 106 Ind.App. 450, 18 N.E.2d 468, 471. See Non obstante veredicto.

Verdict for lesser offense. See Lesser included offense.

Verdict subject to opinion of court. A verdict returned by the jury, the entry of judgment upon which is subject to the determination of points of law reserved by the court upon the trial.

Verdict, estoppel by. Rule that where some controlling fact or question material to determination of both causes has been adjudicated in former suit by court of competent jurisdiction, and same fact or question is again an issue between the same parties, adjudication in first cause will, if properly presented, be conclusive of the same question in later suit, irrespective of whether cause of action is the same in both suits. People v. Haran, 27 Ill.2d 229, 188 N.E.2d 707, 709. "Estoppel by verdict" or "collateral estoppel" provides that prior judgment must be deemed conclusive as to all right of parties and their privies when same parties or their privies are involved with same issues actually or necessarily finally determined by court of competent jurisdiction in earlier, but different, cause of action. Riley v. Unknown Owners of 304 North Oak Park Ave. Bldg., Oak Park, 25 Ill.App.3d 895, 324 N.E.2d 78, 85. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Judgment, estoppel by; Res (Res judicata).

Verecidium /vēhradiktam/. L. Lat. In old English law, a verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

Verecidium, quasi dictum veritatis; ut judicium quasi juris dictum /vēhradiktam, kwēsas diktam vēhrātēyats; ĺt jwudish(i)yam kwēsas jūras diktam/. The verdict is, as it were, the dictum [saying] of truth; as the judgment is the dictum of law.

Verge, or virge /vērj/. In old English law, the compass of the royal court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the household; it seems to have been twelve miles about. An uncertain quantity of land from fifteen to thirty acres. Also a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant to a copyhold estate.

Vergelt /vērgelt/. In Saxon law, a mulct or fine for a crime. See Weregild.

Verification. Confirmation of correctness, truth, or authenticity, by affidavit, oath, or deposition. Affidavit of truth of matter stated and object of verification is to assure good faith in averments or statements of party. Sheeley v. City of Santa Clara, 215 Cal.App.2d 83, 30 Cal.Rptr. 121, 123. Sworn or equivalent confirmation of truth. For example, a verified complaint typically has an attached affidavit of plaintiff to the effect that the complaint is true. In accounting, the process of substantiating entries in books of account. See also Acknowledgment; Affidavit; Authentication; Certification; Confirmation; Oath; Verify.

Verified copy. Copy of document which is shown by independent evidence to be true. A copy, if successive witnesses trace the original into the hands of a witness who made or compared the copy. Nu Car Carriers v. Traynor, 75 U.S.App.D.C. 174, 125 F.2d 47, 48.

Verified names. Names verified by county clerk in accordance with his duty to check names of signers against official registration lists. Allan v. Rasmussen, 101 Utah 33, 117 P.2d 287, 289.

Verify. To confirm or substantiate by oath or affidavit. Particularly used of making formal oath to accounts, petitions, pleadings, and other papers. The word "verified," when used in a statute, ordinarily imports a verity attested by the sanctity of an oath. It is frequently used interchangeably with "sworn."

To prove to be true; to confirm or establish the truth or truthfulness of; to check or test the accuracy or exactness of; to confirm or establish the authenticity of; to authenticate; to maintain; to affirm; to support; second; back as a friend. MacNeill v. Maddox, 194 Ga. 802, 22 S.E.2d 653, 654.

See also Verification.

Verify /vēhrāli/. In very truth; beyond doubt or question; in fact; certainly; truly; confidently; really.

Veritas, a quocunque dicitur, a Deo est /vēhrātēs, ēy kwokwākkiw jisitar, ēy diyōw ēst/. Truth, by whomsoever pronounced, is from God.

Veritas demonstrationis tollit errorem nominis /vēhrātēs dēmānstrāshiyōwnas tōlst ehrōram nōmanas/. The truth of the description removes an error in the name.

Veritas habenda est in juratore; justitia et judicium in judice /vēhrātēs habēndā ēst īn jūrātori; jāstish(i)yā ēt jwudish(i)yām īn jūwdaesi/. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge.
Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi /véhratès náy(h)al varyltyr nássy sbskónday/. Truth fears nothing but to be hid.

Veritas nimium altercando amittitur /véhratès nimiyam öltärrkëndow amidéray/. Truth is lost by excessive altercation.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis /véhratès nómínam tótal éhróram démnstrëshiyómwas/. The truth of the name takes away the error of description.

Veritas, quae minime defensatur opprimitur; et qui non improbat, approbat /véhratès, kwè minamiy défënsëytar aprëmmatar; èt kwày nòn ímprebat ãprèbat/. Truth which is not sufficiently defended is overpowered; and he who does not disapprove, approves.

Veritatem qui non libere pronuntiat proditor est veritatis /véhratëtëydam kwàyn lìbarì prànënhshiyat prôòddatar èt vëhrstëytas/. He who does not freely speak the truth is a betrayer of truth.

Verity. Truth; truthfulness; conformity to fact. The records of a court "import uncontrollable verity."

Verna /vérnya/. Lat. In the civil law, a slave born in his master's house.

Versari /versâray/. Lat. In the civil law, to be employed; to be conversant. Versari male in tutela, to misconduct one's self in a guardianship.

Versus /vërsus/. Lat. Against. In the title of a cause, the name of the plaintiff is put first, followed by the word "versus," then the defendant's name. Thus, "Fletcher versus Peck," or "Fletcher against Peck." The word is commonly abbreviated "vs." or "v." Vs. and versus have become ingrafted upon the English language; their meaning is as well understood and their use quite as appropriate as the word against could be.

Vert /vërt/. In old English law, that power which a man had, by royal grant, to cut green wood in a forest. In heraldry, green color, called "venus" in the arms of princes, and "emerald" in those of peers, and expressed in enamplings by lines in bend.

Vertical. Pertaining to a relationship between a buyer and a seller—e.g., an agreement between a supplier and a retail dealer is called a vertical agreement. See also related terms below.

Vertical integration. Ownership or control of network of production and distribution of goods from raw materials to sale to ultimate consumer.

Vertical merger. Merger between two business firms that have a buyer-seller relationship; that is, one produces a product that is then sold to the other. U.S. v. First Nat. Bank of Jackson, D.C.Miss., 301 F.Supp. 1161, 1190. Acquisition of one company which buys product sold by acquiring company or which sells product bought by acquiring company. U.S. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., D.C.Conn., 306 F.Supp. 766, 774. If a producer or wholesaler acquires a retailer, it is a forward merger. If a retailer or distributor acquires its producer, it is a backward merger. See also Merger. Compare Horizontal merger.

Vertical price-fixing contract. An illegal agreement to maintain prices between producers and wholesalers or distributors, between producers and retailers, or between wholesalers or distributors and retailers. An agreement between a supplier and a distributor, relating to the price at which the distributor will resell the supplier's product; also known as resale price maintenance, it exists if manufacturer or wholesaler suggests resale prices to his retailer and then secures compliance with those prices by doing more than announcing his price policy and refusing to deal. Leviscoff v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Pa., 551 F.Supp. 98, 104. Such agreements are prohibited by antitrust laws. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 760, 104 S.Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L.Ed.2d 775. See also Price-fixing; Resale price maintenance. Compare Horizontal price-fixing.

Vertical restraints of trade. Anticompetitive agreements between entities operating at different levels of market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors (e.g., vertical price-fixing; tying arrangement). Cha–Car, Inc. v. Calder Race Course, Inc., C.A.Fla., 752 F.2d 609, 614. See also Tying arrangement; Vertical price-fixing contract. Compare Horizontal restraints of trade.

Vertical nonprice restraint. A vertical restriction imposed by a supplier on its dealers, which does not govern the resale price. See Tying arrangement.

Vertical price restraint. A vertical restriction imposed by a supplier on its dealers, which governs the price at which the product can be resold. See Resale price maintenance; Vertical price-fixing contract.

Verus /vërius/. Lat. True; truthful; genuine; actual; real; just.

Very. As an adjective means real, actual, or true, but as an adverb means in a high degree, exceedingly, extremely; to no small extent. Benoist v. Driveaway Co. of Missouri, Mo.App., 122 S.W.2d 86, 90.

Very high degree of care. That degree of care that would be used by a very cautious, prudent, and competent person under like or similar circumstances. Wichita Valley Ry. Co. v. Williams, Tex.Civ.App., 3 S.W.2d 141, 142.

Very lord and very tenant. They that are immediate lord and tenant one to another.

Vessel. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used, or capable of being used, in navigation on water.

In order to be a "vessel," for purposes of an action under Jones Act, the structure's purpose must to some reasonable degree be the transportation of passengers, cargo or equipment from place to place across navigable waters. Buna v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc., D.C.Cal., 441 F.Supp. 1360, 1364. Though, the term "vessel," in admiralty law, is not limited to ships or vessels engaged in commerce. St. Hilaire Moye v. Henderson, C.A.Ark., 496 F.2d 973, 979. Many special purpose craft, such as dredges, floating derricks and barges equipped for special purposes or operations are "vessels" within meaning of Jones Act, and persons regularly employed aboard such a vessel in aid of its purposes are "seamen." Hill v. Diamond, C.A.Va., 311 F.2d 789, 791, 792. On the other hand, however, everything that floats is not necessarily a "vessel," in pursuance of Jones Act. Bennett v. Perini Corp., C.A.Mass., 510 F.2d 114, 116. For example, a floating dry dock which was moored by chains and cables to shipyard dock at time of injury to shipyard employee and which was in use as a dry dock was not a "vessel" and therefore no warranty of seaworthiness arose. Keller v. Dravo Corp., C.A.La., 441 F.2d 1239, 1244.

Foreign vessel. A vessel owned by residents in, or sailing under the flag of, a foreign nation.

Public vessel. One owned and used by a nation or government for its public service, whether in its navy, its revenue service, or otherwise.

Vest. To give an immediate, fixed right of present or future enjoyment. Baldwin v. Fleck, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 904, 909. To accrue to; to be fixed; to take effect.

To clothe with possession; to deliver full possession of land or of an estate; to give seisin; to enfeoff. See also Vested.

Vesta /'vesta/. The crop on the ground.

Vested. Fixed; accrued; settled; absolute; complete. Having the character or given the rights of absolute ownership; not contingent; not subject to be defeated by a condition precedent. Rights are "vested" when right to enjoyment, present or prospective, has become property of some particular person or persons as present interest; mere expectancy of future benefits, or contingent interest in property founded on anticipated continuance of existing laws, does not constitute "vested right." Vaughn v. Nadel, 228 Kan. 469, 618 P.2d 778, 783. See also Accrue; Vest, and specific types of vested interests, infra.

Vested devise. See Devise.

Vested estate. An interest clothed with a present, legal, and existing right of alienation. Chaison v. Chaison, Tex.Civ.App., 154 S.W.2d 961, 964. Any estate, whether in possession or not, which is not subject to any condition precedent and unperformed. The interest may be either a present and immediate interest, or it may be a future but contingent, and therefore transmissible, interest. Estate by which present interest is invariably fixed to remain to determinate person on determination of preceding freehold estate. An estate, when the person or the class which takes the remainder is in existence or is capable of being ascertained when the prior estate vests, Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Kellogg, C.C.A.3, 119 F.2d 54, 57; or when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present right of future enjoyment.

Vested gift. A gift that is absolute and not contingent or conditional. A gift is vested if it is immediate, notwithstanding that its enjoyment may be postponed. A future gift when the right to receive it is not subject to a condition precedent.

Vested in interest. A legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment; as reversion, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain.

Vested in possession. A legal term applied to a right of present enjoyment actually existing. See Vest.

Vested interest. A present right or title to a thing, which carries with it an existing right of alienation, even though the right to possession or enjoyment may be postponed to some uncertain time in the future, as distinguished from a future right, which may never materialize or ripen into title, and it matters not how long or for what length of time the future possession or right of enjoyment may be postponed, if the present right exists to alienate and pass title. Fugazzi v. Fugazzi's Committee, 275 Ky. 62, 120 S.W.2d 779, 781. A future interest not dependent on an uncertain period or event, or a fixed present right of future enjoyment. When a person has a right to immediate possession on determination of preceding or particular estate. One in which there is a present fixed right, either of present enjoyment or of future enjoyment. Painter v. Herschberger, 340 Mo. 347, 100 S.W.2d 532, 535. It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment, which makes the difference between a "vested" and a "contingent" interest. A future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest.

Vested legacy. A legacy given in such terms that there is a fixed, indefeasible right to its payment. A legacy payable at a future time, certain to arrive, and not subject to conditions precedent, is vested, where there is a person in esse at the testator's death capable of taking when the time arrives, though his interest may be altogether defeated by his own death. A legacy is said to be vested when the words of the testator making the bequest convey a transmissible interest, whether present or future, to the legatee in the legacy. Thus a legacy to one to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years is a vested legacy, because it is given unconditionally and absolutely, and therefore vests an immediate interest in the legatee, of which the enjoyment only is deferred or postponed.

Vested pension. Said of a pension plan when an employee (or his or her estate) has rights to all the benefits purchased with the employer's contributions to the plan even if the employee is not employed by this employer at the time of retirement. One in which the right to be paid is not subject to forfeiture if the employment relationship terminates before the employee retires. Johnson v. Johnson, 131 Ariz. 38, 638 P.2d 705, 708. Vesting of qualified pension plans is governed by the Employees
VESTED PENSION

Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). See also Vesting.

Vested remainder. See Remainder.

Vested rights. In constitutional law, rights which have so completely and definitely accrued to or settled in a person that they are not subject to be defeated or canceled by the act of any other private person, and which it is right and equitable that the government should recognize and protect, as being lawful in themselves, and settled according to the then current rules of law, and of which the individual could not be deprived arbitrarily without injustice, or of which he could not justly be deprived otherwise than by the established methods of procedure and for the public welfare. Such interests as cannot be interfered with by retrospective laws; interests which it is proper for state to recognize and protect and of which individual cannot be deprived arbitrarily without injustice. American States Water Service Co. of California v. Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 606, 88 P.2d 770, 774. Immediate or fixed right to present or future enjoyment and one that does not depend on the event that is uncertain. A right complete and consummated, and of such character that it cannot be divested without the consent of the person to whom it belongs, and fixed or established, and no longer open to controversy. State ex rel. Milligan v. Ritter’s Estate, Ind.App., 46 N.E.2d 736, 743.

Vestigial words /vestijal würdz/. Those contained in a statute which by reason of a succession of statutes on the same subject-matter, amending or modifying previous provisions of the same, are rendered useless or meaningless by such amendments. They should not be permitted to defeat the fair meaning of the statute. Saltonstall v. Birtwell, 164 U.S. 54, 70, 17 S.Ct. 19, 41 L.Ed. 348.

Vestigium /vestij(i)yam/. Lat. In the law of evidence, a vestige, mark, or sign; a trace, track, or impression left by a physical object.

Vesting. Right that employee acquires to various employer-contributed benefits (e.g., pension) after having been employed for requisite number of years. Federal laws (e.g., ERISA) govern vesting rights. See also Vested pension.

Vesting order. In English law, an order which may be granted by the chancery division of the high court of justice (and formerly by chancery), passing the legal estate in lieu of a conveyance. Commissioner also, under modern statutes, have similar powers.

Vestry. In ecclesiastical law, the place in a church where the priest’s vestures are deposited. Also an assembly of the minister, church-wardens, and parishioners, usually held in the vestry of the church, or in a building called a “vestry-hall,” to act upon business of the church.

Vestry-cess /vestyriks/. A rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by St. 27 Vict., c. 17.

Vestry-clerk /vestyriklerk/ /klark/. An officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc.

Vestry-men /vestriyman/. A select number of parishioners elected in large and populous parishes to take care of the concerns of the parish; so called because they used ordinarily to meet in the vestry of the church.

Vestura /vest(y)ura/. A crop of grass or corn. Also a garment; metaphorically applied to a possession or sei Vesture /vestyur/. In old English law, profit of land. "How much the vesture of an acre is worth."

Vesture of land /vestyur av länd/. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land, and clothe it externally.

Veteran. In general, any honorably discharged soldier, sailor, marine, nurse, or army field clerk, who has served in military service of the United States.

Veterans Administration. An independent federal agency that administers a system of benefit programs for veterans and their dependents. These benefits include compensation payments for disabilities or death related to military service; pensions; education and rehabilitation; home loan guaranty programs; burial, including cemeteries, markers, flags, etc.; and a comprehensive medical program involving a widespread system of nursing homes, clinics, and hospitals. Effective in 1989 the former Veterans Administration became the Department of Veterans Affairs, and was elevated to cabinet level status. See also Court of Veterans Appeals.

Veterans Affairs Department. See Veterans Administration.

Veterans Appeals Court. See Court of Veterans Appeals.

Vetura statuta /vijtara stat(y)uwt/. Lat. Ancient statutes. The English statutes from Magna Charta to the end of the reign of Edward II are so called; those from the beginning of the reign of Edward III being contradistinguished by the appellation of “Nova Statuta.”

Veterinarian. One who practices the art of treating diseases and injuries of domestic animals, surgically or medically.

Vetitum namium /vijtame naméyam/. L. Lat. Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in plactium de vetito namio.

Veto (Lat. I forbid.) The refusal of assent by the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent to such body by the executive, stating such refusal and the reasons therefor.
A refusal by the president or a governor to sign into law a bill that has been passed by a legislature. In the case of a presidential veto, the bill can still become a law if two-thirds of each House of Congress votes to override the veto. Art. I, § 7, U.S. Const.

It is either absolute or qualified, according as the effect of its exercise is either to destroy the bill finally, or to prevent its becoming law unless again passed by a stated proportion of votes or with other formalities. Or the veto may be merely suspensive.

Line item veto. The power which governors possess in most States to veto items in appropriation bills without affecting any other provisions of such bills.

Overriding veto. Passing a law again that has already been vetoed (turned down and left unsigned) by a government official such as a governor, president, etcetera. In the federal government, a bill vetoed by the President must receive two-thirds majority in Congress to override the veto and enact the measure into law.

Pocket veto. Non-approval of a legislative act by the president or state governor, with the result that it fails to become a law. Such is not the result of a written disapproval (a veto in the ordinary form), but rather by remaining silent until the adjournment of the legislative body, when that adjournment takes place before the expiration of the period allowed by the constitution for the examination of the bill by the executive.

Inaction on the part of the President when sent a bill just passed by Congress which has the effect of vetoing it. While Presidential inaction for ten days after a bill's presentation normally results in the bill becoming law just as if signed, inaction by the President results in a "pocket veto" if Congress adjourns and thereby prevents the bill's return within the ten-day period after presentation. U.S. Const., Art. I, § 7.

Veto power. Executive's power conditionally to prevent acts passed by legislature, which have not yet become law, from becoming law. Fitzsimmons v. Leon, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 141 F.2d 886, 888. See Veto.

Vetus jus /v’yetas jas/ . Lat. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law.

Vex. To harass, disquiet, annoy; as by repeated litigation upon the same facts.

Vexari /veks’eray/. Lat. To be harassed, vexed, or annoyed; to be prosecuted; as in the maxim, *Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa /nlymow débat bis vekséray prôw ywuna ed iyéydam kòzas/, no one should be twice prosecuted for one and the same cause.

Vexata quastio /vekséyta kwést(i)yow/. Lat. A vexed question; a question often agitated or discussed, but not determined or settled; a question or point which has been differentially determined, and so left doubtful.

Vexation. The injury or damage which is suffered in consequence of the tricks of another.

Vexatious /vekséyshas/. Without reasonable or probable cause or excuse. Gardner v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 232 Mo.App. 1101, 115 S.W.2d 4, 7.

Vexatious Actions Act. An act of parliament of 1896, authorizing the High Court to make an order, on the application of the attorney-general, that a person shown to be habitually and vexatiously litigious, without reasonable ground, shall not institute legal proceedings in that or any other court, without leave of the High Court judge thereof, upon satisfactory proof that such legal proceedings are not an abuse of the process of the court and that there is a prima facie ground therefor. The order when made is published in the Gazette.

Vexatious delay or refusal to pay. Term used in insurance statutes providing for penalties for insurer's conduct in unjustifiably refusing to pay insurance claims, e.g., a refusal to pay insurance claim, based on suspicion without substantial fact to support that suspicion, is "vexatious refusal to pay." Laster v. State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., Mo.App., 583 S.W.2d 195, 197. An insurer is allowed an honest difference of opinion regarding its liability under a policy and so long as it acts in good faith, may contest either an issue of fact or an issue of law. Camp v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Boston, Mass., Mo.App., 165 S.W.2d 277, 283.

Vexatious proceeding. Proceeding instituted maliciously and without probable cause. Paramount Pictures v. Blumenthal, 256 App.Div. 756, 11 N.Y.S.2d 768, 772. Type of malicious prosecution differing principally because based on civil action exists when the party bringing proceeding is not acting bona fide, and merely wishes to annoy or embarrass his opponent, or when it is not calculated to lead to any practical result. Such a proceeding is often described as "frivolous and vexatious," and the court may dismiss it on that ground. See Malicious prosecution.

Vexatious refusal to pay. See Vexatious delay or refusal to pay.

Vexed question. A question or point of law often discussed or agitated, but not determined or settled.

V.G. An abbreviation for "verbi gratia, for the sake of example.

Via /vía/. Lat. Way, road.

In the civil law, way; a road; a right of way. The right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land. A species of rural servitude, which included iter (a footpath) and actus (a driftway).

In old English law, a way; a public road; a foot, horse, and cart way.

Via antiqua via est tuta /vía antýákwa váya est t(y)lwtā/. The old way is the safe way.

Viability. Capability of living. A term used to denote the power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence. That stage of fetal development when the life of the unborn child may be continued indefinitely outside the womb by natural or artificial life-supportive systems. The constitutionality of this statutory definition (V.A.M.S. (Mo.), § 188.015) was up-
VIABILITY

Viability. Unborn child who is capable of independent existence outside his or her mother's womb, Libbee v. Permanente Clinic, 268 Or. 258, 518 P.2d 696, 637; even if only in an incubator, Sylvia v. Gobeille, 101 R.I. 76, 229 A.2d 222, 223. In most states a viable unborn child is considered a person under the wrongful death statutes, e.g., DiDonato v. Wortman, 320 N.C. 423, 358 S.E.2d 489, and in some states is considered to be a person under a homicide statute, e.g., Comm. v. Cass, 392 Mass. 799, 467 N.E.2d 1324. See also Child (Rights of unborn child); Unborn child; Viability; Wrongful death statutes.

Via servitus /vayiy ssrvatas/. Lat. A right of way over another's land.

Viagère rente /viyazher ront/. In French law, a rent-chief or annuity payable for the life of the annuitant.

Viander /vayondar/. In old English law, a returning officer.

Via ordinaria; via executiva /vayya órdaner(i)ya; vayya azgékstáyvo/. In the law of Louisiana, the former phrase means in the ordinary way or by ordinary process, the latter means by executory process or in an executory proceeding. A proceeding in a civil action is "ordinary" when a citation takes place and all the delays and forms of law are observed; "executory" when seizure is obtained against the property of the debtor, without previous citation, in virtue of an act or title importing confession of judgment, or in other cases provided by law.

Via publica /vayya páblaka/. In the civil law, a public way or road, the land itself belonging to the public.

Via regia /vayya rıy(j)ya/. In English law, the king's highway for all men. The highway or common road, called "the king's" highway, because authorized by him and under his protection.

Viatore /vayeytar/. Lat. In Roman law, a summoner or appraiser; an officer who attended on the tribunes and assessed duties.

Via trita est tutissima /vayya tráya est t(y)uwtísama/. The trodden path is the safest.

Vi aut clam /vay ót klám/. Lat. In the civil law, by force or covertly.

Vi bonorum raptorum /vay bownórəm ræptórəm/. Lat. In the civil law, of goods taken away by force. The name of an action given by the praetor as a remedy for the violent taking of another's property.

Vicar. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute. Also the incumbent of an appropriated or improvident ecclesiastical benefice, as distinguished from the incumbent of a non-appropriated benefice, who is called a "rector."

Vicarage. In English ecclesiastical law, the living or benefice of a vicar, as a parsonage is of a parson. 1 Bl.Comm. 387, 388.

Vicar general. An ecclesiastical officer who assists the archbishop in the discharge of his office.

Vicarial tithes /vaker(i)yal táyös/. Petty or small tithes payable to the vicar.

Vicario, etc. /vaker(i)yow/. An ancient writ for a spiritual person imprisoned, upon forfeiture of a recognizance, etc.

Vicarious liability. The imposition of liability on one person for the actionable conduct of another, based solely on a relationship between the two persons. Indirect or imputed legal responsibility for acts of another; for example, the liability of an employer for the acts of an employee, or, a principal for torts and contracts of an agent. See also Imputed negligence; Respondeat superior. Compare Strict liability.

Vicarius apostolicus /vaker(i)yəs āpəstələkas/. An officer through whom the Pope exercises authority in parts remote, and who is sometimes sent with episcopal functions into provinces where there is no bishop resident or there has been a long vacancy in the see, or into infidel or heretical countries.

Vicarius non habet vicarium /vaker(i)ya nən həyət vaker(i)yaəm/. A deputy has not [cannot have] a deputy. A delegated power cannot be again delegated.

Vice, n. A fault, defect, or imperfection. Immoral conduct, practice or habit; e.g. prostitution.

As applied to an animal, a bad habit or failing.

In the civil law, redhibitory vices are such faults or imperfections in the subject-matter of a sale as will give the purchaser the right to return the article and demand back the price.

Vice, adj. Lat. In the place or stead; substitution for. Vice mea, in my place.

Vice-admiral. An officer in the navy ranking below an admiral.

Vice-admiral of the coast. In England, a county officer formerly appointed by the admiral "to be answerable to the high admiral for all the coasts of the sea, when need and occasion shall be." He also had power to arrest ships, when found within a certain district, for the use of the king. His office was judicial as well as ministerial.

Vice-admiralty courts. In English law, courts formerly established in the king's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize.

Vice-chamberlain. In England, formerly a great officer under the lord chamberlain, who, in the absence of the lord chamberlain, had the control and command of the officers appertaining to that part of the royal household which was called the "chamber."

Vice-chancellor. See Chancellor.

Vice-comes. In England, a title formerly bestowed on the sheriff of a county, when he was regarded as the deputy of the count or earl.

Vice-comitissa. In old English law, a viscountess.

Vice-commercial agent. In the consular service of the United States, this was formerly the title of a consular officer who was substituted temporarily to fill the place of a commercial agent when the latter was absent or relieved from duty. See Commercial agent.

Vice-constable of England. An ancient officer in the time of Edward IV.

Vice-consul. In the consular service of the United States a consul officer who is substituted temporarily to fill the place of a consul who is absent or relieved from duty. Consular officer who is subordinate to a consul or consul general. In international law generally the term designates a commercial agent who acts in the place or stead of a consul or who has charge of a portion of his territory. In old English law, it meant the deputy or substitute of an earl (comes), who was anciently called "consul," answering to the more modern "vice-comes."

Vice-dominus episcopi. The vicar general or commissary of a bishop.

Vice-gerent. A deputy or lieutenant.

Vice-judex. In old Lombardic law, a deputy judge.

Vice-marshall. An officer who was appointed to assist the earl marshal.

Vice-President of the United States. The title of the second officer, in point of rank, in the executive branch of the government of the United States. In addition to his role as President of the Senate, the Vice President is empowered to succeed to the Presidency, pursuant to Article II and the 20th and 25th Amendments to the Constitution. The executive functions of the Vice President include participation in all Cabinet meetings, and, by statute, membership in the National Security Council, the Domestic Council, and the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. By designation of the President, the Vice President is Vice Chairman of the National Security Council and the Domestic Council, and Chairman of the Commission on CIA Activities Within the United States.

Vice-principal. See Principal.

Vice-versa. Conversely; in inverted order; in reverse manner.

Vice crimes. Generic term applied to crimes of immoral conduct such as prostitution, gambling, pornography.

Viceroy /váyayróy/. A person clothed with authority to act in place of the king; hence, the usual title of the governor of a dependency.

Vicinage /visánaj/. Neighborhood; near dwelling; vicinity. In modern usage, it means the county or particular area where a trial is had, a crime committed, etc. At common law, accused had the right to be tried by jury of the neighborhood or "vicinage," which was interpreted to mean the county where the crime was committed. People v. Goldswear, 39 N.Y.2d 656, 385 N.Y.S.2d 274, 350 N.E.2d 604, 606.

Vicinetalum /visnýtaum/. The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue.

Vicinity. Quality or state of being near, or not remote; nearness; propinquity; proximity; a region about, near or adjacent; adjoining space or country. Casper v. City and County of San Francisco, 6 Cal.2d 376, 57 P.2d 920, 922. Neighborhood; etymologically, by common understanding, it admits of a wider latitude than proximity or contiguity, and may embrace a more extended space than that lying contiguous to the place in question; and, as applied to towns and other territorial divisions, may embrace those not adjacent.

Vicini vicinia disputatur scire /vaysaniytsm/. The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue.

Vicious propensity. A propensity or tendency of animal to do any act which might endanger the safety of persons and property of others in a given situation. Hartman v. Aschaffenburg, La.App., 12 So.2d 282, 286.

Viciss et venellis mundandis /vaysas et vanelas mandándas/. An ancient writ against the mayor or bailiff of a town, etc., for the clean keeping of their streets and lanes.

Vicountiell, or vicotientiell /vaykáwnshal/kón/. Anything that belongs to the sheriffs, as vicontiel writs; i.e., such as are triable in the sheriff's court. As to vicontiel rents, see St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 99, §§ 12, 13, which places them under the management of the commissioners of the woods and forests.

Vicountiell jurisdiction /vaykáwnshal júrásdíkshan/. That jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county; as sheriffs, coroners, etc.

Victim. The person who is the object of a crime or tort, as the victim of a robbery is the person robbed. Person who court determines has suffered pecuniary damages as result of defendant's criminal activities; that person may be individual, public or private corporation, government, partnership, or unincorporated association. State v. Stayer, Utah, 706 P.2d 611, 613. See also Restitution.

Victim impact statement. Statement read into the record during the sentencing phase of a criminal trial to inform the court about the impact of the crime on the victim or victim's family.

Victinless crimes. Term applied to a crime which generally involves only the criminal, and which has no direct victim, as in the crime of illegal possession of drugs.

Victualler /vikt(a)ler/. In English law, a person authorized by law to keep a house of entertainment for the public; a publican. One who serves food or drink prepared for consumption on the premises.

Victus /viktus/. Lat. In the civil law, sustenance; support; the means of living.

Victus, victori in expensis condemnandus est /vikteus, viktowray in ekspeensss kdndemnaendas est/. The vanquished is to be condemned in costs to the conqueror, or he who loses the suit pays costs to his adversary. State ex rel. Macri v. City of Bremerton, 8 Wash.2d 93, 111 P.2d 612, 620.

Vidame /viydam/. In French feudal law, originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, etc., continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere.

Vide /vaydi/. Lat. A word of reference. Vide ante, or vide infra, refers to a previous passage, vide supra, or vide post, to a subsequent passage, in a book.

Videbis ea sape committi que sape vindicantur /vadiybss iys siypiy ksmitay kwiy siypiy vinds-kentay/. You will see those things frequently committed which are frequently punished.

Videlicet /vdeleesst/"diy//. Lat. The words "to-wit," or "that is to say," so frequently used in pleading, are technically called the "videlicet" or "sicilicet;" and when any fact alleged in pleading is preceded by, or accompanied with these words, such fact is, in the language of the law, said to be "laid under a videlicet." The use of the videlicet is to point out, particularize, or render more specific that which has been previously stated in general language only; also to explain that which is doubtful or obscure. Its common office is to state time, place, or manner which are of the essence of the matter in issue.

Videtur qui surdus et mutus ne poet faire alienation /vadjetar kway sartas et myuwts no pywy fer eyllohnayshan/. It seems that a deaf and dumb man cannot alienate.

Vidimus /vidamss/. An inspeximus (q.v.).

Vidua regis /viduuo riyjas/. Lat. In old English law, a king's widow. The widow of a tenant in capite. So called, because she was not allowed to marry a second time without the king's permission; obtaining her dower also from the assignment of the king, and having the king for her patron and defender.

Viduitatis professio /vdyuwtaytas prfesh(i)yow/. Lat. The making a solemn profession to live a sole and chaste woman.

Viduity /vidywatiy/. Widowhood.

Vie. Fr. Life; occurring in the phrases cestui que vie, pur autre vie, etc.

Vi et armis /vay et armss/. Lat. With force and arms. See Trespass.

View. The common law right of prospect; the outlook or prospect from the windows of one's house. A species of urban servitude which prohibits the obstruction of such prospect.

The act or proceeding by which tribunal goes to an object which cannot be produced in court because it is immovable or inconvenient to remove, and there observes it. Conner v. Parker, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 873, 874. An inspection by the jury of property in controversy, of an accident scene, of a place where a crime has been committed, etc. An inspection by the fact finding tribunal which is a species of real evidence.

The appropriate procedures to be followed in connection with views are widely regulated by state statute. At common law, and generally in civil cases today, the presence of the trial judge at a view is not required, the more common practice being for the jury to be conducted to the scene by "showers," expressly commissioned for the purpose. Attendance at the view by the parties and their counsel is generally permitted though subject to the discretion of the trial judge. In criminal cases, the rights of the defendant to have the judge present at the view, and to be present himself, are frequently provided for by statute.

See also inspection; Plain view doctrine; Viewers.

View and delivery. In old English law, when a right of common was exercisable not over the whole waste, but only in convenient places indicated from time to time by the lord of the manor or his bailiff, it was said to be exercisable after "view and delivery."

View, demand of. At common law, in real actions, the defendant was entitled to demand a view; that is, a sight of the thing, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances. As, if a real action were brought against a tenant, and such tenant did not exactly know what land it was that the demandant asked, then he might pray the view, which was that he might see the land which the demandant claimed. See also View.

Viewers. Persons appointed by a court to make an investigation of certain matters, or to examine a particular locality (as, the proposed site of a new road), and to report to the court the result of their inspection, with their opinion on the same.

View of an inquest. A view or inspection taken by a jury, summoned upon an inquisition or inquest, of the place or property to which the inquisition or inquiry refers.

View of frank-pledge. In old English law, an examination to see if every freeman above twelve years of age within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freeman pledges for his peaceable demeanor.

Vif-gage /vifgej/. L. Fr. In old English law, a viuum vadium or living pledge, as distinguished from a mortgage or dead pledge. Properly, an estate given as security for a debt, the debt to be satisfied out of the rents, issues, and profits.

Vigil. In ecclesiastical law, the eve or next day before any solemn feast.

Vigilance. Watchfulness; precaution; a proper degree of activity and promptness in pursuing one's rights or guarding them from infraction, or in making or discovering opportunities for the enforcement of one's lawful claims and demands. It is the opposite of laches. Wynne v. Conrad, 220 N.C. 355, 17 S.E.2d 514, 518.

Vigilant. Watchful, awake, and on the alert; attentive to discover and avoid danger, or to provide for safety; circumspect; cautious; wary. City Ice & Fuel Co. v. Center, 54 Ohio App. 116, 6 N.E.2d 580, 583, 7 O.O. 434.

Vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura subveniunt /vigilantabas et non dormiyentabas jura sabviyn(i)yant/. The laws aid those who are vigilant, not those who sleep upon their rights.

Vigor /vigor/. Lat. Strength; virtue; force; efficiency. Proprio vigore /prówpriyow vagóriy/, by its own force.

Vill. In old English law, this word was used to signify the parts into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. It also signifies a town or city. Traditionally, word "village" has connoted an area possessed of some attributes of a community, and is not a technical word, or one having a peculiar meaning, but is a common word in general usage and is merely an assemblage or collection of many neighbors, and under the term of "vill" boroughs and cities are contained.

Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis, et sub appellatione villarum continentur burgi et civititates /vilé ét ék pl(y)yóbabas mâns(h)lyómabas visnyéta, ét kaléyta éks pl(y)yóbabas vasýmas, ét sáb éspléshyówniy valérym kontéméntar bárjy ét sivátétyiy/. Vill is a neighborhood of many mansions, a collection of many neighbors, and under the term of "vill" boroughs and cities are contained.

Village. Traditionally, word "village" has connoted an area possessed of some attributes of a community, and is not a technical word, or one having a peculiar meaning, but is a common word in general usage and is merely an assemblage or community of people, a nucleus or cluster for residential and business purposes, a collective body of inhabitants, gathered together in one group. Union Sav. Bank of Patchogue v. Saxon, 118 U.S.App.D.C. 296, 335 F.2d 718, 721. Term refers to any small assembly of houses for dwellings or business, or both, whether they are situated on regularly laid out streets and alleys, or not. State on Information of Eagleton v. Champ, Mo., 393 S.W.2d 516, 524.

In some states, this is the legal description of a class of municipal corporations of smaller population than "cities" and having a simpler form of government, and corresponding to "towns" and "boroughs," as these terms are employed elsewhere.

Black's Law Dictionary 6th Ed.—34

VILLENous JUDGMENT

Villain. An opprobrious epithet, implying great moral delinquency, and equivalent to knave, rascal, or scoundrel. The word is libelous.

Villanis regis subtractis reducendis /valéynas riyjas sobtrénktas rydyd(y)iuwésndas/. In old English law, a writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen, that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged.

Villanum servitium /valéynam servish(y)am/. In old English law, villein service.

Villa regia /vila ryj(y)iya/. Lat. In Saxon law, a royal residence.

Villein /vilan/. In feudal law, a person attached to a manor, who was substantially in the condition of a slave, who performed the base and servile work upon the manor for the lord, and was, in most respects, a subject of property belonging to him.

Villein in gross /vilan in grówa/. In feudal law, a villein who was annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another. 2 Bl.Comm. 93.

Villein regardant /vilan ragárdant/. In feudal law, a villein annexed to the manor of land; a serf.

Villein services /vilan sárvasz/. In feudal law, base services, such as villeins performed. They were not, however, exclusively confined to villeins, since they might be performed by freemen, without impairing their free condition.

Villein socage /vilan sókj/. In feudal and old English law, a species of tenure in which the services to be rendered were certain and determinate, but were of a base or servile nature; i.e., not suitable to a man of free and honorable rank. This was also called "privileged villeinage," to distinguish it from "pure villeinage," in which the services were not certain, but the tenant was obliged to do whatever he was commanded. 2 Bl.Comm. 61.

Villenan /vilenan/. In feudal law, a servile kind of tenure belonging to lands or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the lord commanded, or were fit for a villein to do. See Villein.

Pure villenan. A base tenure, where a man holds upon terms of doing whatsoever is commanded of him, nor knows in the evening what is to be done in the morning, and is always bound to an uncertain service.

Villenous judgment /vilanos jájman/. A judgment which deprived one of his libera lex, whereby he was discredited and disabled as a juror or witness; forfeited his goods and chattels and lands for life; wasted the lands, razed the houses, rooted up the trees, and committed his body to prison. It has become obsolete. 4 Bl.Comm. 136.

Vim vi repellere licet, modo vi repellere licet, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam /vim váy repélariy láysyt, mudow fáyst módaréymaniy inkalképtiy t(y)uwtíliy, nón ad s(y)uweméndam vindiktam, sed ad prówpsíséndam injúriyam. It is lawful to repel force by force, provided it be done with the moderation of blameless defense, not for the purpose of taking revenge, but to ward off injury.

Vinagium /vinéyj(iy)am/. A payment of a certain quantity of wine instead of rent for a vineyard.

Vinculación /vinkuwliasyown/. In Spanish law, an entitle.

Vinculo /vinkuwlow/. In Spanish law, the bond, chain, or tie of marriage.

Vinculo matrimonii /vijk(y)alow mètramówniyay/. See A vinculo matrimonii; Divorce.

Vinculum juris /viqk(y)alam juras/. In the Roman law, an obligation is defined as a vinculum juris, i.e., "a bond of law," whereby one party becomes or is bound to another to do something according to law.

Vindicato /vindikta/. In Roman law, a rod or wand; and, also the rod or wand intervened in the progress of the old action of vindicatio, whence the name of that action.

Vindicative damages /vindiktw dáмаjšay/. See Damages.

Vintner /vintnar/. One who sells wine. A covenant by the use of force; forcibly; with violence.

Viol. Fr. In French law, rape; barring.

Violation. Injury; infringement; breach of right, duty or law; ravishment; seduction. The act of breaking, infringing, or transgressing the law. Rabon v. South Carolina State Highway Dept., 258 S.C. 154, 187 S.E.2d 652, 654.

A classification used by the Model Penal Code for public welfare offenses. A violation is not a crime. M.P.C. § 1.04(5).

Violence. Unjust or unwarranted exercise of force, usually with the accompaniment of vehemence, outrage or fury. People v. McIlvain, 55 Cal.App.2d 322, 130 P.2d 131, 134. Physical force unlawfully exercised; abuse of force; that force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Anderson-Berney Bldg. Co. v. Lowry, Tex.Civ.App., 143 S.W.2d 401, 403. The exertion of any physical force so as to injure, damage or abuse. See e.g. Assault.

Violence in labor disputes is not limited to physical contact or injury, but may include picketing conducted with misleading signs, false statements, publicity, and veiled threats by words and acts. Esco Operating Corporation v. Kaplan, 144 Misc. 646, 258 N.Y.S. 303.

Violent. Moving, acting, or characterized, by physical force, especially by extreme and sudden or by unjust or improper force. Furious, vehement; as a violent storm or wind. A violent attack marked by, or due to, strong mental excitement. Vehement, passionate; as, violent speech. Violent reproaches produced or effected by force, not spontaneous or natural; as, a violent death. Displaying or proceeding from extreme or intense force; caused by unexpected unnatural causes.

Violenta presumpto aliucando est plena probatio /vayyaléniš(iy)ow prazámpsh(iy)ow ášakówndow ést plýuša prówbékésh(iy)ow/. Violent presumption is sometimes full proof.

Violent death. Death caused by violent external means, as distinguished from natural death as caused by disease or the wasting of the vital forces. Death is "violent" within accident policy if it results from external agency and is not in ordinary course of nature. See e.g. Murder.

Violently. By the use of force; forcibly; with violence. The term is used in indictments for certain offenses.

Violent offenses. Crimes characterized by extreme physical force such as murder, forcible rape, and assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon.

Viperina est expositio qua corrodit viscera textus /vaypsrayns est ekspszish(iy)ow kwíy kóévóday vísara tekstas/. It is a poisonous exposition which destroys the vitals of the text.

Vir /výr/. Lat. A man, especially as marking the sex. In the Latin phrases and maxims of the old English law, this word generally means "husband," the expression vir et uxor corresponding to the law French baron et femme.

Vires /výriyz/. Lat. (The plural of "via.") Powers; forces; capabilities; natural powers; powers granted or limited. See Ultra (Ultra vires).

Vires acquirit eundo /výriyz akwárjyt iyándow/. It gains strength by continuance.

Vir et uxor sensentur in lege una persona /výr ét áksor sanséntar in líjijí yúwán parasówna/. Husband and wife are considered one person in law.

Vir et uxor sunt quasi unica persona, quia caro et sanguis unus; res licet sit propria uxoris, vir tamen ejus custos, cum sit caput mulieris /výr ét áksor sánt kwézyay yúwánká parasówna, kwáyá kérow ét sággwá yúwás; ríy láyást sit prówgrípiá áksóres, vár téýman líjás kásąs, kám sit képtay myuwel(iyírás). Man and wife are, as it were, one person, because only one flesh and blood; although the property may be the wife's, the husband is keeper of it, since he is the head of the wife.

Virga /vær̩ja/. In old English law, a rod or staff; a rod or ensign of office.

Virgata /vær̩jat̩a/. A quarter of an acre of land. It might also be used to express a quarter of a hide of land.

Virgata regia /vær̩jat̩a riʃ(y)ə/. In old English law, the verge; the bounds of the king's household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction.

Virga terre (or virgata terre)/vær̩go tɜhriʃ/vær̩jat̩a tɜhriʃ/. In old English law, a yard-land; a measure of land of variable quantity, containing in some places twenty, in others twenty-four, in others thirty, and in others forty, acres.

Virge, tenant by /ˈtɛnənt bɛy vərˈʒə/. A species of copyholder, who holds by the virge or rod.

Virgo intacta /vær̩go intækta/. Lat. A pure virgin.

Viridario eligendo /ˌvɪrɪdərˈiːjʊəʊ əˈʃæjəndəʊ/. A writ for choice of a verderer in the forest.

Virilia /ˈvɪrɪliə/. A writ by which the party alleged that it was its own by nature. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an action of assumpsit. See also Allen; Passport.

Vir militans deo non implicetur secularibus negotiis /vær̩ milɪtəns dɛʊ nʊn ɪmplɪˈsɛtər ˈsɛkɛlərəbəs ˈnɛɡətɪs/. A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business.

Virtual representation, doctrine of. Under this doctrine, where parties interested are numerous and the suit is for an object common to all of them, some of the body may maintain an action on behalf of themselves and of the others. Padway v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, D.C.Wisc., 42 F.Supp. 569, 576. Under current rules practice, such type action would proceed as a class action. See Class or representative action.

Virtue of office. An act by virtue of office is one in which the act is within the authority of the officer but in doing it he exercises that authority improperly or abuses the confidence which the law imposes in him. Maryland Cas. Co. v. McCormack, Ky., 458 S.W.2d 347, 349. See Color of law.

Virtute cujus /vərt(ˈtiːʃ)juːtɪ k(ˈtiːʃ)juːʃəs/. Lat. By virtue whereof. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

Virtute officii /vərt(ˈtiːʃ)juːtɪ əˈʃɪʃiəʃi/. Lat. By virtue of his office. By the authority vested in him as the incumbent of the particular office. An officer acts "virtute officii" when he acts by the authority vested in him as the incumbent of the particular office. Aldridge v. Wooten, 68 Ga.App. 887, 24 S.E.2d 700, 701. Where acts done are within the authority of the officer, but in doing them he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law repose in him, whilst acts done "colore officii" are where they are of such a nature that his office gives him no authority to do them. State v. Roy, 41 N.M. 308, 68 P.2d 162, 165; Yuma County v. Wisener, 45 Ariz. 475, 46 P.2d 115, 118.

Vis /vɪʃ/. Lat. Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property. The plural is vires (q.v.).

Visa /vɪˈzeɪə/ . An official endorsement made out on a passport, denoting that it has been examined and that the bearer is permitted to proceed. A recognition by the country in which the holder of a passport desires to travel of that passport's validity. U.S. v. Vargas, D.C. N.Y., 380 F.Supp. 1162, 1168. A visa is generally required for the admission of aliens into the United States. Cf. 8 U.S.C.A. §§ 1181, 1184. See also Allen; Passport.

Vis ablativa /vɪs əˈblætəvə/. In the civil law, ablative force; force which is exerted in taking away a thing from another.

Vis armata /vɪs ərməˈtə/. In the civil law, armed force; force exerted by means of arms or weapons.

Vis à vis /vɪs ˈvɪzəvɪl/. Face to face. One of two persons or things opposite or corresponding to each other. In relation to each other.

Vis clandestina /vɪs klaɪəndəstəˈnæə/. In Old English law, clandestine force; such as is used by night.

Vis compulsiva /vɪs kəmpəlˈsɪvə/. In the civil and old English law, compulsive force; that which is exerted to compel another to do an act against his will; force exerted by menace or terror.

Viscount /vɪs ˈvʊənt/. A decree of English nobility, next below that of earl. An old title of the sheriff.

Vis divina /vɪs dəˈvɪnə/. In the civil law, divine or superhuman force; the act of God.

Visé /vɪˈzeɪ/. See Visa.

Vis expulsiva /vɪs ɪkˈsplʊsəˈvə/. In old English law, expulsive force; force used to expel another, or put him out of his possession. Bracton contrasts it with "vis simplex," and divides it into expulsive force with arms, and expulsive force without arms.

Vis exturbativa /vɪs ɪkˈstɜrˌbæstəˈvə/. In the civil law, exturbative force; force used to thrust out another. Force used between two contending claimants of possession, the one endeavoring to thrust out the other.

Vis fluminis /vɪs f(ˈlɪmənəs)/. In the civil law, the force of a river; the force exerted by a stream or current; water-power.

Visible. Perceptible, discernible, clear, distinct, evident, open, conspicuous.

Visible means of support. Term used in vagrancy statutes to indicate that one was without any ostensible ability to support himself, though he is able bodied.

Vis impressa /vɪs ɪmˈpɾɛsə/. The original act of force out of which an injury arises, as distinguished from "vis proxima," the proximate force, or immediate cause of the injury.
Vis inermis /vis inärmas/. In old English law, unarmed force; the opposite of "vis armata."

Vis injuriosa /vis injúriyóswa/. In old English law, wrongfull force; otherwise called "illicita" (unlawful).

Vis inquietativa /vis inkwáystatáyva/. In the civil law, disquieting force. Bracton defines it to be where one does not permit another to use his possession quietly and in peace.

Visit. In international law, the right of visit or visitation is the right of a cruiser or war-ship to stop a vessel sailing under another flag on the high seas, and send an officer to such vessel to ascertain whether her nationality is what it purports to be. It is exercisable only when suspicious circumstances attend the vessel to be visited; as when she is suspected of a piratical character.

In family law, visitation refers to noncustodial parent’s right of access to his or her child; while noncustodial parent is responsible for care of child during visits, visitation differs from custody because noncustodial parent and child do not live together as family unit. Westrate v. Westrate, App., 124 Wis.2d 244, 369 N.W.2d 165, 168. See also Visitation rights.

In England, the office of inquiring into and correcting irregularities of corporations. See also Visitor.

Visitation books. In old English law, books compiled by the heralds, when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descendances as were verified to them upon oath; they were allowed to be good evidence of pedigree.

Visitation rights. In a marriage dissolution or custody action, permission granted by court to a noncustodial parent to visit child or children. May also refer to visitation rights extended to grandparents in a number of states. See also Visitation.

Visitor. One who goes or comes to see a particular person or place. See also Visitation.

Visitor of manners. The regarder’s office in the forest.

Visa /vis/ /visa léyaks/. In old English law, lay force; an armed force used to hold possession of a church.

Vis legibus est inimica /vis liyjasbë est inámáyka/. Violence is inimical to the laws.

Vis licita /vis lista/. In old English law, lawful force.

Vis major /vis méyjar/. A greater or superior force; an irresistible force. A loss that results immediately from a natural cause without the intervention of man, and which could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care. National Carbon Co. v. Bankers Mortg. Co. of Topeka, C.C.A.Kan., 77 F.2d 614, 617. A natural and inevitable necessity, and one arising wholly above the control of human agencies, and which occurs independently of human action or neglect. In the civil law, this term is sometimes used as synonymous with "vis divina," or the act of God. See Act of God.

Visne /váyni/. L. Fr. The neighborhood; vicinage; venue. The district from which juries were drawn at common law.

Vis perturbativa /vis partarbtaýva/. In old English law, force used between parties contending for a possession.

Vis proxima /vis próksama/. Immediate force. See Vis impressa.

Vis simplex /vis simplëks/. In old English law, simple or mere force.

V.I.S.T.A. Volunteers in Service to America.

Visus /váyzas/. Lat. In old English practice, view; inspection, either of a place or person.

Vital statistics. Public records kept by a state, city or other governmental subdivision, under a statutory provision, of births, marriages, deaths, diseases, and the like. For admissibility of, see Fed.Evid.R. 803. See also Census.

Vitiate. To impair; to make void or voidable; to cause to fail of force or effect. To destroy or annul, either entirely or in part, the legal efficacy and binding force of an act or instrument; as when it is said that fraud vitiates a contract.

Vitiligate. To litigate cavelously, vexatiously, or from merely quarrelsome motives.

Vitium cleric/i vishiyam kléhrasay/. In old English law, the mistake of a clerk; a clerical error.

Vitium cleric/i nocere non debet vishiyam kléhrasay nairiy nôn débôt/. A clerical error ought not to hurt.

Vitium est quoq fugi debet, nisi, rationem non inve.nias, mox legem sine ratione esse clames vishiyam est kwôd fyúwjay débôt, náyáys, ráshiýównom nön inviýn(iy)as, mòks liyjam sáyniy réshíýówniy ésiy kléymiyz/. It is a fault which ought to be avoided, that if you cannot discover the reason you should presently exclaim that the law is without reason.

Vitium scriptoris vishiyam skriptorás/. In old English law, the fault or mistake of a writer or copyist; a clerical error.

Vitreous /vitriyas/. Consisting of or resembling glass in its important characteristics.

Vitricus /vitrikás/. Lat. In the civil law, a stepfather; a mother’s second husband.

Viva aqua /váyva skwá/. Lat. In the civil law, living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain.

Viva pecunia /váyva pak(y)uwn(i)ya/. Lat. Cattle, which obtained this name from being received during the Saxon period as money upon most occasions, at certain regulated prices.

Vivarium /vavēriyam/. Lat. In the civil law, an inclosed place, where live wild animals are kept.

Vivary /vivar[i]y/. In English law, a place for keeping wild animals alive, including fishes; a fish pond, park, or warren.

Viva voce /vayvawo vawsay/. Lat. With the living voice; by word of mouth. As applied to the examination of witnesses, this phrase is equivalent to “orally.” It is used in contradistinction to evidence on affidavits or depositions. As descriptive of a species of voting, it signifies voting by speech or outcry, as distinguished from voting by a written or printed ballot.

Vivum vadium /vayvam veyd(i)y3m/. See Vadium.

Viz /viz/. A contraction for _vix_; that is to say.

Vocabula artis /vowkabylə ærtəs/. Lat. Words of art; technical terms.

Vocabula artium explicanda sunt secundum definitiones prudentum /vowkabylə ærsh(i)əm eksplakəndə sənt sekəndəm dəfənʃiəwəniyz pruwdəntəm/. Terms of arts are to be explained according to the definitions of the learned or skilled [in such arts].

Vocare ad curiam /vowkəriə æd kyurəiyəm/. In feudal law, to summon to court.

Vocatio in jus /vowkəcio in jus/. Lat. A summoning to court. In the earlier practice of the Roman law (under the _legis actiones_), the creditor orally called upon his debtor to go with him before the praetor for the purpose of determining their controversy; saying, _In jus eamus; in jus te voco._ This was called _vocatio in jus._

Vocation. One’s regular calling or business; one’s occupation or profession. The activity on which one spends major portion of his time and out of which he makes his living. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Accident & Casualty Ins. Co. of Winterthur, Switzerland, C.C.A. Ohio, 134 F.2d 566, 568. See also Occupation; Profession.

Vociferatio /vowfərisətəro/. Lat. In old English law, outcry; hue and cry.

Vociferous /vowfəras/. Making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy.

Voco /vowko/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, I call; I summon; I vouch. _In jus voco te_, I summon you to court; I summon you before the praetor. The formula by which a Roman action was anciently commenced.

Voice exemplars. Type of test in which one’s voice is compared to the voice heard on some particular occasion. Used in trial of cases as type of scientific evidence. An order compelling a defendant in a criminal case to furnish a sample of his voice does not violate the privilege against self-incrimination. U. S. v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 764, 35 L.Ed.2d 67. While voiceprint identification was formerly not admissible, the trend in recent years has been towards admissibility under restricted conditions. United States v. Baller, C.A.W.Va., 519 F.2d 463. See Fed.Evid.R. 901. See also Spectrograph; Voiceprint.

Voice identification. In evidence, one may testify that he heard a person’s voice if he is familiar with that voice. See Fed.Evid.R. 901(5). See also Spectrograph; Voiceprint.

Voiceprint. An instrument known as a spectrograph produces “prints” of one’s voice for use in comparing such readings with the actual voice of the person involved to determine whether such person uttered the material words. Used in trial of cases which require identification of voices. Com. v. Lykus, 367 Mass. 191, 327 N.E.2d 671. See Spectrograph; Voice exemplars.

Void. Null; ineffectual; nugatory; having no legal force or binding effect; unable, in law, to support the purpose for which it was intended. Hardson v. Gledhill, 72 Ga.App. 432, 33 S.E.2d 921, 924. An instrument or transaction which is wholly ineffective, inoperative, and incapable of ratification and which thus has no force or effect so that nothing can cure it. In re Oliver, Bkrtcy. Minn., 38 B.R. 245, 248.

There is this difference between the two words “void” and “voidable”: _void_ in the strict sense means that an instrument or transaction is nugatory and ineffectual so that nothing can cure it; _voidable_ exists when an imperfection or defect can be cured by the act or confirmation of him who could take advantage of it. The term “void,” however, as applicable to conveyances or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to its peculiar and limited sense, as contradistinguished from “voidable”; it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, when the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid, and not binding in law. But the distinction between the terms “void” and “voidable,” in their application to contracts, is often one of great practical importance; and, whenever entire technical accuracy is required, the term “void” can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever, such as are a mere nullity, and incapable of confirmation or ratification.

The word “void,” in its strictest sense, means that which has no force and effect, is without legal efficacy, is incapable of being enforced by law, or has no legal or binding force, but frequently the word is used and construed as having the more liberal meaning of “voidable.”

The word “void” is used in statutes in the sense of utterly void so as to be incapable of ratification, and also in the sense of voidable and resort must be had to the rules of construction in many cases to determine in which sense the Legislature intended to use it. An act or contract neither wrong in itself nor against public policy, which has been declared void by statute for the protection or benefit of a certain party, or class of parties, is voidable only.

Compare Voidable.

Void ab initio. A contract is null from the beginning if it seriously offends law or public policy in contrast to a contract which is merely voidable at the election of one of the parties to the contract. See also Void contract; Void marriage.

Voidable. That which may be avoided, or declared void; not absolutely void, or void in itself. It imports a valid act which may be avoided rather than an invalid act which may be ratified. United States v. Price, D.C.Iowa, 514 F.Supp. 477, 480. See also Voidable contract. Compare Void.

Voidable contract. A contract that is valid, but which may be legally voided at the option of the parties. One which is void as to wrongdoer but not void as to wronged party, unless he elects to so treat it. Depner v. Joseph Zukin Blouses, 13 Cal.App.2d 124, 56 P.2d 574, 575. One which can be avoided (cancelled) by one party because right of rescission exists as a result of some defect or illegality (e.g., fraud or incompetence). See also Void contract.

A voidable contract is one where one or more parties have the power, by a manifestation of election to do so, to avoid the legal relations created by the contract, or by ratification of the contract to extinguish the power of avoidance. Restatement, Second, Contracts § 7.

Voidable judgment. One apparently valid, but in truth wanting in some material respect. City of Lufkin v. McDVicker, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 141, 144. One rendered by a court having jurisdiction but which is irregularly and erroneously rendered. Easterline v. Bean, 121 Tex. 327, 49 S.W.2d 427, 429. See also Void judgment.

Voidable marriage. One which is valid (not void) when entered into and which remains valid until either party secures lawful court order dissolving the marital relationship. Darling v. Darling, 44 Ohio App.2d 5, 335 N.E.2d 708, 710, 73 O.O.2d 5. Major difference between "void marriage" and "voidable marriage" is that latter is treated as binding until its nullity is ascertained and declared by competent court, whereas former does not require such judgment because parties could not enter into valid marital relationship. Broadus v. Broadus, Ala.Civ.App., 361 So.2d 582, 584. See also Void marriage.

Voidable preference. Under Bankruptcy Code, such exists where person while insolvent transfers property, the effect of which will be to enable one creditor to obtain greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of same class. A preference given to one creditor over another by a bankrupt, usually manifested by a payment to that creditor just prior to the bankruptcy declaration, that may be set aside by the trustee in bankruptcy. See Bankruptcy Code § 547. See also Preference.

Void contract. A contract that does not exist at law; a contract having no legal force or binding effect. Expression denotes that the parties to the transaction have gone through the form of making a contract, but that none has been made in law because of lack of some essential element of a contract, and such contract creates no legal rights and either party thereto may ignore it at his pleasure, in so far as it is executory. Griffin v. Smith, C.C.A.Ind., 101 F.2d 348, 350. See also Voidable contract.

Void for vagueness doctrine. A law which is so obscure in its promulgation that a reasonable person could not determine from a reading what the law purports to command or prohibit is void as violative of due process. The doctrine means that criminal responsibility should not attach where one could not reasonably understand that his contemplated conduct is proscribed. U.S. v. National Dairy Products Corp., Mo., 83 S.Ct. 594, 598, 372 U.S. 91, 91 L.Ed.2d 561. Also, the First Amendment requires special clarity so that protected expression will not be chilled or suppressed.

Void judgment. One which has no legal force or effect, invalidity of which may be asserted by any person whose rights are affected at any time and at any place directly or collaterally. Reynolds v. Volunteer State Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 1087, 1092. One which, from its inception is and forever continues to be absolutely null, without legal efficacy, ineffectual to bind parties or support a right of, no legal force and effect whatever, and incapable of confirmation, ratification, or enforcement in any manner or to any degree. Judgment is a "void judgment" if court that rendered judgment lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, or of the parties, or acted in a manner inconsistent with due process. Klugh v. U.S., D.C.S.C., 620 F.Supp. 892, 901. See also Voidable judgment.

Void marriage. One not good for any legal purpose, the invalidity of which may be asserted by any person whose rights are affected at any time and at any place directly or collaterally. Minder v. Minder, N.J.Super., 708, 710, 73 N.J.Super. 5. Major difference between "void marriage" and "voidable marriage" is that latter is treated as binding until its nullity is ascertained and declared by competent court, whereas former does not require such judgment because parties could not enter into valid marital relationship. Broadus v. Broadus, Ala.Civ.App., 361 So.2d 582, 584. See also Void marriage.

Void on its face. An instrument is void on its face when an inspection will reveal its defects and invalidity.

Void process. One which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. United States v. Van Dusen, C.C.A.Minn., 78 F.2d 121, 124.

Void transaction. One that has no force and effect and is incapable of legal enforcement. See Void; Void contract.
Volens /vəlɛnz/. Lat. Willing. He is said to be willing who either expressly consents or tacitly makes no opposition.

Volenti non fit injuria /vɔlɛntɪ nɪ fɪt ɪnʤəriə/. The maxim “volenti non fit injuria” means that if one, knowing and comprehending the danger, voluntarily exposes himself to it, though not negligent in so doing, he is deemed to have assumed the risk and is precluded from a recovery for an injury resulting therefrom. Munson v. Bishop Clarkson Memorial Hospital, 186 Neb. 778, 186 N.W.2d 492, 494. This is an affirmative defense that should be pleaded under Fed.R.Civ.P. 8. Tyler v. Dowell, Inc., C.A.N.M., 274 F.2d 890. See also Assumption of risk.

Volus /vɔljuːm/. Lat. In the civil law, a volume; so called from its form, being rolled up.

Volusus /vɔljuːs/. Lat. We will; it is our will. The first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters patent.

Voluntarily. Done by design or intention, intentional, proposed, intended, or not accidental. Intentionally and without coercion. Young v. Young, 148 Kan. 876, 84 P.2d 916, 917.

Voluntariness. The quality of being voluntary or free as opposed to being forced or given under duress, as a confession of one arrested for a crime. See also Voluntary.

Voluntary. Unconstrained by interference; unimpelled by another's influence; spontaneous; acting of oneself. Coker v. State, 199 Ga. 20, 33 S.E.2d 171, 174. Done by design or intention. Proceeding from the free and unrestrained will of the person. Produced in or by an act of choice. Resulting from free choice, without compulsion or solicitation. The word, especially in statutes, often implies knowledge of essential facts. Without valuable consideration; gratuitous, as a voluntary conveyance. Also, having a merely nominal consideration; as, a voluntary deed.

As to voluntary Answer; Assignment; Confession; Conveyance; Deposit; Dismissal; Escape; Indebtedness; Intoxication; Manslaughter; Nonsuit; Oath; Payment; Redemption; Sale; Search; Settlement; Trust, and Waste, see those titles. For voluntary bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy proceedings.

Voluntary abandonment. As statutory ground for divorce, exists if there is a final departure, without consent of other party, without sufficient reason and without intent to return. As used in adoption statute, the term "voluntarily abandoned" means a willful act or course of conduct such as would imply a conscious disregard or indifference to such child in respect to the parental obligation owed to the child. Elliott v. Madox, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 105, 107. See also Abandonment; Desertion.

Voluntary bankruptcy. A bankruptcy proceeding that is initiated by the debtor. See Bankruptcy proceedings.

Voluntary courtesy. A voluntary act of kindness. An act of kindness performed by one man towards another, of the free will and inclination of the doer, without any previous request or promise of reward made by him who is the object of the courtesy; from which the law will not imply a promise of remuneration.

Voluntary dismissal. See Dismissal.

Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. An intentional act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous. Intentional exposure to unnecessary danger, implying a conscious knowledge of the danger. The voluntary doing of an act which is not necessary to be done, but which requires exposure to known danger to which one would not be exposed if unnecessary act is not done. The term implies a conscious, intentional exposure, something of which one is conscious but willing to take the risk. See Assumption of risk.

Voluntary ignorance. This exists where a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge, but has neglected to do so.

Voluntary jurisdiction. In old English law, a jurisdiction exercised by certain ecclesiastical courts, in matters where there is no opposition. 3 Bl.Comm. 66. The opposite of contentious jurisdiction (q.v.).

Voluntary statement. A statement made that is free from duress, coercion or inducement. Metigoruk v. Municipality of Anchorage, Alaska App., 655 P.2d 1317, 1318.

Voluntas /vɔlɑ̃tɑ̃s/. Lat. Properly, volition, purpose, or intention, or a design or the feeling or impulse which prompts the commission of an act. However, in old English law the term was often used to denote a will, that is, the last will and testament of a decedent, more properly called testamentum.

Voluntas donatoris in charta doni sui manifeste expressa observetur /volanteta donatotores in karta donway syiyway mænsfæstly akspresly obsrvytyar/. The will of the donor manifestly expressed in his deed of gift is to be observed.

Voluntas est justa sententia de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit /volanteta est jasta sentenʃi(y)i diy iyow kwod kwis powatmórm syiyuwm fayeryay véla/. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes.

Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat /volanteta fëysat kwod in tæstæmtow skripʃtam váliys/. It is intention which gives effect to the wording of a will.

Voluntas in delictis, non exitus spectatur /volanteta in daliktas, non égztas spektétyar/. In crimes, the will, and not the consequence, is looked to.

Voluntas reputatur pro facto /volanteta répyatétyar pròw fëktow/. The intention is to be taken for the deed.

Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad extremum vitæ exitum /volantas testatòrus ét ëmbyalatòriyà akkwiy àd akstriyàm váityj égztam/. The will of a testator is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.

Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam /volantas testatòrus hëyat intërpratëshiyòwnam léytam ét bëngnàm/. The intention of a testator has a broad and benign interpretation.

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam /volantas altàmà testatòrus ét përimpléndà sakshàm vimàm intënhiyòwnam syiyùwam/. The last will of the testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

Volunteer. A person who gives his services without any express or implied promise of remuneration. One who intrudes himself into a matter which does not concern him, or one who pays the debt of another without request, when he is not legally or morally bound to do so, and when he has no interest to protect in making such payment. A person who pays the debt of another without a request, when not legally or morally bound to do so and not in the protection of his own interest. Estate of Bends, Mo.App., 589 S.W.2d 330, 332.

Voting stock. In corporations, that type of stock which gives the holder the right to vote for directors and other matters in contrast to non-voting stock which simply entitles the holder to dividends, if any. Common stock is normally voting stock. See also Stock.

Military law. One who freely and voluntarily offers himself for service in the army or navy; as distinguished from one who is compelled to serve by draft or conscription, and also from one entered by enlistment in the standing army.

Vote. Suffrage; the expression of one’s will, preference, or choice, formally manifested by a member of a legislative or deliberative body, or of a constituency or a body of qualified electors, in regard to the decision to be made by the body as a whole upon any proposed measure or proceeding or in passing laws, rules or regulations, or the selection of an officer or representative. The aggregate of the expressions of will or choice, as manifested by individuals, is called the “vote of the body.” Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348.

Se see also Absentee voting; Apportionment; Ballot; Canvass; Casting vote; Cumulative voting; Fifteenth Amendment; Franchise; Gerrymander; Majority vote; Nineteenth Amendment; Noncumulative voting; Twenty-Fourth Amendment; Twenty-Sixth Amendment; Twenty-Third Amendment; Voting Rights Act.

Voter. The word has two meanings—a person who performs act of voting, and a person who has the qualifications entitling him to vote. Its meaning depends on the connections in which it is used, and is not always equivalent to electors. In a limited sense a voter is a person having the legal right to vote, sometimes called a legal voter. See Legal voter.

Voting by ballot. The term is used to distinguish open voting from secret voting. The privilege of secrecy is of the essence of “voting by ballot.” See Ballot.

Voting group. A term defined in the Revised Model Business Corporation Act (§ 1.40(26)) to describe the right of shares of different classes to vote separately at shareholders meetings on fundamental corporate changes that adversely affect the rights or privileges of that class. The scope of the right to vote by voting groups is defined by statute. The right is of particular value to classes of shares with limited or no voting rights under the articles of incorporation. Most older state statutes use the terms “class voting” or “voting by class” to refer essentially to the same concept. See also Voting trust.

Voting Rights Act. Federal law which guarantees the right of citizens to vote without discrimination based on race, color or previous condition of servitude. The Attorney General is authorized to file proper proceedings for preventive relief to protect this right. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1971 et seq. See City of Rome v. United States, 446 U.S. 156, 100 S.Ct. 1548, 64 L.Ed.2d 119. See also Poll-tax.

Conveyancing. One who holds a title under a voluntary conveyance, i.e., one made without consideration, good or valuable, to support it.

Law of master and servant. The term “Volunteer” includes one who, without the assent of the master and without justification arising from a legitimate personal interest, unnecessarily assists a servant in the performance of the master’s business.
Voting stock rights. The stockholder's right to vote his stock in the affairs of his company. Most common shares have one vote each. Preferred stock usually has the right to vote when preferred dividends are in default for a specified period. The right to vote may be delegated by the stockholder to another person. See also Cumulative voting; Noncumulative voting; Voting group; Voting stock.

Voting trust. The transfer of title by stockholders of shares of a corporation to a trustee who is authorized to vote the shares on their behalf. One created by an agreement between a group of the stockholders of a corporation and the trustee, or by a group of identical agreements between individual stockholders and a common trustee, whereby it is provided that for a term of years, or for a period contingent upon a certain event, or until the agreement is terminated, control over the stock owned by such stockholders, either for certain purposes or for all, shall be lodged in the trustee, with or without a reservation to the owner or persons designated by them of the power to direct how such control shall be used. A device whereby two or more persons, owning stock with voting powers, divorce voting rights thereof from ownership, retaining to all intents and purposes the latter in themselves and transferring the former to trustees in whom voting rights of all depositors in the trust are pooled. Jackson v. Jackson, 178 A.2d 893, 420 A.2d 893, 895.

Agreement accumulating several owners' stock in hands of one or more persons in trust for voting purposes in order to control corporate business and affairs. It differs from proxy or reciprocal proxy in that it does not make either party the other's agent.

See also Voting group; Voting trust certificates.

Voting trust certificates. Certificates issued by voting trustees to the beneficial holders of shares held by the voting trust. Such certificates may be as readily transferable as the underlying shares, carrying with them all the incidents of ownership of the underlying shares except the power to vote.

Votum /ˈvɔtəm/. Lat. A vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding day.

Vouch /ˈvouch/. To call upon; to call in to warranty; to call upon the grantor or warrantor to defend the title to an estate; to call upon witness to give warranty of title. To substantiate with evidence; to verify.

To give personal assurance or serve as a guarantee. To call upon, rely on, or quote as an authority. Thus, formerly, to vouch a case or report was to quote it as an authority.

See also Impleader; Third-party practice; Vouching-in.

Vouchee /ˈvouchi/. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the "vouchee." The person who is vouched to warranty. In this fictitious proceeding the crier of the court usually performs the office of a common vouchee. 2 BL.Comm. 358.

Voucher /ˈvɔwɔr/. A receipt, acquittance, or release, which may serve as evidence of payment or discharge of a debt, or to certify the correctness of accounts. An account-book containing the acquittances or receipts showing the accountant's discharge of his obligations. When used in connection with disbursement of money, is a written or printed instrument in the nature of an account, receipt, or acquittance, that shows on its face the fact, authority, and purpose of disbursement.

A document that serves to recognize a liability and authorize the disbursement of cash. Sometimes used to refer to the written evidence documenting an accounting entry, as in the term journal voucher.

In old English law, the person on whom the tenant calls to defend the title to the land, because he warrant ed the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

Voucher to warranty. The calling one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him.

Vouching-in. Common law procedural device whereby person against whom action is brought may give notice of suit to third party who is liable to him with respect to matter sued upon, and third party thereafter will be bound by decision in appropriate circumstances. Lester Bldg. Associates, Inc. v. Davidson, Del.Ch., 514 A.2d 1100, 1102. Though largely supplanted by third-party practice, vouching-in remains marginally viable under the federal rules. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Philadelphia Ship Maintenance Co., C.A.Pa., 444 F.2d 727, 735. See impleader; intervention; Third-party practice.

In commercial law, inviting a person who is liable over to a defendant in a lawsuit to intervene in the suit and defend so that, if the invitation is denied and the defendant later sues the person invited, the latter is bound by any determination of fact common to the two litigations. See, e.g., U.C.C. §§ 2-607, 3-803.

Vox emissa volat; litera scripta manet /ˈvoks amɪsə vɔlɑt; ˈlɪtərə skrɪpta mənɛt/. The spoken word flies; the written letter remains.

Voyage. In maritime law, the passing of a vessel by sea from one place, port, or country to another. The term is held to include the enterprise entered upon, and not merely the route.

Foreign voyage. A voyage to some port or place within the territory of a foreign nation. The terminus of a voyage determines its character. If it be within the limits of a foreign jurisdiction, it is a foreign voyage, and not otherwise.

Voyage charter. The document in admiralty which sets forth the arrangements and contractual engagements entered into between the charterer and the owner of the ship. Under "voyage charter," ship is engaged to carry full cargo on specific voyage, and ship is manned, controlled and navigated by owner. President of India By and Through Director of India Supply Mission v. West Coast S. S. Co., D.C.Or., 213 F.Supp. 352, 359.

Voyage policy. See Policy of insurance.
Voyeurism. The condition of one who derives sexual satisfaction from observing the sexual organs or acts of others, generally from a secret vantage point.

Vs. An abbreviation for versus (against), constantly used in legal proceedings, and especially in entitling cases.

Vulgar /vúlgər/. Lack of cultivation or refinement.

Vulgaris opinio est duplex, viz., orta inter graves et discretos, quæ multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines absque specie veritatis /vulgérəs apín(ı)yow ʰíst d(y)ówpleks, wɒdɪləst ʰɔrθɔ ʰɪntɔr gréyviyz ʰɪt dɔskrɪltəws, kwiːli mɔltəm vëhrstɛy̬təs ʰɛybat, ʰɪt apín(ı)yow ʰɔrθɔ ʰɪntɔ lɪvviyz ʰɪt vəlˈɡəriəz həməniyz ˈɛbskwɪli ˈvəhrstɛy̬təs/. Common opinion is of two kinds, viz., that which arises among grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that which arises among light and common men, without any appearance of truth.

Vulgaris purgatio /vulgérəs pərˈɡɛɪdi(ə)u/. Lat. In old English law, common purgation; a name given to the trial by ordeal, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. 4 Bl.Com. 342.

Vulgo concepti /vulgəʊ kənˈsɛpti/ . Lat. In the civil law, spurious children; bastards.

Vulgo quaesiti /vulgəʊ kwəˈziːti/ . Lat. In the civil law, spurious children; literally, gotten from the people; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, who are considered as having no father.
W

W. As an abbreviation, this letter frequently stands for "William" (king of England), "Westminster," "west," or "western."

Wacreour. L. Fr. A vagabond, or vagrant.

Wadia /weyd(i)yə/. A pledge. See Vadium; Fides facta.

Waftors /wɔftərz/. Conductors of vessels at sea.

Waga /wey(g)ə/. In old English law, a weight; a measure of cheese, salt, wool, etc., containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

Wage. In old English practice, to give security for the performance of a thing. See also Wages.

Wage and hour laws. General term describing federal and state laws governing the maximum hours which may be worked and the minimum wage to be paid. In particular, the federal law known as Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 which regulates wages, hours and other conditions of labor. 29 U.S.C.A. § 201 et seq. See also Eight hour laws; Fair Labor Standards Act; Walsh-Healey Act.

Wage and price controls. A system of government-mandated maximum prices that can be charged for different goods and services, and maximum wages that can be paid to different workers in different jobs.

Wage assignments. The transfer or assignment in advance of one's wages generally in connection with a debt or judgment. Such assignments are governed by statutes in most states. See also Assignment (Assignment for benefit of creditors).

Wage earner's plan. A type of partial bankruptcy in which a person keeps his or her property and pays off a court-authorized proportion of debt over a period of time and under court supervision. See Bankruptcy Code Ch. 13, "Adjustment of Debts of An Individual With Regular Income". See Bankruptcy proceedings.

Wage garnishment. See Garnishment.

Wager. A contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them or that they shall gain or lose on the happening of an uncertain event or upon the ascertaining of a fact in dispute, where the parties have no interest in the event except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. The word "wagering" is practically synonymous with the words betting and gambling, and the terms are so used in common parlance and in statutory and constitutional enactments. McDonald v. Bryant, 238 Ark. 338, 381 S.W.2d 736, 738. See also Bet; Bookmaking; Gambling; Pari-mutuel betting.

Wagering contract. One in which the parties stipulate that they shall gain or lose, upon the happening of an uncertain event, in which they have no interest except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. See also Wager.

Wager of battel. The trial by wager of battel was a species of trial introduced into England, among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror, in which the person accused fought with his accuser, under the apprehension that Heaven would give the victory to him who was in the right. 3 Bl.Com. 337. It was abolished by St. 59 Geo. Ill, c. 46.

Wager of law. In old English practice, the giving of gage or sureties by a defendant in an action of debt that at a certain day assigned he would make his law; that is, would take an oath in open court that he did not owe the debt, and at the same time bring with him eleven neighbors (called "compurgators"), who should avow upon their oaths that they believed in their consciences that he said the truth. See Compurgator.

Wager policy. See Policy of insurance.

Wages. A compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. Compensation of employees based on time worked or output of production.

Every form of remuneration payable for a given period to an individual for personal services, including salaries, commissions, vacation pay, dismissal wages, bonuses and reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, payments in kind, tips, and any other similar advantage received from the individual's employer or directly with respect to work for him. Ernst v. Industrial Commission, 246 Wis. 205, 16 N.W.2d 867. Term should be broadly defined and includes not only periodic monetary earnings but all compensation for services rendered without regard to manner in which such compensation is computed. Ware v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 24 Cal.App.3d 35, 100 Cal.Rptr. 791, 797.

Real wages. Money wages divided by a price index. Real wages are different from money or nominal wages because they represent the true purchasing power of the dollars paid to workers. See Consumer Price Index.

See also Compensation; Current wages; Front wages; Minimum wage; Salary; Tip.

Wagner Act. A Federal law, passed in 1935, that established most basic union rights. It prohibited several employer actions (such as attempting to force employees to stay out of a union) and labeled these actions "unfair labor practices." It also set up the National Labor Relations Board to help enforce the new labor laws. 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

Wagonage /wágon/aj/. Money paid for carriage in a wagon.

Waif /wéyf/. Waifs are goods found, but claimed by nobody; that of which every one waives the claim. Also, goods stolen and waivered, or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. Waifs are to be distinguished from bona fuga, which are the goods of the felon himself, which he abandons in his flight from justice.

Wainable /wéynab/ol/. In old records, that which may be plowed or manured; tillable.

Wainage /wéynay/aj/. In old English law, the team and instruments of husbandry belonging to a countryman, and especially to a villein who was required to perform agricultural services.

Wainagulum /wéynéyglam/. What is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land.

Wait and see doctrine. This doctrine is a rule which permits consideration of events occurring after the instruments are relevant to the vesting of a future interest, so that if the contingency on which the interest is limited actually occurs within the period of the perpetuities rule, the interest is valid. Three Rivers Rock Co. v. Reed Crushed Stone Co., Inc., Ky., 530 S.W.2d 202, 206. In determining whether a contingent interest violates the Rule Against Perpetuities, many states have enacted laws which permit the court to look at the condition when the contingency occurs and not, as the Rule prescribes, at the creation of the interest. In some states, the doctrine is called the second look doctrine.

Waiting clerks. In old English law, officers whose duty it formerly was to wait in attendance upon the court of chancery. The office was abolished in 1842 by St. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 103.

Waiting period. Time period that must expire before some legal right or remedy can be undertaken or enforced. The period during which an insurance policy is not in effect or for which nothing will be paid on the policy. For example, if there is a waiting period of 30 days under a particular disability policy, the insured will have to be disabled for 30 days before a payment is made for loss of earnings.

In labor law, a period following a notice of intention to strike during which a strike may not lawfully take place. See 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(d). See also Cooling off period.

In securities law, the period following registration of a security with Securities and Exchange Commission during which the security may not be sold to the public.

Waive, v. To abandon, throw away, renounce, repudiate, or surrender a claim, a privilege, a right, or the opportunity to take advantage of some defect, irregularity, or wrong. To give up right or claim voluntarily. A person is said to waive a benefit when he renounces or disclaims it, and he is said to waive a tort or injury when he abandons the remedy which the law gives him for it.

In order for one to "waive" a right, he must do it knowingly and be possessed of the facts. Barnhill v. Rubin, D.C.Tex., 46 F.Supp. 963, 966.

Waive, n. In old English law, a woman outlawed. The term is, as it were, the feminine of "outlaw," the latter being always applied to a man; "waive," to a woman.

Waiver. The intentional or voluntary relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right, or when one disposes with the performance of something he is entitled to exact or when one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or by contract, with full knowledge of the material facts, does or forbears to do something the doing of which or the failure of forbearance to do which is inconsistent with the right, or his intention to rely upon it. The renunciation, repudiation, abandonment, or surrender of some claim, right, privilege, or of the opportunity to take advantage of some defect, irregularity, or wrong. An express or implied relinquishment of a legal right. A doctrine resting upon an equitable principle, which courts of law will recognize. Atlas Life Ins. Co. v. Schrimsher, 179 Okl. 643, 66 P.2d 944, 948.

Waiver is essentially unilateral, resulting as legal consequence from some act or conduct of party against whom it operates, and no act of party in whose favor it is made is necessary to complete it. Coleman Production Credit Ass'n v. Mahan, Tex.Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 903, 904. And may be shown by acts and conduct and sometimes by nonaction. Concrete Engineering Co. v. Grande Bldg. Co., 230 Mo.App. 443, 86 S.W.2d 593, 608.

The term is often used in the context of waiving one's right to counsel (for example, Miranda warning) or waiving certain steps in the criminal justice process (for example, the preliminary hearing). Essential to waiver is the voluntary consent of the individual. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 44(a).

Terms "estoppel" and "waiver" are not synonymous; "waiver" means the voluntary, intentional relinquishment of a known right, and "estoppel" rests upon principle that, where anyone has done an act, or made a statement, which would be a fraud on his part to controvert or impair, because other party has acted upon it in belief that what was done or said was true, conscience and honest dealing require that he not be permitted to repudiate his act or gainsay his statement. Peloso v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 102 N.J.Super. 357, 246 A.2d 52, 58.

See also Abandonment; Estoppel; Forfeiture.
Express waiver. The voluntary, intentional relinquishment of a known right.

Implied waiver. A waiver is implied where one party has pursued such a course of conduct with reference to the other party as to evidence an intention to waive his rights or the advantage to which he may be entitled, or where the conduct pursued is inconsistent with any other honest intention than an intention of such waiver, provided that the other party concerned has been induced by such conduct to act upon the belief that there has been a waiver, and has incurred trouble or expense thereby. To make out a case of implied "waiver" of a legal right, there must be a clear, unequivocal and decisive act of the party showing such purpose, or acts amounting to an estoppel on his part. Rosenthal v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 99 F.2d 578, 579. See also Estoppel.

Insurance law. Substance of doctrine of "waiver" in insurance law is that if insurer, with knowledge of facts which would bar existing primary liability, recognizes such primary liability by avoiding policy as in force, it will not thereafter be allowed to plead such facts to avoid its primary liability.

Lien waiver. See that title.

Waiver by election of remedies, doctrine of. Doctrine applies if there exist two or more coexisting remedies between which there is right of election, inconsistency as to such available remedies, and actual bringing of action or doing some other decisive act, with knowledge of facts, whereby party electing indicates his choice between such inconsistent remedies. Hertz v. Mills, D.C.Md., 10 F.Supp. 979, 981.

Waiver of claims and defenses. A term in an instrument or other contract whereby the maker, drawer or other obligor explicitly agrees not to assert against an assignee of the contract any claim or defense the obligor has against the assignor.

Waiver of exemption. The voluntary, intentional relinquishment of a known right.

Waiver of immunity. A means authorized by statutes by which a witness, in advance of giving testimony or producing evidence, may renounce the fundamental right guaranteed to him by constitutions, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. In re Grae, 282 N.Y. 428, 26 N.E.2d 963, 966. See also Immunity.

Waiver of premium clause. Provision in insurance policy providing for waiver of premium payments upon disability of insured. Commonly such waiver only takes effect after a certain time period of disability; e.g. six months.

Waiver of protest. An agreement by the indorser of a note or bill to be bound in his character of indorser without the formality of a protest in case of non-payment, or, in the case of paper which cannot or is not required to be protested, dispensing with the necessity of a demand and notice.

Waiver of tort. The election, by an injured party, for purposes of redress, to treat the facts as establishing an implied contract, which he may enforce, instead of an injury by fraud or wrong, for the committing of which he may demand damages, compensatory or exemplary.

Walapauz. In old Lombardic law, the disguising the head or face, with the intent of committing a theft.

Wales. The country of Wales.

Wales. In old English law, a Welshman.

Wales. The being a Welshman.

Walkers. Foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them.

Walk out. An organized withdrawal of employees from their place of employment because of a labor dispute. See also Strike.

Wall. An erection of stone, brick, or other material, raised to some height, and intended for purposes of privacy, security or inclosure. In law, this term occurs in such compounds as "ancient wall," "party-wall," "division-wall," etc. See also Spite fence.

Walls. Foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them.

Walk out. An organized withdrawal of employees from their place of employment because of a labor dispute. See also Strike.

Walsh-Healey Act. Federal Act (1936) which provides that government contractors should pay not less than the prevailing minimum wage, observe the eight-hour day and the forty-hour week, employ no convict labor and no female under 18 years of age or male under 16 years of age, and allow no hazardous or unsanitary working conditions in their plants. 41 U.S.C.A. §§ 35-45.

Wampum. Unlike France, Britain undertook no coinage for the use of her American colonies. The earliest medium of exchange for the New England settlements was wampum ordered by The General Court of Massachusetts in 1637. The court ordered that "wampumpege should passe at 6 a penny for any sum under 12d." Wampum generally consisted of shells, coon pelts and bullets and was offered in lieu of coins, which were almost non-existent. Although wampum served the purpose for average daily transactions, great confusion was experienced where larger sums were involved. With England ignoring the colonists' need for a standard medium of exchange, the General Court in 1652 ordered the first metallic currency for the English Americans.

Wander. To ramble here and there without any certain course. In its broad sense, "wander" means to ramble without a definite purpose or objective, roam, rove, or stray, and to go aimlessly, indirectly or casually. People v. Weger, 251 C.A.2d 584, 59 Cal.Rptr. 661, 667. See Transient.

Wantiss /wóntas/. An ancient customary tenure of lands; i.e., to drive deer to a stand that the lord may have a shot.

Wantage. In marine insurance, ullage; deficiency in the contents of a cask or vessel caused by leaking.

Want of jurisdiction. Lack of jurisdiction over person or subject matter. A lack of authority to exercise in a particular manner a power which board or tribunal has; the doing of something in excess of authority possessed. Evans v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 563, 96 P.2d 107, 116. See also Lack of jurisdiction.

Want of consideration. In the general law of contracts, this term means a total lack of any valid consideration for a contract, while "failure of consideration" is the neglect, refusal or failure of one of the parties to perform or furnish the consideration agreed on. Holm v. Woodward, Fla.App., 271 So.2d 167, 169. See also Failure of consideration.

Want of jurisdiction. Lack of jurisdiction over person or subject matter. A lack of authority to exercise in a particular manner a power which board or tribunal has; the doing of something in excess of authority possessed. Evans v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 563, 96 P.2d 107, 116. See also Lack of jurisdiction.

Wanton. Reckless, heedless, malicious; characterized by extreme recklessness or foolhardiness; recklessly disregarded of the rights or safety of others or of consequences. In re Wegner, C.C.A.Ill., 88 F.2d 899, 902. Means undisciplined, unruly, marked by arrogant recklessness of justice, feelings of others, or the like; willful and malicious. Lubbock Bail Bond v. Joshua, Tex.Civ. App., 416 S.W.2d 523, 525. In its ordinarily accepted sense connotes perverseness exhibited by deliberate and uncalled for conduct, recklessness, disregardful of rights and an unjustifiable course of action. Botto v. Fichesser, 174 Ohio St. 322, 189 N.E.2d 127, 130, 22 O.O.2d 380. See also Reckless; Wanton act; Wantonness.

Wanton act. One done in malicious or reckless disregard of the rights of others, evincing a reckless indifference to consequences to the life, or limb, or health, or reputation or property rights of another, and is more than negligence, more than gross negligence, and is such conduct as indicates a reckless disregard of the just rights or safety of others or of the consequences of action, equivalent in its results to wilful misconduct. Lustig v. U.M.C. Industries, Mo.App., 637 S.W.2d 55, 58.

Wanton acts and omissions. Those of such character or done in such manner or under such circumstances as to indicate that a person of ordinary intelligence actuated by normal and natural concern for the welfare and safety of his fellowmen who might be affected by them could not be guilty of them unless wholly indifferent to their probable injurious effect or consequences. Pupke v. Pupke, 102 Colo. 337, 79 P.2d 290, 292. See also Wanton act.

Wanton and reckless misconduct. Occurs when a person, with no intent to cause harm, intentionally performs an act so unreasonable and dangerous that he knows, or should know, that it is highly probable that harm will result. Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co., 18 Cal.2d 863, 418 P.2d 465, 469, 470. As used in punitive damages statute, consists of conduct that creates a substantial risk of harm to another and is purposely performed with an awareness of the risk and disregard of the consequences. Palmer v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., Colo., 684 P.2d 187, 214. See also Wanton misconduct.

Wanton conduct. See Wanton misconduct.

Wanton injury. Injury produced by conscious and intentional wrongful act, or omission of known duty with reckless indifference to consequences. It must be predicated upon actual knowledge of another's peril and a failure to take available preventative action knowing that such failure will probably result in injury. Rainey v. State, 31 Ala.App. 271, 17 So.2d 683, 686.

Wanton misconduct. Act or failure to act, when there is a duty to act, in reckless disregard of rights of another, coupled with a consciousness that such failure will probably result in injury. Swain v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., C.C.A.La., 134 F.2d 886, 887. Term refers to intentional act of unreasonable character performed in disregard of risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow and it is usually accompanied by conscious indifference to the consequences. Goss v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.A.Pa., 355 F.2d 649, 651. See also Wanton and reckless misconduct.

Wanton negligence. Heedless and reckless disregard for another's rights with consciousness that act or omission to act may result in injury to another. Craig v. Stagner, 159 Tenn. 511, 19 S.W.2d 234, 236. See also Negligence; Recklessness.

Wantonness. Conscious doing of some act or the omission of some duty with knowledge of existing conditions and consciousness that, from the act or omission, injury will likely result to another. Mack v. Garrison, 51 Ala.App. 453, 286 So.2d 857, 860. Conscious failure by one charged with a duty to exercise due care and diligence to prevent an injury after the discovery of the peril, or under circumstances where he is charged with a knowledge of such peril, and being conscious of the inevitable or probable results of such failure. Stout v. Gallemore, 138 Kan. 385, 26 P.2d 573. A reckless or intentional disregard of the property, rights, or safety of others, implying, actively, a willingness to injure and disregard of the consequences to others, and, passively, more than mere negligence, that is, a conscious and intentional disregard of duty. See also Recklessness; Wanton.

Wapentake /wepentaky/. In English law, a local division of the county or shire; the name is in use north of the Trent to denote a hundred. The derivation of the name is said to be from "weapon" and "take," and indicates that the division was originally of a military character. Also a hundred court.

War. Hostile contention by means of armed forces, carried on between nations, states, or rulers, or between citizens in the same nation or state. Gitlow v. Kiely, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 233. A contest by force between two or more nations, carried on for any purpose, or armed conflict of sovereign powers or declared and open hostilities, or the state of nations among whom there is an interruption of pacific relations, and a general contention by force, authorized by the sovereign. West v. Palmetto State Life Ins. Co., 202 S.C. 422, 25 S.E.2d 475, 477, 478. War does not exist merely because of an armed attack by the military forces of another nation until it is a condition recognized or accepted by political authority of government which is attacked, either through an actual declaration of war or other acts demonstrating such position. Savage v. Sun Life Assur. Co. of Canada, D.C.La., 57 F.Supp. 620, 621. For there to be a "war," a sovereign or quasi-sovereign must engage in hostilities. Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., C.A.N.Y., 505 F.2d 989, 1005.

Term as used in statute proscribing any claim against United States arising out of combatant activity of Military or Naval Forces or Coast Guard during time of war includes an undeclared war as well as a formally declared war. Morrison v. U.S., D.C.Ga., 316 F.Supp. 78, 79.

Articles of war. See that title.

Civil war. An internecine war. A war carried on between opposing citizens of the same country or nation.

Declaration of war. See War.

Imperfect war. See Perfect war, below.

Laws of war. This term denotes a branch of public international law, and comprises the body of rules and principles observed by civilized nations for the regulation of matters inherent in, or incidental to, the conduct of a public war; such, for example, as the relations of neutrals and belligerents, blockades, captures, prizes, truces and armistices, capitulations, prisoners, and declarations of war and peace; e.g. Geneva Convention.

Mixed war. A mixed war is one which is made on one side by public authority, and on the other by mere private persons.

Perfect war. Where whole nation is at war with another whole nation, but when the hostilities are limited as respects places, persons, and things, the war is termed "imperfect war." Bas v. Tingy, 4 U.S. (Dall.) 37, 40, 1 L.Ed. 731.

Private war. One between private persons, lawfully exerted by way of defense, but otherwise unknown in civil society.

Public war. Every contention by force, between two nations, in external matters, under the authority of their respective governments. Prize Cases, 2 Black 666, 17 L.Ed. 489.

Solemn war. A war made in form by public declaration; a war solemnly declared by one state against another. Bas v. Tingy, 4 U.S. (Dall.) 37, 40, 1 L.Ed. 731.

War clauses. Art. I, § 8 (Clauses 11-16) U.S.Const., provides, inter alia, that Congress shall have power to declare war, and raise and support military forces. See War power.

War crimes. Crimes committed by countries in violation of the international laws governing wars. At Nuremberg after World War II, crimes committed by the Nazis were so tried.

A division of a city or town for elections, police, and other governmental purposes. A corridor, room, or other division of a prison, hospital, or similar institution.

A person, especially a child or incompetent, placed by the court under the care and supervision of a guardian or conservator. See Guardian; Guardianship.

See Guardian; Guardianship.

Wardage. In old English law, money paid and contributed to watch and ward.

Ward-fegh. Sax. In old English law, ward-fee; the value of a ward, or the money paid to the lord for his redemption from wardship.

Ward-horn. In old English law, the duty of keeping watch and ward, with a horn to blow upon any occasion of surprise.

Ward-in-chancery. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor.

Ward-mote. In old English law, a court kept in every ward in London, commonly called the "ward-mote court," or "inquest."

Ward-penny. In old English law, money paid to the sheriff or castellains, for the duty of watching and warding a castle.

Wardship. In military tenures, the right of the lord to have custody, as guardian, of the body and lands of the infant heir, without any account of profits, until he was twenty-one or she sixteen. In socage the guardian was accountable for profits; and he was not the lord, but the nearest relative to whom the inheritance could not descend, and the wardship ceased at fourteen. In copyholds, the lord was the guardian, but was perhaps accountable for profits. See 2 Bl.Comm. 67.

Wardship in chivalry. An incident to the tenure of knight-service.

Wardship in copyholds. The lord is guardian of his infant tenant by special custom.

Wards of admiralty. Seamen are sometimes thus designated, because, in view of their general improvidence and rashness, and though they are not technically incapable of contracting, their contracts are treated like those of fiduciaries and beneficiaries, and if there is any inequality in terms or any disproportion in the bargain or any sacrifice of rights of seamen which are not compensated by extraordinary benefits, the judicial interpretation of the transaction is that the bargain is unjust and that pro tanto, the bargain ought to be set aside as inequitable. See Garrett v. Moore-McCormack Co., Pa., 317 U.S. 239, 63 S.Ct. 246, 251, 87 L.Ed. 239.

Ward-staff. In old records, a constable's or watchman's staff.

Ward-wit. In old English law, immunity or exemption from the duty or service of ward, or from contributing to such service. Exemption from amercement for not finding a man to do ward.

Warda /wörda/. L. Lat. In old English law, ward; guard; protection; keeping; custody. A ward; an infant under wardship.

Warden. A guardian; a keeper. Person in primary charge of prison. This is the name given to various officers.

Warden of the cinque ports /wördan av da sink ports/. In English law, the title of the governor or presiding officer of the Cinque Ports (q.v.). Since 1978 the office has been held by the Queen Mother.

Wards and liveries. In English law, the title of a court of record, established in the reign of Henry VIII. Such was abolished in 1660. See Court of Wards and Liveries.

Warectare /wọrıkteriy/. L. Lat. In old English law, to fallow ground; or plow up land (designed for wheat) in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for the better improvement.

Warehouse. Structure used for the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. Carter v. Bauman, C.C.A. Cal., 19 F.2d 855, 856. The term may include any structure used to hold goods, stores or wares temporarily or for a length of time. In re Miller Land & Livestock Co., D.C.Mont., 56 F.Supp. 34, 35.

Warehouse book. A book used by merchants to contain an account of the quantities of goods received, shipped, and remaining in stock.

Warehouseman. One engaged in business of receiving and storing goods of others for compensation or profit; person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire. U.C.C. § 7–102. State ex rel. and for Use and Benefit of Cawrse v. American Surety Co. of New York, 148 Or. 1, 35 P.2d 487, 491. The business is public or private as it may be conducted for storage of goods of general public or for those of certain persons. The general commercial laws governing rights and liabilities of warehousemen are provided in U.C.C. § 7–201 et seq.

Warehousemen's lien. Right of warehouseman to retain possession of goods until storage charges have been paid. See U.C.C. §§ 7–209, 7–210.

Warehouse receipt. A document in the form of "a receipt issued by a person engaged in the business of storing goods for hire." U.C.C. § 1–201(45). It is evidence of title to goods thereby represented. § 1–210(15). For form and content of warehouse receipt, see U.C.C. § 7–202. As regards altered warehouse receipts, see § 7–208. See also Field warehouse receipt.

Warehouse system. A system of public stores or warehouses, established or authorized by law, called "bonded warehouses," in which an importer may deposit goods imported, in the custody of the revenue officers, paying storage, but not being required to pay the customs duties until the goods are finally removed for consumption in the home market, and with the privilege of withdrawing the goods from store for the purpose of re-exportation without paying any duties.

Bonded warehouse. Special type of private warehouse used to store products on which a federal tax must be paid before they can be sold.

Warehousing. Practice of mortgage banker of holding mortgages until the market for their resale improves. Term also refers to situation when a corporation gives advance notice of its intention to launch a tender offer to institutional investors who are then able to purchase stock in the target company before the tender offer is made public and the price of shares rises. Chiarella v. United States, 445 U.S. 222, 234, 100 S.Ct. 1108, 1117, 63 L.Ed.2d 346.

Warning. A pointing out of danger. Also a protest against incurring it. The purpose of a "warning" is to apprise a party of the existence of danger of which he is not aware to enable him to protect himself against it, and where the party is aware of the danger, the warning will serve no useful purpose and is unnecessary, and there is no duty to warn against risks which are open and obvious. Wiseman v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 214 Minn. 101, 7 N.W.2d 672, 675.

Federal laws require warning labels to be affixed to potentially dangerous products, clothes, drugs, tools, and the like (see e.g. 21 U.S.C.A. § 825).

See also Caveat; Caveat emptor.

Warnistura /wɔrnist(y)urə/. In old English records, garniture; furniture; provision.

Warnoth. In old English law, an ancient custom, whereby, if any tenant holding of the Castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and, for the second failure, treble, etc.

War power. Power of federal government to wage war successfully. Brown v. Wright, C.C.A.W.Va., 137 F.2d 484, 489; United States v. Maviglia, D.C.N.J., 52 F.Supp. 946, 947. It embraces every aspect of national defense, including protection of war materials as well as members of armed forces from injury and danger; but direct interference with liberty and property and abridgement of constitutional guaranties of freedom can be justified.
under the “war power” only where the danger to the government is real, impending and imminent. Schueller v. Drum, D.C.Pa., 51 F.Supp. 383, 387.

While Congress has power to declare war (Art. I, § 8, U.S.Const.), the President, as Commander in Chief, has ultimate power over conduct of war including tactics and strategy (Art. II, § 1).

See also War (War clauses).

War powers resolution. Passed by Congress over a Presidential veto in 1973; restricts the executive’s authority to involve the U.S. in foreign controversies without Congressional approval. Specific provisions ensure that the President has authority to send the military into combat without requesting authorization from Congress if the United States or one of her territories is attacked. 50 U.S.C.A. §§ 1541–48.

Warrant, v. In contracts, to engage or promise that a certain fact or state of facts, in relation to the subject-matter, is, or shall be, as it is represented to be.

In conveyancing, to assure the title to property sold, by an express covenant to that effect in the deed of conveyance. To stipulate by an express covenant that the title of a grantee shall be good, and his possession undisturbed.

See also Warranty.

Warrant, n. An order by which the drawer authorizes one person to pay a particular sum of money.

An authority issued to a collector of taxes, empowering him to collect the taxes extended on the assessment roll, and to make distress and sale of goods or land in default of payment.

A command of a council, board, or official whose duty it is to pass upon the validity and determine the amount of a claim against the municipality, to the treasurer to pay money out of any funds in the municipal treasury, which are or may become available for the purpose specified, to a designated person whose claim therefor has been duly adjusted and allowed. Roe v. Roosevelt Water Conservation Dist., 41 Ariz. 197, 16 P.2d 967, 970; State ex rel. Toomey v. State Board of Examiners, 74 Mont. 1, 238 P. 316, 328.

See also Land warrant; Possessor warrant; Probable cause; Search warrant; Share-warrant to bearer.

 Arrest warrant. A written order of the court which is made on behalf of the state, or United States, and is based upon a complaint issued pursuant to statute and/or court rule and which commands law enforcement officer to arrest a person and bring him before magistrate. Pillsbury v. State, 31 Wis.2d 87, 142 N.W.2d 187, 190. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 4 and 9.

Form. The warrant shall be signed by the magistrate and shall contain the name of the defendant or, if his name is unknown, any name or description by which he can be identified with reasonable certainty. It shall describe the offense charged in the complaint. It shall command that the defendant be arrested and brought before the nearest available magistrate. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(c).

Issuance. If it appears from the complaint, or from an affidavit or affidavits filed with the complaint, that there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed and that the defendant has committed it, a warrant for the arrest of the defendant shall issue to any officer authorized by law to execute it. Upon the request of the attorney for the government a summons instead of a warrant shall issue. More than one warrant or summons may issue on the same complaint. If a defendant fails to appear in response to the summons, a warrant shall issue. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(a).

See also Arrest; Probable cause; Search warrant; Warrantless arrest.

Bench warrant. See Bench.

Death warrant. A warrant issued generally by the chief executive authority of a state, directed to the sheriff or other proper local officer or the warden of a jail, commanding him at a certain time to proceed to carry into execution a sentence of death imposed by the court upon a convicted criminal.

Distress warrant. See Distress.

General warrant. A search or arrest warrant that is not particular as to the person to be arrested or the property to be seized.

A process which formerly issued from the state secretary’s office in England to take up (without naming any persons) the author, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the House of Commons on the 22nd April, 1766.

Interest warrant. Order drawn by a corporation on its bank directing the bank to pay a bondholder who is entitled to interest.

Landlord’s warrant. See Landlord.

Land warrant. See that title.

Outstanding warrant. An order for arrest of a person which has not yet been executed.

Search warrant. See that title.

Stock warrants. Certificates entitling the owner to buy a specified amount of stock at a specified time(s) for a specified price. Such differ from stock options only in that options are generally granted to employees and warrants are sold to the public. Warrants are typically long period options, are freely transferable, and if the underlying shares are listed on a securities exchange, are also publicly traded. See also Stock (Stock rights).

Warrant creditor. See Creditor.

Warrant of arrest. See Arrest Warrant, above.

Warrant of attorney. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt. It usually contains a stipulation not to bring any action, or any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him; such writing usually being given as security for obligation on which judgment was authorized, and in such procedure service of process is not essential. See Judgment (Confession of Judgment).

Warrant of commitment. A written authority committing a person to custody.

Warrant officers. In the United States army, navy, coast and geodetic survey, coast guard, marine corps and air force, these are a class of inferior officers who hold their rank by virtue of a written warrant instead of a commission.

Warrant of merchantability. See also Warranty.

Warrant to sue and defend. In old English practice, a special warrant from the crown, authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him. 3 Bl. Comm. 25. A special authority given by a party to his attorney, to commence a suit, or to appear and defend a suit, in his behalf. These warrants are now disused, though formal entries of them upon the record were long retained in practice.

Warrant upon indictment or information. See Fed.R. Crim.P. 9. See also indictment; Information.

Warrantee. A person to whom a warranty is made.

Warranty. A promise that a proposition of fact is true.

Warranty of charte /wohrants(hiy)i kartiy/. In old English practice, warranty of charter. A writ which lay for one who, being enfeoffed of lands or tenements, with a clause of warranty, was afterwards impeached in an assize or other action in which he could not vouch to warranty. In such case, it might be brought against the warrantor, to compel him to assist the tenant with a good plea or defense, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant. 3 Bl Comm. 300.

Warranty of commitment. A written authority committing a person to custody, to bind one's self, by covenant in the form of a statement of fact respecting the quality or character of goods sold, or fitness of purpose of the goods. A warranty is a statement or representation made by seller of goods, contemporaneously with and as a part of contract of sale, though collateral to express object of sale, having reference to and ensuring the character, quality, or fitness of purpose of the goods. A warranty is a statement or representation made by seller of goods, having reference to character, quality, fitness, or title of goods, and by which seller promises or undertakes to insure that certain facts are or shall be as he then represents them. Vasco Trucking, Inc. v. Parkhill Truck Co., 6 Ill.App.3d 572, 286 N.E.2d 383, 386. A promise or agreement by seller that article sold has certain qualities or that seller has good title thereto. A statement of fact respecting the quality or character of goods sold, made by the seller to induce the sale, and relied on by the buyer.

Warrantors. One who makes a warranty. Any supplier or other person who gives or offers to give a written warranty or who is or may be obligated under an implied warranty. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301.

Warrantor potest excipere quod querens non tenant terram de qua petit warrantiam, et quod donum fuit insufficiens /wohrants(hiy)sm, et kwod downam fywest insish(iy)enz/. A warrantor may object that the complainant does not hold the land of which he seeks the warranty, and that the gift was insufficient.

Warranty. A promise that a proposition of fact is true. See Fed.R.

Commercial Transactions

An assurance or guaranty, either express in the form of a statement by a seller of goods, or implied by law, having reference to and ensuring the character, quality, or fitness of purpose of the goods. A warranty is a statement or representation made by seller of goods, having reference to character, quality, fitness, or title of goods, and by which seller promises or undertakes to insure that certain facts are or shall be as he then represents them. Vasco Trucking, Inc. v. Parkhill Truck Co., 6 Ill.App.3d 572, 286 N.E.2d 383, 386. A promise or agreement by seller that article sold has certain qualities or that seller has good title thereto. A statement of fact respecting the quality or character of goods sold, made by the seller to induce the sale, and relied on by the buyer.
Express warranty. A promise, ancillary to an underlying sales agreement, which is included in the written or oral terms of the sales agreement under which the promisor assures the quality, description, or performance of the goods. (1) Express warranties by the seller are created as follows: (a) Any affirmation of fact or promise made by the seller to the buyer which relates to the goods and becomes part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods shall conform to the affirmation or promise. (b) Any description of the goods which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods shall conform to the description. (c) Any sample or model which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model. (2) It is not necessary to the creation of an express warranty that the seller use formal words such as "warrant" or "guarantee" or that he have a specific intention to make a warranty, but an affirmation merely of the value of the goods or a statement purporting to be merely the seller's opinion or commendation of the goods does not create a warranty. U.C.C. § 2-313.

A written statement arising out of a sale to the consumer of a consumer good pursuant to which the manufacturer, distributor, or retailer undertakes to preserve or maintain the utility or performance of the consumer good or provide compensation if there is a failure in utility or performance; or in the event of any sample or model, that the whole of the goods conforms to such sample or model. It is not necessary to the creation of an express warranty that formal words such as "warrant" or "guarantee" be used, but if such words are used then an express warranty is created. An affirmation merely of the value of the goods or a statement purporting to be merely an opinion or commendation of the goods does not create a warranty. Statements or representations such as expressions of general policy concerning customer satisfaction which are not subject to any limitation do not create an express warranty. Calif.Civil Code, § 1791.2.

See also Written warranty, below.

Extended service warranty. Type of additional warranty sold with purchase of appliances, motor vehicles, and other consumer goods to cover repair costs not otherwise covered by manufacturer's standard warranty. Also known as an extended service contract, such either extends the coverage period or extends the range of potential defects covered beyond the protection furnished in the contract of sale. Continental Insurance v. Page Engineering, Wyo., 783 P.2d 641.

Full warranty. A warranty as to full performance covering generally both labor and materials. Under a full warranty, the warrantor must remedy the consumer product within a reasonable time and without charge after notice of a defect or malfunction. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2304. Compare Limited warranty, below.

Implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for particular purpose. A promise arising by operation of law, that something which is sold shall be merchantable and fit for the purpose for which the seller has reason to know that it is required. (a) Unless excluded or modified, a warranty that the goods shall be merchantable is implied in a contract for their sale, if the seller is a merchant with respect to goods of that kind. The serving for value of food or drink to be consumed either on the premises or elsewhere is a sale for this purpose. U.C.C. § 2-314(1). (b) Where the seller, at the time of contracting, has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required, and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods, there is, unless excluded or modified, an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose. U.C.C. § 2-315.

"Implied warranty of fitness" means that when the retailer, distributor, or manufacturer has reason to know any particular purpose for which the consumer goods are required, and further, that the buyer is relying on the skill and judgment of the seller to select and furnish suitable goods, then there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose and that when there is a sale of an assistive device sold at retail in the state, then there is an implied warranty by the retailer that the device is specifically fit for the particular needs of the buyer. Calif.Civil Code, § 1791.1.

"Implied warranty of merchantability" or "implied warranty that goods are merchantable" means that the consumer goods meet each of the following: (1) Pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; (2) Are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used; (3) Are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled; (4) Conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label. Calif. Civil Code, § 1791.1.

See also Fitness for particular purpose; Merchantability; Merchantable.

Limited warranty. A written warranty which fails to meet one or more of the minimum standards for a "full" warranty. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2303. Warranty limited to labor or to materials for a specified time, commonly given by automobile dealers in connection with sale of used cars. Compare Full warranty, above.

Presentment warranties. Implied-in-law promises concerning the title and credibility of an instrument which are made by certain persons to a payor or acceptor upon presentment of the instrument for payment or acceptance. See U.C.C. §§ 3-417(1), 3-418, 4-207(1).

Third party beneficiaries of warranties. See Privity.

Transfer warranties. With respect to instruments, implied-in-law promises concerning title to, and credibility of, an instrument which a transferor of the instrument for consideration gives her transferee and, if the transfer is by indorsement, to remote transferees. U.C.C. §§ 3-417(2) & 4-207(2). A transferee of a document of title also makes transfer warranties, upon transferring a
WARRANTY

Affirmative warranty. In the law of insurance, warranties may be either express or implied, but they usually consist of positive representations in the contractually to the risk insured against. Reid v. Hardbe, 321 S.E.2d 317, 321. That policy should not be binding, unless such statement by insured upon the literal truth of which the insurance contract by insured, which is susceptible of no construction other than that parties mutually intended. See also Express warranty, above.

Written warranty. Any written affirmation of fact or written promise made in connection with the sale of a consumer product by a supplier to a buyer which relates to the nature of the material or workmanship and affirms or promises that such material or workmanship is defect free or will meet a specified period of time, or any undertaking in writing in connection with the sale by a supplier of a consumer product to refund, repair, replace, or take other remedial action with respect to such product in the event that such product fails to meet with the specifications set forth in the undertaking, which written affirmation, promise, or undertaking becomes part of the basis of the bargain between a supplier and a buyer for purposes other than resale of such product. 15 U.S.C.A. § 2301. See also Express warranty, above.

Insurance

A warranty in the law of insurance consists of a statement by insured upon the literal truth of which the validity of the contract depends. Statement, made in insurance contract by insured, which is susceptible of no construction other than that parties mutually intended that policy should not be binding, unless such statement be literally true. Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Wood, Tex.Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 665, 668.

A statement, description or undertaking on the part of insured, appearing in the policy or in another instrument properly incorporated in the policy and relating contractually to the risk insured against. Reid v. Hardware Mut. Ins. Co. of Carolinas, S. C., 252 S.C. 339, 166 S.E.2d 317, 321.

Affirmative warranty. In the law of insurance, warranties may be either affirmative or promissory. Affirmative warranties may be either express or implied, but they usually consist of positive representations in the policy of the existence of some fact or state of things at the time, or previous to the time, of the making of the policy; they are, in general, conditions precedent, and if untrue, whether material to the risk or not, the policy does not attach, as it is not the contract of the insurer.

Express warranty. An agreement expressed in a policy, whereby the assured stipulates that certain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be done. Promissory warranty. In the law of insurance, a warranty which requires the performance or omission of certain things or the existence of certain facts after the beginning of the contract of insurance and during its continuance, and the breach of which will avoid the policy. See also Promissory warranty.

Generally

Construction warranty. An undertaking or promise made by seller or building contractor of new home that such home is fit for the purpose intended; i.e. free from structural, electrical, plumbing, etc. defects. Many states have statutes which provide the purchaser with such warranty protection. See Home Owners Warranty; also, Warranty of habitability, below.

Continuing warranty. One which applies to the whole period during which the contract is in force; e.g., an undertaking in a charter-party that a vessel shall continue to be of the same class that she was at the time the charter-party was made.

Covenant of warranty. See Covenant.

Cumulation and conflict of warranties. Warranties whether express or implied shall be construed as consistent with each other and as cumulative, but if such construction is unreasonable the intention of the parties shall determine which warranty is dominant. In ascertaining that intention the following rules apply: (a) Exact or technical specifications displace an inconsistent sample or model or general language of description. (b) A sample from an existing bulk displaces inconsistent general language of description. (c) Express warranties displace inconsistent implied warranties other than an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. U.C.C. § 2-317.

General warranty. The name of a covenant of warranty inserted in deeds, by which the grantor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to "warrant and forever defend" to the grantee, his heirs, etc., the title thereby conveyed, against the lawful claims of all persons whatsoever. Where the warranty is only against the claims of persons claiming "by, through, or under" the grantor or his heirs, it is called a "special warranty."

Implied warranty. Exists when the law derives it by implication or inference from the nature of the transaction or the relative situation or circumstances of the parties. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Walker, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 627, 632. See also this topic under "Commercial Transactions", above.

Warranty of title. In a sale of goods an implied promise exists that the seller owns the item offered for sale. (1) Subject to subsection (2) there is in a contract for sale a warranty by the seller that (a) the title conveyed shall be good, and its transfer rightful; and (b) the goods shall be delivered free from any security interest or other lien or encumbrance of which the buyer at the time of contracting has no knowledge. (2) A warranty under subsection (1) will be excluded or modified only by specified language or by circumstances which give the buyer reason to know that the person selling does not claim title in himself or that he is purporting to sell only such right or title as he or a third person may have. (3) Unless otherwise agreed a seller who is a merchant regularly dealing in goods of the kind warrants that the goods shall be delivered free of the rightful claim of any third person by way of infringement or the like but a buyer who furnishes specifications to the seller must hold the seller harmless against any such claim which arises out of compliance with the specifications. U.C.C. § 2-312.

See also Expressed warranty, above.
Lineal warranty. In old conveying, the kind of warranty which existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

Personal warranty. One available in personal actions, and arising from the obligation which one has contracted to pay the whole or part of a debt due by another to a third person. Flanders v. Seelye, 105 U.S. 718, 26 L.Ed. 1217.

Special warranty. A clause of warranty inserted in a deed of lands, by which the grantor covenants, for himself and his heirs, to “warrant and forever defend” the title to the same, to the grantee and his heirs, etc., against all persons claiming “by, through, or under” the grantor or his heirs. If the warranty is against the claims of all persons whatsoever, it is called a “general” warranty. See also Covenant.

Warranty deed. See that title.

Warranty of fitness. Warranty by seller that goods sold are suitable for special purpose of buyer. See also Implied warranty of fitness under “Commercial Transactions”, above.

Warranty of habitability. Implied warranty of landlord that the leased premises are properly maintained and are fit for habitation at time of letting and will remain so during term of tenancy. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway, 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 801.

Under “implied warranty of habitability,” applicable to new housing, builder-vendor warrants that he has complied with the building code of the area in which the structure is located and that the residence was built in a workmanlike manner and is suitable for habitation. Duncan v. Schuster-Graham Homes, Inc., Colo.App., 563 P.2d 976, 977. See also Habitability.

Warranty deed. Deed in which grantor warrants good, clear title. A deed which explicitly contains covenants concerning the quality of title it conveys. In some states, statutes impute warranties or covenants from the use of specific words, such as “grant.” The usual covenants of title are warranties of seisin, quiet enjoyment, right to convey, freedom from encumbrances and defense of title as to all claims. Compare Quitclaim deed.

Warranty, voucher to. In old English practice, the calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him.

Warren. A term in English law for a place in which birds, fishes, or wild beasts are kept.

A franchise or privilege, either by prescription or grant from the king, to keep beasts and fowls of warren, which are hares, conies, partridges, pheasants, etc. Also any place to which such privilege extends.

Free warren. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Bl.Comm. 39, 417. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warren extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Bl.Comm. 39. Such was abolished in 1971.

War risk insurance. See insurance.

Warsaw Convention. Treaty concluded in Warsaw, Poland in 1929 consisting of rules, including limitation of liability, for international air travel. The United States is a party to such treaty.

Warshoet /worskot/. In Saxon law, a customary or usual tribute or contribution towards armor, or the arming of the forces.

Warth. In old English law, a customary payment, supposed to be the same with ward-penny.

Wash. A shallow part of a river or arm of the sea. The sandy, rocky, gravelly, boulder-bestrewn part of a river bottom deposited on level land near mouth of a canyon representing rocks and gravel washed down by a mountain stream.

Wash bank. A bank composed of such substance that it is likely to be washed away by the action of the water thereon, so as to become unsafe to travelers on highway.

Washington, Treaty of. A treaty signed on May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States of America, with reference to certain differences arising out of the war between the northern and southern states of the Union, the Canadian fisheries, and other matters.

Wash sale. The offsetting sale and purchase of the same or similar asset within a short time period. For income tax purposes, losses on a sale of stock may not be recognized if equivalent stock is purchased within thirty days before or thirty days after the date of sale. I.R.C. § 1091.

Transactions resulting in no change in beneficial ownership. Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 205, 96 S.Ct. 1375, 1386, 47 L.Ed.2d 668. A fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. Such practices of wash sales and matched orders by brokers to give impression of active trading in such securities are prohibited by SEC. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78i(a)(1). See also Sale.

Wash transaction. See Wash sale.

Waste. Action or inaction by a possessor of land causing unreasonable injury to the holders of other estates in the same land. An abuse or destructive use of property by one in rightful possession. Spoil or destruction, done or permitted, to lands, houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in reversion or remain-Waste. See Double.

But an act which adds value and improves the property, results in its substantial injury. Unreasonable conduct by owner of possessory estate that results in physical damage to real estate and substantial diminution in value of estates in which others have an interest. Pleasure Time, Inc. v. Kuss, 78 Wis.2d 373, 254 N.W.2d 463, 467.

The term implies neglect or misconduct resulting in material damage to or loss of property, does not include ordinary depreciation of property due to age and normal wear, but which results in substantial injury. First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass’n v. Coffeyville v. Moulds, 202 Kan. 557, 451 P.2d 215, 220. It is the violation of an obligation to treat the premises in such manner that no harm be done to them, and that the estate may revert to those having an underlying interest, undertainted by any willful or negligent acts. Camden Trust Co. v. Handle, 130 N.J.Eq. 125, 21 A.2d 354, 368.

The primary distinction between “waste” and “trespass” is that in waste the injury is done by one rightfully in possession. Camden Trust Co. v. Handle, 132 N.J.Eq. 97, 26 A.2d 865, 867, 869.

The early English doctrine was to the effect that anything which changed the character or nature of the land, notwithstanding the fact that it was an improvement thereto, constituted “waste.”

Old English criminal law. A prerogative or liberty, on the part of the crown, of committing waste on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houses, extirpating their gardens, plowing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. 4 Bl.Comm. 385.

In General

Ameliorating waste. Change in the physical characteristics of property by an unauthorized act of the tenant, but an act which adds value and improves the property. A tenant is usually not liable for such waste.

Commissive waste. Active or positive waste; waste done by acts of spoliation or destruction, rather than by mere neglect; the same as voluntary waste (see below).

Double waste. See Double.

Equitable waste. Injury to a reversion or remainder in real estate, which is not recognized by the courts of law as waste, but which equity will interpose to prevent or remedy. Otherwise defined as an unconscientious abuse of the privilege of non-impleachability for waste at common law, whereby a tenant for life, without impeach-ment of waste, will be restrained from committing willful, destructive, malicious, or extravagant waste, such as pulling down houses, cutting timber of too young a growth, or trees planted for ornament, or for shelter of premises.

Impeachment of waste. Liability for waste committed, or a demand or suit for compensation for waste committed upon lands or tenements by a tenant thereof who has no right to commit waste. On the other hand, a tenure “without impeachment of waste” signifies that the tenant cannot be called to account for waste committed.

Nul waste. “No waste.” The name of a plea in an action of waste, denying the commission of waste, and forming the general issue.

Permissive waste. That kind of waste which is a matter of omission only, as by tenant letting premises fall into disrepair by not making reasonable maintenance repairs expected of tenant.

Voluntary waste. Active or positive waste; waste done or committed, in contradistinction to that which results from mere negligence, which is called “permissive” waste. Voluntary waste is the willful destruction or carrying away of something attached to the freehold, and “permissive waste” is the failure to take reasonable care of the premises. Voluntary or commissive waste consists of injury to the demised premises or some part thereof, when occasioned by some deliberate or voluntary act, as, for instance, the pulling down of a house or removal of floors, windows, doors, furnaces, shelves, or other things affixed to and forming part of the freehold. Contrasted with “permissive” waste (above).

Writ of waste. See that title.

Waste-book. A book used by merchants, to receive rough entries or memoranda of all transactions in the order of their occurrence, previous to their being posted in the journal. Otherwise called a “blotter.”

Wastel /wôstal/. A standard of quality of bread, made of the finest white flour. Cocket bread was slightly inferior in quality. The statute of 1266 mentions seven kinds of bread.

Waste water. Water that is actually wasted or not needed by the claimant thereto; water which, after it has served the purpose of the lawful claimant thereto, has been permitted to run to waste or to escape; and water which from unavoidable causes escapes from the ditches, canals, or other works of the lawful claimants. Rock Creek Ditch & Flume Co. v. Miller, 93 Mont. 248, 17 P.2d 1074, 1077. But water is not “waste water” so long as it remains on the land of the original appropriator.

Wasting asset. A natural resource having a limited useful life and, hence, subject to amortization called depletion. An asset that will be exhausted through its use. Examples are timberland, oil and gas wells, and ore deposits. See also Depletion; Wasting property.

Wasting property. Includes such property as leasehold interests; royalties; patent rights; interests in things the substance of which is consumed, such as mines, oil and gas wells, quarries and timberlands; interests in things which are consumed in the using or are worn out by use, such as machinery and farm implements. In re Pennock’s Will, 285 N.Y. 475, 35 N.E.2d 177, 178. See also Wasting asset.

Wasting trust. A trust in which the trustee may apply a part of the principal to make good a deficiency of income. Trust, the rest of which consists in whole or in part of property which is gradually being consumed (i.e. consisting of wasting assets).

Wastors /wéystərz/. In old statutes, a kind of thieves.

Watch, v. To keep guard; to stand as sentinel; to be on guard at night, for the preservation of security, peace and good order.

Watch, n. A division of a ship’s crew. At sea, the ship’s company is divided into two watches, larboard and starboard, with a mate to command each. O’Hara v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 269 U.S. 364, 46 S.Ct. 157, 160, 70 L.Ed. 313. Also the division of the day into time periods of service of the officers and crew, and, by immemorial Anglo-Saxon maritime custom, the time period of a watch never exceeded four hours. The Denali, C.C.A. Wash., 105 F.2d 413, 416. See also Lookout.

Watch and ward. “Watch” denotes keeping guard during the night; “ward,” by day.

Watchman. One whose general duties consist of guarding, patrolling, and overseeing a building, group of buildings, or other property.

Water. As designating a commodity or a subject of ownership, this term has the same meaning in law as in common speech; but in another sense, and especially in the plural, it may designate a body of water, such as a river, a lake, or an ocean, or an aggregate of such bodies of water, as in the phrases “foreign waters,” “waters of the United States,” and the like.

See also Flood water; High water line or mark; Implied reservation of water doctrine; Inland waters; Intermittent stream; Low-water mark; Waste water.

Backwater. See that title.

Coast waters. See that title.

Developed water. Water which is brought to the surface and made available for use by the party claiming the water.

Flood waters. Waters which escape from a water course in great volume and flow over adjoining lands in no regular channel. The fact that such errant waters make for themselves a temporary channel or follow some natural channel, gully, or depression does not affect their character as “flood waters” or give to the course which they follow the character of a natural “water course.” Everett v. Davis, Cal.App., 107 P.2d 650, 654, 655. See also Flood.

Foreign waters. Those belonging to another nation or country or subject to another jurisdiction, as distinguished from “domestic” waters.

Inland waters. See that title.

Navigable waters. See that title.

Percolating waters. Those which pass through the ground beneath the surface of the earth without any definite channel, and do not form a part of the body or flow, surface or subterranean, of any water-course. They may be either rain waters which are slowly infiltrating through the soil or waters seeping through the banks or the bed of a stream, and which have so far left the bed and the other waters as to have lost their character as a part of the flow of that stream. Those which ooze, seep, or filter, through the soil beneath the surface without a defined channel, or in a course that is unknown and not discoverable from surface indications without excavation for that purpose. C & W Coal Corp. v. Salyer, 200 Va. 18, 104 S.E.2d 50, 53.

Private waters. Non-navigable streams, or bodies of water not open to the resort and use of the general public, but entirely owned and controlled by one or more individuals.

Public waters. Such as are adapted for the purposes of navigation, or those to which the general public have a right of access, as distinguished from artificial lakes, ponds, and other bodies of water privately owned, or similar natural bodies of water owned exclusively by one or more persons.

Subterranean waters. Waters which lie wholly beneath the surface of the ground, and which either ooze and seep through the subsurface strata without pursuing any defined course or channel (percolating waters), or flow in a permanent and regular but invisible course, or lie under the earth in a more or less immovable body, as a subterranean lake.

Surface waters. Those waters coming unto the ground and naturally spreading over the ground before they have formed into natural watercourses. Kirkpatrick v. Butler, 14 Ariz.App. 379, 483 P.2d 790, 794. As distinguished from the waters of a natural stream, lake, or pond, surface waters are such as diffuse themselves over the surface of the ground, following no defined course or channel, and not gathering into or forming any more definite body of water than a mere bog or marsh. They generally originate in rains and melting snows, but the flood waters of a river may also be considered as surface waters if they become separated from the main current, or leave it never to return, and spread out over lower ground. Water derived from rains and melting snows that is diffused over surface of the ground, and it continues to be such and may be impounded by the owner of the land until it reaches some well-defined channel in which it is accustomed to, and does, flow with other waters, or until it reaches some permanent lake or pond, whereupon it ceases to be “surface water” and becomes a “water course” or a “lake” or “pond,” as the case may be. Bohaty v. Briard, 219 Neb. 42, 361 N.W.2d 502, 506.

Surplus water. Water running off from ground which has been irrigated; water not consumed by the process of irrigation; water which the land irrigated will not take up.

Territorial waters. See that title.
WATER

Tide waters. See Tide.

Water-bayley. An officer mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth, (A.D. 1671,) whose duty was to collect dues to the colony for fish taken in their waters. Probably another form of water-bailiff.

Water-course. See that title.

Water front. Land or land with buildings fronting on a body of water.

Water-gage. A sea-wall or bank to restrain the current and overflowing of the water; also an instrument to measure water.

Water-gang. A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes.

Water-gavel. In old records, a gavel or rent paid for fishing in or other benefit received from some river or water.

Water-logged. A vessel is "water-logged" when she becomes heavy and unmanageable on account of the leakage of water into the hold.

Water-mark. See that title.

Water power. The water power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream when in its natural state, as it passes through his land, or along the boundary of it; or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land, and the surface where it leaves it. The use of water for power according to common understanding means its application to a water wheel to the end that its energy under the specified head and fall may be utilized and converted into available force. Holyoke Water Power Co. v. American Writing Paper Co., D.C.Mass., 17 F.Supp. 895, 898.

Water rights. A legal right, in the nature of a corporeal hereditament, to use the water of a natural stream or water furnished through a ditch or canal, for general or specific purposes, such as irrigation, mining, power, or domestic use, either to its full capacity or to a measured extent or during a defined portion of the time. City of Los Angeles v. City of Glendale, Cal.App., 132 P.2d 574, 584. A usufruct in a stream consisting in the right to have the water flow so that some portion of it may be reduced to possession and be made private property of individual; the right to divert water from natural stream by artificial means and apply the same to beneficial use. Ronzio v. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., C.C.A. Utah, 116 F.2d 604, 605. It includes right to change the use of diversion, storage, or use of water if rights of other water users will not be injured. Lindsey v. McClure, C.C.A.N.M., 136 F.2d 65, 70. It was also said to be real property which may be sold and transferred separately from land on which it has been used. Federal Land Bank of Spokane v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 54 Idaho 161, 29 P.2d 1009, 1011. See also Artificially developed water; Common enemy doctrine; Drainage rights; Excess or surplus water; Implied reservation of water doctrine; Littoral rights; Mill privilege; Reasonable use theory; Riparian rights.

Waterscape. An aqueduct or passage for water.

Waters of the United States. All waters within the United States which are navigable for the purposes of commerce, or whose navigation successfully aids commerce, are included in this term. See also Territorial waters.

Water course. A running stream of water; a natural stream fed from permanent or natural sources, including rivers, creeks, runs, and rivulets. There must be a stream, usually flowing in a particular direction, though it need not flow continuously. It may sometimes be dry. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed or banks, and usually discharges itself into some other stream or body of water. It must be something more than a mere surface drainage over the entire face of the tract of land, occasioned by unusual freshets or other extraordinary causes. Duckworth v. Williams, 238 S.W.2d 234, 386 S.W.2d 234, 235.

A water course, in the legal meaning of the word, does not consist merely of the stream as it flows within the banks which form its channel in ordinary stages of water, but the stream still retains its character as a water course when, in times of ordinary high water, the stream extending beyond its own banks, is accustomed to flow down over the adjacent lowlands in a broader but still definable stream. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hadley, 168 Okl. 588, 35 P.2d 463, 466.

Water flowing underground in a known and well defined channel is not "percolating water", but constitutes a "water course", and is governed by law applicable to "surface streams", rather than by law applicable to percolating waters. Bull v. Siegrist, 169 Or. 180, 126 P.2d 832, 834.

See also Ancient water course.

Natural water course. A natural stream flowing in a defined bed or channel; one formed by the natural flow of the water, as determined by the general superfluities or conformation of the surrounding country, as distinguished from an "artificial" water course, formed by the work of man, such as a ditch or canal.

Water district. Official geographical areas which are supplied water under regulation of a body of commissioners or other officials.

Watered stock. Stock issued by corporation for less than full and adequate consideration. Stock which is issued by a corporation as fully paid-up stock, when in fact the whole amount of the par value thereof has not been paid in. Stock issued as bonus or otherwise without consideration or issued for a sum of money less than par value, or issued for labor, services, or property which at a fair valuation is less than the par value.

Water-mark. A mark indicating the highest point to which water rises, or the lowest point to which it sinks.

Transparent design or symbol which can be seen when paper is held up to the light and is used to identify the manufacturer of the paper or the genuineness of the document such as a check or stamp.

High-water mark. This term is properly applicable to tidal waters, and designates the line on the shore reached by the water at the high or flood tide. With reference to the waters of artificial ponds or lakes, created by dams in unnavigable streams, it denotes the highest point on the shores to which the dams can raise the water in ordinary circumstances. The high-water mark of a river, not subject to tide, is the line which the river impresses on the soil by covering it for sufficient periods to deprive it of vegetation, and to destroy its value for agriculture.

Low-water mark. That line on the shore of the sea which marks the edge of the waters at the lowest point of the ordinary ebb tide. The "low-water mark," of a river is the point to which the water recedes at its lowest stage.

Water ordeal. See Ordeal.

Waterway. See Water course.

Waveson /wéyvəsn/. In old records, such goods as, after a wreck, swim or float on the waves. See Flotsam.

Wax scot. A duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches.

Way. A passage, path, road, or street. In a technical sense, a right of passage over land. See also Easement.

Private way. A right which a person has of passing over the land of another. In another sense (chiefly in New England) a private way is one laid out by the local public authorities for the accommodation of individuals and wholly or chiefly at their expense, but not restricted to their exclusive use, being subject, like highways, to the public easement of passage.

Right of way. See that title.

Way of necessity. Exists where land granted is completely environed by land of the grantor, or partially by his land and the land of strangers. Cole v. Wanamaker, 296 A.2d 329, 332. The law implies from these facts that a private right of way over the grantor's land was granted to the grantee as appurtenant to the estate. It is not merely one of convenience, and never exists where person may reach highway over his own land. And it cannot legally exist where neither the party claiming the way nor owner of land over which it is claimed, nor anyone under whom either of them claim, was ever seized of both tracts of land at same time. It is not based on continuous adverse use, but arises by implication of law from necessities of case, and ceses when necessity therefor ceases. The extent of a "way of necessity" is a way such as is required for complete and beneficial use of land to which the way is impliedly attached. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Yarian, 219 Ind. 477, 39 N.E.2d 604, 606.

Way-bill. Written document made out by carrier listing point of origin and destination, consignor and consignee, and describing goods included in shipment and transportation costs. Such constitutes the written description of the shipment in the event of any claim by or against common carrier. See also Bill of lading.

Way-going crop. A crop of grain sown by a tenant for a term certain, during his tenancy, but which will not ripen until after the expiration of his lease. In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary tenant is entitled thereto.

Wayleave. A right of way over or through land for the carriage of minerals from a mine or quarry. It is an easement, being a species of the class called "rights of way," and is generally created by express grant or reservation.

Waynagium /weynəˈjɪm/. Implements of husbandry.

Ways and means. In a legislative body, the "committee on ways and means" is a committee appointed to inquire into and consider the methods and sources for raising revenue, and to propose means for providing the funds needed by the government. In Congress it is a standing committee of the House of Representatives responsible for supervising legislation dealing with financial matters.

W.D. An abbreviation for "Western District," e.g. U.S. District Court for Western District of Kentucky.

Weal /wiːld/. Sax. A wood; the woody part of a country.

Wealreaf /wiːlriːf/. In old English law, the robbing of a dead man in his grave.

Wealth. Large quantity of possessions, assets, securities, and the like. State of having abundant financial resources and properties. All material objects, capable of satisfying human wants, desires, or tastes, having a value in exchange, and upon which human labor has been expended; i.e., which have, by such labor, been either reclaimed from nature, extracted or gathered from the earth or sea, manufactured from raw materials, improved, adopted, or cultivated. The aggregate of all the things, whether material or immaterial, which contribute to comfort and enjoyment, which cannot be obtained without more or less labor, and which are objects of frequent sale.

Weapon. An instrument of offensive or defensive combat, or anything used, or designed to be used, in destroying, defeating, threatening, or injuring a person. The term is chiefly used, in law, in the statutes prohibiting the carrying or using of "concealed" or "deadly" weapons. See also Dangerous weapon; Deadly weapon; Offensive weapon.

Wear, or weir /ˈwɛr/ir/. A great dam or fence made across a river, or against water, formed of stakes interlaced by twigs of osier, and accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill.

Wear and tear. "Natural wear and tear" means deterioration or depreciation in value by ordinary and reasonable use of the subject-matter. See Depreciation.
Wearing apparel. As generally used in statutes, refers not merely to a person's outer clothing, but covers all articles usually worn, and includes underclothing. Arnold v. U. S., 147 U.S. 494, 13 S. Ct. 406, 37 L.Ed. 253. All articles of dress generally worn by persons in the calling and condition of life and in the locality of the person in question. In re Steimes' Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Webb-Pomerene Act. Federal Act (1918) which provides a qualified exemption for an export association from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws. The Act is administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

Wed. Sax. A covenant or agreement. A pledge.

Wedbedrip. Sax. In old English law, a customary service which tenants paid to their lords, in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties; as if a covenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding.

Wedlock. State of marriage.

Week. A period of seven consecutive days of time; and, in some uses, the period beginning with Sunday and ending with Saturday. See Leach v. Burr, 188 U.S. 510, 23 S.Ct. 393, 47 L.Ed. 567. Words "two weeks" mean fourteen days. Fisher v. Booher, 269 Ky. 501, 107 S.W.2d 307, 309.

Week-work. In early English times, the obligation of a tenant to work two or three days in every week for his lord, during the greater part of the year, and four or five during the summer months.

Wehading. In old European law, the judicial combat, or duel; the trial by battle.

Weighage /wéya/. In English law, a duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise. It is called "tronage" for weighing wool at the king's beam, or "pesage" for weighing other avoirdupois goods.

Weight. A measure of heaviness or ponderosity; and in a metaphorical sense influence, effectiveness, or power to influence judgment or conduct. The quantity of heaviness, the quality of being heavy, the degree or extent of downward pressure under the influence of gravity, or the quantity of matter as estimated by the balance or scale.

Gross weight. Of packaged goods, the total weight, including contents and packaging.

Net weight. Of packaged goods, includes only weight of contained goods. See also Net weight.

Weight of evidence. The balance or preponderance of evidence; the inclination of the greater amount of credible evidence, offered in a trial, to support one side of the issue rather than the other. It indicates clearly to the jury that the party having the burden of proof will be entitled to their verdict, if, on weighing the evidence in their minds, they shall find the greater amount of credible evidence sustains the issue which is to be established before them. Weight is not a question of mathematics, but depends on its effect in inducing belief. See also Burden of proof; Preponderance of evidence.

Welfare. Well-doing or well-being in any respect; the enjoyment of health and common blessings of life; exemption from any evil or calamity; prosperity; happiness. See also General welfare; Public welfare.

Welfare clause. Constitutional provision (Art. I, § 8) permitting the federal government to enact laws for the overall general welfare of the people. It is the basis for the exercise of implied powers necessary to carry out the express provisions of the Constitution.

Well, adj. In marine insurance, a term used as descriptive of the safety and soundness of a vessel, in a warranty of her condition at a particular time and place; as, "warranted well at _____ on _______."

In old reports, good, sufficient, unobjectionable in law; the opposite of "ill."

Well, n. A hole or shaft sunk into the earth in order to obtain a fluid, such as water, oil, brine, or natural gas, from a subterranean supply. Loosely, any shaft or pit dug or bored in the earth, or any space so constructed as to suggest or be likened to, a well for water; a pit or hole in the ground or a hollow cylinder built in such hole; or a shaft or excavation in mining. Seismograph Service Corporation v. Mason, 193 Okl. 623, 145 P.2d 967, 970.

Well knowing. A phrase used in pleading as the technical expression in laying a scienter (q.v.).

Welshing /welshing/. Receiving a sum of money or valuable thing, undertaking to return the same or the value thereof together with other money, if an event (for example, the result of a horse-race) shall be determined in a certain manner, and at the time of receiving the deposit intending to cheat and defraud the depositor. The crime is larceny at common law.

Welsh mortgage. See Mortgage.

Wend. In old records, a large extent of ground, comprising several juga; a perambulation; a circuit.

Wer. See Amendment.

Wera, or were /wir(a)/. The estimation or price of a man, especially of one slain. In the criminal law of the Anglo-Saxons, every man's life had its value, called a "were," or "capitis aestimatio."

Weregelt thef /wirgelt-thetf/. Sax. In old English law, a robber who might be ransomed.

Weregild, or wergild /wirgild/wirgild/. This was the price of homicide, or other atrocious personal offense, paid partly to the king for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord for the loss of a vassal, and partly to the next of kin of the injured person. In the Anglo-Saxon laws, the amount of compensation varied with the degree or rank of the party slain. See Angild; Angylde.

Werelada. A purging from a crime by the oaths of several persons, according to the degree and quality of the accused.
Whack. To divide into shares, apportion, parcel out, make a division settlement, square accounts, or to pay.

Whale. A royal fish, the head being the king’s property, and the tail the queen’s.

Wharf. A structure on the margin or shore of navigable waters, alongside of which vessels can be brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded, or a space of ground, artificially prepared, for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the discharge of such vessel.

Private wharf. One whose owner or lessee has the exclusive enjoyment or use thereof. The M. L. C. No. 10, C.C.A.N.Y., 10 F.2d 699, 702.

Public wharf. One to which vessels and the public can resort, either at will or on assignment of a berth by a harbor authority. Kafline v. Brooklyn Eastern Dist. Terminal Co., 180 App.Div. 858, 168 N.Y.S. 120, 121.

Wharfinger /waːrfɪnɚ/. The owner or occupier of a wharf; one who for hire receives merchandise on his wharf, either for the purpose of forwarding or for delivery to the consignee on such wharf.

Wharfing out, right of. A right to the exclusive use of submerged lands as by the affixing thereto or the establishment thereon of a permanent structure to some point within the navigable body of water, deep and wide enough to dock ocean-going vessels, and it presupposes exclusive use and to that extent may interfere with fishing or navigation. City of Oakland v. Hogan, 41 Cal.App.2d 333, 106 P.2d 987, 994.

Wharton Rule. In criminal law of conspiracy, the rule that an agreement by two persons to commit a particular crime cannot be prosecuted as a conspiracy when the crime is of such a nature as to require necessarily the participation of the two persons, e.g. adultery. It is named after the criminal law author, Francis Wharton. Iannelli v. U. S., 420 U.S. 770, 95 S.Ct. 1284, 1288, 43 L.Ed.2d 616. Also called “concert of action” rules.

Wheel. An engine of torture used in medieval Europe, on which a criminal was bound while his limbs or bones were broken one by one till he died.

Wheelage. Duty or toll paid for vehicles passing over certain ground.

Whelps /wɛlps/. The young of certain animals of a base nature or ferre naturae.

When. At what time; at the time that; at which time; at that time. Gehring v. Collister, 52 Ohio App. 314, 3 N.E.2d 700, 701, 5 O.O. 195. At, during, or after the time that; at or just after the moment that. In re Morrow’s Will, 41 N.M. 723, 73 P.2d 1360, 1364. In the event that, on condition that, in virtue of the circumstances that. Frequently employed as equivalent to the word “if” in legislative enactments and in common speech.

West Saxon Lage. The laws of the West Saxons, which obtained in the counties to the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire. Blackstone supposes these to have been much the same with the laws of Alfred, being the municipal law of the far most considerable part of his dominions, and particularly including Berkshire, the seat of his peculiar residence. 1 Bl. Comm. 65. See Mercen-lage.

Westminster. A city immediately adjoining London, and forming a part of the metropolis; formerly the seat of the superior courts of the kingdom.

Westminster Confession. A document containing a statement of religious doctrine, concocted at a conference of British and continental Protestant divines at Westminster, in the year 1643, which subsequently became the basis of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

Westminster the First, Statute of. The statute 3 Edw. I, A.D. 1275. This statute, which deserves the name of a code rather than an act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the powers of the king’s escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it was lately restored, as a most grievous, but not capital, offense; and embraces the subject of procedure in civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 26 & 27 Vict., c. 27. See Mercen-lage.

Whap-geld. Belg. In European law, contribution for jettison; average.

WESTLAW. A computer-assisted legal research service provided by West Publishing Company. WESTLAW provides on-line access to a database of legal information including federal and state caselaw, statutes, and administrative, regulatory, and secondary materials.

WHEN WHEN AND WHERE

When and where. Technical words in pleading, formerly necessary in making full defense to certain actions.

Whenever. At whatever time; at what time sooner. In any or every instance in which.

When issued. Abbreviated term in securities law for "when, as and if issued" in connection with a stock not yet authorized for issuance. The term refers to a conditional transaction in which one indicates a desire to buy when the security is available for sale after its authorization.

Where. At or in what place; from what place or source. As used in the statutory language, "where the prosecution is held," the word does not refer to the geographical location of the place of hearing, but rather to the tribunal or official before whom the case is tried. If; in the case of; in the event that.

Whereas. When in fact. A "whereas" clause of a contract is but an introductory or prefatory statement meaning "considering that" or "that being the case", and is not an essential part of the operating portions of the contract. Jones v. City of Paducah, 283 Ky. 628, 142 S.W.2d 365, 367.

Whereby. By or through which; by the help of which; in accordance with which.

Whereupon. Upon which; after which.

While. Pending or during the time that. Often used adversely and to imply contrast, and in some constructions introduces a parenthetical clause. Jackson v. Texas Co., C.C.A.Okl., 75 F.2d 549, 553. "While," within provision of accidental death life policy excluding coverage for a loss as result of injury sustained by insured while committing or attempting to commit assault or felony, is word of time and not of causation. Romero v. Volunteer State Life Ins., 10 C.A.3d 571, 88 Cal.Rptr. 820, 824.

Whim. Passing fancy; an impulse or caprice. Used in jury instruction in cautioning the jurors to avoid returning a verdict based on anything but the evidence and its strength, not on the personal whim or caprice of the jurors.

Whiplash injury. A snapping of the neck when a person gets his head thrown forward or back from side to side. Breitenberg v. Parker, 237 Ark. 261, 372 S.W.2d 828, 832. Commonly resulting from rear-end motor vehicle collisions, such is caused by a sudden and unexpected forced movement of the neck of an individual while he is in a relaxed position and against which he cannot protect himself. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Sides, C.A.La., 320 F.2d 437, 441. It may result in several types of pathological injuries, such as strain, sprain, dislocation and so forth. Liguette v. Bouillion, La.App., 184 So.2d 766, 768.

Whistle blower. An employee who refuses to engage in and/or reports illegal or wrongful activities of his employer or fellow employees. Russ v. Pension Consultants Co., 182 Ill.App.3d 769, 131 Ill.Dec. 318, 538 N.E.2d 693. Employer retaliation against whistle blowers is often statutorily prohibited. See also False Claims Act; Whistle-blower Acts; Wrongful discharge.

Whistle-blower Acts. Federal and state statutes designed to protect employees from retaliation for a disclosure of an employer's misconduct. The Civil Service Reform Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 2302(b), protects federal employees who disclose mismanagement or illegal conduct. Several other federal laws protect employees who disclose regulatory violations; e.g. OSHA violations, 29 U.S.C.A. § 660(c). Many states also protect private and/or public sector whistle-blowers. Cf. California Labor Code § 1102.5. See also False Claims Act; Qui tam action; Wrongful discharge.

White acre. A fictitious name given to a piece of land for purposes of illustrating real property transactions.

Whitecaps. The name of an unlawful organization against which Tennessee in 1897 enacted a statute (Acts 1897, c. 52) entitled, "An act to prevent and punish the formation or continuance of conspiracies and combinations for certain unlawful purposes," etc., commonly known as the "Law against Whitecaps." Persons guilty of any offense under the act were rendered incompetent for jury service.

White collar crimes. Term signifying various types of unlawful, nonviolent conduct committed by corporations and individuals including theft or fraud and other violations of trust committed in the course of the offender's occupation (e.g., embezzlement, commercial bribery, racketeering, anti-trust violations, price-fixing, stock manipulation, insider trading, and the like). RICO laws are used to prosecute many types of white collar crimes. See RICO laws.

White knight. In corporate law, a potential acquirer usually sought out by the target of an unfriendly takeover to rescue it from the unwanted bidder's takeover. A word of art used to describe potential merger partners with whom a target company negotiates toward the realization of a merger on terms which the target company management finds acceptable. The white knight pursues ownership by means of a "sweetheart deal" with the incumbent management, while an unwanted bidder deals directly with the shareholders. American General Ins. Co. v. Equitable General Corp., D.C.Va., 493 F.Supp. 721, 732. See also Golden parachute; Lockup; Poison pill; Porcupine provisions; Raider; Saturday night special.

White mule. Corn whisky; contraband whisky.

White persons. As used in Rev.St.U.S. § 2169 (Naturalization Act March 26, 1790, c. 3, 1 Stat. 103, as amended by Act Feb. 18, 1875, c. 80, § 1, 18 Stat. 318 [8 U.S.C.A. § 703]), members of the white or Caucasian race, as distinct from the black, red, yellow, and brown races.

Wholesale price index. A statistical measure compiled monthly which compares the price changes of a large group of commodities (weighted by their relative importance) to prices in a base year. See also Consumer Price Index; Producer Price Index.

Wholesaler. One who buys in comparatively large quantities, and then resells, usually in smaller quantities, but never to the ultimate consumer. He sells either to a "jobber," a sort of middleman, or to a "retailer," who in turn sells to the consumer. Fischbach Brewing Co. v. City of St. Louis, 231 Mo.App. 793, 95 S.W.2d 335, 340. See also Jobber.

Wholly. Not partially. In a whole or complete manner; entirely; completely; perfectly. Exclusively; to the exclusion of other things. Equally. Totally; fully. Chicago & Calumet Dist. Transit Co. v. Mueller, 213 Ind. 530, 12 N.E.2d 247, 249.

Wholly and permanently disabled. Term within disability clause of life policy does not mean "partial" or "temporary," and is not to be construed literally so as to require condition of complete helplessness or utter hopelessness to be entitled to benefits. See also Disability; Total disability; Wholly disabled.

Wholly dependent. A person is to be regarded as "wholly dependent" upon a worker, within meaning of compensation acts, when his or her support is derived wholly from the worker's wages. Baker v. Western Power & Light Co., 147 Kan. 571, 78 P.2d 36, 40. Person may be "wholly dependent" on worker though he or she may have some slight savings of his or her own, or some other minimum property, or be able to make something by his or her own service. United States Coal & Coke Co. v. Sutton, 268 Ky. 405, 105 S.W.2d 173, 177.

Wholly destroyed. A building is "wholly destroyed" within the meaning of statutes permitting recovery of the full amount of a fire insurance policy, when, although some part remains standing, it can no longer be designated as a building. The words mean totally destroyed as a building, although there is not an absolute extinction of all its parts.

Wholly disabled. These words within accident policy do not mean a state of complete physical and mental incapacity or utter helplessness but mean rather inability to do all the substantial and material acts necessary to carry on a certain business or occupation or any business or occupation in a customary and usual manner and which acts the insured would be able to perform in such manner but for the disability. Total disability. See also Disability; Total disability.

Whore. A woman who practices illicit sexual intercourse, either for hire or to gratify a depraved passion. A woman given to promiscuous intercourse. A woman who practices unlawful commerce with men, particularly one who does so for hire; a harlot; a concubine; a prostitute.
Whoremaster. Ordinarily, one who practices lewdness; also, one who keeps or procures whores for others; a pimp; a procurer.

Wic. A place on the sea-shore or the bank of a river.

Wica. A country house or farm.

Wick. Sax. A village, town, or district. Hence, in composition, the territory over which a given jurisdiction extends. Thus, "bailiwick" is the territorial jurisdiction of a bailiff or sheriff or constable. "Sheriff-wick" was also used in the old books.

Widen. To increase in width; to extend.

Widower. A man who has lost his wife by death and has not remarried.

Widow. A woman whose husband is dead, and who has not remarried.

Widowhood. The state or condition of being a widow, or, sometimes, a widower. An estate is sometimes settled upon a woman "during widowhood," which is expressed in Latin, "durante viduitate."

Widow's allowance. The amount of money or property which a widow may claim from her husband's estate, free of all claims. State statutes govern the amount and conditions of the allowance. It is for her support and maintenance.

Widow's election. In most states, a widow may either take her share under her husband's will or waive his will and claim her statutory share which commonly is an amount equal to what she would receive if he had died intestate. See Election by spouse.

Wif a /wýfa/. L. Lat. In old English law, a mark or sign; a mark set up on land, to denote an exclusive occupation, or to prohibit entry.

Wife. A woman united to a man by marriage; a woman who has a husband living and undivorced. The correlative term is "husband." See also Common-law wife.

Wife's part. See Legtime.

Wigreve /wigriyv/. In old English law, the overseer of a wood.

Wild animals (or animals fere nature). Animals of an untamable disposition; animals in a state of nature. See Ferae naturae.

Wildcat strike. A strike called without authorization from the union or in violation of a no-strike clause in the collective bargaining agreement. See also Strike.

Wild land. Land in a state of nature, as distinguished from improved or cultivated land.

Wild's case, rule in. A devise to B. and his children or issue, B. having no issue at the time of the devise, gives him an estate tail; but, if he have issue at the time, B. and his children take joint estates for life.

Will, v. An auxiliary verb commonly having the mandatory sense of "shall" or "must." It is a word of certainty, while the word "may" is one of speculation and uncertainty.

Will, n. Wish; desire; pleasure; inclination; choice; the faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. When a person expresses his "will" that a particular disposition be made of his property, his words are words of command, and the word "will" as so used is mandatory, comprehensive, and dispositive in nature.

An instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his real and personal property, to take effect after his death, and which by its own nature is ambulatory and revocable during his lifetime. In re Brown's Estate, Tex.Civ.App., 507 S.W.2d 801, 803.

The legal expression or declaration of a person's mind or wishes as to the disposition of his property, to be performed or take effect after his death. A revocable instrument by which a person makes disposition of his property to take effect after his death. Howard's Ex'r v. Dempster, 246 Ky. 153, 54 S.W.2d 660, 661. A written instrument executed with the formalities required by statutes, whereby a person makes a disposition of his property (real and personal) to take effect after his death.

For competency to make will, see Competent.

See also Codicil; Conditional will; Duplicate will; Last will; Last will; Last will; Last will; Lost will; Mariner's will; Mutual wills; No contest clause; Nuncupative will; Publication; Reciprocal will; Revocation of will; Sailor's will; Simultaneous death clause; Witness (Witness to will).

Ambulatory will. A changeable will (ambulatoria voluntas), the phrase merely denoting the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his lifetime.

Antenuptial will. See that title.

Conditional will. A conditional disposition is one which depends upon the occurrence of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or to be defeated. If the happening of an event named in a will is the reason for making the will, it is "unconditional"; but, if the testator intends to dispose of his property in case the event happens, the will is "conditional."

Conjoint will. See Joint will, below.

Contingent will. A will which is to take effect only upon the happening of a specified contingency. In re Craft's Estate, Tex.Civ.App., 358 S.W.2d 732, 734.

Counter wills. Another name for "double," "mutual," or "reciprocal" wills.

Double will. Called also a "counter," "mutual," or "reciprocal" will. See Double will.

Estate at will. This estate entitles the grantee or lessee to the possession of land during the pleasure of both the grantor and himself, yet it creates no sure or durable right, and is bounded by no definite limits as to duration. It must be at the reciprocal will of both parties (for, if it be at the will of the lessor only, it is a lease for life), and the dissent of either determines it.

Holographic will. One that is entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself. Sometimes spelled "olographic." See Holograph.
Joint and mutual (or reciprocal) will. One executed jointly by two persons with reciprocal provisions, which shows on its face that the devises are made one in consideration of the other. Wetzel v. Watson, W.Va., 328 S.E.2d 526, 529. Joint will is one in which the same instrument is executed by two persons as their respective wills; mutual wills are the separate wills of two persons, more or less reciprocal in their provisions. Word “joint” goes to form, and word “mutual” goes to substance of what is called “joint and mutual will.” Larson v. Record, 3 Dist., 141 Ill.App.3d 477, 95 Ill.Dec. 363, 365, 489 N.E.2d 925, 927. See also Mutual will, below.

Joint will. One where the same instrument is made the will of two or more persons and is jointly signed by them. Such wills are usually executed to make testamentary disposition of joint property. A joint or conjoint will is a testamentary instrument executed by two or more persons, in pursuance of a common intention, for the purpose of disposing of their several interests in property owned by them in common, or of their separate property treated as a common fund, to a third person or persons.

Living will. A document which governs the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment from an individual in the event of an incurable or irreversible condition that will cause death within a relatively short time, and when such person is no longer able to make decisions regarding his or her medical treatment. Living wills are permitted by statute in most states. Cruzan v. Missouri, 110 S.Ct. — (1990). See Uniform Rights of the Terminally Ill Act (Uniform Laws Annotated). See also Right to die laws.

Mutual and reciprocal will. See Joint and mutual (or reciprocal) will, above; also Mutual will, below.

Mutual will. One in which two or more persons make mutual or reciprocal provisions in favor of each other. "Mutual wills" are the separate wills of two persons which are reciprocal in their provisions, and such a will may be both joint and mutual. Sometimes called a "reciprocal," "double," or "counter" will. See also Joint and mutual (or reciprocal) will, above.

Mystic will. See Testament.

Non-intervention will. In some jurisdictions, one authorizing the executor to act without bond and to manage, control, and settle the estate without the intervention of any court whatsoever.

Nuncupative will. See that title.

Reciprocal will. One in which two or more persons make mutual or reciprocal provisions in favor of each other. Also known as a "mutual," "double," or "counter" will. See Joint and mutual (or reciprocal) will; Mutual will, above.

Renunciation of will. See Renunciation.

Self-proved wills. A will which eliminates some of the formalities of proof by execution in compliance with statute. It is made self-proved by affidavit of attesting witnesses in the form prescribed by statute. Most statutes provide that, unless contested, such a will may be admitted to probate without testimony of subscribing witnesses. See e.g. Uniform Probate Code, § 2–504.

Statute of will. See Wills Act, infra.

Unofficious will. In the civil law, testamentum inofficium. One made in disregard of natural obligations as to inheritance. 2 Bl.Comm. 502. It has no place in the common law.

Criminal Law

The power of the mind which directs the action of a man. See Willful.

Will contest. A direct attack upon a decree admitting a will to probate. Estate of Morris, Tex.Civ.App., 577 S.W.2d 748, 752. Any kind of litigated controversy concerning the eligibility of an instrument to probate as distinguished from validity of the contents of the will. In re Hesse's Estate, 62 Ariz. 273, 157 P.2d 347, 349. Will contests are commonly governed by state statutes; e.g. Uniform Probate Code § 3–407, burden of proof.

Willful. Proceeding from a conscious motion of the will; voluntary; knowingly; deliberate. Intending the result which actually comes to pass; designed; intentional; purposeful; not accidental or involuntary.

Premeditated; malicious; done with evil intent, or with a bad motive or purpose, or with indifference to the natural consequences; unlawful; without legal justification.

An act or omission is "willfully" done, if done voluntarily and intentionally and with the specific intent to do something the law forbids, or with the specific intent to fail to do something the law requires to be done; that is to say, with bad purpose either to disobey or to disregard the law. It is a word of many meanings, with its construction often influenced by its context. E.g. United States, 325 U.S. 91, 101, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 1035, 89 L.Ed. 1495.

A willful act may be described as one done intentionally, knowingly, and purposely, without justifiable excuse, as distinguished from an act done carelessly, thoughtlessly, heedlessly, or inadvertently. A willful act differs essentially from a negligent act. The one is positive and the other negative.

Under Bankruptcy Code provision excepting from discharge debts "for willful and malicious injury by the debtor", 11 U.S.C.A. § 523(a)(6), term "willful" means deliberate or intentional, i.e. deliberate or intentional act which necessarily leads to injury. In re Salai, Bkrtcy.Fla., 50 B.R. 11, 12.

Act is "willful" within meaning of section of Internal Revenue Code imposing penalty for willful failure to pay federal income and social security taxes withheld from employees if it is voluntary, conscious and intentional; no bad motive or intent to defraud the United States need be shown, and a "reasonable cause" or "justifiable excuse" element has no part in definition. Harrington v. U.S., C.A.R.I., 504 F.2d 1006, 1315.
Under the Model Penal Code, a requirement that an offense be committed “willfully” is satisfied if a person acts knowingly with respect to the material elements of the offense, unless a purpose to impose further requirements appears. M.P.C. § 2.02(8). See also Criminal (Criminal intent); Mens rea; Motive; Premeditation.

In civil actions, the word [willfully] often denotes an act which is intentional, or knowing, or voluntary, as distinguished from accidental. But when used in a criminal context it generally means an act done with a bad purpose; without justifiable excuse; stubbornly, obstinately, perversely. The word is also employed to characterize a thing done without ground for believing it is lawful or conduct marked by a careless disregard whether or not one has the right so to act. United States v. Murdock, 290 U.S. 389, 394, 395, 54 S.Ct. 223, 225, 78 L.Ed. 381.

Willful and malicious injury. For such to exist there must be an intent to commit a wrong either through actual malice or from which malice will be implied. Such an injury does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will, as a state of mind, but arises from intentional wrong committed without just cause or excuse. In re Wernecke, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.Supp. 127, 168. It may involve merely a willful disregard of what one knows to be his duty, an act which is against good morals and wrongful in and of itself, and which necessarily causes injury and is done intentionally. See also Willful and wanton misconduct.

Willful and wanton act. See Willful and wanton misconduct.

Willful and wanton injury. See Willful and wanton misconduct.

Willful and wanton misconduct. Conduct which is committed with an intentional or reckless disregard for the safety of others or with an intentional disregard of a duty necessary to the safety of another’s property. Giers v. Anten, 68 Ill.App.3d 535, 24 Ill.Dec. 878, 386 N.E.2d 82, 85. Failure to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to a person who is actually known to be or reasonably expected to be within the range of a dangerous act being done. Georgia Power Co. v. Deese, 78 Ga.App. 704, 724, 728. Conduct which is either intentional or committed under circumstances exhibiting a reckless disregard for the safety of others, such as a failure, after knowledge of an impending danger, to exercise ordinary care to prevent it or a failure to discover the dangers through recklessness or carelessness when it could have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care. Lewandowski v. Baky, 32 Ill.App.3d 26, 335 N.E.2d 572, 574. An aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care. Morgan v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 37 Cal.App.3d 1006, 112 Cal.Rptr. 695, 698.

Willful and wanton negligence. Failure to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to a person who is actually known to be, or reasonably is expected to be, within range of a known danger. Barall Food Stores v. Bennett, 194 Okl. 508, 153 P.2d 106, 109, 110. See also Negligence; Willful and wanton misconduct.

Willful blindness. In criminal law, a term used to refer to a situation where the defendant tries to avoid knowing something that will incriminate. It is usually held in this situation that the defendant “knows” anyway because he is aware of a high probability of its existence. See Model Penal Code § 2.02(7). See also Recklessly.

Willful, deliberate and premeditated. A criterion used in many jurisdictions to separate first from second degree murder. The Model Penal Code rejects this concept. See Premeditation.

Willful indifference to the safety of others. See Willful and wanton misconduct.

Willfully and knowingly. An act is done willfully and knowingly when the actor intends to do it and knows the nature of the act. Deliberately. See Willful.

Willful misconduct of employee. Under workers’ compensation acts, precluding compensation, means more than mere negligence, and contemplates the intentional doing of something with knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injuries, with reckless disregard of its probable consequences. “Willful misconduct” disqualifying claimant for unemployment compensation involves: (1) wanton and willful disregard of employer’s interest, (2) deliberate violation of rules, (3) disregard of standards of behavior which an employer can rightfully expect from his employee, or (4) negligence which manifests culpability, wrongful intent, evil design, or intentional and substantial disregard for employer’s interests or the employee’s duties and obligations. Wilson v. Com. Unemployment Compensation Bd. of Review, 15 Pa.Cmwlth. 314, 325 A.2d 500, 501.

Willful murder. The unlawful and intentional killing of another without excuse or mitigating circumstances. See also Murder; Premeditation.

Willful neglect. The intentional disregard of a plain or manifest duty, in the performance of which the public or the person injured has an interest.

Willful neglect suggests intentional, conscious, or known negligence—a knowing or intentional mistake. Puget Sound Painters v. State, 45 Wash.2d 819, 278 P.2d 302, 303. Within adoption statutes, is neglect that is intentional, deliberate, and without just cause or excuse. In re Adoption of P. J. K., Mo.App., 359 S.W.2d 360, 363.

Willful negligence. See Negligence; also Wanton negligence.

Willfulness. See Willful.

Willful tort. Term implies intent or purpose to injure. It involves elements of intent or purpose and malice or ill will, but malice or ill will may be shown by indifference to safety of others, with knowledge of their danger, or failure to use ordinary care to avoid injury after acquiring such knowledge. Hillard v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., 68 Ohio App. 426, 34 N.E.2d 75, 77, 23 O.O. 133. See also Tort (Intentional tort).

Williams Act. See Tender offer.
Willingly. Voluntarily; reluctantly; without reluctance, and of one's own free choice. See Willful.

As used in an instruction that one cannot invoke the doctrine of self-defense if he enters a fight willingly, it means voluntarily, aggressively, and without legal excuse.

Wills Act. In England, the statute 32 Hen. VIII, c. 1, passed in 1540, by which persons seized in fee-simple of lands held in socage tenure were enabled to devise the same at their will and pleasure, except to bodies corporate, and those who held estates by the tenure of chivalry were enabled to devise two-third parts thereof.

Also, the statute 7 Wm. IV & 1 Vict., c. 26, passed in 1837, and also called "Lord Langdale's Act." This act permits of the disposition by will of every kind of interest in real and personal estate, and provides that all wills, whether of real or of personal estate, shall be attested by two witnesses, and that such attestation shall be sufficient. Other important alterations are effected by this statute in the law of wills.

Will substitutes. Documents which purportedly accomplish what a will is designed to accomplish, e.g., trusts, life insurance, joint ownership of property.

Winchester measure. The standard measure of England, originally kept at Winchester. 1 Bl.Comm. 274.

Winchester, Statute of. A statute passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of Edward I, by which the old Saxon law of police was enforced, with many additional provisions. It required every man to provide himself with armor to aid in keeping the peace; and if it did not create the offices of high and petty constables, it recognized and regulated them, and charged them with duties answering somewhat to those of our militia officers. The statute took its name from the ancient capital of the kingdom. It was repealed by the Statute of 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27.

Windfall profits tax. A tax imposed on a business or industry as a result of a sudden increase in the profits of the business. An example includes the tax imposed on oil companies in 1980, due to the windfall profits from the Arab oil embargo.

Winding up. Process of settling the accounts and liquidating the assets of a partnership or corporation, for the purpose of making distribution of net assets to shareholders or partners and dissolving the concern. See Liquidation.

Window. An opening made in the wall of a building to admit light and air, and to furnish a view or prospect. The use of this word in law is chiefly in connection with the doctrine of ancient lights and other rights of adjacent owners.

Window tax. In England, a tax on windows, formerly levied on houses which contained more than six windows, and were worth more than £ 5 per annum; established by St. 7 Wm. III, c. 18. St. 14 & 15 Vict., c. 36, substituted for this tax a tax on inhabited houses.

Wind up. See Winding up.

Wiretapping. A form of electronic or mechanical eavesdropping where, upon court order, law enforcement officials surreptitiously listen to phone calls or other conversations or communications of persons. Federal (18 U.S.C.A. § 2510 et seq.) and similar state statutes govern the circumstances and procedures under which wiretaps will be permitted. See also Eavesdropping; Pen register.

Wish. Eager desire; longing; expression of desire; a thing desired; an object of desire. As used in wills, it is sometimes merely directory or precatory; and sometimes mandatory; being equivalent to "will," to "give" or "devise."

Wista. In Saxon law, half a hide of land, or sixty acres.

Wit. To know; to learn; to be informed. Used only in the infinitive, to wit, which term is equivalent to "that is to say," "namely," or "videlicet."

Witam /witam/. The purgation from an offense by the oath of the requisite number of witnesses.

Witan /witan/. In Saxon law, wise men; persons of information, especially in the laws; the king's advisers; members of the king's council; the optimates, or principal men of the kingdom.

Witchcraft. Under English Sts. 33 Hen. VIII, c. 8, and 1 Jac. I, c. 12, the offense of witchcraft, or supposed intercourse with evil spirits, was punishable with death. These acts were not repealed until 1736. 4 Bl.Comm. 60, 61. In Salem, Massachusetts in 1692, 20 persons were put to death by hanging for such offense. The last victims in England were executed in 1716, and the last in Scotland in 1722.

Wite /wáyt/. Sax. A punishment, pain, penalty, mulct, or criminal fine.

An atonement among the early Germans by a wrongdoer to the king or the community. It is said to be the germ of the idea that wrong is not simply the affair of the injured individual, and is therefore a condition precedent to the growth of a criminal law.

Witken. A taxation of the West Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom.

Witenagemote /witnagarmote/. (Spelled, also, witenagemot, wittenagemot, witanagemot, etc.) "The assembly of wise men." This was the great national council or parliament of the Saxons in England, comprising the noblemen, high ecclesiastics, and other great thanes of the kingdom, advising and aiding the king in the general administration of government.

It was the grand council of the kingdom, and was held, generally, in the open air, by public notice or particular summons, in or near some city or populous town. These notices or summonses were issued upon determination by the king's select council, or the body met without notice, when the throne was vacant, to elect a new king. Subsequently to the Norman Conquest it was called...

commune concilium regni, curia regis and finally parliament; but its character had become considerably changed. It was a court of last resort, more especially for determining disputes between the king and his thanes, and, ultimately, from all inferior tribunals. Great offenders, particularly those who were members of or might be summoned to the king's court, were here tried. The casual loss of title-deeds was supplied, and a very extensive equity jurisdiction exercised. 1 Bl. Comm. 147. It passed out of existence with the Norman Conquest, and the subsequent Parliament was a separate growth, and not a continuation of the Witenagemot.

Witens /witan/. The chiefs of the Saxon lords or thanes, their nobles, and wise men.

With all faults. This phrase, used in a contract of sale, implies that the purchaser assumes the risk of all defects and imperfections, provided they do not destroy the identity of the thing sold. See also As is.

With consent. Phrase within a constitution providing that Governor shall appoint officers with consent of senate, requires confirmation by senate and appointment under such provision is ineffective until confirmed. State, ex rel. Nagle v. Stafford, 97 Mont. 275, 34 P.2d 372, 379. See also Consent.

Withdraw. To take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. To remove, as deposits from bank, or oneself from competition, candidacy, etc.

Withdrawal. Removal of money or securities from a bank or other place of deposit.

Withdrawal from criminal activity. A person is not legally accountable for the criminal conduct of another if before the commission of the offense, he terminates his efforts to promote such commission and gives a warning to law enforcement officials or makes a proper effort to prevent the criminal activity. Ill.Ann.St. § 5-2(c)(3). Under Model Penal Code, § 5.01(4), withdrawal is an affirmative defense which requires a showing of a complete and voluntary renunciation of defendant's criminal purpose. See also Renunciation of criminal purpose.

Withdrawal from a conspiracy requires either making a clean breast to authorities or communicating the abandonment of the conspiracy in manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators. U.S. v. Mardian, C.A.D.C., 546 F.2d 973, 978.

Withdrawal of charges. A failure to prosecute by the person preferring charges—distinguished from a dismissal, which is a determination of their invalidity by the tribunal hearing them. See Nolle prosequi.

Withdrawal of a juror. The withdrawing of one of the twelve jurors from the box, with the result that, the jury being then found to be incomplete, no further proceedings could be had in the cause. The withdrawing of a juror was always by the agreement of the parties, and was frequently done at the recommendation of the judge, where it was doubtful whether the action would lie; and in such case the consequence was that each party paid his own costs. It was, however, no bar to a future action for the same cause. In American practice, it was formerly usually a mere method of continuing a case, for some good reason.

Withdrawal record. The withdrawing by a plaintiff of the nisi prius or trial record filed in a cause, just before the trial is entered upon, for the purpose of preventing the cause from being tried. This may be done before the jury are sworn, and afterwards, by consent of the defendant's counsel. For current practice, see Dismissal.

Withernam /wiðorn/. A taking by way of reprisal; a taking or a reprisal of other goods, in lieu of those that were formerly taken and elogned or withheld. A reciprocal distress, in lieu of a previous one which has been elogned. 3 Bl.Comm. 148.

The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writ of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant's own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be repleved; and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ.

Withersake /wiðɔrˈsiːk/. An apostate, or perfidious renegade.

Withhold. To retain in one's possession that which belongs to or is claimed or sought by another. To omit to disclose upon request; as, to withhold information. To refrain from paying that which is due.

Withholding. Deductions from salaries or wages, usually for income taxes and social security contributions, to be remitted by the employer, in the employee's name, to the taxing authority.

Witholding of evidence. It is an obstruction of justice to stifle, suppress or destroy evidence knowing that it may be wanted in a judicial proceeding or is being sought by investigating officers, or to remove records from the jurisdiction of the court, knowing they will be called for by the grand jury in its investigation. United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 799; Commonwealth v. Russo, 177 Pa.Super. 470, 111 A.2d 359. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1506, 1512. See also Suppression of evidence.

Withholding tax. See Withholding.

Within. Into. In inner or interior part of, or not longer in time than. Through. Inside the limits of; during the time of.

When used relative to time, has been defined variously as meaning any time before; at or before; at the end of; before the expiration of; not beyond; not exceeding; not later than. Glenn v. Garrett, Tex.Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 515, 516.

Without. Outside; beyond; in excess of.

Without day. A term used to signify that an adjournment or continuance is indefinite or final, or that no subsequent time is fixed for another meeting, or for further proceedings. See Sine die.

Without delay. Instantly; at once. Also, within the time allowed by law.

Without her consent. This phrase, as used in the law of rape, is equivalent to "against the will."

Without impeachment of waste. The effect of the insertion of this clause in a lease for life is to give the tenant the right to cut timber on the estate, without making himself thereby liable to an action for waste. When a tenant for life holds the land without impeachment of waste, he is, of course, dispensable for waste, whether wilful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste.

Without notice. As used of purchasers, etc., such language is equivalent to "in good faith." To be a holder in due course, one must take a bill or note "without notice" that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against or claim to it on the part of any person. See U.C.C. §§ 3-302(1)(c), 3-304(3). See also Good faith; Notice.

Without prejudice. Where an offer or admission is made "without prejudice," or a motion is denied or a suit dismissed "without prejudice," it is meant as a declaration that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided. The words "without prejudice" import into any transaction that the parties have agreed that as between themselves the receipt of money by one and its payment by the other shall not of themselves have any legal effect on the rights of the parties, but they shall be open to settlement by legal controversy as if the money had not been paid. In re Bell, 344 Pa. 223, 25 A.2d 344, 350. A dismissal "without prejudice" allows a new suit to be brought on the same cause of action. The words "without prejudice", as used in judgment, ordinarily import the contemplation of further proceedings, and, when they appear in an order or decree, it shows that the judicial act is not intended to be res judicata of the merits of the controversy. Flumara v. American Surety Co. of New York, 346 Pa. 584, 31 A.2d 283, 287. Compare With prejudice.

Without recourse. Words that may be used by a drawer in signing a draft or check so as to eliminate completely the drawer's secondary liability. This phrase, used in making a qualified indorsement of a negotiable instrument, signifies that the indorser means to save himself from liability to subsequent holders, and is a notification that, if payment is refused by the parties primarily liable, recourse cannot be had to him. See U.C.C. § 3-414(1).

An indorser "without recourse" specially declines to assume any responsibility for payment. He assumes no contractual liability by virtue of the indorsement itself, and becomes a mere assignor of the title to the paper, but such an indorsement does not indicate that the indorsee takes with notice of defects, or that he does not take on credit of the other parties to the note.

See also Nonrecourse; Nonrecourse loan; With recourse.

Without reserve. A term applied to a sale by auction, indicating that no price is reserved.

Without stint. Without limit; without any specified number.

Without this, that. In common law pleading, formal words used by way of traverse, particularly by way of special traverse, importing an express denial of some matter of fact alleged in a previous pleading, including the declaration, plea, replication, etc. The Latin term is absque hoc.

With prejudice. Phrase "with prejudice," as used in context in which an action is dismissed with prejudice, means an adjudication on merits and final disposition, barring right to bring or maintain an action on same claim or cause. Foundry Systems & Supply, Inc. v. Industry Development Corp., 124 Ga.App. 589, 185 S.E.2d 94, 95. Addition of the words "with prejudice" to order granting motion to dismiss complaint indicates finality for purposes of appeal. Segal v. Garrigues, Fla.App., 320 So.2d 475, 476. Compare Without prejudice.

With recourse. Term which may be used in indorsing negotiable instrument and by which the indorser indicates that he remains liable for payment of the instrument. See also Recourse; Compare Without recourse.

With strong hand. In common law pleading, a technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution would answer the same purpose.

Witness, v. To subscribe one’s name to a deed, will, or other document, for the purpose of attesting its authenticity, and proving its execution, if required, by bearing witness thereto. See also Affirmation; Attest; Jurat; Verification.

Witness, n. In general, one who, being present, personally sees or perceives a thing; a beholder, spectator, or eyewitness. One who is called to testify before a court. People v. Ruiz, 100 Misc.2d 562, 419 N.Y.S.2d 864, 866. One who testifies to what he has seen, heard, or otherwise observed. Wigginton v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, C.C.A.Ind., 126 F.2d 659, 666. A person whose declaration under oath (or affirmation) is received as evidence for any purpose, whether such declaration be made on oral examination or by deposition or affidavit. Code Civ.Proc.Cal. § 1878.

One who is called upon to be present at a transaction, or the making of a will. He may thereafter, if necessary, testify to the transaction.

See also Accomplice witness; Competency; Competent witness; Expert witness; Hostile or adverse witness; Lay witness; Prosecuting witness; Subscribing witness; Swift witness; Target witness; Witness Protection Act; Witness tampering.

Adverse witness. See Adverse witness; Hostile or adverse witness.

Alibi witness. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.1. See also Alibi.

Attestation. See Attestation.

Character witness. In criminal cases, the accused is entitled to use character evidence in presenting the defense. The accused is entitled to show character traits inconsistent with the crime charged. Fed.R.Evid. 404(b). The Federal Rules of Evidence and a majority of jurisdictions permit proof of character either by reputation or by receiving the opinion of persons who are sufficiently familiar with the accused to be able to testify concerning the trait in question. Fed.R.Evid. 405(a). U.S. v. Morgan, C.A.N.Y. (2nd Cir.) 554 F.2d 31, certified denied, 434 U.S. 965, 98 S.Ct. 504, 54 L.Ed.2d 450.

Both the reputation witness who testifies as to the accused person's community reputation and the opinion witness who testifies that in his opinion the accused possesses certain character traits are generically referred to as "character witnesses." See also Fed.R.Evid. 607-609.

Competent witness. See Competency; Competent witness; Credible witness. See Competency; Competent witness; Credible.

Immunity of witnesses. See Immunity.

Material witness. In criminal trial, a witness whose testimony is crucial to either the defense or prosecution. In most states, he may be required to furnish bond for his appearance and, for want of surety, he may be confined until he testifies. See also Material witness. Witness to will. One who has attested the will by subscribing his name thereto. The trend in state statutes is to require two witnesses to attest to the signing of the will. See e.g. Uniform Probate Code § 2-502. See also Attestation clause.

Witness against oneself. See Immunity; Self-incrimination.

Witnessing part. In a deed or other formal instrument, is that part which comes after the recitals, or, where there are no recitals, after the parties. It usually commences with a reference to the agreement or intention to be effectuated, then states or refers to the consideration, and concludes with the operative words and parcels, if any. Where a deed effectuates two distinct objects, there are two witnessing parts.

Witness Protection Act. Federal law which establishes the manner in which the Attorney General may provide for relocation and other protection of a witness or a potential witness for the federal government or for a state government in an official proceeding concerning an organized criminal activity or other serious offense. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 3521 et seq.

Witness tampering. The federal Victim and Witness Protection Act prohibits the intimidation and harassment of witnesses before they testify, as well as prohibiting retaliation, or threats of retaliation, against witnesses after they testify. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1512-1515.

Wittingly. With knowledge and by design, excluding only cases which are the result of accident or forgetfulness, and including cases where one does an unlawful act through an erroneous belief of his right.

Witword /witword/. A legally allowed claim, more especially the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath.

Wolf's head. In old English law, this term was used as descriptive of the condition of an outlaw. Such persons were said to carry a wolf's head (caput lupinum); for if caught alive they were to be brought to the king, and if they defended themselves they might be slain and their heads carried to the king, for they were no more to be accounted of than wolves. "Woolferthfod."

Wong. Sax. In old records, a field.

Wood-corn. In old records, a certain quantity of oats or other grain, paid by customary tenants to the lord, for liberty to pick up dead or broken wood.

Wood-geld. In old English law, money paid for the liberty of taking wood in a forest. Immunity from such payment.

Wood leave. A license or right to cut down, remove, and use standing timber on a given estate or tract of land. Also called Timber rights.

Wood-mote. In forest law, the old name of the court of attachments; otherwise called the "Forty-Days Court." 3 Bl.Comm. 71.

Wood plea court. In old English law, a court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun, in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments.

Woods. A forest; land covered with a large and thick collection of natural forest trees. The old books say that a grant of "all his woods" (omnes boscos suos) will pass the land, as well as the trees growing upon it.

Woodwards. In English law, officers of the forest, whose duty consists in looking after the wood and vert and venison, and preventing offenses relating to the same.

Words. Symbols indicating ideas and subject to contraction and expansion to meet the idea sought to be expressed. Such have been referred to as labels whose content and meaning are continually shifting with the times. Massachusetts Protective As'n v. Bayersdorfer, C.C.A.Ohio, 105 F.2d 596, 597.
As used in law, this term generally signifies the technical terms and phrases appropriate to particular instruments, or aptly fitted to the expression of a particular intention in legal instruments. See the subtitles following.

Words actionable in themselves. In libel and slander, refer to words which are libelous or slanderous per se. See Actionable per se; Libelous per se.

Words of art. The vocabulary or terminology of a particular art, science, or profession, and especially those expressions which are idiomatic or peculiar to it. For example, in law "Taking the Fifth" means that a person is asserting his or her Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

Words of limitation. See Limitation.

Words of negotiability. The language used in making an instrument payable to order or to bearer. See U.C.C. §§ 3-110 & 3-111. As applied to documents, language therein providing that the goods are to be delivered to bearer or to the order of a named person. See U.C.C. § 7-104(1)(a).

Words of procreation. To create an estate tail by deed, it is necessary that words of procreation should be used in order to confine the estate to the descendants of the first grantee, as in the usual form of limitation,—"to A. and the heirs of his body."

Words of purchase. See Purchase.

Work. To exert one's self for a purpose; to put forth effort for the attainment of an object; to be engaged in the performance of a task, duty, or the like. The term covers all forms of physical or mental exertions, or both combined, for the attainment of some object other than recreation or amusement. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123, Ala., 321 U.S. 590, 64 S.Ct. 698, 703, 705, 88 L.Ed. 949.

"Work" or "employ" for purposes of determining employee's right to compensation means physical and mental exertion controlled or required by employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for benefit of employer and business. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 Mont. 42, 721 P.2d 326, 334. See also Labor.

Work and labor. The name of one of the common counts in actions of assumpsit, being for work and labor done and materials furnished by the plaintiff for the defendant.

Workaway. Extra man employed on vessel as an accommodation to himself. The Tashmoo, D.C.N.Y., 48 F.2d 366, 368.

Worker. One who labors; an employee; one employed to do work for another. See also Employee; Servant.

Workers' Compensation Acts. State and federal statutes which provide for fixed awards to employees or their dependents in case of employment related accidents and diseases, dispensing with need by employee to bring legal action and prove negligence on part of the employer. Some of the statutes go beyond the simple determination of the right to compensation, and provide insurance systems, either under state supervision or otherwise. The various state acts vary as to extent of workers and employment covered, amount and duration of benefits, etc.

The effect of most workers' compensation acts is to make the employer strictly liable to an employee for injuries sustained by the employee which arise out of and in the course of employment, without regard to the negligence of the employer or that of the employee. Where the statute applies, it has been uniformly held that this remedy is exclusive and bars any common-law remedy which the employee may have had, the compensation scheduled under the act being the sole measure of damage.

Federal employees are covered by the Federal Employees Compensation Act; seamen by the Jones Act; longshore and harbor workers by the Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. The FECA and LHWCA are administered by the federal Office of Workers' Compensation Programs. Additional benefits to disabled workers are provided under Title II of the Social Security Act.

See also Employers' liability acts.

Workers' compensation boards or courts. Such exist in most states with jurisdiction to review cases arising under workers' compensation acts and related rules and regulations.

Workers' compensation insurance. Insurance coverage purchased by employers to cover risks under workers' compensation laws. Such is usually mandated by state acts, unless the employer is self-insured. See also Insurance.

Work furlough. A prison treatment program that allows inmates to be released during the day to work in the community.

Workhouse. Place of confinement for persons convicted of lesser offenses. Such imprisonment is usually for a relatively short duration.

Working capital. A firm's investment in current assets, such as cash, accounts receivable, inventory, etc. The net working capital is the difference between the current assets and current liabilities. Such represents the amount of cash, materials, and supplies ordinarily required by a business in its day-to-day business operation to meet current expenses and such contingencies as may typically develop. South Hinds Water Co. v. Mississippi Public Service Com'n, Miss., 422 So.2d 275, 283.

Working interest. The rights to the mineral interest granted by an oil and gas lease, so-called because the lessee acquires the right to work on the lease property to search, develop and produce oil and gas and the obligation to pay all costs). See also Royalty.

Working papers. Valid employment certificate. By statute in certain states, such document must be filed by one employing a minor; e.g. N.Y. Labor Law, § 132(2). See also Work permit.

In accounting, the records kept by an independent auditor of the procedures followed, tests performed, information obtained, and conclusions reached pertinent to his or her examination.

Discovery. See Work product rule.

Work-in-process. Products being manufactured or assembled, but not yet completed.

Work made for hire. As defined by the Copyright Act (17 U.S.C.A. § 101), is: (1) a work prepared by an employee within the scope of his or her employment; or (2) a work specially ordered or commissioned for use as a contribution to a collective work, as a part of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, as a translation, as a supplementary work, as a compilation, as an instructional text, as a test, as answer material for a test, or as an atlas, if the parties expressly agree in a written instrument signed by them that the work shall be considered a work made for hire.

Work of necessity. As excepted from operation of Sunday closing statutes embraces all work reasonably essential to the economic, social or moral welfare of the people, viewed in light of the habits and customs of the age in which they live and of the community in which they reside. Francisco v. Commonwealth, 180 Va. 371, 23 S.E.2d 234, 238, 239. See also Sunday closing laws.

Workout. In bankruptcy, an out-of-court negotiation with creditors whereby a debtor enters into an agreement with a creditor or creditors for a payment or plan to discharge the debtor's debts.

Term is also used to refer to restructuring or refinancing by banks of nonperforming or overdue loans of creditors.

Work permit. Documentary authorization to work given to an alien by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). It is unlawful for an employer to hire an alien who lacks INS work authorization. Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (IRCA), 8 U.S.C.A. § 1324a(a)(1). See also Working papers.

Work product rule. Under this rule any notes, working papers, memoranda or similar materials, prepared by an attorney in anticipation of litigation, are protected from discovery. Fed.R.Civ.Proc. 26(b)(3). See Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S.Ct. 385, 91 L.Ed. 451. Most states have codified the work product rule in some form either by statute or court rule. This rule has been interpreted to include private memoranda, written statements of witnesses and mental impressions of personal recollections prepared or formed by attorney in anticipation of litigation or for trial. Com. of Puerto Rico v. S S Zoe Colocotroni, D.C.Puerto Rico, 61 F.R.D. 653, 658.

Work release program. Correctional programs which allow an inmate to leave the institution for the purpose of continuing regular employment during the daytime, but reporting back to lockup nights and weekends.

Works. A mill, factory, or other establishment for performing manufacturing type labor of any sort; also, a building, structure, or erection of any kind upon land, as in the civil-law phrase "new works."

New works. A term of the civil law comprehending every sort of edifice or other structure which is newly commenced on a given estate or lot. Its importance lies chiefly in the fact that a remedy is given ("denunciation of new works") to an adjacent proprietor whose property would be injured or subjected to a more onerous servitude if such a work were allowed to proceed to completion.

Public works. Works, whether of construction or adaptation, undertaken and carried out by the national, state, or municipal authorities, and designed to subserve some purpose of public necessity, use, or convenience; such as public buildings, roads, aqueducts, parks, etc. All fixed works constructed for public use. The term usually relates to the construction of public improvements and not to their maintenance or operation.

Work week. Within Fair Labor Standards Act, a week during which work is performed. 29 U.S.C.A. § 207.

World. This term sometimes denotes all persons whatsoever who may have, claim, or acquire an interest in the subject-matter; as in saying that a judgment in rem binds "all the world."

World Bank. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, commonly referred to as the World Bank, is an international financial institution whose purposes include assisting the development of its member nations' territories, promoting and supplementing private foreign investment, and promoting long range balanced growth in international trade. See 22 U.S.C.A. § 286; Mendaro v. World Bank, C.A.D.C., 717 F.2d 610.

World Court. See International Court of Justice.

Worldly. Of or pertaining to the world or the present state of existence; temporal; earthly; devoted to, interested in, or connected with this present life, and its cares, advantages, or pleasures, to the exclusion of those of a future life. Concerned with enjoyment of this present existence; secular; not religious; spiritual, or holy.

Worrying cattle or sheep. Within statutes providing that any one finding a dog, not on the premises of its owner, who is worrying cattle or sheep, may kill the dog, means to run after; to chase; to bark at. Failing v. People, 105 Colo. 399, 98 P.2d 865, 867. The common law permitted the killing of a trespassing dog if it was found in the act of (1) killing domestic animals, or (2) pursuing or worrying domestic animals in an enclosure. See Cal.Civ. Code § 3341; Katsaris v. Cook, 180 Cal. App.3d 256, 271, 225 Cal.Rptr. 531.

Worship. Any form of religious service showing reverence for Divine Being, or exhortation to obedience to or following of the mandates of such Being. Religious exercises participated in by a number of persons assembled for that purpose, the disturbance of which is a statutory offense in many states.

English law. A title of honor or dignity used in addresses to certain magistrates and other persons of rank or office.
Public worship. This term may mean the worship of God, conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises, under a provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. In this country, what is called "public worship" is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish. A church absolutely belonging to the public, and in which all persons without restriction have equal rights, such as the public enjoy in highways or public landings, is certainly a very rare institution.

Wort or worth. A curtilage or country farm.

Worth. The quality or value of a thing which gives it value. Although "worth" in some connections may mean more than pecuniary value, in law it means that sum of valuable qualities which renders a thing valuable and useful expressed in the current medium of the country. Furnishing an equivalent for. See also Net worth; Value.

Worthier title doctrine. At common law where testator undertook to devise to an heir exactly the same interest in land as such heir would take by descent, descent was regarded as the "worthier title" and heir took by descent rather than by devise. Jones v. Petrie, 156 Kan. 241, 132 P.2d 396, 398. Doctrine of worthier title provides that conveyance by grantor with limitation over to grantor's heirs creates reversion in grantor, not remainder interest in heirs, and to take by descent rather than by purchase, is said to create a worthier title. Hatch v. Riggs Nat. Bank, D.C.D.C., 284 F.Supp. 396, 397. To the extent that it exists today in the United States, the Doctrine of Worthier Title is a rule of construction. That is, applying it is said to turn on the intention of the transferor.

Worthiest of blood. In the English law of descent, a term applied to males, expressive of the preference given to them over females. See 2 Bl.Comm. 234-240.

Worthless. Destitute of worth, of no value or use. Spring City Foundry Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 292 U.S. 182, 54 S.Ct. 644, 78 L.Ed. 1200.

Worthless check. A check drawn on a bank account which is no longer open or on an account with funds insufficient to cover the check.

Giving a worthless check is the making, drawing, issuing or delivering or causing or directing the making, drawing, issuing or delivering of any check, order or draft on any bank or depository for the payment of money or its equivalent with intent to defraud and knowing, at the time of the making, drawing, issuing or delivering of such check, order or draft as aforesaid, that the maker or drawer has no deposit in or credits with such bank or depository or has not sufficient funds in, or credits with, such bank or depository for the payment of such check, order or draft in full upon its presentation. Such act is a misdemeanor in most states. See e.g. Model Penal Code, § 224.5. See also Bad check; check kiting.

Worthless securities. A loss (usually capital) is allowed for a security that becomes worthless during the year. The loss is deemed to have occurred on the last day of the year. Special rules apply to securities of affiliated companies and small business stock. See I.R.C. § 165.

Worthy. Having worth; possessing merit; valuable; deserving of honor, or the like; of high station; of high social position; deserved, merited. Woodstown Nat. Bank and Trust Co. v. Snelbaker, 136 N.J.Eq. 62, 40 A.2d 222, 227.

Would. A word sometimes expressing what might be expected or preferred or desired. Often interchangeable with the word "should," but not with "could."

Wound, n. An injury to the body of a person or animal, especially one caused by violence, by which the continuity of the covering, as skin, mucous membrane, or conjunctiva, is broken. Any breaking up or dispersion, or disintegration of the natural continuity of a tissue of the body. Gasperino v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, Mo.App., 107 S.W.2d 819, 827. Also injuries of every kind which affect the body, whether they are cuts, lacerations, fractures, or bruises. Any lesion of the body.

Wound, v. To inflict a laceration, cut, fracture or bruise.

Wounded feelings. Such as result from indignities to self-respect, sensibilities, or pride of a person, as distinguished from usual mental pain and suffering consequent to physical injury. See also Mental cruelty.

Wounding. An aggravated species of assault and battery, consisting in one person giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl.Comm. 121.

Wraparound mortgage. A second mortgage which wraps around or exists in addition to a first or other mortgages. Form of secondary financing typically used on older properties having first mortgages with low interest rates in which a lender assumes the developer's first mortgage obligation and also loans additional money, taking back from developer a junior mortgage in total amount at an intermediate interest rate. ICM Realty v. Cabot, Cabot & Forbes Land Trust, D.C.N.Y., 376 F.Supp. 918, 923.

Wrath. Not merely anger, but violent anger.

Wrecum maris significat illa bona que naufragio ad terram peluntur /rékam máras signifikat ila bóarna kwiny nörfrýj(y)ow âd téhram peblántur/. A wreck of the sea signifies those goods which are driven to shore from a shipwreck.

Wreck. To destroy, disable, or seriously damage. To reduce to a wreck or ruinous state by any kind of violence; to overthrow, shatter, or destroy; to cause to crash or suffer ruin, synonymous with ruin, smash, and Goods cast ashore by the sea, and not claimed by the owner within a year, or other specified period; which, in such case, become the property of the state. The term applies to property cast upon land by the sea; to jetsam, flotsam, and ligan.

Common law. Goods cast ashore from a wrecked vessel, where no person has escaped from the wreck alive; and which are forfeited to the crown, or to persons having the franchise of wreck. But if claimed by the true owner within a year and a day the goods, or their proceeds, must be restored to him, by virtue of the state.

Maritime law. A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of injuries received, she is rendered absolutely unnavigable, or unable to pursue her voyage, without repairs exceeding the half of her value. Wood v. Lincoln & Kennebeck Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 482. A "wrecked vessel," however, in common phraseology, includes a sunken vessel. 33 U.S.C.A. § 409 prescribes the duties of owners of wrecked vessels.

Wreckfree. In old English law, exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the king.

Wrinkle. A stria; furrow; channel; hollow; depression; rut; cup; pocket; dimple.

Writ. A written judicial order to perform a specified act, or giving authority to have it done, as in a writ of mandamus or certiorari, or as in an "original writ" for instituting an action at common law. A written court order or a judicial process, directing that a sheriff or other judicial officer do what is commanded by the writ; or giving authority and commission to have it done. See also Order; Prerogative writs; Process.

In old English law, an instrument in the form of a letter; a letter or letters of attorney. This is a very ancient sense of the word.

In the old books, "writ" is used as equivalent to "action;" hence writs are sometimes divided into real, personal, and mixed.

For the names and description of various particular writs, see the titles below.

Alias writ. A second writ issued in the same cause, where a former writ of the same kind has been issued without effect.

All Writs Act. Federal Act which permits federal appellate courts to "issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U.S.C.A. § 1651.

Close writ. In English law, a name given to certain letters of the sovereign, sealed with his great seal and directed to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being proper for public inspection, were closed up and sealed on the outside; also, a writ directed to the sheriff instead of to the lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 346.

Concurrent writs. In England, duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time for the same purpose, for service on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action.

Judicial writs. In English practice, the capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable. Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, they were called judicial writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs. 3 Bl.Comm. 282. Such writs as issue under the private seal of the courts, and not under the great seal of England, and are tested or witnessed, not in the king's name, but in the name of the chief judge of the court out of which they issue. The word "judicial" is used in contradistinction to "original;" original writs being such as issue out of chancery under the great seal, and are witnessed in the king's name. 3 Bl.Comm. 282.

Junior writ. One which is issued, or comes to the officer's hands, at a later time than a similar writ, at the suit of another party, or on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Original writ. In English practice, an original writ was the process formerly in use for the commencement of personal actions. It was a mandatory letter from the king, issuing out of chancery, sealed with the great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed, or was supposed to have been committed, requiring him to command the wrong-doer or accused party either to do justice to the plaintiff or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is now disused, the writ of summons being the process prescribed by the uniformity of process act for commencing personal actions; and under the judicature act, 1873, all suits, even in the court of chancery, are to be commenced by such writs of summons.

Patent writ. In old practice, an open writ; one not closed or sealed up.

Peremptory writ. An original writ, called from the words of the writ a "si te fecerit securum," and which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. The writ was very occasionally in use, and only where nothing was specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; as in the case of writs of trespass on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing was sued for, but only damages to be assessed by a jury.

Prerogative writs. Those issued by the exercise of the extraordinary power of the crown (the court, in modern "Writing" means handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation. Fed.Evid.R. 1001(1).

In the U.S. Supreme Court, a review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but of judicial discretion, and will be granted only when there are special and important reasons therefor. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1254, 1257; Sup.Ct.Rules 10 et seq.

"Writing obligatory." The technical name by which a bond is described in pleading.

"Writing system." The common-law procedural system, under which plaintiffs commenced most actions by obtaining the appropriate kind of original writ. This pigeonholed approach shaped both procedural and substantive law. See Forms of action.

"Writ de ejectione firma." See Ejectione firmae.

"Writ de haeretico comburendo." See De haereticou comburendo.

"Writ de homine replegiando." See De homine replegiando.

"Writ de odio et atia." See De odio et atia.

"Writ de rationabili parte bonorum." See De rationabili parte bonorum.

"Write-down." In accounting, to transfer a portion of the balance of an asset to an expense account due to a decrease in the value of an asset. See also Write-off.

"Write-off." To remove from the books of account an asset which has become worthless. Most often referred to in connection with accounts or notes receivable which are deemed worthless or uncollectible. See Bad debt.

"Wright of assize." In England, an officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' bills.

"Write-up." To increase the valuation of an asset in a financial statement to reflect current value. With a few exceptions, this is not generally permitted in accounting.

"Writing." The expression of ideas by letters visible to the eye. The giving an outward and objective form to a communication or representation, including letters, words, pictures, sounds, or symbols, or combinations thereof. Calif.Evid.Code, § 250.

See also Ancient writings; instrument.

"Writ of ad quod damnum." See Ad quod damnum.

"Writ of assistance." Writs of Assistance exist to enforce judgment of court directing specific act. Matter of Lease Cancellation of Smith, 68 Hawaii 466, 719 P.2d 397, 401. An equitable remedy normally used to transfer real property, the title of which has been previously adjudicated, as a means of enforcing the court's own decree. TeWalt v. TeWalt, Ind.App., 421 N.E.2d 415, 418. It is essentially a mandatory injunction, the effect of which is to bring about a change in the possession of realty; it dispossesses the occupant and gives possession to one adjudged entitled thereto by the court. Dusbabek v. Local Building & Loan Ass'n, 178 Okl. 592, 63 P.2d 756, 759.

Despite merger of law and equity in rules practice, provision is made for writ of assistance in Fed.R.Civ.P. 70.

Ancient writs issuing from the Court of Exchequer ordering sheriffs to assist in the collection of debts owed the Crown. Prior to the American Revolution, the writs of assistance gave agents of the Crown in the American colonies the right to search for smuggled goods without any limitations.

"Writ of association." In English practice a writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and serjeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bl.Comm. 59.

"Writ of attachment." An order to seize a debtor's property so as to secure the claim of a creditor. A writ employed to enforce obedience to an order or judgment of the court. It may take the form of taking or seizing property to bring it under control of the court. It is essentially a mandatory injunction, the effect of which is to bring about a change in the possession of realty; it dispossesses the occupant and gives possession to one adjudged entitled thereto by the court. 756, 759.

"Writ of capias." See Capias.

"Writ of certiorari." An order by the appellate court which is used by that court when it has discretion on whether or not to hear an appeal from a lower court. If the writ is denied, the court refuses to hear the appeal and, in effect, the judgment below stands unchanged. If the writ is granted, then it has the effect of ordering the lower court to certify the record and send it up to the higher court which has used its discretion to hear the appeal. See also Certiorari.
WRIT OF CONSPIRACY

Writ of conspiracy. A writ which anciently lay against persons who had conspired to injure the plaintiff, under the same circumstances which would now give him an action on the case. It did not lie at common law, in any case, except when the conspiracy was to indict the party either of treason or felony; all the other cases of conspiracy in the books were but actions on the case.

Writ of coram nobis. See Coram nobis.

Writ of covenant. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant; i.e., of a promise under seal.

Writ of debt. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt; i.e., a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

Writ of deceit. The name of a writ which lies where one claims damages for breach of covenant; i.e., of a promise under seal.

Writ of delivery. A writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment for the delivery of chattels. It commands the sheriff to cause the chattels mentioned in the writ to be returned to the person who has obtained the judgment; and, if the chattels cannot be found, to distraint the person against whom the judgment was given until he returns them.

Writ of detinue /rid same detan(y)uw/. A writ which lies where a party claims the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or deeds and writings, detained from him. This is seldom used; trover is the more frequent remedy, in cases where it may be brought.

Writ of dower. This is either a writ of dower unde nihil habet, which lies for a widow, commanding the tenant to assign her dower, no part of which has yet been set off to her; or a writ of right of dower, whereby she seeks to recover the remainder of the dower to which she is entitled, part having been already received from the tenant. This latter writ is seldom used.

Writ of ejectment. The writ in an action of ejectment, for the recovery of lands. See Ejectment.

Writ of entry. A real action to recover the possession of land where the tenant (or owner) has been disseised or otherwise wrongfully dispossessed. If the disseisor has aliened the land, or if it has descended to his heir, the writ of entry is said to be in the per, because it alleges that the defendant (the alene or heir) obtained possession through the original disseisor. If two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the per and cui, because it alleges that the defendant (the second alinee) obtained possession through the first alinee, to whom the original disseisor had aliened it. If more than two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the post, because it simply alleges that the defendant acquired possession after the original disseisin. 3 Bl.Com. 180. The writ of entry was abolished, with other real actions, in England, by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27, § 36, but is still in use in a few of the states. Under rules practice, such writ has been abolished in favor of a civil action, which grants similar relief, e.g., Mass.R.Civ.P. 81(b). See also Entry, writ of.

Writ of error. A writ issued from a court of appellate jurisdiction, directed to the judge or judges of a court of record, requiring them to remit to the appellate court the record of an action before them, in which a final judgment has been entered, in order that examination may be made of certain errors alleged to have been committed, and that the judgment may be reversed, corrected, or affirmed, as the case may require. It is brought for supposed error in law apparent on record and takes case to higher tribunal, which affirms or reverses. It is commencement of new suit to set aside judgment, and is not continuation of suit to which it relates. Winchester v. Winn, 225 Mo.App. 288, 29 S.W.2d 188, 190. And unless abolished by statute, is writ of right applicable to all cases in which jurisdiction is exercised according to course of common law, but is inapplicable to cases not known to or in derogation of common law, unless otherwise provided by statute. See also Writ of error coram nobis; Writ of error coram vobis.

Writ of error coram nobis /rit av éhrdr kóram nówbis/. See Coram nobis.

Writ of error coram vobis /rit av éhrdr kóram vówbis/. This writ, at the English common law, is distinguished from "writ of error coram nobis," in that the former issued from the Court of King's Bench to a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, whereas the latter issued from the Court of King's Bench to a judgment of that court. See also Coram vobis.

Writ of execution. A writ to put in force the judgment or decree of a court. Formal, written command of a court directing a sheriff or other officer to enforce a judgment through process of execution. See Execution; Pluries; Writs of execution.

Writ of exigum facias /rit av égga yew/. A writ to put in force the judgment or decree of a court. Formal, written command of a court directing a sheriff or other officer to enforce a judgment through process of execution. See Execution; Pluries; Writs of execution.

Writ of mainprise, or mainprise /rit av méynpráy/. In English law, a writ directed to the sheriff (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offense and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offense or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below), commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance, commonly called "mainpernors," and to set him at large. 3 Bl.Com. 128. See also Mainprize.

Writ of mandamus. See Mandamus.

Writ of mesne /rit av mlyn/. In old English law, a writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, "Unde idem A. qui medius est inter C. et praefatum B.;" that is, A., who is mesne between C., the lord paramount, and B., the tenant paravant. See also Process (Mesne process).

Writ of possession. Writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment to recover the possession of land. It commands the sheriff to enter the land and give possession of it to the person entitled under the judgment. For a distinction between this writ and the Writ of assistance, see that title. See also Ejectment.

Writ of precipe /rit av présapiy/. This writ is also called a "writ of covenant," and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be conveyed by fine, the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bl.Comm. 349.

Writ of prevention. This name is given to certain writs which may be issued in anticipation of suits which may arise. See Quia timet.

Writ of process. See Action; Process.

Writ of proclamation. In English law, by the statute 31 Eliz. c. 3, § 1, when an exigent was sued out, a writ of proclamation issued at the same time, commanding the sheriff of the county where the defendant lived to make three proclamations thereof, in places the most notorious, and most likely to come to his knowledge, a month before the outlawry was to take place. 3 Bl.Comm. 284.

When it was not directed to the same sheriff as the exigent was, it was called a foreign writ of proclamation.

Writ of prohibition. See Prohibition.

Writ of protection. In England, the king may, by his writ of protection, privilege any person in his service from arrest in civil proceedings during a year and a day; but this prerogative is seldom, if ever, exercised.

Writ of quare impedit. See Quare impedit.

Writ of quo warranto. See Quo warranto.

Writ of recaption. If, pending an action of replevin for a distress, the defendant distrains again for the same rent or service, the owner of the goods is not driven to another action of replevin, but is allowed a writ of recaption, by which he recovers the goods and damages for the defendant's contempt of the process of the law in making a second distress while the matter is sub judice.

Writ of replevin. See Replevin.

Writ of restitution. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. See also Restitution.

Writ of review. A general designation of any form of process issuing from an appellate court and intended to bring up for review the record or decision of the court below. See Writ of certiorari.

Writ of right. A writ which is grantable as a matter of right, as opposed to a "prerogative writ," which is issued only as a matter of grace or discretion. A writ which lay for one who had the right of property, against another who had the right of possession and the actual occupation. The writ properly lay only to recover corporeal hereditaments for an estate in fee-simple; but there were other writs, said to be "in the nature of a writ of right," available for the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments or of lands for a less estate than a fee-simple. 3 Bl.Comm. 391.

In England, the writ of right was abolished in 1833.

Writ of summons. The writ by which, under the English judicature acts, all actions are commenced. See Summons.

Writ of supersedeas /rit av s(y)wparsiydiyas/. See Supersedeas.

Writ of supervisory control. A writ which is issued only to correct erroneous rulings made by the lower court within its jurisdiction, where there is no appeal, or the remedy by appeal cannot afford adequate relief, and gross injustice is threatened as the result of such rulings. It is in nature of summary appeal to control course of litigation in trial court when necessary to prevent miscarriage of justice, and may be employed to prevent extended and needless litigation. State ex rel. Regis v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 104, 55 P.2d 1295.

Function of "writ of supervisory control" is to enable Supreme Court to control course of litigation in inferior courts where such courts are proceeding within their jurisdiction, but by mistake of law, or willful disregard of it, are doing gross injustice, and there is no appeal or remedy by appeal is inadequate. State ex rel. State Bank of Townsend v. District Court of First Judicial Dist. in and for Lewis and Clark County, 94 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 396.

Writ of tol. In old English law, the name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court-baron into the county court.

Writ of trial. In English law, a writ directing an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the undersheriff, under St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42. It was superseded by the county courts act of 1867, c. 142, § 6, by which a defendant, in certain cases, became enabled to obtain an order that the action be tried in a county court.

Writ of waste. The name of a writ to be issued against a tenant who has committed waste of the premises. There were anciently several forms of this writ, adapted to the particular circumstances.

Writ pro retorno habendo /rit prów ratórnw habèndow/. A writ commanding the return of the goods to the defendant, upon a judgment in his favor in replevin, upon the plaintiff's default.

Written contract. See Contract.
Written instrument. Something reduced to writing as a means of evidence, and as the means of giving formal expression to some act or contract. See Instrument.

Written law. Statutory law; i.e. law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. Also, a constitution or treaty. See Common law; Constitution; Statute; Treaty.

One of the two leading divisions of the Roman law, comprising the leges, plebiscita, senatus-consulta, principium placitum, magistratum edicta, and responsa prudentium.

Wrong. A violation of the legal rights of another; an invasion of right to the damage of the parties who suffer it, especially a tort. See Tort.

Wrongful conduct. Conduct which contravenes some duty which law attaches to relation between parties affected. See Tort.

Wrongful act. Any act which in the ordinary course will infringe upon the rights of another to his damage, unless it is done in the exercise of an equal or superior right. Term is occasionally equated to term "negligent," but generally has been considered more comprehensive term, including criminal, wilful, wanton, reckless and all other acts which in ordinary course will infringe upon rights of another to his damage. County of DuPage v. Kusel, 12 Ill.App.3d 272, 298 N.E.2d 323, 326.

Wrongful birth. A medical malpractice claim brought by the parents of an impaired child, alleging that negligent treatment or advice deprived them of the opportunity to avoid conception or terminate the pregnancy. Bruggeman By and Through Bruggeman v. Schimke, 239 Kan. 245, 718 P.2d 635, 638. See also Wrongful conception; Wrongful life.

Wrongful conception. Also know as wrongful pregnancy, it is a claim by parents for damages arising from the negligent performance of a sterilization procedure or abortion, and the subsequent birth of a child. Miller v. Johnson, 231 Va. 177, 343 S.E.2d 301, 304. See also Wrongful birth; Wrongful life.

Wrongful death action. Type of lawsuit brought on behalf of a deceased person's beneficiaries that alleges that death was attributable to the willful or negligent act of another. Such action is original and distinct claim for damages sustained by statutory beneficiaries and is not derivative of or continuation of claim existing in decedent. Barragan v. Superior Court of Pima County, 12 Ariz.App. 402, 470 P.2d 722, 724. See Kilberg doctrine; Wrongful death statutes.

Wrongful death statutes. Such statutes, which exist in all states, provide a cause of action in favor of the decedent's personal representative for the benefit of certain beneficiaries (e.g. spouse, parent, children) against person who negligently caused death of spouse, child, parent, etc. Statutory provision which operates upon the common-law rule that the death of a human being may not be complained of as an injury in a civil court. The cause of action for wrongful death permitted under such statutes is for the wrong to the beneficiaries. Most such statutes are compensatory though some states retain statutes which measure damages in terms of culpability and some statutes reflect a combination of both. See also Death on High Seas Act; Lord Campbell Act; Survival statutes; Unborn child; Wrongful death action.

Wrongful dishonor.  See Dishonor.

Wrongful levy.  Such as will entitle the owner of property levied on to damages for wrongful execution, exists where there has been done to a third person's personality those acts that would constitute a valid and complete levy if the debtor's property had been seized.  Farris v. Castor, 186 Okl. 668, 99 P.2d 900, 902, 903.

Wrongful life.  Refers to type of medical malpractice claim brought on behalf of a child born with birth defects, alleging that the child would not have been born but for negligent advice to, or treatment of, the parents.  Azzolino v. Dingfelder, 315 N.C. 103, 337 S.E.2d 528, 532.  See also Wrongful birth; Wrongful conception.

Wrongfully.  In a wrong manner; unjustly; in a manner contrary to the moral law, or to justice.  See also Wrongful.

Wrongfully intending.  In the language of pleading, this phrase is appropriate to be used in alleging the malicious motive of the defendant in committing the injury which forms the cause of action.

W-2 form.  A statement of earnings and taxes withheld (including federal, state, and local income taxes and FICA tax) during the year, prepared for and provided to each employee and also filed with the Internal Revenue Service by employer.

Wurth /wɔːθ/.  In Saxon law, worthy; competent; capable.  Atheswurthe, worthy of oath; admissible or competent to be sworn.

Wye /wɛɪ/.  As applied to a street railway, a "wye" means a track with two branches, one joining the main track from one direction and the other joining the main track from another direction.

Wyte /ˈwʌɪt/.  In old English law, acquittance or immunity from amercement.
X. In the written terminology of various arts and trades, where two or more dimensions of the same piece or article are to be stated, this letter is a well-known symbol equivalent to the word "by." Thus, the formula "3 x 5 in." will be understood, or may be explained by parol evidence, to mean "three by five inches," that is, measuring three inches in one direction and five in another.

A mark used in place of a signature by one who is unable to otherwise affix his or her signature. See Mark.

Symbol used in financial newspapers to indicate that a stock is trading ex dividend (i.e. without dividend).

Xenodochium /zenodokáyam/ zdókiyam/. In the civil and old English law, an inn allowed by public license, for the entertainment of strangers, and other guests. Also, a hospital; a place where sick and infirm persons are taken care of.

Xenodochy /zenadókiy/. Reception of stranger; hospitality.

Xylon /záylon/. A punishment among the Greeks answering to stocks.
Ya et nay. In old records, mere assertion and denial, without oath. See also Yea and nay.

Yard. A measure of length, containing three feet, or thirty-six inches.

A piece of land inclosed for the use and accommodation of the inhabitants of a house. Grounds of building or group of buildings.

An enclosure, with or without buildings, devoted to some work or business.

Yardland, or virgata terra /vorgētə tēhriy/. A quantity of land, said by some to be twenty acres, but by Coke to be of uncertain extent.

Yea and nay. Yes and no. According to a charter of Athelstan, the people of Ripon were to be believed in all actions or suits upon their yea and nay, without the necessity of taking any oath. See also Yeas and nays.

Year. The period in which the revolution of the earth round the sun, and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed. Generally, when a statute speaks of a year, twelve calendar, and not lunar, months are intended. The year is either astronomical, ecclesiastical, or regnal, beginning on the 1st of January, or 25th of March, or the day of the sovereign’s accession.

The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight minutes, forty-six seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap-years, of three hundred and sixty-six days.

When the period of a "year" is named, a calendar year is generally intended, but the subject-matter or context of statute or contract in which the term is found or to which it relates may alter its meaning.

See also Current year; Fiscal year; Taxable year.

Calendar year. See Calendar.

Natural year. In old English law, that period of time in which the sun was supposed to revolve in its orbit, consisting of 365 days and one-fourth of a day, or six hours.

Year and day. This period was fixed for many purposes in law. Thus, in the case of an estray, if the owner did not claim it within that time, it became the property of the lord. So the owners of wreck must claim it within a year and a day. Death must follow upon wounding within a year and a day if the wounding is to be indicted as murder. Also, a year and a day were given for prosecuting or avoiding certain legal acts; e.g., for bringing actions after entry, for making claim for avoiding a fine, etc. See also Year and a day rule.

Year Books. Books of reports of cases in a regular series from the reign of the English King Edward I, inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII, which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and published annually; whence their name, "Year Books."

Year, day, and waste. In English law, an ancient prerogative of the king, whereby he was entitled to the profits, for a year and a day, of the lands of persons attainted of petty treason or felony, together with the right of wasting the tenements, afterwards restoring the property to the lord of the fee. Abrogated by St. 54 Geo. III, c. 145. See An, jour, et waste.

Year of Our Lord. In England the time of an offense may be alleged as that of the sovereign's reign, or as that of the year of our Lord. The former is the usual mode. Hence there "year" alone might not indicate the time intended, but as we have no other era, therefore, any particular year must mean that year in our era. The abbreviation A.D. may be omitted; and the word year is not fatal.

Year to year, tenancy from. This estate arises either expressly, as when land is let from year to year; or by a general parol demise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of an annual rent; or impliedly, as when property is occupied generally under a rent payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; or when a tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having entered into any new contract, and pays rent (before which he is tenant on sufferance). See also, Tenant (Tenant from year to year.)

Years, estate for. See Estate for years.

Year and a day rule. At common law, death could not be attributed to defendant's wrongful conduct unless it occurred within a year and a day of the conduct. The rationale for this rule was the lack of medical precision in determining cause after such a long period of time, coupled with the very real probability of an intervening cause being responsible for the death. In view of the medical advances of the twentieth century, it can be argued that the year and a day rule is obsolete and should be discarded. Although some jurisdictions have done this either by legislation or judicial decision, most jurisdictions have not. See Elliott v. Mills, Okl.Cr.App., 335 P.2d 1104.
YEAR BOOKS. Books made up of reports of English cases from Edward II, 1292, to Henry VIII, early in the sixteenth century. They constitute an important source of information on the early English common law.

Yearly. See Annual; Annually.

Year of mourning. The Roman "annus luctus" (q.v.).

The reason for the widow's year of mourning has been stated as follows: "But if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time as by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he may, when he arrives at years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. To prevent this, the civil law ordained that no widow should marry for one year, and the same constitution was probably transmitted to our ancestors from the Romans, during their stay in Britain, for we find it established under the Saxon and Danish governments." 1 Bl.Comm. 456.

Year to year tenancy. See Tenancy.

Yeas and nays. The affirmative and negative votes on a bill or measure before a legislative assembly. "Calling the yeas and nays" is calling for the individual and oral vote of each member, usually upon a call of the roll.

Yellow dog contract. An employment practice by which employer requires employee to sign an agreement promising as condition of employment that he will not join a union, and will be discharged if he does join. Such contracts are prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act, the Norris LaGuardia Act, the Railway Labor Act, and as well by the laws of most states. 29 U.S.C.A. § 103.

Yellow journalism. Type of journalism which distorts and exploits the news by sensationalism in order to sell copies of the newspapers or magazines.

Yeme /yiym/. In old records, winter; a corruption of the Latin "hiems".

Yeoman /yowman/. In English law, a commoner; a freeholder under the rank of gentleman. A man who has free land of forty shillings by the year; who was anciently thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is "probus et legalis homo." 1 Bl.Comm. 406, 407.

This term is occasionally used in American law, but without any definite meaning, except in the United States navy, where it designates an appointive petty officer who performs clerical duties usually associated with office workers.

Yeomanry /yowmanriy/. The collected body of yeomen.

Yeomen of the guard. Properly called "yeomen of the guard of the royal household;" a body of men of the best rank under the gentry, and of a larger stature than ordinary, every one being required to be six feet high.

Yeoven, or yeoven /yivan/. Given; dated.

Yick Wo doctrine. Doctrine which takes its name from the case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064, 30 L.Ed. 220, to the effect that a law or ordinance which gives a person or body of persons absolute discretion to give or withhold permission to carry on a lawful business is in violation of the 14th Amendment, U.S. Const.

Yiddish. A Middle High German dialect, or number of dialects, spoken by Jews, containing a large number of Germanized Hebrew words, and using Hebrew characters for its literature.

Yield. To give up, relinquish, or surrender.

Current return from an investment or expenditure as a percentage of price of investment or expenditure. The stock dividends or bond interest paid expressed as a percentage of the current price. As to bonds or stock, is coupon or dividend rate divided by purchase price. See also Net yield; Rate (Rate return).

In old English law, to perform a service due by a tenant to his lord. Hence the usual form of reservation of a rent in a lease began with the words "yielding and paying."

Current yield. On bonds, the annual interest paid divided by the current market price of the bond. As interest rates fall, the market price of the bond rises; as they rise, bond prices fall. The actual rate of return on a bond. For example, a 10% bond with a face value of $500 purchased for $450 earns $50 of interest in the first year. The current yield on the bond is 11.11% while the coupon rate on the bond remains at 10%.

Nominal yield. The annual income received from a fixed-income security divided by the par or face value of the security. It is stated as a percentage figure.

Yield spread. Yield differences between various issues of securities.

Yield to maturity. On bonds, a complex calculation that reflects the overall rate of return an investor would receive from a bond if the bond is held to maturity and the interest payments reinvested at the same rate. It takes into account purchase price, coupon yield, time to maturity and the time between interest payments.

Yielding and paying. In conveyancing, the initial words of that clause in leases in which the rent to be paid by the lessee is mentioned and reserved.

Yield upon investment. See Yield.

Yokelet /yówkelet/. A little farm, requiring but a yoke of oxen to till it.

Yom Kippur. Day of Atonement; is the most sacred and solemn holiday in the Jewish calendar, a day on which Jews throughout the world, after a period of fasting, congregate together at their respective synagogues to worship and pray and ask divine forgiveness for sins committed during the year. Hoffman v. Graber, Mo.App., 153 S.W.2d 817, 818.

York-Antwerp rules /york éntwarp růwlz/. Certain rules relating to uniform bills of lading and also governing settlement of maritime losses among the several interests such as ship owners, cargo owners, etc. These rules are commonly incorporated in contracts of af-freightment. They are the result of conferences of representatives of mercantile interests from several countries, in the interest of uniformity of law. They have no statutory authority.

York, Custom of. A custom of the province of York in England, by which the effects of an intestate, after payment of his debts, were in general divided according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis; that is, one-third each to the widow, children, and administrator. 2 Bl.Comm. 518.

York, Statute of. An important English statute passed at the city of York, in the twelfth year of Edward II, containing provisions on the subject of attorneys, wittnesses, the taking of inquests by nisi prius, etc.

Younger doctrine. The principle, developed by the Supreme Court in Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct.
746, 27 L.Ed.2d 669 and other cases, that federal courts should not interfere with an ongoing state criminal proceeding, either by injunction or declaratory relief, unless the prosecution has been brought in bad faith or as harassment. The Younger doctrine has also been applied in civil actions where the state is a party and important state substantive goals are implicated.

Youth. This word includes children and young persons of both sexes.

Youthful offenders. Status classification of youths and young adults, generally older than juveniles (18–25 age range), who are given special sentencing consideration.
The purpose of federal and state statutes granting youthful offender status is to improve the chances of correction and successful return to the community of young offenders sentenced to imprisonment by providing them with vocational, education, counseling, or public service opportunities and by preventing their association with older and more experienced criminals during the terms of their confinement; see e.g. Fla. St. § 958.011;
18 U.S.C.A. § 5001 et seq.; 5031 et seq. The determination of whether or not to grant youthful offender status rests within the discretion of the sentencing court. Peo-See also Delinquent child.
Zamindar. See Zemindar.

Zanja /sánha/. Span. A water ditch or artificial canal, and particularly one used for purposes of irrigation.

Zanjero /sanhêrow/. Span. A water commissioner or superintendent, or supervisor of an irrigation system.

Zeaus witness. An untechnical term denoting a witness, on the trial of a cause, who manifests a partiality for the side calling him, and an eager readiness to tell anything which he thinks may be of advantage to that side. See also Swift witness.

Zeir /yir/. O. Sc. Year. "Zeir and day."

Zemindar /zêmêndar/zêman*/zêman*/. In Hindu law, landkeeper. An officer who under the Mohammedan government was charged with the financial superintendence of the lands of a district, the protection of the cultivators, and the realization of the government's share of its produce, either in money or kind.

Zero bracket amount. A deduction available to individual taxpayers whether or not the individual itemizes his or her deductions. The zero bracket amount was replaced with the standard deduction, effective for tax years beginning after 1986. Each of these are factored into the tax tables.

Zetetic. Proceeding by inquiry.

Zone of employment. Within which injuries to employees are compensable under workers' compensation acts, is the place of employment and the area thereabout, including the means of ingress thereto and egress thereto from under the control of the employer. Merz v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 134 Ohio St. 36, 15 N.E.2d 632, 633, 11 O.O. 414. It implies reasonable proximity to place of employment. Evans v. Workmen's Compensation Commissioner, 124 W.Va. 336, 20 S.E.2d 172, 173.

Zone theory. In law of trespass and nuisance, flights above one's property may be actionable depending upon whether they are in the airspace of the lower zone or in the zone beyond the owner's "effective possession". Smith v. New England Aircraft Co., 270 Mass. 511, 170 N.E. 385.

Right of privacy is primarily restraint upon unwarranted governmental interference or intrusion into areas deemed to be within protected "zones of privacy." Industrial Foundation of the South v. Texas Indus. Acc. Bd., Tex., 540 S.W.2d 668, 679.

Zoning. The division of a city or town by legislative regulation into districts and the prescription and application in each district of regulations having to do with structural and architectural designs of buildings and of regulations prescribing use to which buildings within designated districts may be put. Division of land into zones, and within those zones, regulation of both the nature of land usage and the physical dimensions of uses including height setbacks and minimum area. Cheyenne Airport Bd. v. Rogers, Wyo., 707 P.2d 717, 726.

See also Buffer-zone; Cluster zoning; Comprehensive zoning plan; Conforming use; Land use planning; Master plan; Official map; Planned unit development; Special exception; Special use permit; Spot zoning; Variance.

Aesthetic zoning. Zoning regulations designed to preserve the aesthetic features or values of an area.

Cluster zoning. See Cluster zoning; Planned unit development.

Conditional zoning. The imposition of specific restrictions upon the landowner as a condition of full realization of the benefit of rezoning. A zoning change which permits use of particular property subject to conditions not generally applicable to land similarly zoned. Scruton v. Sacramento County, 275 C.A.2d 412, 79 Cal.Rptr. 872, 876. See Special exception; Use.

Contract zoning. Rezoning of a property to a less restrictive zoning classification subject to an agreement by the landowner to observe certain specified limitations on the uses and physical development of the property that other properties in the zone are not required to observe. This device is used particularly in dealing with property located in a more restrictive zone but on the borderline of the less restrictive zone, for which classification the rezoning is sought.

Density zoning. Type of cluster zoning which regulates open spaces, density of population and use of land. Chrinko v. South Brunswick Township Planning Board, 77 N.J.Super. 594, 187 A.2d 221. Density zoning requires state enabling legislation. Under this device, the city council determines what percentage of a particular district must be devoted to open space and what percentage may be used for dwelling units. The task of locating in the particular district the housing and open spaces devolves upon the planning commission working in conjunction with the developer. The latter will submit a series of plans and seek approval to go forward at each stage. See also Planned unit development.

Euclidean zoning. Type of zoning based on district-and-use. It envisions the specification of determined geographic areas separated according to zoning districts. with the uses permitted in each district set forth in the ordinances. Thus, a property owner could from the zoning map determine in what type of district the property was located and by reference to the district's restrictions what uses are permitted. Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303.

Exclusionary zoning. Type of zoning which has been challenged on the grounds that it serves to erect exclusionary walls on the municipality's boundary according to local selfishness for socially improper goals which are beyond the legitimate purpose of zoning. The trend in the courts is to strike down such zoning.

Floating zone. In an attempt to avoid the inflexibility of mapped districts, some communities have created exceptional use districts to allow small tracts for such uses as shopping centers, garden type apartments or light industry. At time of ordinance approval the district is unlocated. See also Floating Zone.

Holding zone. A form of low density zoning employed for a temporary purpose until the community decides how to rezone the area.

Spot zoning. Changing the zoning of a particular piece of land without regard to the zoning plan for the area. See also Spot zoning.

Zoning map. The map created by a zoning ordinance which displays the various zoning districts.

Zoning variance. See Variance.

Zygocephalum /zāygowséfaləm/. In the civil law, a measure or quantity of land. As much land as a yoke of oxen could plow in a day.

Zygostates /zəygωstɛtiyz/. In the civil law, a weigher; an officer who held or looked to the balance in weighing money between buyer and seller; an officer appointed to determine controversies about the weight of money.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. [1] The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

[2] No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

[3] Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

[4] When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

[5] The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. [1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

[2] Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the Second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

[3] No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

1639
[4] The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

[5] The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

[6] The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

[7] Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust, or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment, and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. [1] The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

[2] The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. [1] Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

[2] Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

[3] Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

[4] Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. [1] The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

[2] No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. [1] All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

[2] Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by Yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each
UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

[3] Every Order, Resolution, or Vote, to Which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. [1] The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

[2] To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

[3] To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

[4] To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

[5] To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

[6] To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

[7] To Establish Post Offices and Post Roads;

[8] To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

[9] To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

[10] To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

[11] To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

[12] To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

[13] To provide and maintain a Navy;

[14] To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

[15] To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

[16] To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

[17] To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenal, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And [18] To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9. [1] The Migration or Importation of Such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

[2] The privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

[3] No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

[4] No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

[5] No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

[6] No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

[7] No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

[8] No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10. [1] No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

[2] No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

[3] No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II

Section 1. [1] The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

[2] Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

[3] The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greater Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

[4] The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

[5] No person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

[6] In case of the removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

[7] The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

[8] Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. [1] The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the Executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

[2] He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law; but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

[3] The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.
Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

ARTICLE III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. [1] The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under the Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

[2] In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be a Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

[3] The trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

ARTICLE IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. [1] The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

[2] A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

[3] No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

Section 3. [1] New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

[2] The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

ARTICLE V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI

[1] All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

[2] This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

[3] The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF, THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CONGRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION.

AMENDMENT I [1791]

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

AMENDMENT II [1791]

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.
AMENDMENT III [1791]

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

AMENDMENT IV [1791]

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

AMENDMENT V [1791]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

AMENDMENT VI [1791]

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

AMENDMENT VII [1791]

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

AMENDMENT VIII [1791]

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

AMENDMENT IX [1791]

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

AMENDMENT X [1791]

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

AMENDMENT XI [1798]

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.
Amendment XII [1804]

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII [1865]

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XIV [1868]

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV [1870]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI [1913]

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII [1913]

[1] The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

[2] When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

[3] This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII [1919]

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX [1920]

[1] The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

[2] Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
AMENDMENT XX [1933]

Section 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If the President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

AMENDMENT XXI [1933]

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

AMENDMENT XXII [1951]

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.
Amendment XXIII [1961]

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous state; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the states, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a state; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV [1964]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV [1967]

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration and the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the power and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Amendment XXVI [1971]

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
TIME CHART OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

The following table is designed to aid the user in identifying the composition of the Court at any given time in American history. Each listing is headed by the Chief Justice, whose name is italicized. Associate Justices are listed following the Chief Justice in order of seniority. In addition to dates of appointment, the table provides information on political party affiliation. Following each Justice is a symbol representing his party affiliation at the time of appointment:

* Rutledge was a recess appointment whose confirmation was rejected by the Senate after the 1795 Term.

 Upon the death of Catron in 1865 and Wayne in 1867 their positions were abolished according to a congressional act of 1866. The Court's membership was reduced to eight until a new position was created by Congress in 1869. The new seat has generally been regarded as a re-creation of Wayne's seat.

 According to Professor Henry Abraham, "Many—and with some justice—consider Brandeis a Democrat; however, he was in fact a registered Republican when nominated." Freedom and the Court 455 (3d ed., 1977).
